Cited and rule applied in Insurance Co. v. Stinson, 103 U. S. 29, 26 L. 477, holding mechanic's lien gives insurable interest; Hancox v. Fishing Co., 3 Sumn. 140, F. C. 6,013, interest in nature of a lien is insurable; Dupuy v. Insurance Co., 63 Fed. 687, vendee's interest under contract of sale is insurable; Commercial Fire Ins. Co. v. Insurance Co., 81 Ala. 323, 60 Am. Rep. 164, 8 So. 223, builder's interest under building contract is insurable, collecting cases; Ayres v. Insurance Co., 17 Iowa, 181, 85 Am. Dec. 554, possession under executory contract gives insurable interest; Franklin Ins. Co. v. Drake, 2 B. Mon. 50, husband entitled to estate by curtesy has insurable interest; Cumberland Bone Co. v. Insurance Co., 64 Me. 470, bargainee of goods who has advanced money upon them may insure his interest, even before the goods are separated from those of the bargainor; Gilman v. Insurance Co., 81 Me. 492, 493, 494, 17 Atl. 544, 545, equitable interest under executory contract is insurable, collecting and reviewing authorities; Strong v. Insurance Co., 10 Pick. 43, 20 Am. Dec. 509, a right to redeem an equity of redemption is an insurable interest; Allyn v. Allyn, 154 Mass. 573, 28 N. E. 779, an agreement of sale gives an insurable interest in vendee; French v. Rogers, 16 N. H. 183, mortgagor has insurable interest; Burbank v. Insurance Co., 24 N. H. 561, 57 Am. Dec. 304, holder of bond on property has insurable interest; Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Martin, 40 N. J. L. 571, 573, 29 Am. Rep. 273, 274, so has one in possession under contract for conveyance; also so held in Tuckerman v. Insurance Co., 9 R. I. 417. Cited generally, Goodall v. Insurance Co., 25 N. H. 186, and also in 20 Am. Dec. 513, in a very full note on the insurance interests of vendor and vendee.

Insurances against fire are made in the confidence that the assured will use all the precautions to avoid the calamity insured against which would be suggested by his interest, p. 49.

Quoted, Schultz v. Insurance Co., 14 Fla. 117, holding rule of marine insurance to be that failure on part of assured to exercise ordinary prudence in management of vessel will defeat recovery for loss; Manchester Fire Assur. Co. v. Abrams, 89 Fed. 940, where assured only owned part though representing he owned all.

Insurance.— It is not necessary to constitute an insurable interest that insured have absolute, unqualified property in effects insured, p. 49.

Cited, Motley v. Insurance Co., 29 Me. 340, 50 Am. Dec. 592, every person having a bona fide interest in property may protect such interest by insurance.

Distinguished, Traders' Ins. Co. v. Newman, 120 Ind. 559, 22 N. E. 430, husband has no insurable interest in separate property of wife.

Insurance.— Trustee may insure if the nature of his property be specified, p. 49.

Cited, Insurance Co. v. Chase, 5 Wall. 513, 18 L. 526, holding trustees of church may insure church even though loss be made payable to third party in no way connected with church; and in note 20 Am. Dec. 515, collecting authorities on right of trustee to insure.

Distinguished, Rafel v. Insurance Co., 7 La. Ann. 246, trustee must state that he holds property insured in trust.

Insurance.— It is the duty of the assured to state every fact connected with his interest which would influence the insurer in forming or declining the contract, p. 49.

Cited and affirmed, Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 10 Pet. 515, 9 L. 516, holding policy avoided by concealment of such state of title as would have materially increased the risk; Waller v. Assurance Co., 2 McCrary, 639; S. C., 10 Fed. 234, holding policy avoided when insured, although holding record title, had merely a lien on the property; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 65 Fed. 171, 27 U. S. App. 564, 27 L. R. A. 618, avoiding policy to stockholders of entire capital stock upon property of corporation; Equitable Life Assur. Co. v. McElroy, 83 Fed. 637, 49 U. S. App. 560, applying rule and holding policy void for concealment of illness by applicant for life insurance; Liberty Ins. Co. v. Boulden, 96 Ala. 512, 11 So. 772, policy avoided when assured concealed fact that his interest was only conditional; Manchester Fire Assur. Co. v. Abram, 89 Fed. 940, where assured owned but part, though representing himself as absolute owner; Adema v. Insurance Co., 36 La. Ann. 663, policy held void where insured omitted to state that his interest was only one-eighth; Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Weaver, 70 Md. 540, 17 Atl. 401, 5 L. R. A. 479, if policy expressly requires interest of assured to be truly stated, policy will be avoided by failure of assured to state existence of mortgage; Clay F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Manufacturing Co., 31 Mich. 357, vendor under contract of sale is not an unconditional and sole owner; Catron v. Insurance Co., 6 Humph. 181, 183, holding policy void where interest of assured was represented larger than it really was; Hinman v. Insurance Co., 36 Wis. 165, rule a fortiori true when stipulation concerning representation as to interest is contained in the policy, collecting cases; Fuller v. Insurance Co., 36 Wis. 604, subsequent incumbrance without notice to company will avoid the policy; Ryan v. Insurance Co., 46 Wis. 675, 1 N. W. 429, misrepresentation of amount of existing mortgage at time of application for insurance will invalidate policy. See note, 35 Am. Rep. 630, discussing materiality of representations as to incumbrances. Cited generally, Carpenter v. Insurance Co., 16 Pet. 505, 10 L. 1949; Holbrook v. Insurance Co., 1 Curt. 197, F. C. 6,589; Illinois Mut. Ins. Co. v. Manufacturing Co., 1 Gilm. 266; Sun Fire Office v. Clark, 53 Ohio St. 424, 42 N. E. 250, 36 L. R. A. 414, & n., mortgaging property is not change of interest within terms of an insurance policy.

Distinguished in Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 14 Wall. 509, 20 L. 731, holding interest may be immaterial when property in custody of third persons, to whom insurer looks to preserve property in case of fire; Lewis v. Insurance Co., 24 Blatchf. 183, 29 Fed. 497, whether state of title is material depends upon whether the insured is the real and substantial owner, collecting cases; Commercial Fire Ins. Co. v. Allen, 80 Ala. 577, 1 So. 206, existence of party-wall known to agent of insurer is not such deviation from unqualified and sole ownership as to avoid the policy; Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Coates, 14 Md. 298, holding that even as to questions of title materiality of concealment is one of fact for jury; Washington Fire, etc., Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 446, statement of interest of assured, made by company in policy, is ordinarily immaterial to the risk; and in Planters' Mut Ins. Co. v. Engle, 52 Md. 478, this is stated to be the established rule; Hill v. Insurance Co., 2 Mich. 485, pendency of litigation affecting title to property is immaterial unless particularly inquired into by terms of policy; Tyler v. Insurance Co., 12 Wend. 512, to render innocent misrepresentation material there must be inquiry by the company. Criticised as against weight of authority in Protection Ins. Co. v. Harmer, 2 Ohio St. 474, 59 Am. Dec. 703, in so far as requiring a disclosure of extent of assured's interest.

Insurance.—Misrepresentation material to the risk avoids the policy, p. 50.

Cited and rule applied, Clark v. Insurance Co., 8 How. 248, 12 L. 1066, holding misrepresentation as to use of lamps in factory will avoid policy; and also in Clark v. Insurance Co., 2 Wood. & M. 481, 489, 493, F. C. 2,829; Nicoll v. Insurance Co., 3 Wood. & M. 535, F. C. 20,259, policy avoided though misrepresentation has nothing to do with cause of loss; Penn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bank, 72 Fed. 431, 37 U. S. App. 692, 38 L. R. A. 64, & n., materiality of misrepresentation is question of fact for the jury; so held also in Lyon v. Insurance Co., 2 Rob. (La.) 271; in Morrison v. Insurance Co., 18

Mo. 267, 59 Am. Dec. 302, misrepresentation as to title falls within the rule and question of materiality is one for the jury: so held also in Sussex Co. Ins. Co. v. Woodruff, 26 N. J. L. 552. Cited generally, but without particular application of rule, in Cady v. Insurance Co., 4 Cliff. 210, F. C. 2,283; James v. Insurance Co., 4 Cliff. 282, F. C. 7,182.

Distinguished, Marshall v. Insurance Co., 27 N. H. 166, holding innocent misrepresentation immaterial where truth was known to agent of insurer; and same held in Continental Ins. Co. v. Kasey, 25 Gratt. 271, 18 Am. Rep. 683.

Insurance.—In this case the nearest magistrate's certificate required by policy as part of proof of loss was not in the form required by the policy, and insufficiency was assumed and treated as material, p. 50.

Cited, and relied upon as precedent, in Perry v. Phoenix Co., 8 Fed. 645, 646, certificate of magistrate to proof of loss must be in form required by policy; so held also in Æthna Ins. Co. v. Bank, 62 Fed. 226, 8 U. S. App. 554, and Great Western Ins. Co. v. Staaden, 26 Ill. 364, to same effect; Protection Ins. Co. v. Pherson, 5 Ind. 420, holding there could be no recovery where nearest magistrate refused certificate and it was given by next nearest one: Home Ins. Co. v. Duke, 43 Ind. 422, no recovery can be had until certificate of nearest disinterested magistrate is filed; Leadbetter v. Insurance Co., 13 Me. 268, 29 Am. Dec. 506, policy cannot be satisfied by certificate of any but nearest magistrate; Johnson v. Insurance Co., 112 Mass. 52, 17 Am. Rep. 67, production of certificate is condition precedent to suit; so held also in Lane v. Insurance Co., 50 Minn. 230, 52 N. W. 650, 17 L. R. A. 199, and Roumage v. Insurance Co., 13 N. J. L. 114, in dissenting opinion, p. 124, and Kelly v. Insurance Co., 141 Pa. St. 21, 23 Am. St. Rep. 257, 21 Atl. 448. Cited generally, McCann v. Insurance Co., 3 Neb. 207, production of proofs of loss prerequisite to suit; Chism v. Schipper, 51 N. J. L. 20, 16 Atl. 321, 2 L. R. A. 548; O'Brien v. Insurance Co., 63 N. Y. 111.

Insurance.—In this case the notice of loss, etc., was received by the secretary of the insuring company, p. 52.

Cited, Lewis v. Insurance Co., 52 Me. 498, as impliedly recognizing that secretary is proper officer for that purpose.

Insurance.—Misdescription of insured premises to avoid the policy must not only be untrue but must be such as would occasion the insurance to be made at lower premium than would be otherwise demanded, p. 51.

Affirmed, Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 10 Pet. 518, 9 L. 517, holding misdescription not a ground for invalidating policy unless accompanied by reduction of premium; Allen v. Insurance Co., 34 La. Ann. 765, misdescription must be material.

Qualified in Hartman v. Insurance Co., 21 Pa. St. 477, holding true rule to be that misrepresentation must be such as to increase the risk.

Insurance.—Waiver of defect in proof of loss will not be inferred from mere failure of insurer to specify it, nor from investigation and examination into the loss, p. 54.

Cited in Gauche v. Insurance Co., 4 Woods, 106; S. C., 10 Fed. 350, holding investigation of claim by insurer does not dispense with proof of loss by assured; Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Crandall, 33 Ala. 18, dissenting opinion, arguing question of waiver is one for jury, collecting cases; Central City Ins. Co. v. Oates, 86 Ala. 569, 11 Am. St. Rep. 70, 6 So. 85, failure to demand proofs is not a waiver of them; Roumage v. Insurance Co., 13 N. J. L. 118, nor is receipt of defective certificate a waiver of the defect. Cited generally in note to Hambleton v. Home Ins. Co., 6 Biss. 97, F. C. 5,972; Keenan v. Insurance Co., 12 Iowa, 136, 137; Shawmut Sugar Co. v. Insurance Co., 12 Gray, 540.

Distinguished in Tayloe v. Insurance Co., 9 How. 403, 13 L. 192, holding delay in presenting proofs excused by refusal of company to issue policy; Roumage v. Insurance Co., 13 N. J. L. 129, notice by insured of intention to defend on the merits is a waiver of technical defect in proof of loss. So held also in Basch v. Insurance Co., 35 N. J. L. 433, remarking that the principal case is overruled by Tayloe v. Insurance Co., supra, also in Jones v. Insurance Co., 36 N. J. L. 36, 38, 15 Am. Rep. 411, 412; in Ætna Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. 401, 30 Am. Dec. 98, reviewing and criticising the principal case; and in West Rockingham, etc., Ins. Co. v. Sheets, 26 Gratt. 871.

Miscellaneous.—Referred to for statement of facts upon later appeal; Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 10 Pet. 510, 9 L. 514; Perry v. Insurance Co., 11 Fed. 480, no insurable interest can exist under contract ab initio void; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Stocks, 149 Ill. 335. citation should be 10 Pet. 507, and in connection with later appeal; Continental, etc., Ins. Co. v. Lippold, 3 Neb. 395. Cited erroneously, Peoria, etc., Ins. Co. v. Walser, 22 Ind. 85; Duclos v. Insurance Co., 23 La. Ann. 333, holding policy void for failure to notify company of subsequent insurance; Miltensberger v. Beacom, 9 Pa. St. 199, insurance effected without knowledge of one interested may be after loss recovered by him from insured, who has collected it from the insurer. Cited in note, 50 Am. Dec. 104; Clark v. Insurance Co., 8 How. 248, 12 L. 1066.

2 Pet. 58-95, 7 L. 347, GARDNER v. COLLINS.

Statutes—Local law.—Judicial construction of State law affecting real property is recognized by Federal courts as part of the local law, p. 85.

Cited and followed in Beals v. Hale, 4 How. 54, 11 L. 873, judicial construction must be made by court of last resort; Webster v. Cooper, 14 How. 504, 14 L. 517, collecting cases, and applying rule to decision of State court that statute of State was unconstitutional; Thompson v. Phillips, Bald. 285, F. C. 13,974, following State construction as to effect of judicial sales; In re Wyllie, 2 Hughes, 459, F. C. 18,112, construing State homestead law, applying rule and reviewing authorities; Mitchell v. Lippincott, 2 Woods, 473, F. C. 9,665, applying rule to State law regulating effect of mortgages by married women; McClure v. Owen, 26 Iowa, 254, denying authority of United States Supreme Court to disregard construction which highest tribunal of State has placed on its own statute; Hiller v. Shattuck, 1 Flipp. 274, F. C. 6,504, adhering to State construction of Michigan law as to effect of judgment in ejectment upon the title; Bloodgood v. Grasey, 31 Ala. 589, holding by analogy that foreign laws are to receive construction given in the courts of their own country, collecting cases. Cited generally, Lane v. Ruhl, 103 Mich. 42, 61 N. W. 348.

Distinguished in Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 34, 27 L. 365, 2 S. Ct. 22, collecting authorities, and holding that in matters of general commercial law the Federal courts are not bound by State law.

Statutes.—Uniform course of practice of long continuance is of great authority in construing ancient statutes, p. 85.

Cited in Ikelheimer v. Chapman, 32 Ala. 697, dissenting opinion, remarking that uniform practice is one of the lights by which statutes are to be construed; Wetmore v. State, 55 Ala. 201, construing penal statute and holding that long-continued construction adopted by administrative authorities is legitimate aid to statutory construction.

Statutes.—The legislative intention must be derived from the words of the act and not from conjectures aliunde, p. 86.

Cited in Davis v. Justice, 31 Ohio St. 367, dissenting opinion, construing statute against sales of intoxicating liquors; Henry v. Trustees, 48 Ohio St. 683, 30 N. E. 1126, dissenting opinion, construing statute authorizing town trustees to acquire lands for certain purposes; Irwin v. Irwin, 2 Okl. 220, 37 Pac. 560, dissenting opinion, construing divorce law; McFarren v. Umatilla Co., 27 Or. 313, 40 Pac. 1013, construing act granting certain jurisdiction to justices' court; State ex rel. v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 327, 65 Am. St. Rep. 668, 45 S. W. 252, 40 L. R. A. 289, construing inheritance tax law. Cited in note, 27 Am. Rep. 519.

Descent.—A person is of the blood of another who has any portion of the same blood derived from a common ancestor, p. 87.

Cited to this point, Miller v. Speer, 38 N. J. Eq. 572.

Succession.—The phrase “of the blood” in a statute of descents includes the half blood as well as the whole blood, p. 89.

Cited in Cole v. Batley, 2 Curtis, 563, F. C. 2,977, holding maternal grandfather is “of the blood” of the intestate’s mother; Stallworth v. Stallworth, 29 Ala. 79, remarking that distinction between whole and half blood has been abolished in Alabama by statute; Kelly v. Maguire, 15 Ark. 589, 596, following rule; Anderson v. Bell, 140 Ind. 382, 39 N. E. 737, 29 L. R. A. 554, & n., “brother” includes “half brother;” so held also in Rowley v. Stray, 32 Mich. 75, Wheeler v. Clutterbuck, 52 N. Y. 70, Cliver v. Sanders, 8 Ohio St. 507, and Hart’s Appeal, 8 Pa. St. 37, all to same effect; Beebe v. Griffing, 14 N. Y. 243, 245, applying rule to construction of New York statute; Baker v. Chalfant, 5 Whart. 481, to Pennsylvania statute; and cited, 61 Am. Dec. 656, 660, in extended notes on inheritance by the half blood.

Distinguished in Robertson v. Burrell, 40 Ind. 335, where there was express statutory provision regulating inheritance by kindred of the half blood, and also in Amy v. Amy, 12 Utah, 335, 42 Pac. 1133.

Descent.—Where statute provides that an estate of inheritance in case of intestacy shall go to the kin next to the intestate of the blood of “the person from whom such estate came,” it is the next of kin of the immediate ancestor making the gift or devise who are entitled to share, p. 90.

Cited and principle followed in Cole v. Barley, 2 Curt. 564, F. C. 2,977, holding under same statute maternal grandfather takes estate which descended to intestate from her mother to exclusion of brothers and sisters of the mother; West v. Williams, 15 Ark. 693, arguing that one taking by devise from his grandmother is in by purchase and becomes himself a stock of descent. Followed, Buckingham v. Jacques, 37 Conn. 405, adopting above rule under similar statute, and again in Clark v. Shailer, 46 Conn. 123; Smith v. Croom, 7 Fla. 174, 178, applying rule and holding words in statute “gift, devise and descent from father” to mean, mediate and not immediate descent from father; Case v. Wildridge, 4 Ind. 54, holding “descent from mother” does not mean or include “descent from maternal grandfather;” Murphy v. Henry, 35 Ind. 450, descents under Indiana statute must be direct and immediate; Stewart v. Jones, 8 Gill & J. 28, discussing Maryland statute of descents and holding that though descent is immediate from person last seized the inheritable blood is derived from the ancestor from whom it descended to him; Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 264, applying rule to construction of Missouri statute; Wheeler v. Clutterbuck, 52 N. Y. 71, to New York statute; Prickett v. Parker, 3 Ohio St. 396, to Ohio statute; and also in Brower v. Hunt, 18 Ohio St. 340; Morris v. Potter, 10 R. I. 70, following principal case and adopting rule. Cited generally in Roundtree v. Pursell, 11 Ind. App. 538, 39 N. E. 751, construing statute relating to succession of personal property, and in 12 Am. St. Rep. 104, 110, in exhaustive note, collecting authorities on this and other propositions relating to succession to estates of intestates generally.

Miscellaneous.—Cited generally, Saunders v. Gould, 4 Pet. 392, 7 L. 897. Erroneously cited, Clark v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 8 How. 248, 12 L. 1066, and Coover v. O'Conner, 8 Watts, 477.

2 Pet. 96-106, 7 L. 360, WILLIAMS v. BANK OF UNITED STATES.

Bills and notes.—If parties reside in the same town, the indorser must be personally notified of dishonor, either verbally or in writing, or a written notice left at his office or place of business, p. 101.

Cited, Bowling v. Harrison, 6 How. 257, 12 L. 428, holding notice through the post-office may not ordinarily be substituted for that required by above rule; Stephenson v. Primrose, 8 Port. 159, 33 Am. Dec. 283; discussing question generally; Rives v. Parmley, 18 Ala. 261, if left at place of business notice should be given to clerk or person in charge; Brindley v. Barr, 3 Harr. 419, notice by post insufficient; Grinman v. Walker, 9 Iowa, 428, notice by mail is sufficient if it be shown that it actually reached party; Bank v. Baldwin, 17 N. J. L. 489, applying rule; Brown v. Bank, 85 Va. 98, 7 S. E. 358, rule applies when parties live within same postal delivery, though not exactly in same town. Cited generally, Gindrat v. Bank, 7 Ala. 332; Wallace v. Crilley, 46 Wis. 578, 1 N. W. 302, and collected with other cases in note, 38 Am. Dec. 608.

Bills and notes.—It is sufficient diligence in giving notice of dishonor if the indorsee's agent call at indorser's residence and finding the place locked and upon inquiry learning that he has left the town but for how long is unknown, makes no further effort to give notice, pp. 101, 106.

Cited in Dickins v. Beal, 10 Pet. 581, 9 L. 541, collecting cases on what acts constitute due diligence; Wiseman v. Chiappella, 23 How. 377, 16 L. 469, holding demand sufficient when notary went several times to office of acceptors on day when bill was due and found doors closed and nobody to answer any demand; McGrew v. Toulmin, 2 Stew. & P. 434, holding notice mailed to place where maker had been in habit of receiving his mail sufficient, although some three months before he had changed his place of receiving mail to a nearer post-office; Howe v. Bradley, 19 Me. 35, if door is locked during business hours further effort to give notice unnecessary; Thompson v. Bank, 3 Hill L. 83, 30 Am. Dec. 358, reasonable diligence is question of fact for the jury; Clark v. Bigelow, 16 Me. 249, due diligence to give notice excuses failure; so also held in Kleekamp v. Meyer, 5 Mo. App. 448; McVeigh v. Bank, 26 Gratt. 806, collecting authorities on what constitutes due diligence, and see valuable note in 38 Am. Dec. 616.

Bills and notes.—If when notice of nonpayment is to be given the party entitled to it be absent from the State and has left no agent to receive it, the law dispenses with giving him regular notice, p. 102.

Cited in Atherton v. Thornton, 8 N. H. 182, applying rule by analogy to notice to fix liability of bail.

Bills and notes.—Notice of dishonor should be given at the residence of the indorser, p. 103.

Cited in Foard v. Johnson, 2 Ala. 568, 36 Am. Dec. 423, holding that notice by mail to place of date of bill is not sufficient unless it appears that that is residence of drawer or indorser, or that residence is unknown; and so also in Branch Bank v. Peirce, 3 Ala. 325; Stamps v. Brown, Walk. (Miss.) 530, where parties reside in different towns, notice by mail suffices.

Distinguished in Tunstall v. Walker, 2 Smedes & M. 659, where indorser has no known residence or place of business, no notice is necessary; Brown v. Jones, 113 Ind. 49, 3 Am. St. Rep. 625, 13 N. E. 858, holding, where place of payment is specified in bill, presentment must be made there.

Bills and notes.—If giving of notice of dishonor is prevented by the act of the person entitled to it, the performance of the condition is excused, p. 102.

Cited in The Steamboat Joseph E. Coffee, Olcott, 404, F. C. 7,536, it is an inherent quality of every condition dependent on the volition of a party that he shall not be prevented from performing it by one to whose benefit the nonperformance is to inure; City Bank of Racine v. Babcock, 1 Holmes, 184, F. C. 2,741, where bank had no place where notice could be served in order to entitle pledgee to sue, it was held that notice was dispensed with; Stephenson v. Primrose, 8 Port. 162, 33 Am. Dec. 284, holding notice excused if drawer absent from his place of business during business hours; John v. Bank, 57 Ala. 99, where absence from place of business is relied upon to excuse notice, it must be shown that absence was during business hours.

Contracts — Performance.—If a party to a contract who is entitled to the benefit of a condition upon the performance of which his responsibility is to arise, dispense with, or by any act of his own prevent the performance, the opposite party is excused from proving a strict compliance with the condition, p. 102.

Cited and principle followed in Hamilton v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 9 Blatchf. 256, F. C. 5,986, where insurance company prevented punctual payment of premiums by withdrawal of agency; Brady v.

Stillman, 31 Fed. 793, holding defendant cannot plead nonperformance of condition which he himself has prevented; Risinger v. Cheney, 2 Gilm. 90, where performance was prevented by injunction, held that party was in default who permitted continuance of injunction; Attix v. Pelan, 5 Iowa, 342, holding agents to sell excused from showing performance as condition precedent to recovery for commissions, where owner himself had previously sold property in question; Padden v. Marsh, 34 Iowa, 524, holding offer to return property excused by notice that it will not be received; Larned v. Dubuque, 86 Iowa, 181, 53 N. W. 110, noncollection of full amount sued for by attorney excused by compromise by his client; Smith v. Railroad Co., 36 N. H. 489, agreement to refer as condition precedent to suit cannot be set up by party who has prevented reference, collecting cases; Schwartzbach v. Union, 25 W. Va. 649, holding surrender of insurance policy waived by notice that it would not be accepted; Boyington v. Sweeney, 77 Wis. 68, 45 N. W. 942, offer of performance excused by notice that it will not be accepted, collecting cases. Affirmed generally in Doyle v. Teas, 4 Scam. 263, collecting authorities; Car Co. v. Menzies, 90 Ind. 85, 46 Am. Rep. 198; Viele v. Insurance Co., 26 Iowa, 52, 96 Am. Dec. 98; Eliot Nat. Bank v. Beal, 141 Mass. 569, 6 N. E. 744; Schmidt v. Insurance Co., 2 Mo. App. 341.

Rules of practice.—The court refused to hear argument upon the proposition that rules adopting the practice of State courts must be in writing, and expressed itself as satisfied with the contrary conclusion reached in Fullerton v. Bank, 1 Pet. 604, 7 L. 280, p. 106.

Cited generally in Citizens' Bank v. Farwell, 56 Fed. 574, 12 U. S. App. 409.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Whitaker v. Morrison, 1 Fla. 33, 44 Am. Dec. 631, reasonableness of notice is mixed question of law and fact; Railroad Co. v. Frederic, 46 Miss. 11; Conkling v. King, 10 N. Y. 442.

2 Pet. 107-120, 7 L. 368, VENABLE v. BANK OF UNITED STATES.

Fraudulent conveyance.—A deed made by a person upon the eve of a decree being rendered against him for a large sum, conveying all his property to his brother-in-law, who was not known to possess property sufficient to pay the purchase money, and suffered the property to remain in the possession of the grantor will be set aside as fraudulent, p. 112, et seq.

Cited in Marshall v. Croom, 60 Ala. 132, holding void a deed of insolvent, pending suits against him, conveying all his property to near relation, as against grantee who knows of existence of the debts of grantor; Clark v. Snelling, 1 Ind. 382, holding void a deed executed without consideration and mala fide; Weber v. Rothchild, 15 Or. 392, 3 Am. St. Rep. 168, 15 Pac. 654, actual payment of purchase money essential to bona fides; and in note to 42 Am. Dec. 631, on acts of vendor when admissible as against vendee, to show fraud, collecting authorities.

Parties to actions.—In proceedings to set aside conveyance of real estate made in fraud of rights of creditors, it is not necessary to make mortgagee of estate a party, his rights not being brought into question, p. 112.

Evidence.—Acts and confessions of grantor, though not admissible after conveyance to prejudice his grantee's title, may be admissible to disprove a grantor's answer in a cause, p. 119.

Miscellaneous.—Cited generally in Harris v. Alcock, 10 Gill & J. 252, 32 Am. Dec. 166. Cited erroneously in Railroad Co. v. Ragsdale, 51 Miss. 454. Cited in Williams v. Eikenberry, 25 Neb. 725, 13 Am. St. Rep. 519, 41 N. W. 771, remarking principal case incorrectly cited in Bump on Fraudulent Conveyances; Magniac v. Thompson. 1 Bald. 357, F. C. 8,956.

2 Pet. 121-135, 7 L. 368, BANK OF UNITED STATES v. CORCORAN.

Bills and notes.—Notice of nonpayment is sufficient to charge indorser, if actually received by him, though left at an improper place, p. 132.

Cited and rule applied in Dickins v. Beal, 10 Pet. 579, 581, 9 L. 541, 542, holding notice may be established either directly or by proof of due diligence; McClain v. Waters, 9 Dana, 57, rule particularly applicable where person to be noticed has no known residence; Bradley v. Davis, 26 Me. 52, applying rule; Hallowell v. Curry, 41 Pa. St. 326, applying rule and collecting cases; Grinman v. Walker, 9 Iowa, 428, holding analogously, that notice of suit through the mail is sufficient, accompanied by proof that it was actually received by the sendee on the proper day; First Nat. Bank v. Wood, 51 Vt. 474, 31 Am. Rep. 693, and Terbell v. Jones, 15 Wis. 256, holding similarly. Cited, arguendo, Cabot Bank v. Warner, 10 Allen, 524, and collected with other cases in note on this point, 38 Am. Dec. 607.

Evidence.—Presumptions from evidence given in a cause, of the existence of particular facts, are in many cases mixed questions of law and fact, p. 133.

Cited in Bell v. Bank, 7 Gill, 232, holding question of due diligence is one of law; Wright v. Schroeder, 2 Curt. 552, F. C. 18,091, holding question whether evidence has any legitimate tendency to prove matter in issue is one for the court; Butler v. Stocking, 8 N. Y. 412, holding similarly to last case. Cited generally in Trott v. West, 9 Yerg. 436.

Bills and notes.—Rule that notice of nonpayment must be given at indorser's residence or place of business cannot be escaped by leaving notice at another place, where notices were sometimes left, p. 134.

Cited and applied in Fowler v. Warfield, 4 Cr. C. C. 71, F. C. 5,004, holding notice addressed to one town when indorser lived at another cannot be made good by proof of a custom at the post-office to forward letters to addressee when he was a known resident of the latter town.

Distinguished in Wilkins v. Bank, 6 How. (Miss.) 222, notice may be left with one whom the person to be noticed has by usage impliedly constituted his agent for the receipt of letters; Bank of Commonwealth v. Mudgett, 44 N. Y. 521, holding desk in the custom-house may be place of business within rule; and cited in note, 38 Am. Dec. 614, collecting cases.

Miscellaneous.—Cited generally in Hitchcock v. McGehee, 7 Port. 562. Cited erroneously in Allen v. Kirk, 81 Iowa, 664, 47 N. W. 908.

2 Pet. 136, 7 L. 374, JACKSON v. TWENTYMAN.

Federal courts.—The judicial power of United States courts does not extend to suits where an alien is a party, unless a citizen is the adverse party, p. 136.

Cited and rule followed in Prentiss v. Brennan, 2 Blatchf. 164, F. C. 11,385; in Hinckley v. Byrne, Deady, 227, F. C. 6,510; in Pooley v. Lucio, 72 Fed. 561, and also in Orosco v. Gagliardo, 22 Cal. 85; in Cissel v. McDonald, 16 Blatchf. 151, F. C. 2,729, holding citizen of District of Columbia not a citizen of a State within the rule; Stuart v. Easton, 156 U. S. 47, 39 L. 341, 15 S. Ct. 268, holding allegation that party is "of a certain place," insufficient allegation of citizenship of that place; Rateau v. Bernard, 3 Blatchf. 248, F. C. 11,579, holding no jurisdiction where the parties are all aliens except one immaterial party; Blair v. Manufacturing Co., 7 Neb. 155, if Circuit Court wrongfully assume jurisdiction its judgment is void.

Distinguished in State v. Lewis, 12 Fed. 3; S. C., 14 Fed. 67, holding Federal courts have jurisdiction of action between a State and subjects of a friendly foreign power.

Federal courts — Citizenship.—Where diverse citizenship confers jurisdiction on the Federal courts, citizenship must appear on the record, p. 136.

Cited in Grace v. Insurance Co., 109 U. S. 284, 27 L. 935, 3 S. Ct. 211, Herndon v. Insurance Co., 107 N. C. 195, 12 S. E. 242, Donaldson v. Hazen, Hemp. 424, 425, F. C. 3,984, applying rule. Cited, arguendo, Tunstall v. Worthington, Hemp. 664, F. C. 14,239, refusing to entertain action where the only party who was a citizen of a different State was a garnishee and an immaterial party. Cited in United States v. Woolsey, 28 Fed. Cas. 767, on general proposition that United States courts being of limited jurisdiction, pleadings must show jurisdiction.

2 Pet. 137-149, 7 L. 374, VAN NESS v. PACARD.

Fixtures.—General rule is that whatever is once annexed to the freehold becomes part of it and cannot be removed except by him who is entitled to the inheritance, p. 143.

Cited and principle followed in Mitchell v. Billingsley, 17 Ala. 393, holding fruit trees fixtures; Harkness v. Sears, 26 Ala. 497, 62 Am. Dec. 744, holding stationary machinery fixtures as between vendor and vendee; Marks v. Ryan, 63 Cal. 111, barn and dwelling-house are fixtures; Hamilton v. Huntley, 78 Ind. 524, 41 Am. Rep. 595, reviewing authorities and holding machinery attached so as to be easily removed, fixtures as between seller of same and mortgagee of premises; Davis v. Eastham, 81 Ky. 118, holding mill a fixture and part of realty, notwithstanding express exception in mortgage; McKim v. Mason, 3 Md. Ch. 195, holding boiler and engine of cotton factory part of the realty; Stillman v. Hamer, 7 How. (Miss.) 423, buildings erected without any contract with owner belong to the land; Switzer v. Allen, 11 Mont. 164, 27 Pac. 400, buildings erected by lessee under agreement that they were to be paid for by lessor are part of the realty; Conner v. Coffin, 22 N. H. 541, manure on a farm is part of the realty. Cited, arguendo, in Jones v. Railroad Co., 70 Ala. 230; Central Branch R. R. Co. v. Fritz, 20 Kan. 436, 27 Am. Rep. 180, holding fixture part of realty remains property of owner of realty, notwithstanding it has been wrongfully severed and affixed to lands of another; Coombs v. Jordan, 3 Bland, 312, 22 Am. Dec. 260, what are fixtures depends on the circumstances of each particular case; Horne v. Smith, 105 N. C. 325, 18 Am. St. Rep. 905, 11 S. E. 374, engine and boiler affixed by vendor are fixtures; McCullough v. Irvine, 13 Pa. St. 441, as also a substantial brick building erected by tenant for life; Henderson v. Ownby, 56 Tex. 649, 42 Am. Rep. 692, and erections by defendant pending ejectment; Leland v. Gassett, 17 Vt. 410, 411, buildings erected by son upon lands of father, relying upon promise to convey to him, are part of the realty.

Distinguished in Croomie v. Hoover, 40 Ind. 56, tenant may remove any buildings erected by him for the better enjoyment of the leased premises; Howard v. Fessenden, 14 Allen, 128, collecting cases, dwelling-house erected by tenant of tenant for life may be removed by the former; Gregg v. Railway Co., 48 Mo. App. 498, tenant may remove fixtures erected under special agreement to permit removal; Lanphere v. Lowe, 3 Neb. 136, 137, improvements so made as to be easily removed are treated as personal property, and subjected to levy and sale as such; Dame v. Dame, 38 N. H. 430, 75 Am. Dec. 197, house erected by one on lands of another under an agreement that he may remove it at pleasure does not become part of the realty; Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 532, 59 Am. Dec. 647, holding machinery in woolen mill attached only by cleats, not fixtures; Ross's Appeal, 9 Pa. St. 494, engine-house erected by vendee may be removed by him; Hill v. Wentworth, 28 Vt. 436, machinery fastened by cleats, held not part of realty.

Fixtures erected for purposes of trade may be removed by the tenant during his term, pp. 143, 144.

Cited and rule applied in Freeman v. Dawson, 110 U. S. 270, 28 L. 143, 4 S. Ct. 98, and Lemar v. Miles, 4 Watts, 332, they may be taken in execution against the lessee; Hensley v. Brodie, 16 Ark. 523, sale and delivery of possession of machinery is sufficient severance to give title to buyer as against subsequent purchaser of the freehold; Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 31, where estate of tenant is indefinite, fixtures may be removed after lapse of the tenancy; Bircher v. Parker, 40 Mo. 120, or where removal has been enjoined; Goodman v. Railroad Co., 45 Mo. 35, 100 Am. Dec. 336, holding similarly to preceding case; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Railway Co., 142 U. S. 416, 35 L. 1063, 12 S. Ct. 194, rails of railway company are trade fixtures within the rule; Brown v. Reno Co., 55 Fed. 234, also buildings and machinery of electric light company; Carr v. Railroad Co., 74 Ga. 81, 82, a railway depot; Moore v. Smith, 24 Ill. 516, distillery machinery; Searl v. School District, 133 U. S. 561, 33 L. 746, 10 S. Ct. 376, arguendo, rule does not apply where agreement raises no presumption that improvements were intended to be transferred; State v. Bonham, 18 Ind. 233, sawmill and machinery are trade fixtures; Russell v. Richards, 10 Me. 431, 25 Am. Dec. 255, a mill; Northern Central Ry. Co. v. Canton Co., 30 Md. 353, railway depots, road-bed and rails; Hanrahan v. O'Reilly, 102 Mass. 204, a bowling alley; Firth v. Rowe, 53 N. J. Eq. 525, 32 Atl. 1066, a livery-stable; Ombony v. Jones, 19 N. Y. 243, a ballroom; Western N. C. Ry. Co. v. Deal, 90 N. C. 112, a railway depot; Oregon R. & N. Co. v. Mosier, 14 Or. 522, 58 Am. Rep. 324, 13 Pac. 302, railway improvements; Hill v. Sewald, 53 Pa. St. 274, 91 Am. Dec. 211, so boilers in a mill may be removed by tenant; Padgett v. Cleveland, 33 S. C. 348, 11 S. E. 1072, as also sash and door manufacturing machinery; Texas & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Hays, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 82, railway improvements; Wing v. Gray, 36 Vt. 268, hop poles; Second Nat. Bank v. Merrill, 69 Wis. 511, 34 N. W. 517, also paper manufacturing machinery; Dawson v. Daniel, 2 Flipp. 317, F. C. 3,669, holding machinery part of a leasehold. Cited generally, Steers v. Daniel, 4 Fed. 599, discussing nature of levy under execution when fixtures consist of ponderous machinery; Ross v. Campbell, 9 Colo. App. 40, 47 Pac. 465, tenant may remove whatever fixtures can be removed without injury to the freehold; La Salle Co. Mfg. Co. v. Ottawa, 16 Ill. 421, fixtures for purposes of trade are real chattels; Crippen v. Morriso, 13 Mich. 34, test is whether fixtures can be removed without injury to the freehold.

Distinguished in Sampson v. Camperdown Mills, 64 Fed. 942, fixtures must be removed during the term; Dostal v. McCaddon, 35

Iowa, 321, collecting cases and ruling similarly to preceding case; White v. Arndt, 1 Whart. 93, ruling similarly; Doak v. Wiswell, 38 Me. 572, tenant by curtesy not a tenant within the rule; Collamore v. Gillis, 149 Mass. 581, 14 Am. St. Rep. 461, 22 N. E. 47, 5 L. R. A. 152, & n., baker's oven not removable without destruction of building is not a trade fixture; Perkins v. Swank, 43 Miss. 361, fixtures erected by a vendee are not severable. Cited, but not followed, Freeman v. Lynch, 8 Neb. 196, reviewing cases at length and holding house erected by claimant a fixture; Comer v. Coffin, 22 N. H. 541, reviewing cases and holding manure a fixture not removable by farm tenant.

Common law.—Only those principles of the common law were adopted in this country which were applicable to its situation, p. 144.

Cited in Simpson v. State, 59 Ala. 13, 31 Am. Rep. 7, refusing to apply common law on subject of spring guns; Wagner v. Bissell, 3 Iowa, 403, refusing to apply common law as to trespass by cattle, reviewing authorities; Pierson v. Lane, 60 Iowa, 64, 14 N. W. 92, refusing to apply statute de donis; Perrin v. Lepper, 34 Mich. 295, refusing to apply common-law doctrine of attornment; Reno, etc., Works v. Stevenson, 20 Nev. 277, 19 Am. St. Rep. 368, 21 Pac. 319, 4 L. R. A. 63, refusing to apply its doctrine of riparian rights; Lisbon v. Lyman, 49 N. H. 582, refusing to apply common-law rule as to presumptions. Cited generally, Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 52, 38 L. 350, 14 S. Ct. 567, holding jurisprudence of Oregon founded on the common law; United States v. New Bedford Bridge, 1 Wood. & M. 448, F. C. 15,867, discussing effect of Constitution on common law; and in note, 49 Am. Dec. 618, and in note, 7 Am. St. Rep. 430.

Common law.—The general principles of the common law were brought to America by our ancestors and adopted here so far as applicable, p. 144.

Cited approvingly in Murray v. Railway Co., 62 Fed. 27, reviewing authorities and holding in the absence of legislation by congress, interstate commerce is subject to rules of the common law; Mobile, etc., Ins. Co. v. McMillan, 31 Ala. 719, common law applies to law of insurance in absence of statutory enactment; Ex parte Holman, 28 Iowa, 126, applying common law as to habeas corpus; Clark v. Clark, 17 Nev. 129, 28 Pac. 238, applying doctrine of common law as to descents; Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. 646, applying common-law doctrine that alien may not inherit lands, reviewing authorities. Cited, arguendo, United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 709, 42 L. 912, 18 S. Ct. 480, dissenting opinion, discussing question of citizenship under fourteenth amendment. Cited generally, Gratton v. Railway Co., 95 Iowa, 117, 63 N. W. 591, 28 L. R. A. 558, discussing how far common law is part of national jurisprudence.

Fixtures.— Whether fixtures for the purposes of trade are removable or not does not depend on their form, size, or construction, but solely upon whether they are erected for purposes of trade or not, p. 146.

Residence.— Whether building is occupied primarily for business or residence purposes depends upon whether the residence is a mere accessory to the beneficial exercise of the trade, p. 147.

Cited in Phelps v. Rooney, 9 Wis. 96 (715), dissenting opinion, discussing character of building for purpose of homestead.

Evidence.— Jury are sole judges whether evidence is such as ought to satisfy their minds on a question of fact, p. 148.

Cited and quoted in Gleason v. Walsh, 43 Me. 400.

Parol evidence is competent to establish usage, p. 148.

Custom — Fixtures.— Contracts between landlord and tenant, in respect to matters as to which the parties are silent, is presumed to be made with reference to the usage and custom of the district where the land lies; accordingly evidence is admissible of custom in particular locality, permitting tenants to remove dairy buildings erected on leased premises, p. 148.

Approved and followed in Cochrane v. Mining Co., 16 Colo. 419, 26 Pac. 781, construing lease according to customs of mining district; Keogh v. Daniell, 12 Wis. 170, 172, sustaining custom permitting removal of buildings erected by tenant; Brown v. Atkinson, 91 N. C. 397, holding, by analogy, evidence of usage admissible to show custom regarding payment of license tax; Snowden v. Warder, 3 Rawle, 106, to show custom that vendor shall be liable for latent defects in cotton sold; Adams v. Insurance Co., 95 Pa. St. 355, 40 Am. Rep. 662, to show custom of steamboat captains to give premium notes for insurance. Cited generally in Gleason v. Walsh, 43 Me. 399, usage may be general although confined to a particular district; Long v. Armsby Co., 43 Mo. App. 267, collecting authorities on general subject of usages; Farnsworth v. Chase, 19 N. H. 541, 51 Am. Dec. 208, discussing usage and custom generally. Cited, without particular application, in Foster v. Robinson, 6 Ohio St. 96, and cited in note, 69 Am. Dec. 515, collecting authorities.

Distinguished in Thomas v. Davis, 76 Mo. 78, 43 Am. Rep. 761, custom as between landlord and tenant to regard certain fixtures as chattels may not be admitted to affect conveyance between, by owner of fee who has annexed chattels to the realty.

Trial.— The trial court cannot be required to give to the jury its opinion on the weight and credibility of the testimony, p. 149.

Cited in Insurance Co. v. Rodel, 95 U. S. 238, 24 L. 435, whether judge shall do so or not is entirely in his discretion; Butler v. Stocking, 8 N. Y. 412, ruling similarly; and cited in notes, 72 Am.

Dec. 541, 546, collecting authorities and discussing general scope of judge's authority in commenting on evidence, etc.; Gamble v. Johnson, 9 Mo. 625 (617), in general discussion.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Allen v. Railroad Co., 106 N. C. 528, 11 S. E. 827, after revocation of license, licensee has right of re-entry for purpose of removing personal property placed on land by him.

2 Pet. 150-156, 7 L. 379, BOYCE v. ANDERSON.

Common carriers.—Law of common carriers is one of great rigor, and although its necessity and policy are admitted, it ought not to be carried further, p. 154.

Cited in The Neaffie, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 467, F. C. 10,063, holding owner of steam tug is not liable as common carrier for injury to the tow; Varble v. Bigley, 14 Bush, 706, 29 Am. Rep. 441, owners of towboats are not common carriers; Lewis v. The Success, 18 La. Ann. 7, carrier not liable for delays caused by weather; Alexander v. Greene, 7 Hill, 545, owners of towboats are not common carriers; Ingalls v. Bills, 9 Met. 13, 43 Am. Dec. 353, coach proprietors not liable as common carriers; Sheldon v. Robinson, 7 N. H. 165, 26 Am. Dec. 728, nor a driver of a stage coach; McKee v. Owen, 15 Mich. 140, refusing to extend innkeeper's liability to steamboat carriers of passengers and baggage. Cited generally in Powell v. Myers, 26 Wend. 598, discussing when liability of carrier of baggage terminates.

Distinguished in Smith v. Pierce, 1 La. 356, and Alexander v. Greene, 7 Hill, 550, owners of tugboats are common carriers.

Liability of carriers of slaves is regulated by law of carriers of passengers rather than of goods, p. 155.

Cited in Folse v. Transportation Co., 19 La. Ann. 200, and followed on the precise point; Scruggs v. Davis, 3 Head, 665, 666, applying rule; Clarke v. Railroad Co., 14 N. Y. 573, 67 Am. Dec. 206, Rixford v. Smith, 52 N. H. 360, 13 Am. Rep. 47, White v. Winnissimet Co., 7 Cush. 158, South & North Carolina R. R. Co. v. Heinlein, 52 Ala. 614, 23 Am. Rep. 586, and Hussey v. Saragossa, 3 Woods, 382, F. C. 6,949, holding, analogously, that carrier of animals is not liable for injuries growing out of natural propensity of animal; Williams v. Taylor, 4 Port. 238, holding liability of carrier of slaves not regulated by law of carrier of goods; Sill v. Railroad Co., 4 Rich. L. 161, refusing to hold innocent carrier liable for loss by escape of slave; Perkins v. Reeds, 8 Mo. 35, holding by analogy that bailee of slave is not liable for loss occasioned by slave's running away without fault on his part; and Spencer v. Pilcher, 8 Leigh, 583, discussing generally liability of bailee of slave. Cited in note, 67 Am. Dec. 209, collecting authorities on liability of carriers of animals.

Distinguished in Railroad Co. v. Reynolds, 8 Kan. 640, re-reported, 12 Am. Rep. 502, note, arguing general rule that carriers of animals are liable as carriers of goods; Richards v. Fuqua, 28 Miss. 801, 64 Am. Dec. 124, holding carrier of slaves liable for loss resulting from defective boat.

Carriers of passengers are responsible for injuries resulting from their negligence or unskillful conduct and not otherwise, p. 155.

Cited in Sales v. Stage Co., 4 Iowa, 549, holding carrier is liable for slightest neglect; Lusby v. Railroad Co., 41 Fed. 186, holding unusual jerking of train negligence; Hall v. Steamboat Co., 13 Conn. 326, carrier is bound to use the highest degree of care.

Common carriers.—When the carriage is gratuitous, the carrier is responsible only for gross neglect, p. 156.

Cited in Brown v. The Elvira Harbeck, 4 Fed. Cas. 372, applying rule.

Distinguished in Macon, etc., R. R. Co. v. Holt, 8 Ga. 164, 165, rule not applicable where carrying is under such circumstances as to constitute it a conversion.

Carrier of passengers is liable only for ordinary neglect, p. 156.

Cited in Brock v. King, 3 Jones (N. C.), 49, holding by analogy, jailer having custody of runaway slave is bound to use only ordinary care.

Modified in Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet. 192, 10 L. 122, holding carrier liable for slight neglect. Criticised in Pendleton v. Kinsley, 3 Cliff. 421, F. C. 10,922, holding rule to be that proof of accident, prima facie, affords presumption of negligence; Fairchild v. Stage Co., 13 Cal. 603, criticising principal case and holding same as preceding citation; Farish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 710, 712, 62 Am. Dec. 670, 672, holding principal case practically overruled by Stokes v. Saltonstall, supra. Criticised in Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hazzard, 26 Ill. 387, holding rule is now that carrier is liable for the least negligence; Edwards v. Lord, 49 Me. 281, holding similarly. Distinguished in Smith v. Pierce, 1 La. 356, as not authority against holding a towing steamer liable as a common carrier.

Miscellaneous.—Cited generally in Baxter v. Leland, Abb. Adm. 359, F. C. 1,124, tendency of law is to place responsibility of common carrier on same footing with that of other parties performing undertakings of trust for reward; Murray v. Railroad Co., 62 Fed. 40, common law of carriers applicable to carriage interstate; Creswell v. Walker, 37 Ala. 236, moral and intellectual qualities of slaves are looked to in ascertaining the rights and liabilities of others to them as articles of property; Forsyth v. Perry, 5 Fla. 344, contract by which slave is hired is one of bailment.

2 Pet. 157-169, 7 L. 381, THOMPSON v. TOLMIE.

Appeal and error.—Errors and irregularities are to be corrected by some direct proceeding, either before the same court or in an appellate court, p. 163.

Cited in Waters v. Stickney, 12 Allen, 10, 90 Am. Dec. 129, holding probate judge may admit to probate a codicil to will already admitted, which was on the back of original will but unnoticed at the time.

Judgment.— If no jurisdiction exists, proceedings are void and may be rejected on collateral attack. p. 163.

Cited with approval in Thornhill v. Bank, 1 Woods, 5, F. C. 13,992, holding proceedings under superseded insolvency law void; Lavin v. Bank, 18 Blatchf. 27, 1 Fed. 665, reviewing principal case, and holding administration on estate of living person void; McCartney v. Calhoun, 11 Ala. 120, sale in absence of jurisdiction does not divest title; Bishop v. Hampton, 15 Ala. 767, applying rule and holding similarly to preceding case; McGehee v. Wilkins, 31 Fla. 86, 12 So. 229, where defendant is not before the court, judgment is void and open to collateral attack; Railroad v. Davis, 13 Ga. 76, holding judgment of arbitrators void on collateral attack for failure to follow jurisdictional requirement; Reed v. Wright, 2 G. Greene, 35, holding judgment rendered under unconstitutional act void; Seely v. Reid, 3 G. Greene, 379, holding sale where there was no service of process void, collecting cases; Ex parte Holman, 28 Iowa, 178, dissenting opinion, arguing, State court may review void proceeding in Federal court by habeas corpus; Lowry v. Erwin, 6 Rob. (La.) 205, holding void a judgment of Federal court where both parties resided without the State; Vick v. Vicksburg, 1 How. (Miss.) 440, 31 Am. Dec. 180, holding void an appointment of administrator cum test. an. in case falling without the statute; Tarleton v. Cox, 45 Miss. 438, judgment rendered after death of party without revivor by scire facias is void; Kittredge v. Emerson, 15 N. H. 263, 267, decree of Federal court under bankruptcy act enjoining proceedings in State court; Miltimore v. Miltimore, 40 Pa. St. 155, decree of divorce; James v. Smith, 2 S. C. 188, attachment for contempt; Adams v. Agnew, 15 S. C. 42, judgment by default entered by clerk in term time; Sutherland v. De Leon, 1 Tex. 309, 46 Am. Dec. 107, proceeding by attachment; Sitzman v. Pacquette, 13 Wis. 318, appointment of administrator d. b. n. in absence of contingency contemplated by statute.

Judgments.— When jurisdiction over the subject-matter appears on the face of the proceedings, errors or mistakes of the court cannot be corrected or examined collaterally, pp. 163, 169.

Cited and applied in United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 730, 8 L. 561, holding rule extends to executive and legislative as well as judicial acts, collecting cases; Cocke v. Halsey, 16 Pet. 87, 10 L. 897, holding when court has jurisdiction, decision presumed correct; Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. 345, 17 L. 874, refusing to question, collaterally, judgment of competent court declaring lands redeemed from forfeiture; Keyes v. United States, 109 U. S. 340, 27 L. 956, 3 S. Ct. 204, refusing to question collaterally decision of court-martial; White v. Crow, 110 U. S. 189, 28 L. 115, 4 S. Ct. 74, everything presumed in favor of judgment on collateral attack; United States v. Land Co., 148 U. S. 44, 37 L. 360, 13 S. Ct. 463, refusing to question decision of State governor exercising power conferred on him by act of congress; In re Lennon, 166 U. S. 553, 41 L. 1112, 17 S. Ct. 660, allegation of citizenship in bill cannot be questioned on habeas corpus; Derby v. Jacques, 1 Cliff. 437, F. C. 3,817, erroneous decision binding until reversed; Cassels v. Vernon, 5 Mason, 335, F. C. 2,503, decree of Probate Court establishing will cannot be attacked collaterally on ground of incompetency of testator; Starr v. Stark, 2 Sawy. 621, F. C. 13,317, applying rule to ruling of court in progress of trial, compelling election between counts; Tompkins v. Tompkins, 1 Story, 553, F. C. 14,091, applying rule to decree of Supreme Court as to validity of will; Lincoln v. Tower, 2 McLean, 485, F. C. 8,355, record is conclusive on all matters which might have been traversed, collecting cases; Sprague v. Litherberry, 4 McLean, 452, F. C. 13,251, reviewing principal case and refusing to question collaterally appointment of guardian; McArthur v. Allen, 3 Fed. 322, reviewing authorities and refusing to question collaterally decree setting aside will; In re Wilson, 18 Fed. 37, on habeas corpus every presumption is in favor of jurisdiction, collecting cases; Walker v. Sturbans, 38 Fed. 300, refusing to disturb decree establishing priority of liens on collateral attack; Reinach v. Railroad Co., 58 Fed. 43, collecting authorities and distinguishing between jurisdictional and quasi-jurisdictional allegations. The following State court cases also affirm and follow the syllabus doctrine: Ryder v. Innerarity, 4 Stew. & P. 30, refusing to permit collateral attack on decision of land commissioner; Evans v. Percifull, 5 Ark. 429, on decision of Circuit Court in action of ejectment; Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 548, 54 Am. Dec. 238, holding when jurisdiction of subject-matter exists jurisdiction of the person cannot be inquired into collaterally; and in dissenting opinion, S. C., 11 Ark. 564; Conway v. Ellison, 14 Ark. 363, refusing to enjoin proceedings on erroneous judgment of sister State; In re Warfield, 22 Cal. 63, 83 Am. Dec. 51, refusing to question collaterally decree of Probate Court admitting will to probate; Corrigan v. Jones, 14 Colo. 314, 23 Pac. 914, holding similarly to preceding case; Holcomb v. Phelps, 16 Conn. 132, applying rule to decree of foreign court; Camp v. Moseley, 2 Fla. 196, holding officer protected in executing writ irregularly issued from court of competent jurisdiction; Muncey v. Joest, 74 Ind. 412, holding conclusive a finding of board of commissioners that facts sustaining their own jurisdiction exist; Hampson v. Weare, 4 Iowa, 16, 66 Am. Dec. 118, refusing to question collaterally a judgment directing execution against stockholders for corporate debt; Orr v. Thomas, 3 La. Ann. 584, as also adjudication of community property; Jeannet v. Ricker, 10 La. Ann. 67, a decree constituting infant a major; Salisbury Assn. v. Wicomico Co., 86 Md. 622, 39 Atl. 427, a decision of State board of appeals; Parker v. Parker, 11 Cush. 526, a decree of foreign court admitting will to probate; Watson v. Ulbrich, 18 Neb. 189, 24 N. W. 733, a decree questioning title; Foster v. Dugan, 8 Ohio, 107, 31 Am. Dec. 434, and Pillsbury v. Dugan, 9 Ohio, 120, 34 Am. Dec. 429, denying collateral inquiry into decree in partition; Williams v. Saunders, 5 Cold. 78, as also foreign decree establishing will; Yates v. Houston, 3 Tex. 447, decree of Probate Court establishing title to property by succession; Lynch v. Baxter, 4 Tex. 446, 51 Am. Dec. 743, holding similarly to preceding case; Giddings v. Steele, 28 Tex. 752, 91 Am. Dec. 342, decree and orders of Probate Court.

Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 600, 10 L. 609, dissenting opinion; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 628, 10 L. 627; Noble v. Railroad Co., 147 U. S. 174, 37 L. 126, 13 S. Ct. 273, holding decision of secretary of interior affecting property rights cannot be revoked by his successor; Bell v. Trust Co., 1 Biss. 270, F. C. 1,260, discussing general subject of nature of jurisdiction; In re McKibben, 16 Fed. Cas. 212, discussing subject of jurisdictional allegations, collecting cases.

Judicial sales.—Where jurisdiction of subject-matter exists sale by Probate Court cannot be avoided on collateral attack, pp. 163, 169.

Cited and rule applied in Voorhees v. Bank, 10 Pet. 477, 478, 9 L. 501, refusing to set aside judicial sale on collateral attack for error anterior to judgment, reviewing authorities; Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 342, 343, 11 L. 292, refusing to set aside sale by County Court upon collateral attack; Beauregard v. New Orleans, 18 How. 503, 15 L. 472, refusing to allow probate sale to be attacked collaterally; Parker v. Kane, 22 How. 14, 16 L. 290, refusing to set aside administrator's sale, collaterally, where no guardian has been appointed to represent the heirs; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 316, 19 L. 932, collecting cases and refusing to question collaterally execution sale founded on judgment in rem; Hall v. Law, 102 U. S. 464, 26 L. 218, refusing to set aside partition proceedings on collateral attack, when record failed to show they were founded on petition; Davis v. Gaines, 104 U. S. 391, 26 L. 759, reviewing authorities, and refusing to vacate probate sale on collateral attack when proceedings had been invalidated by subsequent discovery of a will; Thaw v. Ritchie, 136 U. S. 548, 34 L. 538, 10 S. Ct. 1044, refusing to impeach collaterally order of sale in probate for want of notice to heirs; Manson v. Duncanson, 166 U. S. 547, 41 L. 1110, 17 S. Ct. 652, refusing to permit collateral attack on probate sale for want of notice to nonresident minor; Thompson v. Phillips, Bald. 272, F. C. 13,974, refusing to question, collaterally, erroneous sale under fi. fa.; Bank of United States v. Voorhees, 1 McLean, 225, F. C. 939, reviewing principal case and refusing to permit collateral attack on sale under attachment; Sumner v. Moore, 2 McLean, 62, F. C. 13,070, refusing to question collaterally execution sale under voidable levy; Miller v. Sullivan, 4 Dill. 343, F. C. 9,592, or a guardian's sale; Daily v. Doe, 3 Fed. 913, 914, or a marshal's sale in admiralty; Garrett v. Boeing, 68 Fed. 61, 37 U. S. App. 42, or an administrator's sale.

In the State courts citing cases affirm and follow the doctrine thus: Wyman v. Campbell, 6 Port. 234, 235, 241, 31 Am. Dec. 684, 685, 689, sale under decree of Orphans' Court may not be collaterally avoided, collecting and reviewing authorities; Cole v. Connolly, 16 Ala. 281, or foreclosure sale; King v. Kent, 29 Ala. 554, or probate sale; Wright v. Ware, 50 Ala. 558, or administrator's sale; George v. Norris, 23 Ark. 129, probate sale; Finlayson v. Lipscomb, 16 Fla. 763, foreclosure sale; Grier v. McLendon, 7 Ga. 365, guardian's sale; Tucker v. Harris, 13 Ga. 14, 58 Am. Dec. 497, administrator's sale; Swiggart v. Harber, 4 Scam. 371, 39 Am. Dec. 423, execution sale; Lane v. Bommelmann, 17 Ill. 98, administrator's sale, collecting cases; Ponder v. Moseley, 2 Fla. 267, 48 Am. Dec. 201, title of purchaser at execution sale not affected by subsequent reversal of judgment; Tiffany v. Clover, 3 G. Greene, 402, arguendo, attachment sale not void for irregular return of sheriff; Hain v. Smith, 1 Ind. 460, refusing to question collaterally commissioner's sale in probate; Anderson v. Wilson, 100 Ind. 407, foreclosure sale; Johnson v. Carson, 3 G. Greene, 501, sheriff's sale in partition; Cavender v. Smith, 1 Iowa, 348, sheriff sale under execution; Morrow v. Weed, 4 Iowa, 89, administrator's sale; Denegre v. Haun, 14 Iowa, 248, 81 Am. Dec. 485, sale of homestead under execution; Pursley v. Hayes, 22 Iowa, 34, 92 Am. Dec. 368, guardian's sale; Paine v. Spratley, 5 Kan. 541, execution sale; Mills v. Ralston, 10 Kan. 212, foreclosure sale; Depuy v. Bemiss, 2 La. Ann. 515, sale under order of United States Circuit Court; Nisdom v. Buckner, 31 La. Ann. 57, 58, mortgage sale under decree of Probate Court; Cockey v. Cole, 28 Md. 285, 92 Am. Dec. 686, a foreclosure sale, reviewing principal case; Schley v. Baltimore, 29 Md. 47, sale under decree in chancery; Long v. Long, 62 Md. 63, sale under decree, collecting cases; Sanders v. McDonald, 63 Md. 512, foreclosure sale; Jones v. Talbot, 9 Mo. 124 (125), sale under decree setting aside deed of trust; Trumble v. Williams, 18 Neb. 154, 24 N. W. 720, and Gordon v. Gordon, 55 N. H. 405, administrator's sale; Blanchard v. Webster, 62 N. H. 468, executor's sale; Monroe v. Douglas, 4 Sandf. Ch. 197, 205, trustee's sale; Glover v. Ruffin, 6 Ohio, 270, and Ewing v. Higby, 7 Ohio, 200, 28 Am. Dec. 636, administrator's sale; Sydnor v. Roberts, 13 Tex. 620, 65 Am. Dec. 92, execution sale; Alexander v. Maverick, 18 Tex. 194, 67 Am. Dec.

696, administrator's sale; Hawley v. Bullock, 29 Tex. 224, sheriff's sale; Hudson v. Jurnigan, 39 Tex. 588, probate sale; Quesenberry v. Barbour, 31 Gratt. 500, trustee's sale; Pennybacker v. Switzer, 75 Va. 686, guardian's sale, reviewing authorities; Allan v. Hoffman, 83 Va. 137, 2 S. E. 606, sale in chancery; Ryan v. Fergusson, 3 Wash. 368, 28 Pac. 914, and Jackson v. Astor, 1 Pinn. 161, 39 Am. Dec. 294, administrator's sale, and cited in note, 79 Am. Dec. 164, collecting cases on collateral attack on attachment proceedings.

Distinguished in Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 282, 31 L. 439, 8 S. Ct. 472, holding no presumption of jurisdiction exists in proceedings, not according to the common course of justice; Adams v. Jeffries, 12 Ohio, 272, 40 Am. Dec. 479, holding void an administrator's sale when heirs not parties to proceedings.

Courts.—Every reasonable intendment is made in favor of the proceedings of a court of competent jurisdiction, p. 165.

Cited, Hunt's Heirs v. Ellison's Heirs, 32 Ala. 194, applying rule to sustain foreclosure sale attacked for irregularity; Bumpus v. Fisher, 21 Tex. 568, to proceedings in criminal case attacked for malice; Shadracks v. Woolfolk, 32 Gratt. 709, judgment presumed regular on collateral attack; Horner v. Doe, 1 Ind. 133, 48 Am. Dec. 358, jurisdiction of person and subject-matter will be presumed in case of court of competent jurisdiction, collecting cases.

Distinguished, Cooper v. Sunderland, 3 Iowa, 129, 66 Am. Dec. 61, reviewing authorities, and holding that presumption of jurisdiction does not apply to court exercising functions out of the ordinary course of judicial acts.

Deed — Recitals.—It is sufficient to recite the substance of the proceedings in a commissioner's deed, under act requiring their recital, without selling them out in haec verba, p. 167.

Cited and approved, Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 339, 340, 11 L. 291, holding jurisdiction sufficiently shown if anything appears on the record showing the subject-matter and the exercise of the judicial power.

Judicial sales.—Purchaser at judicial sale is not bound to look further back than the order of the court, p. 168.

Cited, approved and followed in Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 455, 34 L. 1061, 11 S. Ct. 374, Sumner v. Moore, 2 McLean, 64, F. C. 13,610, Price v. Winter, 15 Fla. 106, Buckmaster v. Carlin, 3 Scam. 108, reviewing authorities, Mills v. Ralston, 10 Kan. 212, Lalanne v. Moreau, 13 La. 437, McCullough v. Minor, 2 La. Ann. 468, Succession of Hebrard, 18 La. Ann. 494, Howard v. Moore, 2 Mich. 232, reviewing principal case, Seward v. Didier, 16 Neb. 62, 20 N. W. 13, reviewing authorities, Sheldon v. Newton, 3 Ohio St. 500, and Dancy v. Stricklinge, 15 Tex. 559, 65 Am. Dec. 182. Affirmed in Burdett v.

Silsbee, 15 Tex. 618, 619, George v. Watson, 19 Tex. 370, Zickle v. McCue, 26 Gratt. 528, and Hull v. Hull, 26 W. Va. 30.

Distinguished in Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 554, 12 L. 1195, holding sale under private act not a judicial sale and reviewing principal case.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, without particular application, Burnham v. Webster, 1 Wood. & M. 180, F. C. 2,179, discussing judgments generally. Cited erroneously, Smith v. Gayle, 58 Ala. 604, Bull v. Rowe, 13 S. C. 368, and Douglass v. Craig, 13 S. C. 373, discussing voidable assignment of homestead.

2 Pet. 170-185, 7 L. 386, TOWNSLEY v. SUMRALL.

Bills of exchange payable at a given time after date need not be presented for acceptance, but payment may be demanded at maturity, pp. 178, 179.

Cited in Evans v. Bridges, 4 Port. 351, applying rule; Smith v. Roach, 7 B. Mon. 19, applying rule, but holding that when presentation is made, notice of dishonor must be given; Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 1 Gill, 149, 39 Am. Dec. 652, and Plato v. Reynolds, 27 N. Y. 590; both applying rule; Allen v. Bank, 22 Wend. 222, 34 Am. Dec. 291, and Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. 324, 32 Am. Dec. 557, applying rule and holding, when presentment is made, notice of dishonor must be given; Terbell v. Downer, 27 Vt. 510, 65 Am. Dec. 213, and Walker v. Stetson, 19 Ohio St. 404, 2 Am. Rep. 407, applying rule.

Distinguished in Hart v. Smith, 15 Ala. 808, 50 Am. Dec. 161, holding bill payable at sight must be presented for acceptance.

Bills and notes.—Certificate of protest of foreign bill is sufficient proof of dishonor, p. 179.

Cited in Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 549, 27 L. 255, 1 S. Ct. 421, applying rule; Indseth v. Pierce, 13 Fed. Cas. 34, applying rule and collecting cases; Donegan v. Wood, 49 Ala. 252, 20 Am. Rep. 280, it seems the notarial certificate must be under seal; Ticonic Bank v. Stackpole, 41 Me. 305, holding the bill payable in another State foreign within the rule; Johnson v. Brown, 154 Mass. 106, 27 N. E. 994, holding similarly; Chew v. Read, 11 Smedes & M. 189, Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. 568, and Halliday v. McDougal, 20 Wend. 85, all applying rule; Peabody Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 29 W. Va. 547, 2 S. E. 898, holding certificate of protest prima facie proof of all the facts contained therein. Cited, but without particular application, in McAfee v. Doremus, 5 How. 63, 12 L. 51, stating rule as above; Green v. Gross, 12 Neb. 124, 10 N. W. 461, arguendo, seal of notary prima facie proves itself; and cited in note on protest as evidence, 96 Am. Dec. 603.

Distinguished in White v. Englehard, 2 Smedes & M. 40, holding rule does not apply to promissory note.

Foreign bill.—A bill drawn in one State upon resident of another, is to be treated as foreign, and a notary's protest is per se evidence, p. 179.

Cited, Musson v. Lake, 4 How. 282, 285, 11 L. 975, 977, dissenting opinion, holding such bill is foreign; Case v. Heffner, 10 Ohio, 183; Wells v. Whitehead, 15 Wend. 530, Halliday v. McDougall, 20 Wend. 84, Grafton Bank v. Moore, 14 N. H. 147, Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. 566, and Atwater v. Streets, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 455, all holding such bill is foreign, and dishonor may be proved by certificate of protest. Cited in Williams v. Putnam, 14 N. H. 541, 40 Am. Dec. 205, arguendo, where note is drawn in one State and indorsed in another, dishonor may be proved by protest.

Bills and notes — Contracts.—A pre-existing debt is a valid consideration for a bill of exchange, and for a promise to accept, p. 182.

Cited in Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 20, 10 L. 872, applying rule; Railroad Co. v. National Bank, 102 U. S. 43, 26 L. 72, discussing subject generally; Riley v. Anderson, 2 McLean, 593, F. C. 11,835, applying rule and collecting cases; Jewett v. Hone, 1 Woods, 534, F. C. 7,311, applying rule and reviewing authorities; Brush v. Scribner, 11 Conn. 403, 29 Am. Dec. 316, applying rule even when bill had been obtained by fraud; Bond v. Bank, 2 Ga. 104, applying rule; Johnson v. Barney, 1 Iowa, 535, rights of holder are same whether debt pre-existing or contracted at the time of transfer; Bostwick v. Dodge, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 416, 41 Am. Dec. 586, applying rule and collecting cases; Fellows v. Harris, 12 Smedes & M. 466, approving and following principal case and reviewing authorities; Boatman's Savings Inst. v. Holland, 38 Mo. 51, holding similarly; Doe v. Burnham, 31 N. H. 433, applying rule and collecting cases. Cited casually in Proctor v. Baldwin, 82 Ind. 376, questioning whether there must be actual surrender of the evidence of the antecedent debt.

Distinguished in Williams v. Little, 11 N. H. 70, holding rule aliter where transfer is by way of pledge.

Consideration — Bills and notes.—Damage to the promisee constitutes a good consideration, p. 182.

Cited and rule applied in Gillespie v. Battle, 15 Ala. 283, holding that parting with possession under voidable contract of sale is sufficient consideration to support note for purchase money; Fearnley v. De Mainville, 5 Colo. App. 445, 39 Pac. 74, holding loss of rent sufficient to support promise to pay part of loss; Clark v. Sigourney, 17 Conn. 518, holding release of interest in land, however trivial, is sufficient to support promissory note; Tompkins v. Phillips, 12 Ga. 55, holding expenditure of time and money in pursuit of property sufficient to support agreement to release lien thereon; Gordon v. Dalby, 30 Iowa, 228, holding agreement to perform contract of another sufficient to support promise to be allowed to receive the proceeds thereof, collecting cases; Bason v. Hughart, 2 Tex. 479, relinquishing a judgment may be a good consideration. Cited casually, Robt. E. Lee Silv. Min. Co. v. Omaha & G. Smelting Co., 16 Colo. 132, 26 Pac. 331, stating rule as above; Lane v. Scott, 57 Tex. 372, discussing consideration generally. Cited, but without particular application, in United States v. Linn, 15 Pet. 314, 10 L. 751, stating the general rule; Piatt v. United States, 22 Wall. 507, 22 L. 861, discussing subject casually.

Statute of frauds—Bills and notes.—Where there is an independent consideration moving from promisor to promisee, a promise to pay the debt of another is without the statute; accordingly a parol promise to accept a bill of exchange sufficiently identifying it, although it be not yet drawn, is binding, p. 182.

Cited in Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. 43, 16 L. 365, holding direct contract of stockholder for benefit of corporation without the statute, collecting cases; Brown v. Harrell, 40 Ark. 430, applying rule, and holding, where credit is given to promisor and not to third party, it is an original obligation and without the statute; Simonton v. Gandolpho, 2 Fla. 396, holding promise by purchaser of land to pay mortgage debt in consideration of release, without the statute; Hackleman v. Miller, 4 Blackf. 324, holding promise of administrator to purchaser of note of deceased that it would be paid, not within the statute; Horn v. Bray, 51 Ind. 564, 19 Am. Rep. 746, promise of surety to indemnify co-sureties, made to induce them to sign, is not within the statute; Kohn v. Bank, 15 Kan. 435, holding promise to pay draft of one's agent if he fail to meet it, without the statute; Jones v. Palmer, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 382, collecting cases, and holding guaranty of note of third person transferred in payment of existing indebtedness, not within the statute; Green v. Brookins, 23 Mich. 53, 9 Am. Rep. 76, promise made as inducement to surrender claim, that a certain note would be paid is not within the statute; Muller v. Riviere, 59 Tex. 642, 46 Am. Rep. 292, holding promise of wife to pay debt of husband in consideration of forbearance to foreclose, not within the statute; Heidenheimer v. Johnson, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 349, holding verbal promise to indemnify officer not within the statute; Hewett v. Currier, 63 Wis. 395, 23 N. W. 888, promise of owner to pay subcontractor in consideration of forbearance to file lien is without the statute; and cited in exhaustive series of notes on collateral agreements under statute of frauds, 95 Am. Dec. 253, 255, and in note on contracts of indemnity under statute of frauds, 42 Am. St. Rep. 188.

Distinguished in Morse v. Bank, 1 Holmes, 214, F. C. 9,857, reviewing principal case, and holding verbal promise of bank to pay check, if presented through the clearing-house, within the statute; Plummer v. Lyman, 49 Me. 234, reviewing principal case and holding verbal promise to accept nonexistent bill within the statute, there being no independent consideration for the promise; Nelson v. Boynton, 3 Metc. 401, 37 Am. Dec. 150, holding promise to pay note of third person in consideration of discontinuance of attachment suit thereon is within the statute; Hetfield v. Dow, 27 N. J. L. 451, 453, reviewing principal case and holding it contrary to weight of authority so far as it holds that liability of principal debtor does not render engagement of third party collateral.

Bills and notes.—Recovery may be had on a binding oral promise to accept a bill, although there be no virtual acceptance, p. 183.

Cited and rule applied in Scudder v. Bank, 91 U. S. 414, 23 L. 249, and Putnam, etc., Bank v. Snow, 52 N. E. 1079, both collecting cases; Bayard v. Lathy, 2 McLean, 464, F. C. 1,131, holding promise to accept amounts to an acceptance; Russell v. Wiggin, 2 Story, 238, F. C. 12,165, applying rule and reviewing cases; Kennedy v. Geddes, 3 Ala. 585, 37 Am. Dec. 715, rule applies, although at time of promise both amount and time of payment are unknown; Lafargue v. Harrison, 70 Cal. 386, 59 Am. Rep. 419, 9 Pac. 262, holding signer of special letter of credit liable to third party who advances money on the faith of the promise to accept therein contained; Nelson v. Bank, 48 Ill. 41, 95 Am. Dec. 514, promise of bank to pay checks may be enforced by third party who took checks on the faith of such promise; Nimocks v. Woody, 97 N. C. 5, 2 Am. St. Rep. 270, 2 S. E. 251, bill must follow terms prescribed in promise to accept; Strohecker v. Cohen, 1 Spear L. 353, 354, reviewing principal case and applying rule; Kelley v. Greenough, 9 Wash. 663, 38 Pac. 159, applying rule. Cited, without particular application, in Rice v. Porter, 16 N. J. L. 446, 449, discussing conditional acceptances.

Bills and notes.—Acceptance of drawee binds him, even though it be known to the holder that he has no funds of drawer in his hands, p. 183.

Cited approvingly, Law v. Brinker, 6 Colo. 556, holding drawee cannot plead want of consideration after acceptance. Cited casually, Diversy v. Moor, 22 Ill. 333, 74 Am. Dec. 158, holding acceptor of bill is principal debtor.

Partnership.—The mere fact that drawer and acceptor of a bill are partners does not make it a partnership bill, pp. 183, 184.

Cited generally, in Le Roy v. Johnson, 2 Pet. 200, 7 L. 397, and Fillyan v. Laverty, 3 Fla. 102.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, without particular application, in Exchange Nat. Bank v. Bank, 112 U. S. 291, 28 L. 727, 5 S. Ct. 148; Hopkins v. Richardson, 9 Gratt. 495, discussing liability of assignor of indemnity bond.

2 Pet. 186-200, 7 L. 391, LE ROY v. JOHNSON.

Evidence.—Testimony of party in interest is admissible where he testifies against his interest, p. 195.

Cited and rule applied in Brooks v. McKinney, 4 Scam. 316, holding party in interest, who is not a party to the suit, may be compelled to testify against his interest. Cited, without particular application of rule, McLelland v. Ridgeway, 12 Ala. 486, holding judgment not admissible against a party unless a contrary judgment would have been admissible in his favor; Lefferts v. De Mott, 21 Wend. 138, collecting cases and holding release of partner restores his competency.

Distinguished in Latham v. Kenniston, 13 N. H. 208, holding partner incompetent as witness to prove partnership.

Evidence.—One who is named in action as party, but who is not brought into the suit by process, is not disqualified from testifying on the ground that he is a party, p. 195.

Cited, arguendo, in Wright v. Boynton, 37 N. H. 20, 72 Am. Dec. 321, stating rule and collecting cases.

Bills and notes — Partnership.—Bill drawn or accepted by a firm in their usual name is presumed to be on their joint account, p. 197.

Cited in Faler v. Jordan, 44 Miss. 288, holding presumption is that partner has authority to sign firm name to negotiable paper.

Partnership.—Third persons, in contracting, are not bound to inquire whether partner is acting for the firm account or for his own individual advantage, p. 197.

Cited and rule applied, McKinney v. Bradbury, Dall. (Tex.) 444.

Partnership.—Firm is not bound where partner acts on his separate account, and those with whom he is dealing have reason to believe that to be the case, p. 197.

Cited in Winship v. Bank, 5 Pet. 576, 577, 8 L. 233, 234, dissenting opinion, reviewing principal case at length and arguendo, bank having knowledge of irregularity in discounting firm note is not an innocent indorsee; Bloom v. Helm, 53 Miss. 30, holding where transaction was not in usual course of business, transferee was put upon inquiry. Cited casually, Cook v. Bloodgood, 7 Ala. 686, discussing liability of partnership for note made by partner for his individual benefit. Cited in note, 56 Am. Dec. 149, discussing liability of dormant partners, collecting cases.

Distinguished in Richardson v. Farmer, 36 Mo. 43, 88 Am. Dec. 131, holding rule aliter in case of dormant partnership.

Partnership name.—A name assumed and publicly used becomes the firm name, though not contained in the articles of co-partnership, p. 198.

Cited and rule applied in Pursley v. Ramsey, 31 Ga. 409, proving signature to promissory note to be firm name; Kelley v. Bourne, 15 Or. 482, 16 Pac. 44, applying rule and collecting cases.

Partnership.—The fact that the proceeds of a bill drawn in the name of one partner were applied in payment of a partnership debt does not make it a partnership obligation, p. 199.

Cited and applied in Goodrich v. Leland, 18 Mich. 120, holding mode in which commercial paper is used cannot alter the legal effect of the contract by which it was obtained; National Bank v. Thomas, 47 N. Y. 20, applying rule.

Partnership.—Where one deals with partner in his individual capacity, the fact that he had no knowledge of dissolution of the firm is immaterial, pp. 199, 200.

Cited in Dawson v. Pogue, 18 Or. 125, 22 Pac. 643, 6 L. R. A. 181, holding no notice of withdrawal of dormant partner is necessary, collecting cases.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, without particular application, in Burnham v. Whittier, 5 N. H. 334, holding partner has authority to indorse firm note to himself and sue in his own name; McIntire v. McLaurin, 2 Humph. 72, assignment of partnership note by individual partner in his own name does not pass title.

2 Pet. 201-215, 7 L. 397, HUNT v. WICKLIFFE.

Public lands.—If defendant have prior patent, plaintiff can prevail in equity only by showing prior valid entries, p. 208.

Public lands.—Entry is not vitiated from fact that it is made in the name of heirs of deceased generally, instead of by names of such heirs, p. 208.

Cited, Hart v. Young, 3 J. J. Marsh. 418, holding entry in name of "heirs" will vest equity in devisees.

Public lands.—Entry describing lands by reference to certain surveys "which are legal," merely affirms the legality of those surveys and is not void for uncertainty, p. 209.

Equity.—Possession which will bar an ejectment will also be a bar in equity, p. 212.

Adverse possession.—Where both parties occupy portion of property in controversy, the one having the better right has constructive possession of all the land not occupied in fact by his adversary, p. 212.

Cited and rule applied in Wilkins v. Pensacola City Co., 36 Fla. 59, 18 So. 26, collecting cases; Young v. Campbell, 6 J. J. Marsh. 492, reviewing principal case arguendo, and Tribble v. Frame, 7 J. J. Marsh. 610, dissenting opinion, stating rule as above. Cited, Sawyer v. Oliver, 7 J. J. Marsh. 180, discussing question whether rule applies in favor of junior patentee against prior possession of elder patentee.

Distinguished in Smith v. Frost, 2 Dana, 151, and White v. Bates, 7 J. J. Marsh. 546, holding rule not applicable where only one party had possession within the disputed strip.

Service of process.—Where statute requires publication of notice to absent defendants for two calendar months, eight weeks' publication will not confer jurisdiction, and decree founded thereon is void, p. 215.

Cited and rule followed, Guaranty, etc., Trust Co. v. Railroad Co., 139 U. S. 147, 35 L. 120, 11 S. Ct. 516, reviewing authorities and holding publication on foreclosure must be for full statutory period; Guaranty T. & S. D. Co. v. Buddington, 27 Fla. 226, 9 So. 249, 12 L. R. A. 774, & n., to same effect; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Residence Co., 94 Ky. 274, 22 S. W. 314, applying rule to publication of warning order under Federal statute. Cited, but without particular application, in Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. 206, 16 L. 632, holding service of process may be made by publication.

Practice.—Where claim is made under conveyance, founded on decree of court of competent jurisdiction, bill should not be dismissed for want of parties, but leave should be given to bring them into court, p. 215.

Miscellaneous.—Erroneously cited in Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 603, 10 L. 612. Cited in Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 86, and 2 Neb. 490, 20 L. 487, as illustrating a case where court of equity has interfered in question of priority of patents. Cited, without particular application, in note to Carpenter v. Lockhart, 1 Ind. 444, and Walsh v. Smyth, 3 Bland Ch. 25. Cited in Greiner v. Klein, 28 Mich. 18, holding decree in equity only binds parties and privies.

2 Pet. 216-238, 7 L. 402, PATTERSON v. JENKS.

Grants.—Presumption is in favor of the validity of every grant of land issued in the forms prescribed by law, and burden of proof lies upon him who controverts it, p. 227.

Cited and rule applied in Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 326, holding grant of land made by Mexican alcalde will be presumed made within his authority; Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 553, approval of supreme executive where necessary to give validity will be presumed; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 227, 228, 241, reviewing authorities and applying rule; Parkison v. Bracken, 1 Pinn. 180, 39 Am. Dec. 297, patent is presumed properly executed until contrary appear; Frampton v. Wheat, 27 S. C. 294, 3 S. E. 465, holding burden of proof on party attacking grant to show improper location. Cited casually, Webb v. Haley, 7 Baxt. 603, stating rule ut supra.

Boundaries.—In this case the Supreme Court determined in a collateral action, what was the boundary between jurisdiction of a State and that of an Indian tribe within its borders, p. 227.

Cited in Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 746, 9 L. 1269, arguendo, the Supreme Court may, in an action for that purpose, determine the boundary between two States.

Trial.—Prayer that court declare certain legal consequences as resulting from the testimony, is properly refused; it should be that the court instruct as to the legal consequence if certain facts are believed by the jury, p. 227.

Construction of treaty.—If a State has, by its own acts, adopted a construction of a treaty with Indians, the Supreme Court will adopt the same construction, p. 231.

Cited in Lattimer v. Poteet, 14 Pet. 18, 10 L. 335, arguendo, State is bound by her own recognition of boundary line fixed by Indian treaty; Brown v. Brown, 106 N. C. 455, 11 S. E. 648, affirming right of State to construe her own treaties.

Public lands.—A grant of lands, part of which are ungrantable by reason of lying within the Indian boundaries, is, nevertheless, valid as to the residue, pp. 235, 236.

Affirmed in Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 680, 9 L. 272.

A grant of land may be void as to part and valid as to the residue, p. 235.

Cited and rule applied in Mitchel v. United States, 9 Pet. 733, 9 L. 291, and Mitchel v. United States, 15 Pet. 88, 10 L. 671, holding grant by Indians valid notwithstanding it embraced a tract as to which the grant was void; Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 401, holding grant embracing homestead valid as to residue; Weitzner v. Thingstad, 55 Minn. 248, 56 N. W. 818, holding similarly to preceding citation; People v. Mauran, 5 Den. 397, holding grant not void for failure to reserve minerals; People v. Van Rensselaer, 9 N. Y. 324, holding patent containing void grant of manorial privileges valid as to residue; Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 124, holding the same instrument may contain several trusts, some of which are valid and others invalid; Den v. Nixon, 10 Yerg. 519, holding grant of lands void as to part adversely occupied and valid as to residue.

Distinguished in Frampton v. Wheat, 27 S. C. 292, 3 S. E. 464, holding rule has no application if title exists to whole tract.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 376, 389, 10 L. 501, 508. Cited, without particular application, Railroad Co. v. Spratt, 12 Fla. 101.

2 Pet. 239-240, 7 L. 410, HARPER v. BUTLER.

Executors and administrators — Assignment.—Where an executor has assigned a chose in action, suit may be brought by the assignee thereon in a State permitting suits by assignees in their own name, notwithstanding there has been no administration in the State in which the suit is brought, p. 240.

Cited and rule applied in May v. Logan Co., 30 Fed. 253, holding executor may assign right of action for infringement of patent; Campbell v. Brown, 64 Iowa, 427, 52 Am. Rep. 447, 20 N. W. 746, applying rule and reviewing authorities; Putnam v. Pitney, 45 Minn. 247, 47 N. W. 792, 11 L. R. A. 43, refusing to appoint local administrator where general administrator could collect assets; Wilkins v. Ellett, 108 U. S. 259, 27 L. 718, 2 S. Ct. 643, arguendo, payment to administrator appointed in another State is valid against administrator afterwards appointed in the State where payment is made; Van Bokkelen v. Cook, 5 Sawy. 591, F. C. 16,831, arguendo, executor must account to estate for property in foreign jurisdiction voluntarily delivered to him; Owen v. Moody, 29 Miss. 82, 83; Gove v. Gove, 64 N. H. 504, 15 Atl. 122; Petersen v. Bank, 32 N. Y. 42, 46, 88 Am. Dec. 302, 305, and Solinsky v. Bank, 82 Tex. 245, 17 S. W. 1051, all applying rule; Giddings v. Green, 4 Hughes, 448, 48 Fed. 491, holding executor may sue on note of deceased in State in which no administration has been taken out; Lucas v. Byrne, 35 Md. 495, administrator may indorse note to himself and sue in his own name; Smith v. Mercer, 22 Fed. Cas. 599, arguendo, administrator may surrender patent of intestate for purpose of securing amended patent. Cited without particular application in McCully v. Cooper, 114 Cal. 262, 55 Am. St. Rep. 70, 46 Pac. 83, 35 L. R. A. 494, discussing general proposition in syllabus; Taylor v. Barren, 35 N. H. 496, and in In re Cape May, etc., Navigation Co., 51 N. J. L. 82, 16 Atl. 193, discussing generally powers of administrators.

Distinguished in Reynolds v. McMullen, 55 Mich. 575, 54 Am. Rep. 392, 22 N. W. 45, holding rule does not apply to mortgage secured by real property in another State; McCarthy v. Hall, 13 Mo. 484, reviewing principal case and holding contra; Stagg v. Green, 47 Mo. 502, foreign executor may not act until he has taken out letters within the State; Dial v. Tappan, 14 S. C. 582, 37 Am. Rep. 741, reviewing authorities and refusing to apply rule.

Choses in action.—Under law of Mississippi choses in action are assignable, p. 240.

Distinguished in Scott v. Metcalf, 13 Smedes & M. 566, holding assignment of promissory note must be by indorsement.

2 Pet. 241-242, 7 L. 411, POWELL v. HARMAN.

Statute of limitations.—Where statute made possession for seven years protection only when held under a grant or valid mesne conveyance, possession founded on a void deed of conveyance will not be protected by the statute, p. 241.

Cited, but without particular application, in Balkam v. Woodstock Iron Co., 154 U. S. 188, 38 L. 957, 14 S. Ct. 1014; Bauserman v. Blunt, 147 U. S. 653, 37 L. 318, 13 S. Ct. 469, and Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 212, 213, 17 L. 528, dissenting opinion, discussing how far

Supreme Court will follow State's construction of its own statutes. Cited in note on necessity for color of title, 14 Am. Dec. 765, collecting cases.

Overruled in Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 293, 301, 8 L. 403, 406, the rule being changed on account of a new construction of the statute by the State (Tennessee) court, it holding it unnecessary to show a connected legal or equitable title under the statute, reversing Neal v. Green, 1 McLean, 19, F. C. 10,065, where principal case is also cited; Toll v. Wright, 37 Mich. 98, refusing to apply principal case on the ground that it was overruled.

2 Pet. 243-244, 7 L. 411, RITCHIE v. MAURO.

Guardian and ward.—The value of the guardian's interest in the estate of his ward is not the value of the estate, but the value of the office, which is nothing except so far as it affords a compensation for services to be afterwards earned, p. 244.

Cited in Ruddick v. Billings, Woolw. 336, F. C. 12,110, discussing generally appellate jurisdiction in bankruptcy; State v. Dews, Charl. (Ga.) 425, arguendo, public officers have no proprietary interest in their offices.

Appeal and error.—Where the value of the office of the guardian independently of the value of the estate does not equal the jurisdictional amount, the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction on appeal, in controversy between persons claiming adversely as guardians, p. 244.

Cited in Dryden v. Swinburn, 15 W. Va. 249, reviewing principal case and holding where office of clerk of Circuit Court had value equal to jurisdictional amount, appeal would lie in contest for the office.

2 Pet. 245-252, 7 L. 412, WILLSON v. BLACKBIRD CREEK MARSH CO.

Appeal and error.—To sustain error to State court, it is not necessary that the record in terms state that the Constitution or a law of the United States was drawn in question. It is sufficient to show that the Constitution, a law, or treaty of the United States was in fact misconstrued, or the constitutionality of a State law upheld when questioned under Federal limitations, p. 251.

Cited and rule applied in Harris v. Dennie, 3 Pet. 302, 7 L. 687, where State court misconstrued revenue collection act of 1799; Davis v. Packard, 6 Pet. 48, 8 L. 315, where State court misconstrued statute regulating suits against consuls; Mo., etc., R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 622, 42 L. 881, 18 S. Ct. 492, involving construction of animal industry act; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 429, 7 L. 910, involving constitutionality of Missouri act for establishment of loan offices; Kaukauna Co. v. Canal Co., 142 U. S. 269, 35 L. 1009, 12 S. Ct. 176, involving Wisconsin statute relating to improvements in certain rivers.

Distinguished in Crowell v. Randell, 10 Pet. 396, 9 L. 469, holding it is not sufficient to show that question might have arisen, but that it must have arisen, reviewing authorities; Florida v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 271, where no Federal question has arisen there is no ground for writ of error to United States Supreme Court.

Public uses.—Measures calculated to produce benefits to the public may be effected through the medium of private incorporations, p. 251.

Cited with approval in Railroad Co. v. Stockton, 41 Cal. 189, sustaining taxation in aid of a railroad; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 302, 10 Pac. 699, discussing public uses of water; Whiteman v. Railroad Co., 2 Harr. 523, 33 Am. Dec. 419, holding right of eminent domain may be exercised for purpose of aiding construction of railroad; Stewart v. Polk Co., 30 Iowa, 22, 1 Am. Rep. 247, upholding taxation by State for same purpose; Hallenbeck v. Hahn, 2 Neb. 411, holding similarly; Gibson v. Mason, 5 Nev. 309, State may authorize issuance of bonds for same purpose; Beekman v. Railroad Co., 3 Paige, 74, 22 Am. Dec. 684, and Freight Co. v. Memphis, 4 Cold. 425, or exercise right of eminent domain. Cited in elaborate notes on eminent domain, 22 Am. Dec. 690, 705.

Commerce.—Where congress has passed an act in execution of the power to regulate commerce, any State law coming into conflict with such act is void, p. 252.

Cited and relied upon in Wisconsin v. Duluth, 96 U. S. 387, 24 L. 672, holding Supreme Court will not interfere with the execution by congress of its power to regulate commerce; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 104, 39 L. 912, 15 S. Ct. 804, holding statute regulating freight charges void, as in conflict with interstate commerce act; Columbus Ins. Co. v. Curtenius, 6 McLean, 216, F. C. 3,045, holding void, as in conflict with ordinance of 1787, statute authorizing obstructions in channel of navigable tributary of the Mississippi; Minot v. Railroad Co., 2 Abb. 343, F. C. 9,645, holding void, a State law imposing tax on locomotives, passengers and freight; United States v. Railroad Co., 5 Biss. 424, F. C. 15,779, where United States have acted, that action is exclusive; Hawkins Pt. Lighthouse Case, 39 Fed. 88, holding right of United States to use of submerged soil in navigable stream for lighthouse purposes, paramount to those of riparian proprietor under grant from State; Decker v. Railway Co., 30 Fed. 725, discussing congressional authority over navigable waters; Scranton v. Wheeler, 57 Fed. 814, 16 U. S. App. 152, right of United States to submerged lands of navigable stream for purposes of a pier, paramount to those of riparian proprietor; Mitchell v. Steelman, 8 Cal. 371, holding State statute of frauds void as far as in conflict with Federal statute regulating mortgages on vessels; North, etc., Min. Co. v. United States, 88 Fed. 675, upholding act of congress creating California debris commission, and regulating hydraulic mining along California rivers; Lin Sing v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 567, holding void a statute of State regulating immigration.

Commerce.—Where congress has passed no act regulating commerce in small navigable tide waters, act of State empowering construction of a dam therein is not unconstitutional, p. 252.

Cited in New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. 149, 9 L. 666, arguendo, where United States has not exercised its power to regulate commerce, State law cannot be held void on the ground that it presumes to regulate commerce; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 592, 10 L. 605, arguing, by analogy, State may surrender fugitive on demand of foreign State where no extradition treaty has been made by the United States; The License Cases, 5 How. 583, 584, 604, 605, 625, 12 L. 292, 301, 302, 311, holding regulation of liquor traffic by State is not in conflict with power of congress to regulate commerce; The Passenger Cases, 7 How. 500, 555, 556, 560, 12 L. 793, 816, 817, 818, dissenting opinions, arguendo, that grant of power to congress is not ipso facto exclusive, unless similar authority in the States would be incompatible; Cooley v. Board, 12 How. 319, 13 L. 1005, holding State law regulating pilotage not in conflict with constitutional power to regulate commerce; State v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 13 How. 585, 586, 599, 14 L. 277, 278, 283, dissenting opinion, arguendo, acts of State authorizing construction of bridge across navigable stream is not in conflict with power of congress to regulate commerce; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 727, 18 L. 100, where bridge erected over navigable stream impedes navigation but assists commerce; United States courts are not bound to enjoin it; The Passaic Bridges, 3 Wall. 793, holding State has absolute power to erect bridges in absence of congressional legislation; Osborne v. Mobile, 16 Wall. 482, 21 L. 473, sustaining ordinance imposing license on railroads engaged in interstate commerce; Railroad Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 569, 21 L. 714, sustaining acts of State requiring railroad to fix its rates annually, under penalties, even where railroad was engaged in interstate commerce; expressly affirmed in Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 463, 24 L. 527, holding State may authorize erection of dam across navigable stream in absence of legislation by congress; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 514, 516, 24 L. 557, 558, dissenting opinion, arguendo, State has power to pass law requiring carrier engaged in interstate commerce to give all persons equal privileges, regardless of color; Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 700, 26 L. 240, sustaining power of county to improve harbor and issue bonds therefor; Escanaba Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 683, 686, 27 L. 445, 446, 2 S. Ct. 189, 192, reviewing authorities, and holding State has full authority as to bridges over navigable streams until congress has acted; Cardwell v. Bridge Co., 113 U. S. 208, 209, 28 L. 960, 5 S. Ct. 424, 425, affirming Cardwell v. Bridge Co., 19 Fed. 562, 564, reviewing authorities and affirming doctrine of preceding case; Willamette Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 8, 31 L. 632, 9 S. Ct. 815, holding similarly; Morgan v. Louisiana, 118 U. S. 465, 30 L. 242, 6 S. Ct. 1119, State may pass quarantine laws until congress acts; Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 310, 41 L. 171, 16 S. Ct. 1090, State law prohibiting running of trains on Sunday is not a regulation of commerce; Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 330, 37 L. 469, 13 S. Ct. 628, expression by congress of its intention to regulate commerce does not destroy franchise previously created by a State; Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 211, 38 L. 966, 14 S. Ct. 1089, collecting cases and holding regulation of charges on bridge over river between two States is regulation of interstate commerce; Wabash, etc., R. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 581, 582, 30 L. 252, 253, 7 S. Ct. 15, 16, dissenting opinion, arguendo, State may impose penalty for improper charges by carrier, reviewing authorities; Leisy v. Harding, 135 U. S. 132, 134, 149, 150, 154, 34 L. 140, 141, 146, 147, 148, 10 S. Ct. 692, 693, 698, 699, 700, dissenting opinion, and Bowman v. Railway Co., 125 U. S. 521, 522, 31 L. 719, 720, 8 S. Ct. 712, 713, dissenting opinion, both reviewing authorities, and arguendo, State has power to forbid the importation of intoxicating liquors within its boundaries; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 23, 32 L. 351, 9 S. Ct. 11, holding State has power to prohibit manufacture of intoxicants within its boundaries; New York, etc., R. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 631, 41 L. 854, 17 S. Ct. 419, State may pass law regulating heating of passenger cars in absence of congressional legislation; Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 366, 41 L. 748, 17 S. Ct. 357, statute of United States authorizing secretary of war to regulate bridges over navigable waters does not take away right of State to authorize construction of bridge over such waters; Silliman v. Bridge Co., 4 Blatchf. 408, 412, F. C. 12,852, State has power to authorize construction of bridge over navigable stream in absence of Federal legislation; Silliman v. Bridge Co., 11 Blatchf. 286, 287, 288, F. C. 12,853, reviewing authorities and discussing what constitutes obstruction to navigation; Miller v. Mayor of New York, 13 Blatchf. 475, F. C. 9,585, reviewing authorities and holding State has power to authorize construction of bridge over navigable stream in absence of congressional legislation; United States v. New Bedford Bridge, 1 Wood. & M. 409, 415, 424, 426, 484, 500, F. C. 15,867, reviewing authorities and holding similarly to preceding citation.

Other citing cases rely upon this doctrine for the following holdings: Hatch v. Wallamet Bridge Co., 7 Sawy. 134, 6 Fed. 332; Atkinson v. Railroad Co., 2 Fed. Cas. 109, and Easton v. Railroad Co., 8 Fed. Cas. 274, all affirming State power to authorize bridges over navigable streams in absence of congressional action; Ormerod v. Railway Co., 21 Blatchf. 108, 13 Fed. 372, State may authorize construction of railway roadbed in navigable stream; Woodman v. Kilburn Mfg. Co., 1 Biss. 551; S. C., 1 Abb. 163, F. C. 17,978, or a dam; Heerman v. Slough Co., 8 Biss. 344, 1 Fed. 154, F. C. 6,320, a log boom; Huse v. Glover, 11 Biss. 552, 15 Fed. 294, dams and locks; United States v. Bain, 3 Hughes, 602, F. C. 14,496, a wharf; United States v. Bellingham Boom Co., 81 Fed. 661, 662, 48 U. S. App. 449, 450, a log boom, collecting cases; Groton v. Hurlburt, 22 Conn. 184, a highway; Savannah v. Georgia, 4 Ga. 41, a wharf; Depew v. Trustees, 5 Ind. 10, an aqueduct; Union Steamboat Co. v. Chicago, 39 Fed. 753; Rhea v. Railroad Co., 50 Fed. 20; Bailey v. Railroad Co., 4 Harr. (Del.) 395, 409, 44 Am. Dec. 597, 611, Chicago v. McGinn, 51 Ill. 273, 2 Am. Rep. 300, Green, etc., Co. v. Railroad Co., 88 Ky. 8, 10 S. W. 8, 2 L. R. A. 543; Hamilton v. R. R. Co.; 34 La. Ann. 973, 44 Am. Rep. 454, State v. Leighton, 83 Me. 421, 22 Atl. 381, and Adams v. Ulmer, 91 Me. 53, 39 Atl. 350, all bridge cases; Moor v. Veazie, 32 Me. 360, 52 Am. Dec. 662, a lock; Sinnickson v. Johnsons, 17 N. J. L. 152, 34 Am. Dec. 193; Stevens v. Railroad Co., 34 N. J. L. 552, 3 Am. Rep. 283, a railway; Milne v. New York, 2 Paine, 431, F. C. 9,618, State may impose penalty on carrier for failure to report passengers; The St. Joseph, 21 Fed. Cas. 177, State may improve harbor and impose tolls therefor; Kellogg v. Union Co., 12 Conn. 25, and Benjamin v. River Co., 42 Mich. 634, 4 N. W. 486, or a river; Morris v. State, 62 Tex. 739, or a bay; Smith v. State, 100 Tenn. 498, 46 S. W. 567, 41 L. R. A. 433, may require carriers to furnish separate accommodations for blacks and whites; Stockton v. Powell, 29 Fla. 45, 10 So. 693, 15 L. R. A. 47, may issue bonds to improve river; Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 202, 63 Am. Dec. 501, holding State has power to regulate sale of intoxicating liquors; Kansas v. Fulker, 43 Kan. 241, 247, 22 Pac. 1022, 1024, 7 L. R. A. 185, 187, & n., holding similarly.

Other citing cases affirm the following in relying upon the doctrine of the leading case: Commonwealth v. Railroad Co., 62 Pa. St. 292, 1 Am. Rep. 403, holding valid a State tax upon railways, proportioned to tonnage carried; Ex parte Crandall, 1 Nev. 308, 310, holding valid a State law imposing tax on passengers carried out of the State; Commonwealth v. Manchester, 152 Mass. 242, 23 Am. St. Rep. 830, 25 N. E. 116, 9 L. R. A. 241, and Dunham v. Lamphere, 3 Gray, 273, State may regulate fishing along coasts and tide waters; Norris v. Boston, 4 Met. 296, holding valid a State law imposing tax on all passengers brought into State; Stewart v. Harry, 3 Bush, 446, arguendo, mere grant of power to congress is not exclusive until exercised; Newport v. Taylor, 16 B. Mon. 797, 798, holding, in absence of Federal legislation, State has right to regulate charges for ferriage; Port Wardens v. The Martha J. Ward, 14 La. Ann. 290, or warden's charges; Davis v. Jerkins, 5 Jones (N. C.), 292, Commissioners v. Board, 39 Ohio St. 634, Flanagan v. Philadelphia, 42 Pa. St. 231, Selman v. Wolfe, 27 Tex. 70, Talbot Co. v. Queen Anne's Co., 50 Md. 262, Piscataqua Bridge v. New Hampshire Bridge, 7 N. H. 63, Dover v. Portsmouth Bridge, 17 N. H. 226, 232, People v. Railroad Co., 15 Wend. 134, 30 Am. Dec. 42, and State v. Dibble, 4 Jones (N. C.), 112, all holding, in absence of congressional legislation, State may authorize construction of bridge over navigable stream; Glover v. Powell, 10 N. J. Eq. 227, or a dam; Dock Co. v. Trustees, 39 N. J. Eq. 417, 446, works of railway company; Galveston v. Menard, 23 Tex. 393, and Eisenbach v. Hatfield, 2 Wash. 243, 246, 26 Pac. 540, 541, and dissenting opinion, p. 275, 26 Pac. 550, or wharves; Newcomb v. Smith, 2 Pinn. 137, and Black River Improvement Co. v. Transportation Co., 54 Wis. 681, 41 Am. Rep. 72, 11 N. W. 453, dams; J. S. Keator Lumber Co. v. Boom Corporation, 72 Wis. 84, 7 Am. St. Rep. 850, 38 N. W. 537, log booms; Kerr v. West, etc., R. R. Co., 127 N. Y. 277, 27 N. E. 834, affirming power of State to authorize a railroad right of way interfering with access to plaintiff's wharf; Lemmon v. People, 20 N. Y. 613, State has power to legislate in general until congress acts; Utica v. Churchill, 33 N. Y. 241, arguendo, State may impose tax on national bank shares; Bagg v. R. R. Co., 109 N. C. 281, 26 Am. St. Rep. 572, 14 S. E. 80, 14 L. R. A. 597, impose penalty on railroad for failure to ship freights; Craig v. Kline, 65 Pa. St. 408, 409, 411, 3 Am. Rep. 641, 642, 645, upholding State law regulating floating of logs in navigable stream.

The following citing cases affirm the syllabus doctrine, but the issues involved did not necessitate decisions thereon: Transportation Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 643, 25 L. 338, and Bridge Co. v. United States, 105 U. S. 475, 26 L. 1146, holding regulating bridges comes within power to regulate commerce, collecting cases; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 23, 38 L. 340, 14 S. Ct. 556, discussing State proprietary rights in navigable streams; United States v. Boom Co., 1 McCrary, 605, 3 Fed. 552, discussing rights of public in navigable streams; Peters v. Railroad Co., 56 Ala. 536, collecting authorities and discussing what constitutes a navigable stream; People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 235, 241, 52 Am. Dec. 315, 320, powers of national government will not be extended beyond those granted by the Constitution; Cox v. State, 3 Blackf. 197, holding State has right to make it misdemeanor to obstruct navigable stream; Stetson v. Bangor, 56 Me. 284, holding State may tax shares in national bank; Wharf Case, 3 Bland, 371, discussing rights of public in public ports; Gough v. Bell, 22 N. J. L. 459, discussing rights of owners upon shores of navigable waters; Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. 22, 21 Am. Dec. 95, discussing nature of wharfage franchise; Rumsey v. Railroad Co., 130 N. Y. 94, 28 N. E. 765, remarking United States has never asserted any authority over nonnavigable waters within State; Sage v. Mayor, 154 N. Y. 78, 61 Am. St. Rep. 603, 47 N. E. 1101, 38 L. R. A. 613, discussing riparian owners; Houston, etc., Navigation Co. v. Dwyer, 29 Tex. 383, discussing whether congress can legislate as to carriers entirely within one State. Cited in note on power of State to authorize bridging of navigable rivers, 44 Am. Dec. 620, in exhaustive notes on State regulation of interstate commerce, 27 Am. St. Rep. 566, and on national and State quarantine laws, 47 Am. St. Rep. 538.

Criticised in The Passenger Cases, 7 How. 397, 12 L. 750, holding invalid State law imposing tax on alien passengers; Cooley v. Board, 12 How. 324, 13 L. 1007, dissenting opinion, arguendo, regulation of pilotage is exclusively within power of congress to regulate commerce. Distinguished in State v. Wheeling Bridge, 13 How. 566, 14 L. 269, holding void, act of State authorizing construction of bridge across navigable stream; Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 243, 16 L. 247, holding void, law of State imposing certain burdens on owners of vessel so far as applicable to interstate commerce; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 743, 18 L. 105, dissenting opinion, arguendo, bridge constructed by municipality over navigable stream is an interference with commerce and should be abated; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 488, 24 L. 548, holding void, as regulation of interstate commerce, act of State requiring carriers on vessels to give to all passengers equal rights regardless of color; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Pendleton, 95 Ind. 13, 48 Am. Rep. 693, holding law imposing penalty on telegraph company for nondelivery of message not a regulation of interstate commerce within the rule. Questioned in State v. Railroad Co., 30 N. J. L. 498, arguendo, tax on railroad graduated according to number of passengers carried is unconstitutional.

Miscellaneous.—Cited without particular application in The Daniel Ball, Brown, 197, F. C. 3,564, discussing what constitutes navigable waters; Young v. Harrison, 6 Ga. 142, holding State alone has right to franchise for ferriage, etc.; Crow v. State, 14 Mo. 300, and dissenting opinion, p. 334, discussing general subject of taxation; Schneider v. McFarland, 2 N. Y. 463, citing argument of counsel as to what is a suit.

2 Pet. 253-317, 7 L. 415, FOSTER v. NEILSON.

Louisiana territory was ceded by France to the United States, which thereby acquired full sovereignty, p. 301.

Cited in Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 435, 9 L. 1147, reviewing history of Louisiana; Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 192, 28 L. 912, 5 S. Ct. 412; Teschemacher v. Thompson, 18 Cal. 23, 79 Am. Dec. 156, applying rule by analogy to California.

Treaties.—Where treaty provides that titles within the ceded territory "shall be ratified," such provision is not self-executing, p. 304.

Cited in United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 756, 8 L. 571, applying rule; Parker v. Duff, 47 Cal. 563, 564, where treaty provided that Indians "shall be entitled" to certain amount of land, the proviso is not self-executing; Boatner v. Ventress, 8 Mart. (N. S.) 654, 20 Am. Dec. 271, discussing principal case; United States v. Flint, 4 Sawy. 67, F. C. 15,121, holding words "shall be protected" not self-executing. Cited in Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 393, 396, 397, 10 L. 509, 511, reviewing history of treaty of St. Ildefonso.

Distinguished in United States v. Percheman, 7 Pet. 89, 8 L. 618, holding such words may imply ratified and confirmed by the treaty itself. Explained and declared to be overruled as to this point by United States v. Percheman, supra, in Garcia v. Lee, 12 Pet. 519, 520, 9 L. 1179, 1180. Disapproved in Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 407, 408, 410, 411, 420, 421, 10 L. 516, 517, 518, 522, 523, arguendo, such stipulation is self-executing, reversing Pollard v. Kibbe, 9 Port. 723; Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. 247, 21 L. 535, arguendo, sale of Indian lands may be made by treaty; Godfrey v. Beardsley, 2 McLean, 419, F. C. 5,497, words "shall be reserved" in Indian treaty are self-executing; Minturn v. Brower, 24 Cal. 661, holding treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo confirming valid titles in ceded territory, self-acting; Puget Sound Agricultural Co. v. Pierce Co., 1 Wash. Ter. 163, hold words "shall be confirmed" self-executing.

Louisiana territory, as ceded by treaty of 1803, embraces the tract between the Perdido and Mississippi rivers, p. 305.

Cited in Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 370, 372, 385, 386, 387, 389, 10 L. 498, 499, 506, 507, 508, and Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. 228, 11 L. 573, reviewing history of above tract.

Treaties.—In determining individual rights growing out of treaties with foreign powers, the judiciary will adopt the principles established by the political departments of the government, p. 307.

Cited and rule applied in Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 46, 8 L. 41, construing treaties with Cherokee Indians; affirmed in United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 710, 711, 712, 8 L. 554, 555, construing Florida treaty of 1819; Garcia v. Lee, 12 Pet. 516, 517, 9 L. 1178, and Innerrarity v. Mims, 1 Ala. 675, applying rule to construction of treaty of St. Ildefonso, involved in principal case; People v. Dibble, 16 N. Y. 224, dissenting opinion, arguing rule applicable to Indian treaty; Williams v. Insurance Co., 13 Pet. 420, 10 L. 228, action of executive branch of government in recognition of foreign sovereignty is conclusive; affirming Williams v. Insurance Co., 3 Sumn. 275, F. C. 17,738.

Boundaries.—Questions of boundary are political ones in which the courts are bound to abide by the measures adopted by the government, p. 307.

Cited in Lattimer v. Poteet, 14 Pet. 15, 10 L. 333, dissenting opinion, recognizing rule as applied in majority opinion; Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 416, 10 L. 521, citing rule casually; United States v. Reynes, 9 How. 154, 13 L. 85, adopting government's construction of treaty of St. Ildefonso; Phillips v. Payne, 92 U. S. 132, 23 L. 649, questions arising out of retrocession of portion of District of Columbia are political; Harrold v. Arrington, 64 Tex. 238, and State v. Wagner, 61 Me. 184, 186, courts will follow political branch of government in determining what is boundary; The James G. Swan, 50 Fed. 111, question what is boundary of United States is political; Watts v. United States, 1 Wash. Ter. 295, holding question whether San Juan island is part of United States is political. Cited without particular application in Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 714, 727, 9 L. 1256, 1261, remarking, boundaries must be determined, in absence of compact, by the laws and rules appropriate to the case; Binney's Case, 2 Bland, 127, discussing boundary of Maryland.

Distinguished in Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 746, 747, 9 L. 1269, arguendo, questions of interstate boundary are not political; United States v. Castillero, 2 Black, 320, 17 L. 431, when United States appears as suitor to litigate her rights against private claimant, the ordinary rules prevail as in actions between private individuals. Denied in United States v. Texas, 143 U. S. 638, 639, 36 L. 290, 291, 12 S. Ct. 491, questions of State boundaries are not political.

Upon political questions the courts will follow the decision of the political departments of the government, p. 307.

Cited in Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 56, 12 L. 605, dissenting opinion, arguendo, controversies between citizens of State as to form and change of constitutions are political, collecting cases; Jones v. United States, 137 U. S. 212, 34 L. 696, 11 S. Ct. 83, questions of sovereignty are political questions, collecting cases; In re Cooper, 143 U. S. 503, 36 L. 242, 12 S. Ct. 460, arguing similarly; United States v. One Hundred and Twenty-nine Packages, 27 Fed. Cas. 289, United States v. Tropic Wind, 28 Fed. Cas. 219, United States v. One Hundred Barrels of Cement, 27 Fed. Cas. 293, Perkins v. Rogers, 35 Ind. 156, 9 Am. Rep. 664, Fifield v. Insurance Co., 47 Pa. St. 172, 86 Am. Dec. 529, and United States v. One Thousand Five Hundred Bales of Cotton, 27 Fed. Cas. 328, all holding question whether peace or war exists is political; In re Gunn, 50 Kan. 224, 231, 232, 32 Pac. 951, 954, 19 L. R. A. 539, 542, dissenting opinion, discussing distinction between judicial and political questions. Cited in Scott v. Jones, 5 How. 374, 12 L. 196, collecting cases and querying whether question of lawful organization of State legislature is political; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 659, 15 N. W. 636, dissenting opinion, arguendo, question whether Constitution exists is practical. Cited casually in Leitensdorfer v. Campbell, 5 Dill. 124, F. C. 8,225, validity of grants under former sovereignty is political question.

Treaties, where self-operative, are equivalent to acts of the legislature, p. 314.

Cited in Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 439, 9 L. 1148, applying rule to Louisiana treaty of 1803; Fellows v. Blacksmith, 19 How. 372, 15 L. 686, to Indian treaty of 1838, with Senecas; United States v. Forty-three Gallons of Whiskey, 93 U. S. 196, 23 L. 848, to treaty with Chippewas, extending United States liquor laws to Indian territory; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 490, 25 L. 631, to Swiss treaty of 1850, regulating rights of aliens to proceeds of lands, reviewing authorities and reversing Hauenstein v. Lynham, 28 Gratt. 75; Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 540, 28 L. 771, 5 S. Ct. 256, to Chinese treaty of 1880, permitting exclusion; North German Lloyd Steamship Co. v. Hedden, 43 Fed. 22, Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S. 271, 42 L. 743, 18 S. Ct. 342, Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 721, 37 L. 916, 13 S. Ct. 1025, and The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. 621, 20 L. 229, a treaty may be repealed by a subsequent act of congress; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 607, 40 L. 825, 16 S. Ct. 651, discussing generally article VI of the Constitution; In re Parrott, 6 Sawy. 371, 1 Fed. 503, holding void a provision of the Constitution of the State in conflict with treaty; United States v. Watts, 8 Sawy. 371, 14 Fed. 131, holding extradition treaty self-operating; In re Kaine, 14 Fed. Cas. 87; Commonwealth v. Hawes, 13 Bush, 702, 26 Am. Rep. 245; In re Metzger, 17 Fed. Cas. 234; State v. Vanderpool, 39 Ohio St. 277, 48 Am. Rep. 435, and Blandford v. State, 10 Tex. App. 640, all holding an extradition treaty self-operating; United States v. Crow Dog, 3 Dak. Ter. 113, 14 N. W. 438, holding self-executing, a treaty with Indians; Litte v. Watson, 32 Me. 224, a boundary treaty. Cited without particular application in Ex parte Rodriguez, 39 Tex. 767; Stockton v. Montgomery, Dall. (Tex.) 483, and Territory v. Cox, 6 Dak. Ter. 521, discussing general relations of political and judicial branches of government. Cited without particular application in United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 418, 30 L. 428, 7 S. Ct. 240, discussing general nature of treaties under the Constitution; United States v. Reese, 5 Dill. 409, F. C. 16.137, congress has no right to interfere with rights under treaties except in cases purely political, citing cases; United States v. Johnson, 26 Fed. Cas. 630, and New Jersey v. Noyes, 18 Fed. Cas. 86, discussing casually effect of extradition treaties. Cited also in note, 81 Am. Dec. 537, collecting authorities on general subject of treaties as supreme law of the land, and 81 Am. Dec. 539, note on power of congress to abrogate treaties by legislation.

Treaties.—Where either party to a treaty engages to perform a particular act, the legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for the court, p. 314.

Approved in United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 743, 8 L. 566, citing rule arguendo. Cited in Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 630, 15 L. 794, dissenting opinion, arguendo, a law passed excluding slavery in violation of a treaty stipulation would not be ipso facto void; Taylor v. Morton, 2 Curt. 463, F. C. 13,799, applying rule and holding promise in treaty that products of one country shall not be subjected to a higher rate of duty than like products imported from other countries, is a mere contract. Cited, without particular application, arguendo, in Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 703, 30 L. 772, 7 S. Ct. 764.

Distinguished in United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 734, 735, 737, 8 L. 563, 564, holding where United States disclaims right to treat question arising out of treaty as a political question, it becomes a judicial one for the courts; United States v. Castillero, 2 Black, 320, 17 L. 431, holding similarly.

Spanish grants.—Grants made by the Spanish government, after treaty of 1803, of lands between the Perdido and Mississippi rivers are invalid, p. 317.

Cited, examined at length and affirmed in Garcia v. Lee, 12 Pet. 516, 522, 9 L. 1178, 1181, and Keene v. Whitaker, 14 Pet. 171, 10 L. 405. Cited as establishing rule, in Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 426, 427, 10 L. 525, 526, dissenting opinions; Mobile v. Emanuel, 1 How. 103, 11 L. 63, dissenting opinion. Followed in Innerrarity v. Byrne, 8 Port. 177; Pollard v. Files, 3 Ala. 50, and Abbott v. Kennedy, 5 Ala. 396; Pijean v. Beard, 8 Mart. (N. S.) 401; Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 134, 14 So. 714, and Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 191, 28 L. 912, 5 S. Ct. 412, all holding grants made after date of treaty were void; Coffee v. Groover, 123 U. S. 25, 26, 31 L. 61, 8 S. Ct. 14, arguendo, grant by government exercising de facto jurisdiction over disputed territory, of land therein, is void as against rightful government. Cited without particular application in Kennedy v. Townsley, 16 Ala. 248.

Distinguished in Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 365, 10 L. 496, holding rule not applicable where congress has subsequently passed confirmatory act; Pollard v. Files, 2 How. 602, 603, 11 L. 395 (reversing Pollard v. Files, 3 Ala. 50), United States v. Lynde, 11 Wall. 638, 640, 641, 643, 20 L. 232, 233, 234, Hallett v. Hunt, 7 Ala. 899, and Harvey v. Rusch, 67 Mo. 552, all holding similarly.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in Remington v. Millerd, 1 R. I. 97; Mandeville v. Bank, 19 La. Ann. 394, 92 Am. Dec. 544, Brace v. Reid, 3 G. Greene, 427, Ealande v. McDonald, 2 Idaho, 287, 13 Pac. 348, Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 248, and Setzer v. The Sylvia de Grasse, 21 Fed. Cas. 1095. Cited without application, Forsyth v. Hammond, 71 Fed. 449, 34 U. S. App. 552, no right of appeal to the courts lies from discretionary orders of county board; Hooker v. New Haven Co., 14 Conn. 166, dissenting opinion, discussing damnum absque injuria. Cited also incidentally in Clark v. Bates, 1 Dak. 55, 46 N. W. 512, respecting treaty with Dakota Indians; also in Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 734, 9 L. 1264, as to title of sovereign State.

2 Pet. 318-326, 7 L. 437, BANK OF KENTUCKY v. WISTER.

Constitutional law.—When a State associates itself in a private enterprise it divests itself, so far, of its sovereign character and takes that of a private citizen, p. 323.

Cited and followed in Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. 309, 14 L. 708, State by becoming sole stockholder of a State bank exercises no power not derived from the charter; Southern Ry. Co. v. North Carolina R. R. Co., 81 Fed. 599, where State was part owner of a railway; Bank of United States v. McKenzie, 2 Brock. 402, F. C. 927, statute of limitations may run against bank, notwithstanding United States is a stockholder; State Bank v. Gibson, 6 Ala. 816, State bank must cause claim against deceased to be presented, as in case of other creditors; Trustees Michigan, etc., Canal v. Brainard, 12 Ill. 510, dissenting opinion, arguendo, where State has conveyed title to trustees for certain purposes, the property becomes subject to the incidents and liabilities of private property; State v. Bank, 1 D. C. 77, arguendo, fact of capital having been furnished by State does not vary rights or responsibilities of bank; Fields v. Wheatley, 1 Sneed, 354, debt due a State bank is not a debt to State; White v. Railroad Co., 7 Heisk. 547, State does not figure as sovereign in lending its credit to railway company. Cited approvingly in Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 585, 9 L. 839, dissenting opinion.

Note payable to bearer is not affected by disabilities of the nominal payee, p. 323.

Cited and applied in Robinson v. Crenshaw, 2 Stew. & P. 299, 316, holding illegality of consideration no defense to note payable to bearer in hands of original holder; Neal v. Smith, 5 Ala. 574, arguendo, holder of note payable to bearer has right of action by virtue of original promise, not through assignment; Craig v. Vicksburg, 31 Miss. 247, holding similarly as to bond payable to bearer.

Suits against States.—An action is maintainable against a bank of which a State is sole stockholder, as the State is by incorporating the bank deemed to have waived its nonsuability, p. 323.

Cited in Owen v. Branch Bank, 3 Ala. 264, holding notes of State Bank of Alabama not bills of credit; Western Union v. Henderson, 68 Fed. 591, arguendo, suit against State auditor to restrain him from enforcing unconstitutional statute, is not a suit against the State. Cited and affirmed in Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet. 324, 9 L. 735, and Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. 309, 14 L. 708, both respecting bills issued by State banks.

Distinguished in Lowry v. Thompson, 25 S. C. 426, holding suit against State board to recover deed is suit against the State.

Bank deposits.—Where statute provided that bank might receive deposits without giving obligation under seal to repay it, assumpsit is implied and maintainable against the bank from the mere receipt of the deposit, p. 324.

State banks — Bills of credit.—Where a State imparts to a State bank its sovereign attributes, the issuance of bank paper becomes an emission of bills of credit and in violation of the Constitution, p. 324.

Cited in Briscoe v. Bank, 11 Pet. 341, 9 L. 742, dissenting opinion, arguing State may not accomplish indirectly what is directly forbidden to it by the Constitution.

Federal courts.—Suit on note payable to bearer may be brought in Federal court by subsequent holder, on ground of diverse citizenship, notwithstanding it could not have been brought on that ground by original payee, p. 326.

Approved and followed in Smith v. Clapp, 15 Pet. 129, 10 L. 685, holding holder of such note is not an assignee within the provisions of the judiciary act; White v. Railroad Co., 21 How. 576, 16 L. 223, ruling similarly as to holder of railway bonds payable to bearer; Bushnell v. Kennedy, 9 Wall. 391, 19 L. 738, arguendo, judiciary act does not apply to rights of action founded on wrongful act; Thompson v. Perrine, 106 U. S. 593, 27 L. 300, 1 S. Ct. 568, holding holder of negotiable coupons not deprived of right to sue in Federal courts by reason of citizenship of any previous holder; Chickaming v. Carpenter, 106 U. S. 666, 27 L. 308, 1 S. Ct. 622, ruling similarly as to holder of municipal bonds; Halsted v. Lyon, 2 McLean, 227, F. C. 5,968, applying rule; Cooper v. Thompson, 13 Blatchf. 437, F. C. 3,202, applying rule to holder of coupons; Codman v. Railroad Co., 17 Blatchf. 2, F. C. 2,936, applying rule to note made payable to bearer by indorsement; Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 160, 37 L. 122, 13 S. Ct. 291, applying rule to accommodation note payable to order, reviewing authorities; Towne v. Smith, 1 Wood. & M. 119, 135, F. C. 14,115, holding note made payable to bearer by indorsement, within the rule; Brown v. Noyes, 2 Wood. & M. 82, F. C. 2,023, arguendo, Federal courts have jurisdiction when original parties were citizens of different States; Jerome v. Commissioners, 5 McCrary, 641, 18 Fed. 873, and Adams v. Commissioners, 23 Fed. 212, rule applied to county warrants; Keene, etc., Bank v. Lyon Co., 90 Fed. 530, to negotiable bonds payable to bearer.

Distinguished in Parker v. Ormsby, 141 U. S. 85, 35 L. 656, 11 S. Ct. 913, holding holder of promissory note payable to order not entitled to sue in Federal court unless original payee was; Clarke v. Janesville, 1 Biss. 104, F. C. 2,854, holding coupon on bond not within the rule; Hill v. Winne, 1 Biss. 277, F. C. 6,503, holding mortgage to secure note payable to bearer not within the rule; Noell v. Mitchell, 4 Biss. 348, F. C. 10,287, rule not applicable to accommodation note made payable to bearer by indorsement, unless it appear that diverse citizenship exists between bearer and indorser; Bradford v. Jenks, 2 McLean, 132, F. C. 1,769, assignee in insolvency is not holder within rule; Fry v. Rousseau, 3 McLean, 107, F. C. 5,141, rule obiter where note is taken by assignment.

Bank deposits.—Where law provides that bank bills shall be redeemable in gold and silver, one who makes a deposit in notes of the bank is entitled to be repaid in gold and silver, p. 326.

Cited with approval in Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 678, 18 L. 707, holding that customer of bank, depositing gold, may be repaid in legal tender currency; Perley v. Muskegon Co., 32 Mich. 136, 20 Am. Rep. 639; Chesapeake Bank v. Swain, 29 Md. 498; Wallace v. Bank, 7 Ark. 66, and Scammon v. Kimball, 92 U. S. 370, 23 L. 486, title to money deposited passes to banker, who becomes liable for the amount as a debt; Corbit v. Bank, 2 Harr. (Del.) 265, 30 Am. Dec. 651, applying rule where bank notes were deposited as money. And see note on set-off of bank deposits, 19 Am. Dec. 421.

Distinguished in Baker v. Ward, 3 Ben. 506, F. C. 785, arguendo, that debt payable in money may be discharged by payment of any kind of legal money.

Estoppel.—Where a bank offered to pay the amount of its certificate of deposit in bills, which were refused, it cannot afterwards claim that the certificate should have been accompanied by check, p. 326.

Miscellaneous.—Cited without particular application in Phillips v. Preston, 5 How. 291, 12 L. 157; Alabama State Land Co. v. Kyle, 99 Ala. 479, 13 So. 45. Cited in note on bank bills, 52 Am. Dec. 448.

2 Pet. 327-330, 7 L. 440, BANK OF KENTUCKY v. ASHLEY.

Appeal and error.—The accidental entering of too large a judgment may be cured by remittitur from the appellate court, p. 329.

Cited in Washington, etc., R. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 590, 37 L. 292, 13 S. Ct. 563, where error consisted in allowance of interest, judgment will be affirmed upon remission of interest; Hopkins v. Orr, 124 U. S. 514, 31 L. 525, 8 S. Ct. 592, appellate court may make its affirmance of the judgment conditional upon remission of part of the recovery; Koenigsberger v. Mining Co., 158 U. S. 53, 39 L. 893, 15 S. Ct. 756, and Loewer v. Harris, 57 Fed. 374, 14 U. S. App. 615, where damage to a certain amount is admitted and error consists in admission of evidence increasing that amount, judgment will be affirmed upon remission of excess; Pickett v. Ford, 4 How. (Miss.) 248, the remittitur may be made by the attorney; Underwood v. Parrott, 2 Tex. 181, remittitur may be made in the lower court. Cited casually, Johnson v. Hawkins, 2 Blackf. 460, holding erroneous a judgment for excessive amount; Rowell v. Bruce, 5 N. H. 382, discussing amendment after judgment.

Distinguished in Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 29, 33 L. 113, 9 S. Ct. 699, holding, in action for damages for tort, court may not enter absolute judgment on remission of part of judgment, where judgment is for an entire sum; Harrod v. Hill, 2 Dana, 165, remission will not entitle to affirmance, unless judgment is thereby made free from error.

Appeal and error — Costs.—Where judgment is affirmed upon remission of excess, costs are paid by plaintiff in error, unless the writ is further prosecuted, p. 329.

Cited, approved and followed in Fulton v. Hunt, 3 Ark. 282, and Gregory Co. v. Raber, 1 Colo. 514.

2 Pet. 331-353, 7 L. 441, BANK OF THE UNITED STATES v. WEISIGER.

Bills and notes.—In Kentucky suit may be brought in equity directly against a remote indorser of promissory note, p. 348.

Cited in Dorsey v. Hadlock, 7 Blackf. 115, approving principal case and applying rule; Turneys v. Hunt, 8 B. Mon. 408, reviewing authorities and applying rule; Clifford v. Keating, 3 Scam. 252, suit may be brought at law in Illinois under local statute, reviewing authorities.

Consideration for accommodation indorsement is the credit given to maker by indorsee, p. 348.

Cited, applying principle, in Greenway v. Grain Co., 85 Fed. 537, 56 U. S. App. 527, holding want of consideration no defense to suit by bona fide holder, collecting cases.

Bills and notes.—Before recourse can be had against indorser, every reasonable effort must be made to recover of the drawer by suit, p. 348.

Cited and rule applied in Bank of the United States v. Tyler, 4 Pet. 382, 384, 387, 7 L. 893, 894, 895, holding neglect to proceed against a sheriff for permitting escape of drawer imprisoned on ca. sa. a bar to suit against the indorser; Long v. Pence, 93 Va. 587, 25 S. E. 594, holding question is one for jury, whether suit against maker would have availed. Cited, arguendo, Pococks v. Blount, 6 Mo. 345, holding demand and notice unnecessary where note not negotiable under Missouri law.

Bills and notes.—Diligence in pursuit of maker is excused when he has been discharged in insolvency, and creditor need not procure issuance of execution, p. 349.

Cited and relied on in Bank of United States v. Tyler, 4 Pet. 386, 7 L. 895, holding delay of thirty-one days in procuring execution was not a want of due diligence.

Insolvency.—Under act of 1800, defendant imprisoned under ca. sa. may be discharged in thirty days, p. 350.

Insolvency.—Imprisonment under the insolvency act may be waived without prejudice to claims of judgment creditor against third persons, p. 351.

Discharge under insolvency laws does not exempt debtor's present effects or future acquisitions nor prevent his confinement for same debt in case of detection of fraud, p. 353.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, without particular application, in Gundermann v. Gunnison, 39 Mich. 318; In re Drisco, 7 Fed. Cas. 1093, and in Emery v. Parrott, 107 Mass. 104, discussing order nunc pro tunc. See 2 Pet. 481, 7 L. 492.

2 Pet. 354-357, 7 L. 449, CAMPBELL v. PRATT.

Reversal for error will not be granted, where it appears that no benefit will be derived by appellant, p. 357.

Cited and rule applied in Brobst v. Brock, 10 Wall. 528, 19 L. 1004, refusing to reverse erroneous judgment for defendant in ejectment, where it appeared that plaintiff could not recover, even if judgment were reversed; In re Gribbon, 55 Fed. 876, 14 U. S. App. 382, one in whose favor error is committed cannot be heard to complain.

2 Pet. 358-369, 7 L. 450, AMERICAN FUR CO. v. UNITED STATES.

Evidence.—Acts and declarations of agent with reference to the business of his employment, within the scope of his authority, may be proven as the acts or declarations of the principal in either criminal or civil actions, p. 364.

Cited and rule applied in Barreda v. Silsbee, 21 How. 165, 16 L. 92, holding declarations of agents of ship charterers admissible to show charter made in bad faith; Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 140, 18 L. 120, holding declarations of seller's agent admissible to show price of champagne; Xenia Bank v. Stewart, 114 U. S. 228, 29 L. 103, 5 S. Ct. 847, holding declarations of bank cashier admissible against bank to show payment of a note; Aiken v. Bemis, 3 Wood. & M. 355, F. C. 109, holding declarations of agent admissible to prove infringement of patent; Norwich, etc., R. R. Co. v. Cahill, 18 Conn. 492, railroad company bound by declarations of one director; Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. v. Coleman, 18 Ill. 299, 68 Am. Dec. 546, or of its president; Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wall. 550, 20 L. 496, holding knowledge of one partner imputable to firm; McPherrin v. Jennings, 66 Iowa, 624, 24 N. W. 242, and Danville Bank v. Waddill, 31 Gratt. 488, fact of agency must be established; United States v. Amann, 24 Fed. Cas. 780, holding principal may be criminally liable for omission of his agent; Moore v. Davis, 49 N. H. 55, 6 Am. Rep. 467, holding agent's motives and intentions those of his principal.

Cited, but rule not particularly applied, in Morrill v. Cone, 22 How. 82, 16 L. 255, discussing effect of deed executed by attorney in fact without his authority. And cited in 53 Am. Dec. 774, 775, in exhaustive note on admissions of agents as evidence.

Distinguished in Newell v. Roberts, 13 Conn. 71, acts and admis-slons of thlrd persons cannot be given in evidence under the rule; Underwood v. Hart, 23 Vt. 129; Phelps v. James, 86 Iowa, 402, 41 Am. St. Rep. 499, 53 N. W. 275, and Smith v. Bodfish, 39 Me. 139, nor declarations made by agent after termination of his employment; Franklin Bank v. Stewart, 37 Me. 526, nor after transaction is completed, collecting authorities on general subject of declarations by agent; Corbin v. Adams, 6 Cush. 97, holding declarations of son, made while performing contract made by him as agent for his father, not admissible to prove terms of contract.

Indians—Penalties and forfeitures.—Where an Indian trader carries spirituous liquors into the Indian country and they are found among his goods, the burden of proof is thrown upon him to show that he did not violate the act of 1802, regulating trade with the Indians, p. 364.

Cited and principle applied in State v. Cunningham, 25 Conn. 203, holding proof of finding liquors in possession of accused, presumptive evidence that it was kept for sale contrary to the statute; Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 356, discussing same question; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 58 Vt. 598, 4 Atl. 231, ruling similarly.

Evidence—Conspiracy.—When persons are associated for an illegal purpose, acts and declarations of one, in reference to the common object, and forming part of the res gestæ, may be given in evidence against all, p. 365.

Cited and principle followed in Nudd v. Burrows, 91 U. S. 438, 23 L. 289, and Walton v. Bank, 13 Colo. 271, 16 Am. St. Rep. 201, 22 Pac. 442, 5 L. R. A. 767, & n., bankrupt's declarations admissible as against preferred creditor, where they were the result of an agreement to give fraudulent preference; Bannon v. United States, 156 U. S. 468, 39 L. 496, 15 S. Ct. 469, where conspiracy is proven, overt acts of individual conspirators may be shown; Wiborg v. United States, 163 U. S. 657, 41 L. 298, 16 S. Ct. 1137, and State v. Soper, 16 Me. 298, 33 Am. Dec. 668, holding similarly; Bloomer v. State, 48 Md. 531, collecting cases, and The Meteor, 17 Fed. Cas. 197, declarations of conspirators admissible against co-conspirators; Farley v. Peebles, 50 Neb. 732, 70 N. W. 234, even where the evidence is such as inter alia, the jury may infer the conspiracy itself from; United States v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. 228, F. C. 15,318, rule applies as between principal and accessories; Cuyler v. McCartney, 40 N. Y. 245, dissenting opinion, arguendo, rule applicable to all combinations for unlawful purposes, even where technical conspiracy is not shown; State v. George, 7 Ired. 323, rule applies between principal and accomplice. See also notes, 95 Am. Dec. 56, and 3 Am. St. Rep. 487, collecting cases on declarations of conspirators. Cited without particular application, in United States v. Cole, 5 McLean, 553, F. C. 14,832, upon proposition that combination is not ended until its purpose is accomplished.

Distinguished in Reid v. State, 20 Ga. 685, declarations of conspirators are not evidence against co-conspirators, when mere narratives of past occurrences; Strout v. Packard, 76 Me. 156, 49 Am. Rep. 605, conspiracy must be proven aliunde; State v. Larkin, 49 N. H. 44, declarations made two weeks after alleged offense was consummated are not part of the res gestæ; State v. George, 7 Ired. 327, dissenting opinion, arguendo, declaration not part of res gestæ, after common enterprise is at an end; Patton v. State, 6 Ohio St. 470, holding similarly; Preston v. State, 4 Tex. App. 200, evidence of threats, made previous to commission of crime, not admissible where agreement to commit the crime had not been made at time of making threats; Fouts v. State, 7 Ohio St. 476, previous declarations by one who commits a crime as to what he intended to do are not admissible against another person charged at the same time for same offense, even where agreement existed to perform the unlawful act previous to the making of the declaration.

Statutory. construction.—Penal laws should not be so strictly construed as to defeat the obvious intention of the legislature, p. 367.

Cited and followed in In re Coy, 127 U. S. 740, 31 Fed. 800, construing penal statute referring to elections; United States v. Lacher, 134 U. S. 628, 33 L. 1083, 10 S. Ct. 626, construing penal statutes relating to mails; United States v. Willetts, 5 Ben. 227, F. C. 16,699, construing revenue laws imposing forfeiture for fraud; United States v. Mattock, 2 Sawy. 151, F. C. 15,744, construing statute prohibiting depasturing of Indian lands; United States v. Stone, 8 Fed. 251, construing words "plunder, steal or destroy," in revised statutes, section 5358; United States v. Ellis, 51 Fed. 810, construing word "spirituous," in revised statutes, section 2139; In re Moore, 66 Fed. 951, construing order prohibiting introduction of liquors into Alaska; Boyd v. Watt, 27 Ohio St. 275, dissenting opinion, and United States v. One Hundred and Twenty-nine Packages, 27 Fed. Cas. 285, holding rule a fortiori, applicable when statute is not penal but merely civil act imposing penalty; State v. Johnson, 16 S. C. 189, construing "concealed," in statute forbidding carrying of concealed weapons; Crosby v. Hawthorne, 25 Ala. 225, construing "aid," in statute prohibiting aiding slaves to run away; Merriam v. Langdon, 10 Conn. 469, construing "trading, dealing and trafficking," in statute for suppression of peddling; Rawson v. State, 19 Conn. 299, construing "otherwise," in statute prohibiting person from keeping "by agent, or otherwise," any house for purpose of selling liquors; State v. Main, 31 Conn. 575, construing "houses," in statute prohibiting keeping houses of bawdry; People v. Sweetser, 1 Dak. 301, 46 N. W. 454, holding words "and" and "or" interchangeable as statute may require; Keller v. State, 11 Md. 536, 69 Am. Dec. 232, construing statute imposing penalty for failure to secure liquor license; Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 195, 74 Am. Dec. 529, construing "give," in statute forbidding gift of intoxicants to minors. Cited, without particular application, in Beley v. Naphtaly, 73 Fed. 125, 44 U. S. App. 232, remarking remedial statutes should be broadly construed.

Indian country ceases to be such with the extinguishment of the Indian title to the soil, p. 368.

Cited and rule applied in Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 208, 24 L. 473, holding lands to which the Indian title had passed away, no longer Indian lands within the meaning of statute forbidding sales of liquor on Indian lands; United States v. Richard, 1 Ariz. Ter. 37, 40, holding similarly. Cited, arguendo, in United States v. Seveloff, 2 Sawy. 316, F. C. 16,252, holding Alaska not Indian country within act forbidding sales of liquor in Indian country; Moore v. County Commissioners, 2 Wyo. 22, discussing taxation within Indian reservations. See note on Indian relations, 3 McCrary, 516.

Distinguished in United States v. Payne, 2 McCrary, 304, 305, 8 Fed. 895, rule aliter where so provided by treaty, statute or executive order; United States v. Richard, 1 Ariz. Ter. 46, dissenting opinion, arguendo, rule not applicable to territory west of Mississippi.

2 Pet. 370-379, 7 L. 454, DANDRIDGE v. WASHINGTON'S EXECUTORS.

Parties to actions.—All participants in distribution of a fund should be parties to a suit for its distribution, p. 376.

Distinguished in Evans v. Wall, 159 Mass. 169, 38 Am. St. Rep. 407, 34 N. E. 184, holding possible remaindermen not necessarily parties.

Words and phrases.—"Trade" and "profession" are seldom confounded in common language, the former being generally received as denoting one of the mechanical arts, p. 377.

Parties to actions.—Residuary legatee is not a proper party in a suit against executors to fix amount of a prior legacy, p. 377.

Cited and rule applied in Davison v. Rake, 45 N. J. Eq. 772, 18 Atl. 754, holding executor only necessary party in suit by legatee to recover amount of legacy.

Distinguished in Sears v. Hardy, 120 Mass. 530, holding residuary legatee proper party in action to declare resulting trust in bulk of estate; Read v. Patterson, 44 N. J. Eq. 218, 6 Am. St. Rep. 880, 14 Atl. 493, residuary legatees are necessary parties to suit to construe residuary clause in will.

Executor is representative of and guardian of interests of residuary legatees, p. 377.

Cited and rule applied in Ward v. Durham, 134 Ill. 200, 25 N. E. 746, holding judgment against executor allowing claim conclusive on heirs and devisees; Labitut v. Prewett, 1 Woods, 147, F. C. 7,962, holding executor may bring bill to enjoin sale of property of estate without joining legatees; Walsh v. Smyth, 3 Bland, 25, representatives entitled to notice of dissolution of injunction obtained by deceased.

Distinguished in Carey v. Roosevelt, 81 Fed. 610, holding judgment against executor, after distribution, does not bind legatees.

Equity practice.—Dismissal of bill in equity for want of proper parties should be without prejudice, p. 378.

Cited in Durant v. Essex Co., 7 Wall. 110, 19 L. 156, where words "without prejudice," are omitted from decree, it is presumed to be rendered on the merits.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, without particular application, in Bona-parte v. Railroad Co., Bald. 217, F. C. 1,617; Cross v. De Valle, 6 Fed. Cas. 891, holding parties in equity must be served as well as sued.

2 Pet. 380-416, 7 L. 458, SATTERLEE v. MATTHEWSON.

Appeal and error.—Jurisdiction of Supreme Court is acquired on error to the Supreme Court of a State where it appears from the record that the repugnancy of a statute to the Constitution was drawn into question, although the record do not in terms so state, p. 410.

Cited to this point in Harris v. Dennie, 3 Pet. 302, 7 L. 687, applying rule where Federal statute misconstrued; McCullough v. Virginia, 172 U. S. 118, and Water Power Co. v. Street Ry. Co., 172 U. S. 488, applying rule and collecting cases. Cited, without particular application, in Stearns v. Lawrence, 83 Fed. 745, 54 U. S. App. 532, referring to practice of examining opinions of courts to ascertain point decided.

Distinguished in Crowell v. Randell, 10 Pet. 396, 9 L. 469, reviewing authorities, and holding it must appear in some manner from the record that Federal question was raised and decided as required by judiciary act; Hamilton v. Kneeland, 1 Nev. 63, holding diverse citizenship no ground for writ of error.

Obligation of contracts.—A retrospective statute making valid a contract previously void impairs no Federal limitations, p. 412.

Cited, approved, and rule applied in Skellinger v. Smith, 1 Wash. Ter. 373, McMasters v. Commonwealth, 3 Watts, 294, Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. 110, 111, 8 L. 885, and Randall v. Kreiger, 23 Wall. 140, 147, 23 L. 126, affirming 2 Dill. 448, F. C. 11,554, all holding valid statutes curing defective acknowledgments; Atwater v. Seely, 1 McCrary, 268, 2 Fed. 137, holding similarly; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 204, 17 L. 525, holding valid a statute curing defective bond issue; Belolt v. Morgan, 7 Wall. 624, 19 L. 207, Bridgeport v. Railroad Co., 15 Conn. 497, Bass v. Columbus, 30 Ga. 851, collecting cases, McMillan v. Lee Co., 6 Iowa, 394, all holding similarly; Baughner v. Nelson, 9 Gill, 305, 52 Am. Dec. 698, Andrews v. Russell, 7 Blackf. 475, Welch v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 155, 79 Am. Dec. 239, Nichols v. Gee, 30 Ark. 145, Wilson v. Hardesty, 1 Md. Ch. 68, Danville v. Pace, 25 Gratt. 10, 18 Am. Rep. 669, and Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 151, 27 L. 685, 2 S. Ct. 414, all holding that repeal of law making contract void for usury, validated the contract; State v. Squires, 26 Iowa, 348, upholding statute curing defective organization of school district; Gross v. Mortgage Co., 108 U. S. 488, 27 L. 799, 2 S. Ct. 947, holding valid a statute curing invalidity of previous loans of foreign corporations; Shields v. Land Co., 94 Tenn. 148, 152, 45 Am. St. Rep. 716, 718, 28 S. W. 674, 675, 26 L. R. A. 518, and Cowell v. Col. Sp. Co., 3 Colo. 91, all holding valid, acts curing defective incorporations; Milne v. Huber, 3 McLean, 217, F. C. 9,617, holding valid as to pre-existing contracts, statute creating remedy when none had formerly existed; Bloomer v. Stolley, 5 McLean, 165, F. C. 1,559, arguendo, statute extending patent right is valid; Green v. Collins, 3 Cliff. 506, F. C. 5,755, applying rule holding right of action on contract valid in State where made, revived by repeal of prohibiting statute of State where suit brought; Aycock v. Martin, 37 Ga. 179, dissenting opinion, collecting cases and arguing that stay laws are constitutional; Welborn v. Akin, 44 Ga. 427, upholding retrospective statute requiring affidavit of payment of taxes on claim sued on; Gibson v. Hibbard, 13 Mich. 219, sustaining statute permitting validating of contracts void for want of stamp; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Pollard, 63 Miss. 663, sustaining statute removing bar to recovery on contracts previously barred by failure to pay tax; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Winne, 20 Mont. 40, 49 Pac. 452, sustaining statute curing invalid contracts of foreign corporations; Mercer v. Watson, 1 Watts, 357, holding valid a statute curing defective conveyances by married women; Lane v. Nelson, 79 Pa. St. 410, holding curative statute valid, providing its purpose be to correct what was defective, and not to validate what was void; dissenting opinion, Bronson v. Kingie, 1 How. 330, 11 L. 150, majority holding unconstitutional a law extending time for redemption of mortgages; Reynolds v. Randall, 12 R. I. 531, dissenting opinion, collecting cases and arguing statute changing rule of evidence as to adverse possession is retroactive and constitutional; Blodgett v. Hitt, 29 Wis. 178, semble, statute curing defective administrator's sale is valid and retroactive. See note on laws validating defective contracts by married women, 16 Am. Dec. 519, collecting cases; and note on curative acts, 37 Am. Rep. 398, collecting cases.

Distinguished in Newman v. Samuels, 17 Iowa, 554, and Brinton v. Seevers, 12 Iowa, 393, holding statute curing defective acknowledgments invalid, so far as impairing vested rights. Disapproved in Pearce v. Patton, 7 B. Mon. 169, 45 Am. Dec. 68, reviewing principal case and holding void a statute curing defective deed by married woman; State v. Hernandez, 24 La. Ann. 71, arguendo, statute curing fraudulent issue of municipal certificates is invalid; Adams v. Palmer, 51 Me. 494, refusing to construe as retroactive, a statute validating voidable releases of dower; Forster v. Forster, 129 Mass. 566, collecting cases and holding void a statute curing defective tax sales and exempting certain cases; Grim v. School District, 57 Pa. St. 435, 98 Am. Dec. 239, holding curative statute void when impairing vested rights, reviewing authorities; Austin v. Burgess, 36 Wis. 193, holding statute validating usurious contracts not retroactive.

Constitutional law.—A statute is not void because it is unwise, p. 412.

Cited in Gibson v. Mason, 5 Nev. 299, holding that words of Constitution furnish the only test as to the validity of statute; Dover v. Portsmouth Bridge, 17 N. H. 227, whether exercise of legislative power is discreet is not a question for the courts. Cited obiter in Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. St. 163, 59 Am. Dec. 767, remarking that State law is valid unless clearly forbidden.

Constitutional law.—Nothing in the Constitution of the United States forbids a State legislature to exercise judicial functions, p. 413.

Cited in Trustees Internal Imp. Fund v. Bailey, 10 Fla. 249, holding statute directing Supreme Court to rehear a particular case, an exercise of judicial functions, and void under State Constitution. Cited without particular application, in Hepburn's Case, 3 Bland, 98, discussing general scope of legislative authority.

Distinguished in Lawson v. Jeffries, 47 Miss. 699, 705, 12 Am. Rep. 349, 354, holding constitutional convention has no power to exercise judicial authority.

Retrospective laws are constitutional unless they impair the obligations of contracts, or are ex post facto, p. 413.

The following citing cases affirm and variously apply this doctrine: Drehman v. Stifle, 8 Wall. 603, 19 L. 511, holding valid a provision of the Constitution of Missouri, exempting all persons who acted under authority of the United States from civil suit, on account of any acts so done; Gray v. Munroe, 1 McLean, 532, F. C. 5,724, holding law relating to imprisonment of debtors applicable to pending cases; Martindale v. Moore, 3 Blackf. 287, reviewing authorities and construing law limiting liability of executors; Johnston v. Vandyke, 6 McLean, 441, F. C. 7,426, holding valid a retroactive law limiting right of dower; McAfee v. Covington, 71 Ga. 274, 51 Am. Rep. 265, holding judgment founded on tort not a contract within constitutional inhibition; Albee v. May, 2 Paine, 80, F. C. 134, holding valid a retrospective act, giving ejected occupants of lands right to recover for improvements made while in possession; Ex parte Hull, 12 Fed. Cas. 854, holding bankruptcy act applicable to pre-existing debts; Elliott v. Mayfield, 4 Ala. 423, holding statute relating to execution against sureties retrospective and valid; Owen v. Peebles, 42 Ala. 343, holding valid a law abrogating previous forfeitures; Barbour Co. v. Horn, 48 Ala. 659, holding statutes giving right of action for defect in bridge, applicable to previously constructed bridge; Tilton v. Swift, 40 Iowa, 80, sustaining retroactive statute changing time of entry of judgment; Grand Lodge v. City, 44 La. Ann. 673, 11 So. 154, sustaining statute imposing taxation on property previously exempt; Oriental Bank v. Freese, 18 Me. 111, 36 Am. Dec. 702, holding retrospective and sustaining a statute repealing statute confirming right to penalty; Scott v. Smart, 1 Mich. 302, 303, sustaining statute transferring certain cases from Territorial Supreme Court to State Supreme Court; Cochran v. Van Surlay, 20 Wend. 372, 32 Am. Dec. 573, holding constitutional a private act authorizing sale of estate of infants; Burch v. Newbury, 10 N. Y. 391, holding statute permitting appeal where time had previously expired, not contrary to Constitution of United States; Green v. Shumway, 39 N. Y. 432, arguendo, test oath statute is constitutional; Leak v. Gay, 107 N. C. 478, 12 S. E. 314, holding statutes exempting homesteads from previously acquired judgment liens, retrospective and constitutional; Sandusky City Bank v. Wilbor, 7 Ohio St. 499, sustaining statute taxing State bank previously exempt by charter; Erie, etc., R. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. St. 321, holding statute to impair obligation of contract must operate directly upon some contract and literally save its obligation; Miles v. King, 5 S. C. 150, holding valid a statute requiring re-recording of destroyed documents of title; Bender v. Crawford, 33 Tex. 751, 7 Am. Rep. 272, sustaining retrospective statute suspending statute of limitations. Cited without particular application, in In re Smith, 22 Fed. Cas. 401, holding restriction relating to impairment of contracts applicable to States alone, not to congress; Larkin v. Saffarans, 15 Fed. 149, holding similarly; also in dissenting opinion, Treadway v. Schrauber, 1 Dak. 270, 46 N. W. 476. Cited casually in Lewis v. Lewis, 7 How. 784, 12 L. 913, stating rule ut supra; Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 390, 18 L. 374, discussing ex post facto laws; Bukner v. Street, 1 Dill. 254, F. C. 2,098, collecting cases and stating rule ut supra; Gage v. Gage, 66 N. H. 294, 29 Atl. 549, 21 L. R. A. 857, & n., stating rule that remedial statutes may be construed to be retrospective. Cited obiter, in Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. St. 165, 59 Am. Dec. 770, remarking that statute must clearly impair the obligation of contracts in order to be void.

Distinguished in Forsyth v. Marbury, Charl. (Ga.) 329, holding statute exempting certain property from levy previously subject, void as to existing judgment founded on contract; Gunn v. Hendry, 43 Ga. 563, holding unconstitutional, a statute permitting set-off on account of losses occurring during the war without connecting plaintiff with those losses; Anderson v. Baker, 23 Md. 566, arguendo, retrospective law depriving certain persons of rights of suffrage is ex post facto; Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 386, 387, dissenting opinion, collecting cases, and arguing statute removing disability of witnesses should not be construed retrospective; Berdan v. Van Riper, 16 N. J. L. 11, refusing to construe as retroactive, a statute prescribing conditions as to creation of joint tenancies; Vanderpool v. Railroad Co., 44 Wis. 659, refusing to construe mechanics' lien law retroactively.

Constitutional law.—A State law divesting vested rights violates no Federal limitation where it does not impair the obligation of a contract, p. 413.

Cited, approved, and rule applied in Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 539, 580, 9 L. 821, 837, reviewing principal case and refusing to read certain implied terms into grant of charter by State; Baltimore, etc., R. R. Co. v. Nesbit, 10 How. 402, 13 L. 472, holding valid a retroactive law directing court to set aside inquisition condemning certain lands; East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge, 10 How. 539, 13 L. 530, holding similarly; De Moss v. Newton, 31 Ind. 220, sustaining statute reducing time of commencing actions for partition; State v. New Orleans, 32 La. Ann. 715, sustaining law limiting right of municipality as to taxation; Hardeman v. Downer, 39 Ga. 436, holding valid a retroactive homestead law; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 415, 420, 33 L. 197, 199, 9 S. Ct. 776, 778, holding valid provision in State Constitution nullifying judgments founded in tort; Bennett v. Boggs, 1 Bald. 74, 77, F. C. 1,319, holding valid a law regulating common right of fishery; Holman v. Bank, 12 Ala. 417, upholding statute giving administratrix power to sell land, although title had already descended to the heir; Thompson v. Phillips, 1 Bald. 284, F. C. 13,974, holding valid a law limiting lien of judgments; Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. 379, 15 L. 421, dissenting opinion, arguendo, proviso in charter of bank exempting it from taxation may be subsequently annulled by legislature; Bonner v. Martin, 40 Ga. 503, upholding statute re-opening judgments; Shepherd v. Grimmer, 2 Idaho, 1127, 31 Pac. 795, holding valid a law prescribing test oath, which, in effect, deprives certain voters of their franchise; Myers v. Mitchell, 20 La. Ann. 534, sustaining Constitution of State changing right of appeal; New Orleans v. Railroad Co., 35 La. Ann. 682, sustaining law imposing assessment on taxable property previously omitted from the rolls, collecting cases; McLure v. Melton, 24 S. C. 570, 58 Am. Rep. 278, argu- endo, rule applies to decision of State court modifying rule of property established by previous decision; Ex parte Hunter, 2 W. Va. 173, and Ex parte Quarrier, 4 W. Va. 223, upholding test oath act.

Distinguished in Bonaparte v. Railroad Co., 1 Bald. 220, F. C. 1,617, holding act permitting taking of private property for public use without compensation, impairs obligation of contract; Wilder v. Lumpkin, 4 Ga. 218, 220, holding laws divesting antecedent vested rights are void; McNamee v. Alexander, 109 N. C. 246, 13 S. E. 778, refusing to construe as retroactive, a remedial statute operating so as to divest title of present owner; Lowe v. Harris, 112 N. C. 480, 17 S. E. 540, 22 L. R. A. 382, holding similarly as to repeal of part of statute of frauds; Mellinger v. Houston, 68 Tex. 44, 3 S. W. 252, reviewing authorities, and holding statute refusing right to plead statute of limitations in suits for delinquent taxes not retroactive under State Constitution forbidding retroactive laws; Griffin v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 110, holding unconstitutional an enabling act permitting rehearing of cases previously decided in military tribunal; Peerce v. Kitzmiller, 19 W. Va. 573, holding rule aliter since adoption of fourteenth amendment.

Circuit Court may decide whether State law is in conflict with State Constitution or not, p. 414.

Cited casually in Clark v. Sohler, 1 Wood. & M. 374, F. C. 2,835, and Woodhull v. Wagner, 1 Bald. 302, F. C. 17,975, remarking that Circuit Court must decide precisely as State courts ought to do.

Obligation of contracts.—Prohibition to pass laws impairing obligation of contracts is confined to the States, p. 416, Cited and applied in In re Smith, 2 Woods, 460, F. C. 12,996, upholding Federal bankruptcy act.

Distinguished in Rosa v. Buckland, 17 Ill. 320, dissenting opinion, arguing law of congress void which impairs obligation of a contract.

Miscellaneous.—Cited without particular application, in Salisbury etc., Assn. v. Wicomico Co., 86 Md. 622, 39 Atl. 427, Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 548, 54 Am. Dec. 238, Ryder v. Innerrarity, 4 Stew. & P. 30, Baring v. Erdman, 2 Fed. Cas. 790; Atkinson v. Philadelphia, etc., R. R., 2 Fed. Cas. 110; in Talcott v. Pine Grove, 1 Flipp. 177, F. C. 13,735, on point that legislature may authorize issue of bonds to aid in constructing railroad; Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 282, 31 L. 439, 8 S. Ct. 472, and United States v. Land Co., 148 U. S. 44, 37 L. 360, 13 S. Ct. 463, remarking that decisions of legislative branch are not open to collateral attack; in Leach v. Smith, 25 Ark. 254, holding void a statute known as Confederate money act; Wilder v. Lumpkin, 4 Ga. 215, discussing ex post facto laws. Cited erroneously in Bains v. James and Catherine, Bald. 547, F. C. 756; New Orleans, etc., R. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 26 La. Ann. 521, discussing legislative authority over municipal corporations; In re Mechanics' Society, 31 La. Ann. 631, discussing essentials of constitutional statute; Campbell's Case, 2 Bland, 232, 237, 20 Am. Dec. 373, 378, discussing nature of State sovereignty; Doc Lonas v. State, 3 Helsk. 301, discussing right of judiciary to determine questions of constitutionality; Lewis v. Woodfolk, 2 Baxt. 47, discussing same proposition.

2 Pet. 417-441, 7 L. 470, REYNOLDS v. McARTHUR.

Statutory construction.—Laws should not be construed retrospectively unless their language renders such construction indispensable, p. 434.

Cited and rule applied in Ladiga v. Roland, 2 How. 589, 11 L. 390, refusing to construe as retroactive, provision in Indian treaty.

Western reserve.—A patent issued October 12, 1812, founded on a military warrant for lands within the reserve is valid against a claimant of the same land holding under sale made by United States, p. 435.

Cited casually in Wallace v. Saunders, 7 Ohio, 176, discussing titles within the reserve.

Words and phrases.—"Source" of a river is neither the point at which sufficient water flows to navigate small vessels laden, nor the point from which water flows at all seasons of the year, nor the point farthest from its mouth at which water flows at all seasons of the year, it is fixed by common consent and notoriety, pp. 438, 440.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in State v. Sterling, 20 Md. 505. Cited, to no particular point decided, in Gaston v. Mace, 33 W. Va. 21, 25 Am. St. Rep. 853, 10 S. E. 63, 5 L. R. A. 396, and note, discussing navigable rivers as highways.

2 Pet. 442-448, 7 L. 479, SOUTHWICK v. POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

District Court's jurisdiction extends to all suits at common law where the United States or any officer thereof under authority of act of congress shall sue, p. 44.

Cited obiter in United States v. New Bedford Bridge, 1 Wood. & M. 448, F. C. 15,867, and in In re Barry, 42 Fed. 127, F. C. 1,059, S. C., 136 U. S. 617, 34 L. 510n, discussing common law under United States.

District Court, performing its appropriate duty as such, is not sitting as a Circuit Court although it possesses the powers of that court also, p. 447.

Cited and approved in Swift v. Circuit Judges, 64 Mich. 486, 31 N. W. 437, holding Circuit Court may review judgment of Recorder's Court in case where they could have exercised concurrent jurisdiction.

District Court.—Where District Court sits as Circuit Court, writ of error will lie from original judgment to Supreme Court; aliter where it sits as District Court, p. 448.

2 Pet. 449-480, 7 L. 481, WESTON v. CITY COUNCIL OF CHARLESTON.

Words and phrases — Suit.—Where a right is litigated between parties in a court of justice, the proceeding by which the decision of the court is sought is a suit, p. 464.

Cited with approval in Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 645, 9 L. 1229, dissenting opinion, arguendo, “suit” and “case,” synonymous; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 566, 10 L. 592, dissenting opinion, arguendo, application for writ of habeas corpus is a suit; State v. Jennings, 56 Wis. 120, 14 N. W. 30, and State v. Supervisors, 67 Wis. 276, 30 N. W. 361, holding mandamus proceeding a civil action; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 112, 18 L. 293, holding application for habeas corpus, a “cause;” In re Sloan, 5 N. Mex. 611, 25 Pac. 937, and Taylor v. New York, 82 N. Y. 25, mandamus proceeding is a suit; Rowan v. Shepard, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 254, 255, and Case of Sewing Machine Companies, 18 Wall. 585, 21 L. 922, approving definition, supra; Mineral Range Ry. Co. v. Detroit, etc., Copper Co., 25 Fed. 520; United States v. Inlots, 26 Fed. Cas. 487, and Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 375, 23 L. 452, condemnation proceeding is a suit; Appleton v. Turnbull, 84 Me. 76, 24 Atl. 593, also a bill in equity by a judgment creditor of a corporation; State v. Oil Co., 42 W. Va. 95, 24 S. E. 693, a proceeding reviewing tax assessment, involving validity of tax law; State v. Newell, 13 Mont. 305 34 Pac. 29, habeas corpus proceeding is a “special proceeding in the nature of an action,” reviewing authorities; United States v. Moore, 11 Fed. 251, criminal proceeding is a suit; McCullough v. Large, 20 Fed. 310, as also a rule to show cause why one should not be punished for contempt; Lackawanna Coal Co. v. Bates, 56 Fed. 740, and execution proceeding against stockholder after return nulla bona against corporation; In re Ditch, 69 Fed. 166, also a statutory proceeding for establishing drains; Mooney v. Manufacturing Co., 72 Fed. 36, 34 U. S. App. 581, garnishment proceeding against foreign corporation; Stinson v. St. P. R. Co., 20 Minn. 494, querying whether condemnation proceeding is a suit. Cited casually in Clark v. Sohler, 1 Wood. & M. 372, F. C. 2,835, stating definition ut supra; and cited in note, 12 Am. Rep. 551.

Denied in Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 624, 10 L. 625, concurring opinion, arguendo, application for writ of habeas corpus is not a suit; Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 611, 612, 10 L. 617, 618, dissenting opinion, arguendo, application for writ of mandamus is not a suit; In re Chicago, 64 Fed. 898, assessment proceedings for municipal improvement are not a suit, even where conducted in court under judicial forms, collecting cases. Distinguished in New Orleans, etc.,

R. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 144, 26 L. 99, dissenting opinion, arguendo, defense arising under laws of United States is not a "suit arising under laws of United States;" Upshur Co. v. Rich, 135 U. S. 474, 34 L. 199, 10 S. Ct. 653, holding appeal to a County Court acting as a board of commissioners without judicial powers is not a "suit."

"Suit"—Prohibition.—A proceeding to obtain a writ of prohibition is a suit, p. 464.

Cited in In re Sloan, 5 N. Mex. 611, 25 Pac. 937, ruling similarly as to proceeding for injunction against election officers. Cited without particular application, in Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 174, 29 L. 603, 6 S. Ct. 573, discussing prohibition generally.

Final judgment.—A judgment refusing a writ of prohibition is a final judgment, and appealable, p. 464.

Supreme Court has jurisdiction upon error to Supreme Court of a State where it has sustained State law attacked as a violation of Constitution of United States, p. 464.

Cited and rule applied in Home Ins. Co. v. Augusta, 93 U. S. 121, 23 L. 826, entertaining error to State court sustaining validity of statute claimed to be in violation of constitutional provision forbidding impairing obligation of contracts; Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 418, 26 L. 188, ruling similarly on error to State court, where statute was upheld which was claimed to be void as in furtherance of the ordinance of secession. Cited casually in Pratt v. Fitzhugh, 1 Black, 273, 17 L. 207, discussing jurisdiction on error to Circuit courts; and in Saginaw Gaslight Co. v. Saginaw, 28 Fed. 533, Citizens' Street Ry. Co. v. City Ry. Co., 56 Fed. 750, and City Ry. Co. v. Citizens' Street R. R. Co., 196 U. S. 563, 41 L. 1116, 17 S. Ct. 655, discussing jurisdiction of Circuit Court where impairment of obligation of contract is involved; Hammond v. People, 32 Ill. 465, dissenting opinion, arguendo, writ of error lies to State Supreme Court in habeas corpus proceeding. Cited in 91 Am. Dec. 197, in very full note on writs of error to State courts.

Final judgment is one which determines the particular cause, pp. 464, 465.

Cited approvingly in Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 563, 10 L. 591, dissenting opinion, arguendo, judgment refusing discharge on habeas corpus is a final judgment; and in Hammond v. People, 32 Ill. 470, dissenting opinion, arguing similarly; Antrim's Case, 1 Fed. Cas. 1066, proceeding may be final and yet not conclusive elsewhere as to the right in question; Belt v. Davis, 1 Cal. 138, a judgment vacating another judgment in another court for fraud is final; Bassick Mining Co. v. Schoolfield, 15 Colo. 380, 24 Pac. 1051, and a decree settling amount of liens and ordering sale of property; State v. Logan, 1 Nev. 514, an order discharging defendant and exonerating his bail;

Swain v. Savage, 77 N. W. 363, as to judgment declaring writ of replevin to have been unauthorized; Lalande v. McDonald, 2 Idaho, 287, 13 Pac. 348, a judgment of nonsuit; Allen v. Savannah, 9 Ga. 293, collecting cases and approving definition ut supra; International Bank v. Jenkins, 104 Ill. 150, or a judgment of appellate court, which leaves nothing to be done but to carry that judgment into effect. Cited in 60 Am. Dec. 428, in exhaustive note on final judgments. Cited also in note, 83 Am. Dec. 292.

Distinguished in Brinkley v. Brinkley, 47 N. Y. 47, holding order punishing for contempt not final if conditional.

Power of congress to borrow money is free and unburdened, pp. 465, 466.

Cited, without particular application, in Griswold v. Hepburn, 2 Duv. 46; and in Van Husan v. Kanouse, 13 Mich. 309, Shollenberger v. Brinton, 52 Pa. St. 66, and Metropolitan Bank v. Van Dyck, 27 N. Y. 499, 538, discussing validity of legal tender act.

Taxation.—Where right to impose a tax exists, it is a right which, in its nature, acknowledges no limits, p. 466.

Cited in Fifield v. Close, 15 Mich. 508, and Jones v. Keep, 19 Wis. 376, holding unconstitutional a provision of stamp act taxing process in State courts; Davis v. Richardson, 45 Miss. 503, 7 Am. Rep. 733, holding similarly as to provision requiring documents used as evidence to be stamped.

*Distinguished in Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 49, 1 Am. Rep. 230, holding purpose of tax must be public; Jones v. Keep, 19 Wis. 381, dissenting opinion, arguendo, statute of United States taxing process in State courts is constitutional.

Taxation.—A State may not use the power of taxation on the means employed by the government of the Union in pursuance of the Constitution, p. 467.

Cited and rule applied in Dobbins v. Erie Co., 16 Pet. 449, 10 L. 1027, holding unconstitutional a State law taxing "office" held under government of United States; Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 47, 18 L. 748, holding void a State law taxing passengers as interference with right of United States to transport troops throughout the Union; Union Pac. R. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. 38, 21 L. 794, dissenting opinion, arguendo, railroad constructed as aid to government operations is not subject to State taxation; Central Pac. R. R. Co. v. California, 162 U. S. 148, 149, 40 L. 922, 923, 16 S. Ct. 787, 788, dissenting opinion, reviewing authorities and arguing similarly; Andrews v. Auditor, 28 Gratt. 121, 123, State may not tax government buildings; in the following: Barker v. Bank, 59 N. H. 311, National Exchange Bank v. Boylen, 26 W. Va. 557, 53 Am. Rep. 115, and Farmers', etc., Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 34, 23 L. 199, holding national banks not affected by State usury laws; National Bank v.

Fisher, 45 Kan. 729, 26 Pac. 483, National, etc., Bank v. Mobile, 62 Ala. 292, 34 Am. Rep. 18, People v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 543, 25 L. 706, State v. Haight, 31 N. J. L. 402, Pittsburg v. Bank, 55 Pa. St. 49, Hubbard v. Supervisors, 23 Iowa, 144, and First National Bank of Albia v. Council, 86 Iowa, 37, 52 N. W. 336, all holding State may tax national bank only to extent actually permitted by congress; Talbott v. Silver Bow Co., 139 U. S. 440, 445, 35 L. 210, 212, 11 S. Ct. 595, 597, and Salt Lake, etc., Bank v. Golding, 2 Utah, 5, 7, holding similarly as to territories; City Bank v. City of Paducah, 2 Flipp, 66, F. C. 2,743, enjoining tax discriminating against national bank in taxing shares; Sapyllton v. Thaggard, 91 Fed. 95, State may not tax bank chartered by congress, except upon its real property; Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 156, 158, 29 L. 847, 6 S. Ct. 673, 674, State may not tax lands purchased by United States at delinquent tax sale and held under statute of United States; United States v. Weise, 2 Wall. Jr. 74, F. C. 16,659, State may not tax real estate owned by United States within its territory; In re Sheffield, 64 Fed. 835, nor patent rights; Grether v. Wright, 75 Fed. 753, 754, 43 U. S. App. 770, nor bonds of the District of Columbia; People v. Hoffman, 37 N. Y. 15, 16, nor bonds of United States; Wood v. Stockwell, 55 Me. 83, arguing by analogy State may not interfere with regulation of interstate commerce; Northern Pac. R. R. Co. v. Carland, 5 Mont. 188, 3 Pac. 156, holding State law taxing railway lands exempted from taxation by act of congress is void; Lin Sing v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 571, denying power of State to restrict immigration. Cited obiter in West River Bridge v. Dix, 6 How. 548, 12 L. 552, discussing impairment of obligation of contract by exercise of eminent domain; Day v. Buffinton, 3 Cliff. 388, F. C. 3,675, arguendo, congress may not tax salary of Federal judge as income; Railroad Tax Case, 8 Sawy. 250, 13 Fed. 732, discussing property rights under fourteenth amendment; Wood v. Drake, 70 Fed. 883, arguendo, Federal courts alone have jurisdiction of action against marshal for act done by him as such. Cited in thorough note on taxation of United States property, 33 Am. St. Rep. 402.

Distinguished in Passenger Cases, 7 How. 538, 12 L. 809, arguing State has power of taxation of all property within its limits not specially exempted; Thomson v. Union Pac. R. R. Co., 9 Wall. 589, 19 L. 798, holding State has power to tax railroad constructed by aid of congress under its postal and military powers; Union Pac. R. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. 34, 21 L. 792, and People v. Railroad Co., 43 Cal. 427, holding similarly; dissenting opinion, Pollock v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 157 U. S. 646 (39 L. 842, 15 S. Ct. 714, erroneously cite 8 Pet. 591), under facts.

Sovereignty of a State extends to everything which exists by its own authority or is introduced by its permission, p. 467.

Cited approvingly in Piqua Branch Bank v. Knoop, 16 How. 409, 14 L. 994, dissenting opinion, reviewing authorities and, arguendo,

State has power to increase tax on State bank over amount stipulated in charter; State v. Fullerton, 7 Rob. (La.) 216, State may tax passengers for benefit of charity hospital; Harrison v. Willis, 7 Heisk. 42, 19 Am. Rep. 608, holding State may tax litigation; Wheeling, etc., Transportation Co. v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 279, 25 L. 414, sustaining right of State to tax vessel as personal property at place of principal office of owner; State v. Charleston, 5 Rich. L. 570, State may exempt bank from taxation; Southern Express Co. v. Hood, 15 Rich. L. 75, 94 Am. Dec. 141, may tax express company in proportion to gross receipts; Battle v. Mobile, 9 Ala. 237, 44 Am. Dec. 440, State may tax coasting vessel owned by resident; Tonnage Tax Cases, 62 Pa. St. 298, 1 Am. Rep. 410, sustaining validity of State tax based on tonnage; Osborne v. Mobile, 44 Ala. 499, or railway whose business extends without its limits; Jones v. Page, 44 Ala. 658, or occupations; Burlington, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hayne, 19 Iowa, 139, or railroad lands, title to which is in railroad; Debolt v. Trust Co., 1 Ohio St. 584, 589, State legislature may not surrender power of State to tax; Campaign Co. Bank v. Smith, 7 Ohio St. 55, State may tax capital invested in its own bonds; Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 123, 20 L. 125, congress may not tax salary of State judicial officer; State v. Garton, 32 Ind. 4, 2 Am. Rep. 317, nor official bond of State officer; Webb v. Burlington, 28 Vt. 192, holding State may tax stocks of other States owned by resident; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 427, 73 Am. Dec. 370, and Schoolfield v. Lynchburg, 78 Va. 370, holding State may tax collateral inheritances. Cited casually in In re Strawbridge, 39 Ala. 387, 388, discussing authority of State to subject its citizens to military service; Norris v. Doniphan, 4 Met. (Ky.) 431, discussing relations of State and Federal government; Nashua Sav. Bank v. Nashua, 46 N. H. 404, dissenting opinion, arguing State may tax shares of stock in savings bank; Wills v. Allison, 4 Heisk. 392, discussing contracts to pay in particular kind of money.

Distinguished in State Tonnage Tax Cases, 12 Wall. 224, 20 L. 377, holding State has no authority to levy tax on vessels in proportion to tonnage; Manhattan Co. v. Blake, 148 U. S. 426, 37 L. 509, 13 S. Ct. 645, sustaining Federal tax falling indirectly upon deposits of State government in private bank; Sweatt v. Railroad Co., 3 Cliff. 352, F. C. 13,684, 5 Bank. Reg. 248, holding congress has power to enact that railroads created by a State shall be liable to the provisions of the bankruptcy act; Kirtland v. Hotchkiss, 42 Conn. 451, arguendo, State may not tax moneys of citizen loaned without its territory.

Taxation.—State law taxing stock of United States is unconstitutional, p. 469.

Affirmed in Bank of Commerce v. New York City, 2 Black, 629, 631, 633, 17 L. 454, 455, and Banks v. The Mayor, 7 Wall. 24, 19 L. 59. Approved in Van Allen v. The Assessors, 3 Wall. 591, 596, 18

L. 237, 239, and German-American Sav. Bank v. Burlington, 54 Iowa, 612, 7 N. W. 106, dissenting opinion, arguendo, State has no power to tax, indirectly, capital of national bank invested in United States bonds; Whitney v. Madison, 23 Ind. 337, and Bank of Kentucky v. Commonwealth, 9 Bush, 48, State has no power to tax United States bonds of national bank; Davis v. Rogers, 79 Mo. 289, 291, nor capital of State bank invested in United States bonds; Bressler v. Wayne Co., 25 Neb. 472, 41 N. W. 357, and Wasson v. National Bank, 107 Ind. 213, 8 N. E. 100, nor to discriminate against national bank in taxation; Opinion of the Justices, 53 N. H. 636, holding unconstitutional income tax on income from United States bonds; People v. Commissioners, 90 N. Y. 66, and Newark City Bank v. Assessor, 30 N. J. L. 16, 26, stocks and bonds of United States are exempt from taxation by the States; People v. Commissioners, 23 N. Y. 209, dissenting opinion, arguendo, rule as above. Cited obiter in Legal Tender Case, 110 U. S. 444, 28 L. 213, discussing power of congress "to borrow money on credit of United States," and in Pollock v. Farmers' Trust Co., 157 U. S. 581, 586, 591, 39 L. 819, 821, 823, 15 S. Ct. 689, 691, 693, and 158 U. S. 629, 39 L. 1123, 15 S. Ct. 917, discussing "direct taxation."

Distinguished in Society v. Coite, 6 Wall. 605, 18 L. 902, affirming Coite v. Society, 32 Conn. 184, 191, holding franchise tax estimated upon capital including that invested in United States bonds, is not unconstitutional; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 598, 33 L. 1029, 10 S. Ct. 594, holding similar, and approving principal case; Pollock v. Farmers' Trust Co., 157 U. S. 646 (39 L. 842, and 15 S. Ct. 714, erroneously cite 8 Pet. 591), and 158 U. S. 665, 691, 39 L. 1135, 1144, 15 S. Ct. 931, 941, dissenting opinions, remarking question of what constitutes direct tax not involved in principal case; People v. Bradley, 39 Ill. 142, State may tax shares of stock in national bank; Stetson v. Bangor, 56 Me. 278, holding similarly; People v. Commissioners, 23 N. Y. 205, holding State may tax capital invested in the public debt; State v. Tax Collector, 2 Bail. L. 682, 683, 686, sustaining State tax on dividends from shares in Bank of United States.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in Smith v. Pierce, 1 La. 356, and Pillsbury v. Dugan, 9 Ohio, 120, 34 Am. Dec. 429, without particular application; in Passenger Cases, 7 How. 534, 12 L. 807, discussing power of taxation by States.

2 Pet. 481, 7 L. 492, BANK OF UNITED STATES v. WEISIGER.

Nunc pro tunc orders.—Where party dies after submission of cause, decree will be entered as of a day prior to his death, p. 481.

Cited in note, Mitchell v. Overman, 103 U. S. 66, 26 L. 371, the case holding that decree entered as of a term previous to death of party cannot be impeached on the ground that it was actually rendered after his death; and in note to Young v. Ridenbaugh, 3 Dill. 245, F. C. 18,173, where discharge in bankruptcy was entered nunc pro tunc after death of bankrupt; Vroom v. Ditmas, 5 Paige, 529, allowing entry of decree on appeal nunc pro tunc; Estate of Jarrett, 42 Ohio St. 201, allowing entry of judgment nunc pro tunc upon death of party after trial.

Distinguished in Hazard v. Durant, 14 R. I. 35, holding judgment cannot be entered nunc pro tunc after death of party, unless the case has proceeded so far that it can be entered without further inquiry into matters of fact.

2 Pet. 482-491, 7 L. 493, MANDEVILLE v. RIGGS.

Equity practice.—Where a joint liability is asserted before a Court of Chancery, a decree will be made against all the parties before it who do not establish some personal discharge, p. 482.

Abatement.—Death of party who has been served with process, abates action until revived against his personal representatives, p. 487.

Cited in Carey v. Hoxey, 11 Ga. 651, holding, in general, no exception where parties are numerous; Walsh v. Smyth, 3 Bland, 22, holding representative of deceased party entitled to notice of motion to dissolve injunction; Requa v. Holmes, 16 N. Y. 199, holding void, proceedings in partition suit after death of party.

Parties.—Courts of equity will generally require all known parties within reach of its jurisdiction to be made parties, p. 487.

Cited in Howth v. Owen, 29 Fed. 725, holding all executors necessary parties in suit to settle trust.

Parties.—In suit in equity against stockholders of a voluntary association it is not necessary to bring them all before the court before a decree can be made, p. 487.

Cited in Suydam v. Truesdale, 6 McLean, 463, F. C. 13,656, refusing to permit amendment to answer in foreclosure suit bringing in parties of supposed adverse interest; American, etc., Co. v. Wire, etc., Union, 90 Fed. 606, quoting rule and collecting cases. Cited in Bryan v. Stevens, 4 Fed. Cas. 511, upon proposition that suits may be brought by some of the shareholders of voluntary association in behalf of all.

Parties.—Suits against stockholders, where they are numerous, need not be brought against all of them, p. 487.

Cited in Pettibone v. McGraw, 6 Mich. 445, applying rule.

Parties—Suits against stockholders.—When stockholders are sued on joint liability, it is error to dismiss as against those not served, if they could have been brought in by proper process, p. 489.

Service by publication may be made upon nonresidents in the District of Columbia under act of May 3, 1802, p. 489.

Cited in Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. 206, 16 L. 632, holding service by publication, according to the law of the jurisdiction, free from objection.

Appeal bond.—Objection to appeal for failure to execute proper bond should be taken by preliminary motion, p. 490.

Miscellaneous.—Referred to on subsequent appeal in same controversy in Mandeville v. Burt, 8 Pet. 258, 8 L. 937.

2 Pet. 492-526, 7 L. 496, BANK OF HAMILTON v. DUDLEY'S LESSEE.

Nunc pro tunc orders.—Quære whether a court of record can determine that an order was made at a previous term, no trace of which can be found on its records, and after repeal of the law authorizing the order, p. 522.

Cited in Ex parte Buskirk, 72 Fed. 21, 25 U. S. App. 613, on proposition that nunc pro tunc orders can only supply omissions in the record of what was actually done.

Estates of decedents.—Lands of intestate, though they descend to the heir, remain liable for the debts of the ancestor, and subject to be sold for those debts, p. 523.

Cited in M'Farlane v. Golling, 76 Fed. 25, 46 U. S. App. 141, stating rule ut supra, and holding personal estate must be exhausted before recourse to the realty; Leavens v. Butler, 8 Port. 390, stating rule and holding power of sale cannot be defeated by alienation; Emerson v. Ross, 17 Fla. 134, holding administrator's deed good as against prior unrecorded deed of intestate; McNamee v. Waterbury, 4 S. C. 166, applying rule. Cited, without particular application, in Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 552, 24 N. W. 164, arguing, estate of heirs becomes vested immediately on death of ancestor.

Repeal of statute authorizing sales of lands by administrator terminates proceedings commenced, but not concluded, p. 523.

Cited in Campau v. Gillett, 1 Mich. 420, 53 Am. Dec. 77, reviewing authorities and applying rule; Perry v. Clarkson, 16 Ohio, 573, applying rule. Cited on proposition that repeal of remedial statute terminates pending proceedings, in Grey v. Thomas, 11 Fed. Cas. 1; Aspley v. Murphy, 50 Fed. 377, 378; Musgrove v. Railroad Co., 50 Miss. 682. Cited in Jones v. Commonwealth, 86 Va. 664, 10 S. E. 1006, discussing generally effect of amendment of remedial statute. Cited, without particular application, in Scott v. Smart, 1 Mich. 301, discussing discontinuance at common law.

Executors and administrators.—Vested rights of administrators in decedent's realty are not impaired by the repeal of a law authorizing sale of real estate by administrators, p. 523.

Cited in State v. Dews, Charl. (Ga.) 426, discussing obiter, nature of office of administrator; McLure v. Melton, 24 S. C. 571, 58 Am. Rep. 279, holding statute changing priority of payment of debts of deceased impairs no vested rights. Cited, by way of illustration, in State v. Woody, 20 Mont. 418, 51 Pac. 976, arguing public administrator acquires no vested right to administer on estate as against his successors; Peters v. Caton, 6 Tex. 559, power of sale of administrator must be exercised strictly according to statute.

Constitutional law.—A State court has jurisdiction to determine whether a local statute conflicts with the State Constitution, and its decision will be followed by the Federal courts, p. 524.

Cited in State v. Weir, 2 Iowa, 283; Stewart v. Polk Co., 30 Iowa, 14, 1 Am. Rep. 242; Bailey v. Railroad Co., 4 Harr. (Del.) 403, 44 Am. Dec. 605, all holding statute should, if possible, be given such a construction as to render it constitutional; Beall v. Bealls, 8 Ga. 218, applying rule and collecting cases; Bank of St. Marys v. State, 12 Ga. 498, collecting cases and applying principle; State v. Kolsem, 130 Ind. 454, 29 N. E. 601, dissenting opinion, stating rule and collecting cases. Cited in Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 562, 12 L. 1198, dissenting opinion, arguendo, decision of State courts upon their own statutes are ordinarily conclusive; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 210, 17 L. 527, dissenting opinion, arguing similarly. Cited on proposition that rule of construction of State court construing its own statute is conclusive on Federal courts, in Provident Institution v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 630, 18 L. 913. Cited generally in Hamilton Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 641, 18 L. 907, Thompson v. Phillips, Bald. 275, 284, F. C. 13,974, and Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Blatchf. 204, 208, 48 Fed. 520, 523.

Cited also in Newmarket Bank v. Butler, 45 N. H. 237, holding by analogy, that State courts must follow Federal interpretations of the Constitution. Cited, without particular application, in State v. Auditor, 47 La. Ann. 1694, 18 So. 751, discussing right of judiciary to mandamus State officer.

Constitutional law.—Statute providing that occupying claimant shall not be evicted until paid the value of all lasting improvements made by him, is constitutional, p. 525.

Cited and rule applied in Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Blatchf. 204, 208, 48 Fed. 520, 523, sustaining Connecticut betterment act; and S. C., 48 Conn. 579, 583; Ross v. Irving, 14 Ill. 177, 179, 182, sustaining Illinois occupying claimants act; Armstrong v. Jackson, 1 Blackf. 376, n., sustaining Indiana occupying claimants act; Childs v.

Shower, 18 Iowa, 269, sustaining Iowa act and collecting cases. Cited also, Good v. Zarcher, 12 Ohio, 376, dissenting opinion, arguing retrospective law may be valid. Cited, without application of rule, in Tufts v. Tufts, 3 Wood. & M. 483, F. C. 14,233, discussing obiter, validity of occupying claimant laws.

Distinguished in McCoy v. Grandy, 3 Ohio St. 466, holding invalid an amendatory act giving option to occupying claimant to pay value of land instead of to owner.

Suits at common law.—Where law provides for compensation for improvements to be paid occupying claimants of lands, if the determination of the value is to be had in a court of common law, it must be by jury, p. 525.

Cited in Howe Co. v. Edwards, 15 Blatchf. 404, F. C. 6,784, holding power of reference confined to equity side of court.

Distinguished in Bonaparte v. Railroad Co., Bald. 222, F. C. 1,617, arguing condemnation proceeding is not a suit at common law; Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Guthrie, 173 U. S. 537, under facts.

Practice in Federal courts.—Federal courts will not adopt procedure adopted by State legislature, when it radically changes the ordinary procedure of United States courts, p. 526.

Cited and principle applied in McNutt v. Bland, 2 How. 17, 11 L. 162, holding statute of State regulating discharge of prisoners from State jails has no application to prisoners held on process from Federal courts.

Equity jurisdiction.—Where common-law side of Federal courts are unable to proceed in mode provided by State statute, resort may be had to equity side, p. 526.

Cited and rule applied in Leighton v. Young, 52 Fed. 443, 10 U. S. App. 298, 18 L. R. A. 271, enforcing occupying claimants law on equity side of court; Klever v. Seawall, 65 Fed. 396, 22 U. S. App. 715, enforcing partition law through chancery side of court. Cited in Burns v. Scott, 117 U. S. 588, 29 L. 993, 6 S. Ct. 868, holding equitable defense must be asserted in equity side of court. Cited, without particular application, in Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 410, discussing equitable jurisdiction over charities.

Statutes.—If any part of an act be unconstitutional, that part may be disregarded, and full effect given to the rest, p. 526.

The citations collect the following authorities on this proposition: State v. Marsh, 37 Ark. 361, applying rule and collecting cases, and People v. Bull, 46 N. Y. 69, People v. Green, 58 N. Y. 303, Little Miami R. R. Co. v. Commissioners, 31 Ohio St. 344, Barry v. Iseman, 14 Rich. L. 135, 91 Am. Dec. 264, Marsh v. State, 44 Tex. 80, and State v. Kibling, 63 Vt. 642, 22 Atl. 615, all applying rule; East Hartford v. Bridge Co., 17 Conn. 94, holding statute constitutional as to one town and unconstitutional as to another; Rison v. Farr, 24

Ark. 171, 87 Am. Dec. 59, sustaining in part and holding invalid in part, test oath act; The Barque Unadilla, 8 Ben. 480, F. C. 14,332, holding law may be constitutional in particular cases and unconstitutional in others; Mobile, etc., R. R. Co. v. State, 29 Ala. 584, courts will treat unconstitutional part as if stricken out of the statute, collecting cases; The Menominie, 36 Fed. 201, enforcing maritime lien given by State statute while holding unconstitutional portion of statute conferring right to enforce lien on State courts; Santo v. State, 2 Iowa, 208, 63 Am. Dec. 506, holding court will favor construction rendering entire act constitutional; Andrews v. Saucier, 13 La. Ann. 306, holding statute constitutional in part and void in part; Dale v. Governor, 3 Stew. 416, 419, dissenting opinion, stating rule ut supra; Campbell v. Bank, 6 How. (Miss.) 677, applying rule. Cited in Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 105, 41 L. 647, 17 S. Ct. 274, dissenting opinion, arguing dispensary law not invalidated by unconstitutionality of provisions requiring purchase of liquors from brewers and distillers within the State; Simpson v. Bank, 56 N. H. 469, 22 Am. Rep. 493, holding courts will not declare laws unconstitutional unless clearly so. Cited also, but without particular application of the rule, in Baker v. Biddle, Bald. 405, F. C. 764, discussing jurisdiction at law and in equity; Sadler v. Langham, 34 Ala. 334, holding unconstitutional a statute taking private property for nonpublic use; also in Lyman v. Martin, 2 Utah, 146.

Enjoining execution.—Equity will enjoin the execution of a judgment in ejectment until its own decree, estimating and directing payment for improvements by occupant, be complied with, p. 526.

Cited in Bonaparte v. Railroad Co., Bald. 227, F. C. 1,617, arguing, equity would enjoin enforcement of a law taking property for public use without due compensation.

Federal courts.—Inability of Federal courts to proceed in a mode provided by a State statute does not deprive a suitor of the benefit of rights of property conferred by the statute, p. 526.

Cited in Thompson v. Phillips, Bald. 275, F. C. 13,974, holding Federal court must determine rights of parties according to State statute, independently of whether it is able to carry statute into effect.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, without application, in Irwin v. Dixon, 9 How. 31, 13 L. 34. Cited erroneously in Noble v. Cullom, 44 Ala. 562.

2 Pet. 527-542, 7 L. 508, BANK OF UNITED STATES v. OWENS.

Usurious contracts.—A profit made or loss imposed upon the necessities of the borrower, whatever form, shape, or disguise it may assume, where the treaty is for a loan and the capital is to be returned at all events, is a profit taken upon the loan and a violation of those laws which limit the lender to a specified rate of interest, p. 537.

Cited and principle followed in Buttrick v. Harris, 1 Biss. 443, F. C. 2,256, Sherwood v. Roundtree, 32 Fed. 120, 122, Ely v. McClung, 4 Port. 136; Ferguson v. Sutphen, 3 Gilm. 567, collecting cases, Campion v. Kille, 14 N. J. Eq. 233, collecting cases, Dowdall v. Lenox, 2 Edw. Ch. 273, 274, and New York Life v. Beebe, 7 N. Y. 368, all affirming and directly applying the rule; Youngblood v. Savings Co., 95 Ala. 527, 36 Am. St. Rep. 250, 12 So. 581, 20 L. R. A. 61, and Hunt v. Acre, 28 Ala. 598, discounting note at illegal rate is usurious, collecting cases; Austin v. Harrington, 28 Vt. 133, holding contract usurious where borrower was required, as part consideration, to purchase a horse for more than his actual value; Clague v. Creditors, 2 La. 117, 20 Am. Dec. 303, holding contract usurious which required borrower to consign his crops to particular person, as well as pay full legal rate of interest; New Orleans Canal & Banking Co. v. Hagan, 1 La. Ann. 68, holding usurious a contract which exacted from borrower security for debt of third person in addition to the highest rate of interest allowed by law; Valentine v. Conner, 40 N. Y. 258, dissenting opinion, arguendo, compelling assumption by borrower of worthless debt renders loan usurious. Cited obiter in Broach v. Kelly, 71 Ga. 704, holding burden of proof on defendant to show contract usurious. Cited, without particular application, in McGill v. Ware, 4 Scam. 26, 29, discussing usurious contracts generally.

Distinguished in Bank of United States v. Waggener, 9 Pet. 403, 9 L. 173, holding quo animo is the gist of the transaction; Omaha Hotel Co. v. Wade, 97 U. S. 23, 24 L. 920, Hitchcock v. Bank, 7 Ala. 434, Wiley v. Starbuck, 44 Ind. 308, and Planters' Bank v. Snodgrass, 4 How. (Miss.) 623, 625, all holding similarly; Sutton v. Fletcher, 6 Blackf. 363, holding contract valid though, by mistake, usurious; Bank of Louisiana v. Briscoe, 3 La. Ann. 158, 159, holding courts will sustain contract if capable of construction which will free it from usury.

Usury.—A loan by a bank for a rate of interest in excess of that allowed by its charter is void, p. 538.

Cited and approved in Bank of Chillicothe v. Swayne, 8 Ohio, 289, 32 Am. Dec. 717, Preble Co. Bank v. Russell, 1 Ohio St. 320, Russell v. Failor, 1 Ohio St. 329, 59 Am. Dec. 632, and Kilbreth v. Bates, 38 Ohio St. 196, all following and applying rule; Rock River Bank v. Sherwood, 10 Wis. 237, 78 Am. Dec. 673, holding, where interest is charged in excess of that allowed by charter, general usury statute applies.

Words and phrases.—"Reserving interest" is the same as "taking interest," p. 538.

Cited approvingly in Bank v. Waggener, 9 Pet. 399, 400, 9 L. 171, construing same words similarly.

Usury.—A loan made in depreciated currency, to be repaid in coin, is usurious, pp. 538-539.

Cited in Weatherhead v. Boyer, 7 Yerg. 563, applying rule.

Usury.—A contract providing for a greater interest than that allowed by law, is usurious and void, pp. 538-540.

Cited approvingly in Tiffany v. Boatman's Institution, 18 Wall. 384, 21 L. 869, holding usurious contract void by general rules of law in absence of statute; In re Pittock, 2 Sawy. 421, F. C. 11,189, Dill v. Ellicott, Taney, 236, 237, F. C. 3,911, Market Bank v. Smith, 16 Fed. Cas. 758, Fowler v. Throckmorton, 6 Blackf. 328, Chapman v. Oregon, 5 Or. 435, and Watson v. Aiken, 55 Tex. 542, all directly following and applying rule; Atkinson v. Allen, 71 Fed. 59, 36 U. S. App. 255, and the defense may be set up at law without recourse to equity; Grand Gulf Bank v. Archer, 8 Smedes & M. 195, dissenting opinion, and Philadelphia Loan Co. v. Towner, 13 Conn. 268, dissenting opinion, arguendo, rule ut supra. Cited obiter in Tutts v. Tufts, 3 Wood. & M. 492, F. C. 14,233, discussing void and voidable contracts; Brower v. Insurance Co., 86 Fed. 751, holding usury regulated by place of performance; English v. Smock, 34 Ind. 132, discussing ultra vires contracts.

Distinguished in Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 149, 27 L. 684, 2 S. Ct. 412, holding usurious contract voidable; Cooper v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 733, 28 L. 1138, 5 S. Ct. 741, holding single contract does not constitute "transacting business," within meaning of statute forbidding foreign corporations from transacting business; McLean v. Lafayette Bank, 3 McLean, 614, F. C. 8,888, and Freeman v. Brittin, 17 N. J. L. 205, holding purchase of a complete bill at any price is not usurious; Orr v. Lacy, 4 McLean, 248, F. C. 10,589, holding similarly; Darby v. Savings Inst., 1 Dill. 149, F. C. 3,571, 4 Bank. Reg. 196, holding usurious contract void only as to excess; Lewis v. Clarendon, 5 Dill. 339, F. C. 8,320, holding municipal bonds bearing higher rate of interest than permitted by law, void only as to excess; National Exchange Bank v. Moore, 2 Bond, 177, F. C. 10,041, 1 Bank. Reg. 124, holding usurious contract void only as to excess; as also Philadelphia Loan Co. v. Towner, 13 Conn. 258; Mechanics', etc., Association v. Wilcox, 24 Conn. 157, Maynard v. Marshall, 91 Ga. 844, 18 S. E. 403, Phelps v. Pierson, 1 G. Greene, 127, Pfeister v. Building Assn., 19 W. Va. 721, Richards v. Marshman, 2 G. Greene, 220, Bandel v. Isaac, 13 Md. 219, 220, and Farmers', etc., Bank v. Harrison, 57 Mo. 508, and Perkins v. Watson, 2 Baxt. 181, 182, 186, all holding similarly; Evansville R. R. Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 414, holding usurious contracts valid for amount of principal; Commercial Bank v. Nolan, 7 How. (Miss.) 525, 527, and Waite v. Bartlett, 53 Mo. App. 382, holding similarly; Bard v. Poole, 12 N. Y. 501, and Bank of Louisville v. Young, 37 Mo. 407, holding usury controlled by law of place of performance.

Illegal contracts.— Courts of justice will not enforce a right or contract in violation of statute or public policy, though not expressly declared void by enactment, pp. 539-540.

The citations collect a number of cases involving and following this principle: Burbank v. Conrad, 96 U. S. 302, 24 L. 727, applying rule to contract forbidden by military proclamation in time of war; Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U. S. 412, 32 L. 985, 9 S. Ct. 558, to contract for rendering illegal services in effecting contract in restraint of trade; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 426, 36 L. 762, 12 S. Ct. 886, to contract in violation of liquor law; In re Comstock, 3 Sawy. 224, F. C. 3,078, 11 Bank. Reg. 175, contract of foreign corporation which had neglected to file required certificate; Buckner v. Street, 1 Dill. 253, F. C. 2,098, 7 Bank. Reg. 260, to contract for purchase and sale of slaves; Green v. Collins, 3 Cliff. 500, F. C. 5,755, to contract in fraud of liquor laws of another State; Thomas v. Railway Co., 1 McCrary, 397, 2 Fed. 881, to contract between railway company and construction company in violation of public policy; Western Union v. Union Pacific, 1 McCrary, 428, 3 Fed. 10, to contract between telegraph and railway company in violation of public policy; Central Brauch v. Western Union, 1 McCrary, 555, 3 Fed. 420, to ultra vires contract of railway company; Cook v. Sherman, 4 McCrary, 25, 20 Fed. 169, to contract of railway company to buy lands and locate railroad near them; Kohn v. Melcher, 43 Fed. 644, 10 L. R. A. 441, to contract aiding violation of liquor law; Church v. Proctor, 66 Fed. 244, 33 U. S. App. 1, to contract whose purpose is to defraud the public; Chadwick v. Improvement Co., 74 Fed. 618, 41 U. S. App. 39, to acknowledgment by notary public in violation of statute; In re Comstock, 3 Sawy. 224, F. C. 3,078, refusing to enforce contract executed by corporation before compliance with State laws; Hyer v. Richmond Traction Co., 80 Fed. 845, holding void, as against public policy, an agreement between corporations to combine to prevent competition; Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 271, to pawnbroker's contract in violation of penal statute; El Dorado Co. v. Davison, 30 Cal. 524, applying rule to illegal grant by board of supervisors of right to collect tolls on public highway; Penn v. Bornmanu, 102 Ill. 530, 535, to loan by bank to director, reviewing cases; Dolson v. Hope, 7 Kan. 165, to liquor sale in violation of statute; Sandidge v. Sandersou, 21 La. Ann. 766, dissenting opinion, to sale of slaves in violation of State law; Williams v. Bank, 71 Miss. 866, 867, 42 Am. St. Rep. 506, 507, 16 So. 240, to corporate contract, void for noncompliance with statute; Brooks v. Hill, 1 Mich. 127, and State v. How, 1 Mich. 515, to contract of banking company illegally organized; Sprague v. Rooney, 104 Mo. 358, 16 S. W. 508, to contract shown to be in fact lease of premises for purposes of bawdy-house; Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 287, dissenting opinion, to contract made in one State in contemplation of violation of statute of another; Pennington v. Townsend, 7 Wend. 281, and De Groot v. Van Duzer, 20 Wend. 400, to contract of foreign bank transacting business in violation of State law; Fowler v. Scully, 72 Pa. St. 466, 13 Am. Rep. 708, to ultra vires contract of national bank; McConnell v. Kitchens, 20 S. C. 439, 47 Am. Rep. 851, applying rule to sale of fertilizer where regulating statute had not been complied with; Ohio Life Co. v. Merchants' Co., 11 Humph. 11, 53 Am. Dec. 750, to contracts of company transacting exchange business in violation of statute; Clarke v. Lumber Co., 59 Wis. 658, 18 N. W. 494, to contract to issue corporate stock at less than par, collecting cases collected with other cases in notes on actions on illegal contracts, 8 Am. Dec. 692, and 25 Am. Rep. 676, and on illegal contracts generally, in 59 Am. St. Rep. 639.

Distinguished in Stewart v. Bank, 2 Abb. (U. S.) 431, 432, F. C. 13,435, holding equity will not interfere when illegal contract has been executed; Pullman Co. v. Central Transportation Co., 65 Fed. 161, holding equity will compel restitution of property by one repudiating illegal contract; The Charles E. Wiswall, 86 Fed. 673, 57 U. S. App. 183, 42 L. R. A. 86, where contract for services is void for violation of law against combinations to raise prices, recovery may be had on quantum meruit; Hough v. Land Co., 73 Ill. 27, 24 Am. Rep. 233, holding grantor of land to corporation estopped to claim that it has no power to take except for particular purpose; Kerwin v. Doran, 29 Mo. App. 406, holding contract not void by comity where made for purpose of violation of laws of sister State, collecting cases; Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 229, enforcing contract of sale valid in State where executed, although made in contemplation of violation of statute of State where enforced.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in Lyman v. Martin, 2 Utah, 146 (should be Bank v. Dudley, ante). Cited generally in State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 398, 40 Pac. 684, discussing certification of questions for decision of Supreme Court.

2 Pet. 543-553, 7 L. 513, BANK OF UNITED STATES v. CARNEAL.

Puis darrein continuance is pleaded by way of substitution for former plea on which no proceeding is afterwards had, p. 548.

Cited in Wisdom v. Williams, Hemp. 460, F. C. 17,904, applying rule.

Bills and notes.—Possession of funds of maker of note by bank to whom note is payable on date when due, is matter of defense in suit on the note, p. 449.

Cited and followed in Central Bank v. Allen, 16 Me. 44, applying rule.

Bills and notes.—Notice of dishonor may be given by notary public, p. 549.

Cited on this point in Crocker v. Getchell, 23 Me. 397.

Bills and notes.—Where a bank is the holder of a note payable at the bank on a certain day, failure of the maker to pay within usual banking hours is equivalent to demand and refusal of payment, p. 549.

Cited and followed in Allen v. Smith, 4 Harr. (Del.) 237, Thomas v. Marsh, 2 La. Ann. 354, Goodloe v. Godley, 13 Smedes & M. 240, 51 Am. Dec. 162, Gillett v. Averill, 5 Den. 88, Apperson v. Bank, 4 Cold. 456, all affirming and applying rule; Bank of Syracuse v. Hollister, 17 N. Y. 50, 72 Am. Dec. 419, holding demand sufficient when bank afterwards delivered note to cashier, who was also a notary, and who, as notary, made demand on himself as cashier; Hoffman v. Hollingsworth, 10 Ind. App. 358, 37 N. E. 962, holding where note is payable at bank it is sufficient demand if note be at bank on day when payable and someone there authorized to receive payment; Hallowell v. Curry, 41 Pa. St. 326, reviewing authorities, and State Bank v. Napier, 6 Humph. 273, 274, 44 Am. Dec. 311, 312, both holding similarly; Exchange Bank v. Bank of North America, 132 Mass. 148, holding note is not dishonored until expiration of banking hours.

Distinguished in Chicopee Bank v. Philadelphia Bank, 8 Wall. 649, 19 L. 425, holding no presentment when note was sent to bank but letter mislaid and not opened; Barkalow v. Johnson, 16 N. J. L. 402, holding where note is at bank demand must nevertheless be made at the counter; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Henninger, 105 Pa. St. 503, holding no recovery can be had against indorser if maker of note had funds in bank sufficient to meet it when due.

Trial.—Instruction to jury, as in case of nonsuit, should only be given when there is no contrariety in the evidence, p. 551.

Cited in Perry v. Clarke, 5 How. (Miss.) 500, holding where plaintiff has failed to make out his case and there is no conflicting testimony, the court may instruct jury to find for defendant.

Bills and notes.—Due diligence in giving notice of dishonor depends in general upon the particular facts of each case, p. 551.

Cited in Dickins v. Beal, 10 Pet. 582, 9 L. 542, holding that where due diligence has been used to give notice it becomes immaterial whether notice was actually received, collecting authorities; Reier v. Strauss, 54 Md. 290, 39 Am. Rep. 392, holding where indorser formerly resided at place of dishonor, and continued to keep his name in city directory and sign at his place of business, notary was justified in treating him as still a resident of that place at time of dishonor.

Bills and notes.—Notice of dishonor may sometimes be addressed to the county in which the indorser resides, p. 552.

Cited in Harris v. Robinson, 4 How. 348, 11 L. 1006, applying rule.

Bills and notes.—Notice of dishonor is sufficient if in spite of the address being too general it is in fact to the proper post-office, p. 552.

Bills and notes.—Notice of dishonor is sufficient if sent to the only address within reach of the person sending, after due inquiry, p. 552.

Cited in Cabot Bank v. Russell, 4 Gray, 169, holding notice good where sent to "Hadley" after inquiry by the notary, although in fact indorser lived at "North Hadley;" Manchester Bank v. White, 30 N. H. 463, where indorser lived at "South Deerfield" and notice was sent to "Deerfield;" Central Nat. Bank v. Adams, 11 S. C. 456, 32 Am. Rep. 499, where notice was mailed to "Adams Cut," there being no such post-office; Bank of Manchester v. Slason, 13 Vt. 340, notice may be sent to any post-office in town where party resides notwithstanding there is another in the same town nearer his residence.

Bills and notes.—Notice of dishonor may be sent to any post-office near the residence of the person to be notified, at which he is in the habit of receiving letters, p. 552.

Cited in the following: Hazelton Coal Co. v. Ryerson, 20 N. J. L. 132, 40 Am. Dec. 218, McGrew v. Toulmin, 2 Stew. & P. 434, Timms v. Delisle, 5 Blackf. 448, Sharpe v. Drew, 9 Ind. 283, collecting cases, New Orleans, etc., R. R. Co. v. Robert, 9 Rob. (La.) 132, Follain v. Dupré, 11 Rob. (La.) 473, Hepburn v. Ratcliffe, 2 La. Ann. 332, Bank of Louisiana v. Tournillun, 9 La. Ann. 134, Graham v. Sangston, 1 Md. 70, Shelburne Falls Nat. Bank v. Townsley, 102 Mass. 181, 3 Am. Rep. 449, and Wachusett Nat. Bank v. Fairbrother, 148 Mass. 185, 12 Am. St. Rep. 533, 19 N. E. 347, all applying rule; in Bondurant v. Everett, 1 Met. (Ky.) 660, 661, applying rule where party lived near the place of dishonor and the post-office of that place was where he usually received his letters; New Orleans Canal and Banking Co. v. Barrow, 2 La. Ann. 326, Bird v. McCalop, 2 La. Ann. 352, Hogatt v. Bingaman, 7 How. (Miss.) 578, dissenting opinion, and Foster v. Sineath, 2 Rich. L. 343, all holding similarly; Chouteau v. Webster, 6 Met. 7, 39 Am. Dec. 707, notice may be sent to United States senator at Washington; Walker v. Stetson, 14 Ohio St. 97, 84 Am. Dec. 365, holding notice may be sent to place where party usually receives his mail, though it be not the place of his residence; Payne v. Patrick, 21 Tex. 687, and Westfall v. Farwell, 13 Wis. 506, holding similarly.

Bills and notes.—Notice of dishonor need not state that holder looks to indorser for payment, p. 553.

Cited in Nelson v. National Bank, 69 Fed. 801, 32 U. S. App. 554, Corbit v. Bank, 2 Harr. (Del.) 263, 30 Am. Dec. 648, Spann v. Baltzell, 1 Fla. 324, 46 Am. Dec. 363, May v. Bank, 9 Ind. 234, Barstow

v. Hiriart, 6 La. Ann. 99, Warren v. Gilman, 17 Me. 365, Graham v. Sangston, 1 Md. 68, Fitchburg Ins. Co. v. Davis, 121 Mass. 123, Burgess v. Vreeland, 24 N. J. L. 76, 59 Am. Dec. 411, Ransom v. Mack, 2 Hill, 593, 38 Am. Dec. 605, Townsend v. Bank, 2 Ohio St. 355, all affirming and applying rule, and cited as to contracts of notice of dishonor in note, 2 Am. Dec. 619.

Distinguished in Gilbert v. Dennis, 3 Met. 498, 505, 38 Am. Dec. 330, 337, holding notice of nonpayment insufficient where no dishonor implied.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, without particular application, in Saltmarsh v. Tuthill, 13 Ala. 401, holding construction of written notice is question for the court, collecting cases; Rowell v. Bruce, 5 N. H. 385, to point that where promise is to pay money on demand at a particular place, demand is necessary before assumpsit. Cited erroneously in Stow v. Parks, 2 Pinn. 129.

2 Pet. 554-555, 7 L. 517, CANTER v. AMERICAN, ETC., INSURANCE CO.

Motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction applies solely to cases where the Supreme Court has not jurisdiction of the cause, and not to cases where the Circuit Court has exceeded its proper powers in the particular case, p. 555.

Cited in Nashua Co. v. Boston Co., 51 Fed. 930, 5 U. S. App. 97, holding same rule in Circuit Court of Appeals.

2 Pet. 556-565, 7 L. 518, CONNOLLY v. TAYLOR.

Federal courts — Diverse citizenship.— In a suit brought by aliens and a citizen against citizens, the Federal court can acquire jurisdiction by striking out the citizen as party plaintiff, and making him a party defendant, p. 565.

Followed on precise point in Insurance Co. of North America v. Svendsen, 74 Fed. 348, 349. Cited and rule applied in Betzoldt v. American Ins. Co., 47 Fed. 707, holding plaintiff may amend declaration to correct false allegation of citizenship; Excelsior Pebble Phosphate Co. v. Brown, 74 Fed. 325, and Stuart v. Easton, 156 U. S. 47, 39 L. 341, 15 S. Ct. 268, where judgment is reversed for defective statement of citizenship, defect may be corrected by amendment in court below, collecting cases; Vattier v. Hinde, 7 Pet. 261, 8 L. 679, where court acquired jurisdiction by dismissing the bill as to a citizen defendant, thereby leaving the action between citizens of different States; Hall v. Mobley, 13 Ga. 319, In re McKibben, 16 Fed. Cas. 212, 12 Bank. Reg. 102, Woolridge v. McKenna, 8 Fed. 679, and Glover v. Shepperd, 11 Biss. 579, 15 Fed. 838, all holding record may in general be amended to show jurisdictional facts.

Federal court jurisdiction on the ground of diverse citizenship depends upon the state of the parties at the commencement of the suit, p. 565.

Affirmed upon this point in Anderson v. Watt, 138 U. S. 703, 34 L. 1081, 11 S. Ct. 451, Brigel v. Salt Co., 73 Fed. 14, 15, and Tug River Salt Co. v. Brigel, 86 Fed. 820; also in Laskey v. Mining Co., 56 Fed. 629, holding amended declaration must allege citizenship as of date of commencement of action; Stout v. Railroad Co., 3 McCrary, 4, 8 Fed. 796, it is the state of facts when suit commenced, not when process served; Gilmer v. Grand Rapids, 16 Fed. 710, nor when cause of action accrued; Trigg v. Conway, Hemp. 712, F. C. 14,173, and United States v. Myers, 2 Brock. 522, F. C. 15,844, where jurisdiction once attaches no subsequent change in the residence of the parties can divest it; Moore v. Edgefield, 32 Fed. 500, holding jurisdictional amount determined by law at day of commencing suit; Ex parte Kyle, 67 Fed. 309, applying rule to criminal prosecution; Florence Sewing Machine Co. v. Grover & Baker Co., 110 Mass. 81, affirmed in Case of Sewing Machine Companies, 18 Wall. 574, 21 L. 918, upon proposition that where interest of parties is joint it is necessary to give the Federal court jurisdiction that each distinct interest should be represented by persons, all of whom are entitled to sue or be sued in the Federal courts; Calderwood v. Braly, 28 Cal. 99, holding similarly; and cited in note, 12 Am. Rep. 545.

Distinguished in Anderson v. Watt, 138 U. S. 707, 34 L. 1083, 11 S. Ct. 452, holding that where citizenship of necessary party at time of commencement of action was such as to prevent Federal court from acquiring jurisdiction, subsequent change of parties cannot give jurisdiction; Pond v. Railroad Co., 12 Blatchf. 290, F. C. 11,265, holding Federal court has jurisdiction of suit by stockholders, citizens of one State against board of directors, some of whom are citizens of same State with plaintiffs; Wood v. Mann, 1 Sumn. 584, F. C. 17,952, holding exception to jurisdiction by denial of citizenship must be taken by plea in abatement.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, without particular application, in Fisher v. Rutherford, 1 Bald. 193, F. C. 4,823, discussing amendment of bill in equity by addition of parties. Cited erroneously in Thompson v. Phillips, 1 Bald. 284, F. C. 13,974.

2 Pet. 566-585, 7 L. 521, BEATTY v. KURTZ.

Dedication — Charitable uses.—Where lands have been set apart in original plat of town for a public or pious purpose and afterwards used and acted upon according to that purpose, it is a valid dedication to the public, pp. 583-584.

Cited and principle followed in Wyandotte Co. v. Presbyterian Church, 30 Kan. 638, 641, 1 Pac. 113, 115, holding reservation of lands in plat "for church purposes" a valid dedication to the use of any church establishing its right to be regarded as the beneficiary intended; Cemetery Assn. v. Bandy, 93 Ind. 248; Lay v. State, 12 Ind. App. 370, 39 N. E. 770, and Williams v. Wiley, 16 Ind. 363, dedication may be implied from acts of grantor; Hayes v. Houke, 45

Kan. 469, 25 Pac. 861, holding similarly; State v. Trask, 6 Vt. 364, 27 Am. Dec. 556, sustaining dedication for purpose of courthouse; Parisa v. Dallas, 83 Tex. 258, 18 S. W. 570, and Baton Rouge v. Bird, 21 La. Ann. 246, to support a dedication to public purposes no particular form of grant is necessary; Lamar Co. v. Clements, 49 Tex. 355; Carter v. Portland, 4 Or. 347, and Board of Supervisors, etc. v. Seal, 66 Miss. 134, 14 Am. St. Rep. 547, 5 So. 623, 3 L. R. A. 660, public street dedicated by filing map and public user; Trustees v. Council, 33 N. J. L. 17, 97 Am. Dec. 699, holding public square dedicated by filing plat and acquiescence by the owners; Brown v. Manning, 6 Ohio, 303, 305, 27 Am. Dec. 256, 257, holding similarly; Colbert v. Shepherd, 89 Va. 404, 16 S. E. 247, holding use of lot with consent of owner for burial purposes amounts to dedication; Bond v. Texas, etc., Ry. Co., 15 Tex. Civ. App. 286, 39 S. W. 980, holding sale of lot in tract showing street, conveys easement in street.

Distinguished in Attorney-General v. Manufacturing Co., 14 Gray, 605, holding intention to dedicate to religious purposes must be clear; Price v. Methodist Church, 4 Ohio, 544, holding words of grant must control.

Dedication — Charitable uses.—To support a grant to religious or public uses it is not necessary that there should be a particular grantee, p. 584.

Cited and principle followed in Williams v. Presbyterian Soc., 1 Ohio St. 500, and Hadden v. Chorn, 8 B. Mon. 78, applying rule to dedication for purposes of church; Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. 436, 8 L. 455, collecting cases and sustaining dedication for purposes of a public common; Carter v. Balfour, 19 Ala. 828, reviewing authorities and holding bequest for charitable purposes valid where devisee was unincorporated; Chatham v. Brainerd, 11 Conn. 88, holding valid a grant for cemetery purposes, notwithstanding grantee was unincorporated association; Antones v. Eslava, 9 Port. 539, 544, stating rule ut supra; Trustees v. Adams, 4 Or. 87, 89, grant to unincorporated religious association takes effect on incorporation; Bartlett v. Nye, 4 Met. 380; Burr v. Smith, 7 Vt. 285, 303, 29 Am. Dec. 166, 184, and Bible Society v. Wetmore, 17 Conn. 188, devise to charitable use is valid though devisee is unincorporated at time of devise; Ould v. Washington Hospital, 95 U. S. 313, 24 L. 452, devise for charitable purposes to corporation to be afterwards created, is valid; Miller v. Chittenden, 2 Iowa, 373, or conveyance to church to be afterwards organized; Newmarket v. Smart, 45 N. H. 99, applying rule ut supra; Potter v. Chapin, 6 Paige, 650, schoolhouse a public use within rule; Sewall v. Cargill, 15 Me. 420, sustaining dedication for parsonage purposes; Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 168, 27 L. 399, 2 S. Ct. 331, collecting cases, and holding grant to trustee for charitable uses valid although the institution for whose benefit grant is made be not established in lifetime of either donor or trustee; Baptist Church v.

Witherell, 3 Paige, 300, 24 Am. Dec. 225, holding title to lands granted to unincorporated religious society vests upon incorporation in the corporation; Green v. Allen, 5 Humph. 217, 218, 229, dissenting opinion, arguendo, devise to unincorporated religious society creates trust for which equity will appoint trustee if necessary; Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 314, 315, 18 S. W. 876, 877, 15 L. R. A. 804, and n., deed to unincorporated religious society is valid; Atkinson v. Bell, 18 Tex. 480, dedication to unincorporated religious association is valid; San Antonio v. Odln, 15 Tex. 545, discussing certainty in legislative grant for religious purposes. Cited obiter in Irwin v. Dixon, 9 How. 31, 13 L. , remarking dedication may be by parol; Kittle v. Pfeiffer, 22 Cal. 489, discussing dedication of public streets; Wardens, etc. v. Savannah, 82 Ga. 665, 9 S. E. 540, discussing succession of cemetery lands in subsequent religious corporation; Jersey City v. Banking Co., 12 N. J. Eq. 562, holding dedication may be made to take effect in futuro; Church v. Leiber, 2 Paige, 44, and African Church v. Conover, 27 N. J. Eq. 160, sustaining contract with organizers of church made before its incorporation; Pearsall v. Post, 20 Wend. 118, discussing validity of grants for charitable purposes where there is no grantee in esse, collecting cases; Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. 438, 446, 454, 455, holding public cannot acquire easement by user in absence of dedication. Cited in series of notes on dedication to public uses, 27 Am. Dec. 562, 567.

Distinguished in Vick v. Vicksburg, 1 How. (Miss.) 430, 31 Am. Dec. 171, holding there can be no valid dedication unless the public be a party thereto.

Charitable uses.—Grants to pious uses may at all times be enforced through the government as parens patriæ, by its attorney-general or other law officer, p. 584.

Cited in Mormon Church v. United States, 136 U. S. 52, 34 L. 494, 10 S. Ct. 806, holding that where church has been dissolved its property devolves to the government as parens patriæ, subject to disposal according to rules as to property devoted to pious uses; Loring v. Marsh, 2 Cliff. 492, F. C. 8,515, holding prerogative power as parens patriæ resides in the States and not in the Federal government. Cited obiter in Tappan v. Deblois, 45 Me. 130, discussing enforcement of charitable bequests in equity.

Distinguished in Fountain v. Ravanel, 17 How. 384, 15 L. 86, holding United States courts have no power to give effect to charitable devises where manner of execution directed by testator cannot be complied with.

Public uses.—A grant to a religious society of lands afterwards used for burial purposes, is a grant to pious uses, p. 584.

Cited in Hopkins v. Grimshaw, 165 U. S. 352, 41 L. 742, 17 S. Ct. 405, on this point; Forney v. Calhoun Co., 84 Ala. 221, 4 So. 154, holding dedication for courthouse purposes a public use; Macon v.

Franklin, 12 Ga. 244, a dedication for purposes of common; Hunter v. Trustees, 6 Hill, 411, and Mowry v. Providence, 10 R. I. 55, a public burying ground; Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 414, 433, 446, holding gift to religious society for relief of poor members a valid, charitable use; Gass v. Wilhite, 2 Dana, 182, 26 Am. Dec. 457, holding pious purposes are charitable purposes under law of United States. Cited, without particular application, in Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 30, 59 Am. Rep. 647, holding dedication of lands for cemetery purposes may not be revoked; and cited in note collecting cases on what are charitable uses, 63 Am. St. Rep. 265.

Parties.—A regularly appointed committee of a voluntary religious society may sue for injunction to prevent disturbance of society's possession of lands in its actual possession for religious purposes, p. 584.

Cited, approved and followed in Dwenger v. Geary, 113 Ind. 121, 14 N. E. 911, bishop and priest may sue to prevent violation of burial rules in cemetery; Cahill v. Bigger, 8 B. Mon. 213, holding officers of church may sue in equity to be quieted in enjoyment of grant for religious purposes; Guilfoil v. Arthur, 158 Ill. 605, 606, 41 N. E. 1010, 1011, committee of unincorporated society may sue in equity to enforce a trust; Congregation, etc., Church v. Texas, etc., Ry. Co., 41 Fed. 567, holding reincorporated religious society may sue for breach of condition committed previous to reincorporation; Reformed Church v. Trustees, 4 N. J. Eq. 100, where church organization consists of several incorporated bodies, any one of the corporations may sue to enforce a common trust.

Parties.—Some of the members of a voluntary religious society, having a common interest, may sue on behalf of all for purposes common to themselves and beneficial to all, p. 585.

Cited and followed in Callsen v. Hope, 75 Fed. 760, in suit by members of religious society to enjoin exercise of possessory rights over property claimed by association; Mears v. Moulton, 30 Md. 146, stating rule generally that members of voluntary associations are entitled to sue to protect their common interests; Mannix v. Purcell, 46 Ohio St. 141, 15 Am. St. Rep. 574, 19 N. E. 587, they may defend in actions against the association.

Distinguished in Antones v. Eslava, 9 Port. 544, 546, holding there must be proof that plaintiffs are trustees or members of the association before their right to sue will be presumed; Whitney v. Mayo, 15 Ill. 255, other members must be made parties, unless it is alleged that the suit is brought on their behalf.

Nuisance.—Interference with public burying ground is a public nuisance which a court of equity may enjoin, p. 585.

The citations collect the following cases, affirming and following this rule: Trustees v. Walsh, 57 Ill. 366, 11 Am. Rep. 23, and Boyce v. Kalbaugh, 47 Md. 336, 28 Am. Rep. 465, following rule on precise point; Davidson v. Reed, 111 Ill. 171, 53 Am. Rep. 616, such relief may be sought in action by residents in neighborhood of cemetery, having friends buried there, brought on behalf of all others interested; Burke v. Wall, 29 La. Ann. 45, 49, 29 Am. Rep. 321, 326, owner of cemetery lot may enjoin interference with his enjoyment thereof; Pierce v. Cemetery, 10 R. I. 242, 14 Am. Rep. 680, equity will regulate trust of cemetery authorities created by burial of body in cemetery; Trustees v. Hoessli, 13 Wis. 355, and Gilbert v. Arnold, 30 Md. 38, equity will enjoin interference with religious meeting-house; Mannix v. Purcell, 46 Ohio St. 144, 15 Am. St. Rep. 576, 19 N. E. 588, 2 L. R. A. 762, may prevent interference with religious trusts. Cited obiter in Jones v. Brandon, 60 Miss. 561, holding injunction will lie to prevent execution of writ of ejectment from city lot until true boundaries are ascertained; Mitchell v. Thorne, 134 N. Y. 539, 30 Am. St. Rep. 702, 32 N. E. 11, holding injunction to enjoin interference with private burial ground must be brought by heir of person buried therein; and cited in note on injunction to permit trespasses destructive of the estate, 11 Am. Dec. 504, and in note on injunction to prevent interference with cemeteries, 21 Am. Rep. 647.

Distinguished in Page v. Symonds, 63 N. H. 20, 56 Am. Rep. 484, holding removal of bodies from one cemetery to another by lawfully acting town authorities is not such interference with property rights as to authorize injunction.

2 Pet. 586-594, 7 L. 528, BUCKNER v. FINLEY.

Bill of exchange drawn in one State on person living within another, is a foreign bill, p. 590.

Cited, principle affirmed and rule applied in the following, all holding, therefore, that protest is per se evidence to prove dishonor of instrument: Dickins v. Beal, 10 Pet. 579, 9 L. 541; Jones v. Heaton, 1 McLean, 318, F. C. 7,468; Doughty v. Hildt, 1 McLean, 336, F. C. 4,027; Nelson v. Bank, 69 Fed. 800, 32 U. S. App. 554; Joseph v. Salomon, 19 Fla. 632; State Bank v. Hayes, 3 Ind. 400; Bernard v. Barry, 1 G. Greene, 390; Chenowith v. Chamberlin, 6 B. Mon. 61, 43 Am. Dec. 146; Greene v. Jackson, 15 Me. 138; Clark v. Bigelow, 16 Me. 247; Freeman's Bank v. Perkins, 18 Me. 294; Phoenix Bank v. Hussey, 12 Pick. 484; Ocean Nat. Bank v. Williams, 102 Mass. 143; Linville v. Welch, 29 Mo. 205; Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. 566; Grafton Bank v. Moore, 14 N. H. 148, as to Boston bill; Simpson v. White, 40 N. H. 543; Wells v. Whitehead, 15 Wend. 530; Halliday v. McDougall, 20 Wend. 84, 22 Wend. 272; Commercial Bank v. Varnum, 49 N. Y. 275; Case v. Heffner, 10 Ohio, 186; Gardner v. Bank of Tennessee, 1 Swan, 422, and Terbell v. Downer, 27 Vt. 511, 65 Am. Dec. 213. Cited also in Bank of United States v. Daniel, 12 Pet. 54, 55, 9 L. 998, holding consequently holder entitled to re-exchange when protest for nonpayment made. Cited in notes to Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. 179, 7 L. 389, and Lonsdale v. Brown, 4 Wash. 158, F. C. 8,494, question was discussed but not decided; Allen v. Merchants' Bank, 22 Wend. 226, 34 Am. Dec. 292, and Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Pendleton, 112 U. S. 706, 28 L. 869, 5 S. Ct. 318, holding protest necessary in case of such a bill; Williams v. Putnam, 14 N. H. 541, 40 Am. Dec. 205, and Howard v. Bank, 3 Ga. 381, holding note drawn in one State and payable in another, equivalent to a foreign bill; Mason v. Dousay, 35 Ill. 431, 85 Am. Dec. 368, holding foreign bill governed by law of State of acceptance. Cited in note on foreign bills within rule, 4 Am. Dec. 374, and in exhaustive note on bills drawn in one State on resident of another, 43 Am. Dec. 218.

Constitutional law.—With respect to their municipal relations, the States are to each other foreign, p. 591.

Jackson v. Bulloch, 12 Conn. 41, holding State not bound by comity to permit holding as slave of person held as such under laws of sister State; Hatch v. Spofford, 22 Conn. 497, 498, 58 Am. Dec. 436, Seevers v. Clement, 28 Md. 434, Smith v. Lathrop, 44 Pa. St. 330, 84 Am. Dec. 450, and Insurance Co. v. Brune, 96 U. S. 592, 24 L. 740, all holding plea of suit pending in another State bad, the suit being in a foreign jurisdiction; Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 459, 34 L. 1063, 11 S. Ct. 376, and Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 4, 29 L. 537, 6 S. Ct. 244, holding judgments in one State foreign judgments when proved in the courts of another; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. 400, and Woodhull v. Wagner, Bald. 299, F. C. 17,975, holding insolvency laws of one State have no effect in another. Cited in Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 47, 56, 67, 8 L. 41, 45, dissenting opinions, arguendo, Indian nations are foreign; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 605, 10 L. 316, dissenting opinion, arguendo, State not bound by comity to permit foreign corporation to contract within it; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 720, 9 L. 1259, holding United States Supreme Court has jurisdiction of suit between States to determine disputed boundary; Scheible v. Bacho, 41 Ala. 448, dissenting opinion, arguing States within their boundaries sovereign. Cited obiter in Phillips v. Payne, 92 U. S. 132, 23 L. 649, discussing validity of retrocession of part of District of Columbia to Virginia; State v. Tutty, 41 Fed. 762, 7 L. R. A. 54, validity of foreign marriage; Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 105, 52 Am. St. Rep. 273, 34 Atl. 715, 32 L. R. A. 239 & n., foreign judgments; Rising Sun Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 20 Ind. 525, holding corporation organized under one State only recognized in another as matter of comity. Cited in note on effect of lis pendens in sister State, 25 Am. Dec. 195; Allshouse v. Ramsay, 6 Whart. 334, 37 Am. Dec. 418, holding debtor is not obliged to go out of State in which contract is made to make tender to his creditor. Cited generally, The Parkhill, 18 Fed. Cas. 1188.

Distinguished in Bradshaw v. The Sylph, 3 Fed. Cas. 1178, holding vessels not foreign in any American port independent of State of owner's domicile.

2 Pet. 595-612, 7 L. 531, ENGLISH v. FOXALL.

Marriage settlement providing that funds are to be called in and reinvested with approval of the wife, gives her a controlling agency, p. 607.

Cited in note on marriage settlements, in 50 Am. Dec. 371, collecting cases.

Marriage settlement.—Where settlement provided for investment of funds in certain securities only, trustees are bound to invest in those securities alone, p. 608.

Cited in Swift v. Castle, 23 Ill. 144, on proposition that provisions of marriage settlement must be strictly followed.

Equity.—Where will provided that trustees thereunder should transfer to themselves, as trustees under marriage settlement, such sums as might be necessary to keep income from settlement funds at a fixed sum, and the deficiency is caused by the wife's direction to invest proceeds of settlement in one of three classes of securities allowed by the terms of the settlement, she is, nevertheless, entitled to have the deficiency made up from the estate, and equity will so decree, p. 611.

Equity practice.—Under prayer for general relief, other relief may be granted than that particularly prayed for, but it must conform to the case made by the bill, p. 612.

The following citing cases have awarded various forms of relief under general prayer: Stevens v. Gladding, 17 How. 455, 15 L. 158, accounting in suit for injunction in patent right case; Texas v. Hardenberg, 10 Wall. 86, 19 L. 842, substituted security followed, in suit containing original security; Dodd v. Benthall, 4 Heisk. 609, decree declaring rights in futuro and removing cloud granted under bill asking immediate relief; Jones v. Van Doren, 130 U. S. 692, 32 L. 1080, 9 S. Ct. 687, in suit to set aside conveyance of dower obtained by fraud, dower decreed and damages awarded; Hunter v. Marlboro, 2 Wood. & M. 198, F. C. 6,908, specific performance allowed under bill to enforce a trust; Graham v. Cook, 48 Ala. 105, damages given on bill to decree interest in vessel wrongfully sold. Cited obiter in Clarke v. Railroad Co., 5 Neb. 331; Byers v. Fowler, 12 Ark. 288, 54 Am. Dec. 289, and Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 209, 9 L. 399, remarking allegata and probata must agree; Pennock v. Ela, 41 N. H. 192, and Colton v. Ross, 2 Paige, 398, 22 Am. Dec. 650, stating rule ut supra.

Distinguished in Laird v. Boyle, 2 Wis. 435, and Driver v. Fortner, 5 Port. 26, general relief cannot be given unless specially prayed; Hayward v. Elliot Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 615, 24 L. 857, in bill to recover stock decree for its value will not be made; Wiltshire v. Marfleet, 1 Edw. Ch. 657, nor an injunction forbidding disposal of property or proceeds when bill recognized the contract by which they were obtained; Rainey v. Herbert, 55 Fed. 444, 3 U. S. App. 592, nor in bill to restrain operation of coke ovens in one place, a decree restraining them in another; Skinner v. Bailey, 7 Conn. 500, nor any relief where bill falls on the main fact to bring the case within scope of court of equity; Smith v. Trenton Co., 4 N. J. Eq. 510, nor will equity decree an act unconstitutional under prayer for general relief in bill alleging act to be void; Pensacola, etc., R. R. Co. v. Spratt, 12 Fla. 101, 91 Am. Dec. 751, nor grant a decree impounding revenues in a suit to enjoin conduct of railroad; Casady v. Woodbury, 13 Iowa, 120, nor a decree reforming a contract in a suit to enforce it; Thayer v. Lane, Walk. Ch. 205, nor a partition based on equitable rights not appearing in the pleading; Sanford v. Cloud, 17 Fla. 575, nor a decree enforcing rights under a contract upon a bill to cancel.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in The Parkhill, 18 Fed. Cas. 1188, and Thompson v. People, 23 Wend. 580.

2 Pet. 613-626, 7 L. 538, CHIRAC v. REINECKER.

Evidence.—Where a single map only, in a book of city plats, has been properly authenticated, no other map in the volume is evidence until the proper authentication is supplied, p. 619.

Cited in Story v. Maclay, 3 Mont. 484, holding map not proper evidence until duly authenticated.

Evidence of pedigree, obtained under commission, and afterwards embodied in a bill of exceptions, may be proven against third persons by the bill of exceptions when the original commission and testimony have been lost, p. 620.

Evidence.—Record in ejectment is evidence in action against third persons to show possession, but not to establish title, p. 622.

Ejectment.—Judgment in ejectment binds parties and privies, p. 622.

Cited in Carlisle v. Kilbrew, 89 Ala. 334, 6 So. 757, 6 L. R. A. 619, and n., holding record conclusive in collateral action for mesne profits, collecting cases.

Evidence.—When ejectment is brought against tenant, record in that action is prima facie evidence of title against landlord who participates in the defense, though not nominally a party, p. 623.

Cited, approved and followed in Jones v. Miller, 1 McCrary, 537, 3 Fed. 385, holding grantee bound in action against his grantor; Belden v. Seymour, 8 Conn. 309, 21 Am. Dec. 663, following principal case on precise point; McNamee v. Moreland, 26 Iowa, 113, holding that landlord, when bound by action against tenant, may also claim benefit of decree in favor of tenant, collecting cases; Read v. Allen, 56 Tex. 180, holding judgment in action against tenant not conclusive.

Distingulshed in Wilson v. Brookshire, 126 Ind. 505, 25 N. E. 134, 9 L. R. A. 797, & n., landlord not bound by ejectment suit brought by his tenant, unless it appears that landlord instigated them; Masten v. Olcott, 101 N. Y. 161, 4 N. E. 277, or by judgment against tenant, unless he is in some way made a prlvy; and in Lamar v. Raysor, 7 Rich. L. 513, and Samuel v. Dinkins, 12 Rich. L. 175, 75 Am. Dec. 730, both holding similarly.

Instructions.— Court should not give instruction upon question as to which there is no evidence, p. 625.

Cited and approved in White v. Burnley, 20 How. 249, 15 L. 889, Dibble v. Truluck, 11 Fla. 141, 143, and Lewis v. State, 4 Ohio, 397; in Hunt v. Toulmin, 1 Stew. & P. 180, 181, 187, holding mere speculative instruction may be ground for reversal; and cited in 72 Am. Dec. 540, in note on Instructions to juries.

Descent.— In Maryland, a person claiming as heir must prove himself heir of person last seized of the estate, and if intestate leaves a brother of the whole blood who survived him and died without issue, and without having been ever actually seized of the estate, the estate will descend to the half blood of the person so seized, p. 625.

Miscellaneous.— Cited erroneously in Slicer v. Bank, 16 How. 579, 14 L. 1066. Cited, without particular application, in Tyler v. Magwire, 17 Wall. 292, 21 L. 586, referring to previous decision of principal case in 11 Wheat. 280, 6 L. 474; State v. Van Winkle, 6 Nev. 352, without application.

2 Pet. 627-663, 7 L. 542, WILKINSON v. LELAND.

Federal courts.— United States courts are bound to decide questions of title precisely as State court ought to, p. 656.

Cited and rule applied in Hinde v. Vattier, 5 Pet. 401, 8 L. 170, holding Federal courts bound to receive same evidence as State court on matter of title; Livingston v. Story, 11 Pet. 393, 9 L. 763, dissenting opinion, arguendo, questions arising under Louisiana law should be determined according to rules of civil law, not of English law of equity; Bennett v. Boggs, 1 Bald. 72, F. C. 1,319, enforcing State law imposing penalties for unlawful fishing; Comstock v. Tracey, 46 Fed. 169, holding Federal court must follow rule laid down by State Supreme Court; Smith v. Power, 23 Tex. 33, citing rule as illustrating doctrine that reason and justice require uniformity of decision.

Constitutional law.— The extent of power granted to legislature is to be determined by usage as well as by construction of the terms in which it is given, p. 657.

Cited obiter in Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 420, stating rule ut supra.

Constitutional law.—Quære, whether under a charter requiring a legislature to legislate in subordination to the general laws of England, the great principles of magna charta can be disregarded, p. 657.

Cited in Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 69, 12 L. 610, dissenting opinion, holding legislature of Rhode Island can exercise no power not granted to the king from whom it derived its charter. Cited, without particular application, in Bonaparte v. Railroad Co., Bald. 220, F. C. 1,617, remarking State legislatures have succeeded to legislative powers of parliament.

Constitutional law.—Laws violating rights of personal liberty or private property, are in conflict with the fundamental principles of our government, and power to pass them ought never to be taken as granted in the absence of the clearest authorization in the organic law, p. 657.

Cited in Schroeder v. Ehlers, 31 N. J. L. 50, questioning whether legislature has power to make one a judge in his own case; Witham v. Osburn, 4 Or. 322, 18 Am. Rep. 289, Coster v. Tidewater Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 64, 65, Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 549, collecting cases and holding State may not take private property for private use, nor for public use without compensation; Wilder v. Lumpkin, 4 Ga. 219, 220, Spence v. Railroad Co., 79 Ala. 590, Billings v. Hall, 7 Cal. 14, and Inglis v. Sailors Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. 154, 7 L. 636, dissenting opinion, all holding legislature has no right to divest vested legal rights; Clark v. White, 2 Swan, 549, and Taylor v. Ford, 4 Hill, 144. 40 Am. Dec. 277, legislature may not authorize private road to be laid out on lands of another; The Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 671. 20 L. 351, dissenting opinion, arguing legal tender act not applicable to previously incurred obligations; Twombly v. Humphrey, 23 Mich. 483, 9 Am. Rep. 102, holding State may not exercise eminent domain for purpose of aiding Federal government in execution of Federal power; Osborn v. Nicholson, 13 Wall. 662, 20 L. 696, permitting suit on contract for purchase of slave, made prior to passage of the thirteenth amendment; Atchison, etc., R. R. Co. v. Baty, 6 Neb. 45, 29 Am. Rep. 360, holding void a statute giving owner of live stock double the value of his property when injured on a railroad; Lowe v. Harris, 112 N. C. 480, 17 S. E. 540, 22 L. R. A. 382, & n., legislature cannot make repeal of statute of frauds retroactive so as to destroy vested rights; Talbot v. Talbot, 14 R. I. 59, nor change right of dower so as to alter existing rights; S. A. & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Wilson, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 571, nor pass act discriminating against certain individuals in matters applicable to general law of contract; Lyman v. Martin, 2 Utah, 157, dissenting opinion, arguing, a law against common right and reason is void; School Board v. Stuart, 80 Va. 76, dissenting opinion, arguing statute void, authorizing payment of debt in depreciated currency; Durkee v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 468, 9 Am. Rep. 504, holding void an act exempting city from payment of costs in certain suits. Cited obiter in Peerce v. Carskadon, 4 W. Va. 248, 6 Am. Rep. 292, discussing power of legislature to permit use of courts by enemy in time of war; University v. Railroad Co., 76 N. C. 107, 22 Am. Rep. 673, holding unconstitutional a statute requiring unclaimed dividends of corporations to be paid to State university; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 148, 24 L. 92, dissenting opinion, arguing legislature has no power to interfere with conduct of business where not necessary to proper exercise of police power; Burch v. Newbury, 10 N. Y. 393, dissenting opinion, arguendo, statute granting right to new trial when previously lost is void; Cotton v. County Commissioners, 6 Fla. 647, dissenting opinion, arguendo, State cannot levy tax for purpose of purchasing stock of private corporation to be distributed among taxpayers in proportion to their assessment; Board v. Van Hoesen, 87 Mich. 537, 49 N. W. 895, 14 L. R. A. 115; Sadler v. Langham, 34 Ala. 330; Robinson v. Swope, 12 Bush, 27; New C. C. Co. v. George's, etc., Co., 37 Md. 560; Van Witsen v. Gutman, 79 Md. 409, 29 Atl. 609, 24 L. R. A. 405; Gough v. Bell, 22 N. J. L. 474, dissenting opinion, and Missouri, etc., Ry. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 417, 41 L. 495, 17 S. Ct. 135, all holding State has no right to take private property for a private purpose; Griffin v. Mixon, 38 Miss. 435, holding unconstitutional a statute forfeiting lands for nonpayment of taxes; Reed v. Wright, 2 G. Greene, 26, holding unconstitutional a statute requiring owners of certain lands to present their claims to commissioners; In re Klein, 14 Fed. Cas. 725, and Sackett v. Andross, 5 Hill, 364, dissenting opinion, holding bankruptcy act unconstitutional so far as retroactive; State v. Mayor, 24 La. Ann. 71, dissenting opinion, arguendo, legislature may not pass act requiring municipality to pay fraudulent claim; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 647, dissenting opinion, New Orleans R. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 26 La. Ann. 521, dissenting opinion, Charles River Bridge Co. v. Warren Bridge Co., 7 Pick. 452, Parham v. Decatur County, 9 Ga. 354, and Hooker v. New Haven Co., 14 Conn. 152, 36 Am. Dec. 479, all holding eminent domain may only be exercised upon making proper compensation.

Cited also, but without particular application, in United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 715, 8 L. 556, discussing source of legislative power; Lavin v. Bank, 18 Blatchf. 28, 1 Fed. 667, discussing due process of law; Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 355, discussing power of taxation; In re Flournoy, 1 Ga. 608, discussing effect of remission of fine; Quimby v. Hazen, 54 Vt. 140, and Speer v. Mayor, 85 Ga. 68, 11 S. E. 808, 9 L. R. A. 408, due process of law; Beebe v. State, 6 Ind. 524, dissenting opinion, discussing validity of statute prohibiting sale of intoxicants; Noel v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 60, dissenting opinion, discussing statute abolishing dower and substituting a third in fee therefor; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 417; People v. Collins, 3 Mich. 392, and People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 275, dissenting opinion, discussing act prohibiting manufacture of intoxicants; Stockton v. Montgomery, Dall. (Tex.) 480, discussing limitation of legislative authority implied from nature of government; Hatch v. Railroad Co., 25 Vt. 66, discussing exercise of eminent domain, and cited in note, 7 Am. St. Rep. 720.

Disapproved in Dorman v. State, 34 Ala. 232, holding there is no limitation upon legislative authority implied from the nature of government. Distinguished in Ingram v. Colgan, 106 Cal. 123, 46 Am. St. Rep. 229, 38 Pac. 316, 28 L. R. A. 189, sustaining bounty act for destruction of coyotes; Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 370, right to be confronted with witnesses is not defeated by admission of evidence of dying declarations. Criticised in People v. Gallagher, 4 Mich. 252, holding no act can be declared void which does not conflict with some right secured by written Constitution. Doubted in Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 212, 62 Am. Dec. 166, courts cannot limit legislature, except as by limitations found in the Constitution; Sharpless v. Mayor, 21 Pa. St. 160, 59 Am. Dec. 764, holding similarly.

Estates of decedents.—Title of heir vests immediately upon death of ancestor, incumbered by the liens created by the latter in his lifetime and by the law at his decease, p. 658.

Cited and rule applied in Vansyckle v. Richardson, 13 Ill. 173, holding title of heir may be defeated by administrator's sale; Ticknor v. Harris, 14 N. H. 281, 40 Am. Dec. 188, holding estate of decedent is charged with payment of his debts, and heir not a proper party when he stakes nothing by descent; Campbell's Case, 2 Bland Ch. 232, 237, 20 Am. Dec. 373, 378, holding lien of creditor upon estate cannot be defeated by private statute authorizing devisees to mortgage it; Johnson v. Branch, 9 S. Dak. 122, 62 Am. St. Rep. 860, 68 N. W. 175, holding unconstitutional a private act authorizing sale of estate by administrator, when not necessary to pay debts; Culbertson v. Coleman, 47 Wis. 200, 2 N. W. 129, holding act authorizing sale of decedent's land by executor void. Cited obiter in Maxwell v. Maxwell, Charlt. (Ga.) 466, holding legatees, to whom estate has been distributed, not necessary parties in suit by creditor against executor; Good v. Norley, 28 Iowa, 193, 208, 212, discussing nature of administrators' sales; Coombs v. Jordan, 3 Bland, 306, 22 Am. Dec. 254, discussing lien of judgments.

Constitutional law.—An act of a State legislature, confirming a void executrix's sale, is not an exercise of judicial power, p. 660.

Cited, approved and followed in Holman v. Bank, 12 Ala. 417, 419, holding legislative act authorizing sale of property by foreign administratrix not an exercise of judicial power; Smith v. Judge of Twelfth District, 17 Cal. 562, nor an act permitting change of venue in a particular case; Taylor v. Place, 4 R. I. 344, nor an act opening a judgment and permitting an answer in a particular case; in Clusky v. Burns, 120 Mo. 574, 25 S. W. 586, Williamson v. Williamson, 3 Smedes & M. 745, 41 Am. Dec. 638, Chandler v. Douglass, 8

Blackf. 12, 44 Am. Dec. 734, and Todd v. Flournoy, 56 Ala. 111, 28 Am. Rep. 764, all sustaining private statutes authorizing sale of property of estate; Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Blythe, 69 Miss. 947, 30 Am. St. Rep. 603, 11 So. 113, 16 L. R. A. 255, & n., so act authorizing guardian to compromise with railway company, to avoid condemnation proceedings; Langdon v. Strong, 2 Vt. 263, sustaining act authorizing administrator to deed lands to creditors in satisfaction of their claims. Cited obiter in Norwalk Co.'s Appeal, 69 Conn. 593, 37 Atl. 1085, 39 L. R. A. 799, arguing legislature cannot confer legislative powers upon the judiciary.

Distinguished in Trustees v. Bailey, 10 Fla. 249, holding act of legislature, directing a rehearing of a particular case, a judicial act and void; Maxwell v. Goetschius, 40 N. J. L. 388, 29 Am. Rep. 246, holding unconstitutional an act attempting to confirm partition proceedings void for want of jurisdiction; Powers v. Bergen, 6 N. Y. 367, holding void a private statute authorizing sale of lands by executors; Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg. 70, 76, 30 Am. Dec. 432, 438, holding private act authorizing sale of minor's estate by guardian void as an attempt to exercise judicial power; Griffin v. Cunningham, 20 Gratt. 110, legislature cannot give effect to judgment void for want of jurisdiction.

Confirmatory act confirming title under void executrix's sale may be passed by a State legislature, p. 660.

Cited and rule applied in Weed v. Donovan, 114 Mass. 183. Cited in Leland v. Wilkinson, 10 Pet. 296, 9 L. 431, as having decided above point; Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story, 444, F. C. 1,479, sustaining resolve of legislature authorizing a sale of trust property; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 238, sustaining act of legislature confirming void alcalde sales; Hoyt v. Sprague, 12 Fed. Cas. 769, legislature may authorize change of investments by trustees; Mohr v. Porter, 51 Wis. 504, 8 N. W. 372, Stewart v. Griffith, 33 Mo. 23, 82 Am. Dec. 153, and Davison v. Johonnot, 7 Metc. 394, 41 Am. Dec. 452, or sale of estate of ward by guardian; Wildes v. Van Voorhis, 15 Gray, 148, may confirm voidable sale of husband's interest in homestead; Tameling v. Land Co., 2 Colo. 422, congress may pass act confirming void land claim.

Distinguished in Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 542, 547, reviewing principal case and holding legislature cannot ratify fraudulent, void grant to prejudice of third persons; Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 186, holding unconstitutional an act authorizing sale of property by administrator thereby operating to divest the heir of his property; Forster v. Forster, 129 Mass. 565, collecting and reviewing authorities, and holding statute confirming void tax sale unconstitutional.

Retrospective laws may be passed by State legislature, where not operating to divest settled rights of property, p. 661.

Cited and principle followed in Drehman v. Stifle, 8 Wall. 603, 19

L. 510, sustaining statute exempting persons from civil prosecution from acts previously committed under military authority; Ex parte Hull, 12 Fed. Cas. 854, holding 'bankruptcy act retrospective in operation; Randall v. Kreiger, 23 Wall. 149, 23 L. 126, legislature may pass retrospective act curing defective acknowledgment; Mitchell v. Campbell, 19 Or. 205, 206, 207, 24 Pac. 457, 458, or retrospective act curing defective administrators' sales; McMillan v. Lee Co., 6 Iowa, 394, or retrospective act cured defective subscription for stock by county; Albee v. May, 2 Paine, 80, F. C. 134, or retrospective act allowing ejected occupants to recover for improvements; Elliott v. Mayfield, 4 Ala. 424, or retrospective act directing execution against sureties on executors' bonds; Tilton v. Swift, 40 Iowa, 80, or retrospective statute enlarging time for receiving verdicts; Scott v. Smart, 1 Mich. 302, or statute transferring cases from territorial to State court; Danville v. Pace, 25 Gratt. 12, 18 Am. Rep. 670, and Andrews v. Russell, 7 Blackf. 476, holding repeal of statute avoiding contracts for usury, validates previously existing contracts; State v. Newark, 27 N. J. L. 196, sustaining statute curing defective street assessment proceedings; State v. Squires, 26 Iowa, 348, holding valid a retrospective statute curing defective organization of school district; Ross v. Worthington, 11 Minn. 327, 88 Am. Dec. 98, holding valid a statute curing defectively-executed mortgage; Gibson v. Hibbard, 13 Mich. 219, holding valid an act curing instruments defective for want of stamp; in Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 204, 17 L. 525; Bridgeport v. Railroad Co., 15 Conn. 496, Beloit v. Morgan, 7 Wall. 624, 19 L. 207, and Bissell v. Jeffersonville, 24 How. 296, 16 L. 670, all holding legislature may pass act enabling municipal corporation to cure defective bond proceedings; Bass v. Columbus, 30 Ga. 852, and tax proceedings levied in pursuance thereof. Cited, arguendo, in dissenting opinion, Treadway v. Schrauber, 1 Dak. 271, 46 N. W. 476, and in dissenting opinion, Hooker v. New Haven, etc., Co., 14 Conn. 166.

Distinguished in Dockery v. McDowell, 40 Ala. 481, dissenting opinion, collecting cases and arguing retroactive acts are unconstitutional; Forsyth v. Marbury, Charl. (Ga.) 333, holding law limiting enforcement of dormant judgments cannot be construed to be retrospective, when it will thereby impair vested rights; Hardemann v. Downer, 39 Ga. 453, dissenting opinion, arguing exemption law not retrospective; Adams v. Palmer, 51 Me. 495, legislature cannot render valid a release of dower, voidable when executed and avoided before the passage of the act; Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 387, dissenting opinion, arguendo, statute removing disqualification of witnesses cannot apply to pending suits; Palairret's Appeal, 67 Pa. St. 487, 5 Am. Rep. 454, holding unconstitutional a retrospective statute abolishing ground rents; Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee, 13 Wis. 51, 80 Am. Dec. 725, holding act curing void bond issue unconstitutional; Blodgett v. Hitt, 29 Wis. 178, holding curative act inapplicable to void probate sale.

Statutory construction.—A legislative act is to be determined according to the intention of the legislature apparent upon its face, and is not to be defeated by technical rules, p. 662.

Cited and principle followed in United States v. Freeman, 3 How. 565, 11 L. 728, construing statutes relating to brevet officers; Oates v. First Nat. Bank, 100 U. S. 244, 25 L. 582, construing statute relating to bills of exchange; United States v. Fisher, 109 U. S. 145, 27 L. 886, 3 S. Ct. 155, construing statute fixing salary of certain officers; Davis v. Leslie, Abb. Adm. 139, F. C. 3,639, construing statute regulating recovery of seamen's wages; Goodall v. Tuttle, 3 Blss. 235, F. C. 5,533, construing bankruptcy act; Ludington v. The Nucleus, 15 Fed. Cas. 1095, construing act conferring jurisdiction on District Courts; United States v. One Hundred and Twenty-nine Packages, 27 Fed. Cas. 285, construing revenue law; United States v. The Reindeer, 27 Fed. Cas. 760, construing statute regulating fishing vessels; Beekman v. Railway Co., 35 Fed. 9, construing statute defining Federal district; United States v. Huggett, 40 Fed. 642, construing statute relating to obscene letters; Wilson v. Biscoe, 11 Ark. 48, construing statute incorporating bank; State v. Smith, 40 Ark. 433, construing statute relating to chattel mortgages; San Francisco v. Mooney, 106 Cal. 588, 39 Pac. 853, construing statute ratifying municipal ordinance; Seabury v. Arthur, 28 Cal. 150, construing acts confirming titles; Linsley v. Brown, 13 Conn. 195, construing statute relating to acknowledgments; Brown Co. v. Aberdeen, 4 Dak. 408, 31 N. W. 738, construing incorporation act; State v. Commissioners, 20 Fla. 432, construing statute regulating sale of intoxicating liquors; Erwin v. Moore, 15 Ga. 365, construing statute regulating executions; Gadsden v. Jones, 1 Fla. 342, construing statute regulating duties of executors; Gray v. Commissioners, 83 Me. 435, 22 Atl. 377, construing statutes regulating location of highways; Sisters v. Detroit, 9 Mich. 99, construing statute exempting certain property from taxation; People v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 168, construing election law; Sanborn v. Sanborn, 62 N. H. 639, construing will; Braithwaite v. Cameron, 3 Okl. 635, 38 Pac. 1086, construing statute providing for payment of salaries of territorial officers; State v. Delesdenier, 7 Tex. 107, construing act regulating general land office; Ferguson v. Mason, 60 Wis. 391, 19 N. W. 425, construing statute relating to mortgages of homestead.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, without particular application, in Miller v. Sullivan, 4 Dill, 344, F. C. 9,592, discussing effect of statute of limitations on void guardian's sales; Northern Pac. R. R. Co. v. Majors, 5 Mont. 126, 2 Pac. 325, discussing congressional grants. Cited also in Talcott v. Pine Grove, 1 Flipp, 177, F. C. 13,735, on point that legislature may levy tax for purpose of aiding construction of railroad. Cited obiter in West River Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 543, 12 L. 550, dissenting opinion, discussing right of eminent domain. Cited erroneously in United States v. Kochersperger, 26 Fed. Cas.

806. Cited, Texas, etc., Ry. Co. v. Gay, 86 Tex. 592, 26 S. W. 606, 25 L. R. A. 59, to point that real property is governed by law of situs.

2 Pet. 664-670, 7 L. 555, LE GRAND v. DARNALL.

Slave.—A devise of property to a slave entitles him to freedom by necessary implication, p. 670.

Cited in Durham v. Durham, 26 Mo. 510, holding manumission may be presumed; Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 600, 15 L. 781, stating rule ut supra; Monohon v. Caroline, 2 Bush, 413, testator may manumit slaves by will. Cited obiter in Sibley v. Maria, 2 Fla. 563, discussing manumission generally; Opinion of Judge Appleton, 44 Me. 567, 570, 584, arguing, Africans have the right to vote; Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 423, 589, 15 L. 708, 777, discussing right of slave to sue.

Distinguished in Jones v. Lipscomb, 14 B. Mon. 297, rule aliter in Kentucky; Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 425, 15 L. 709, under facts.

Manumission.—When statute provided that slave must be under forty-five and able to gain a livelihood at time of manumission, one who is eleven years of age and able to gain a livelihood, is within the statute, p. 670.

2 Pet. 671-674, 7 L. 557, BANK OF COLUMBIA v. SWEENEY.

Execution.—Law authorizing execution to issue without judgment, will be so construed as to permit the debtor, on return of the execution, to set up any defense he might have had had the suit proceeded in the ordinary way, p. 674.

Not cited.

2 Pet. 675-679, 7 L. 559, BEACH v. VILES.

Statutory construction.—Federal courts will adopt construction of local statutes given by State court, p. 678.

Cited obiter in Rising Sun Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 20 Ind. 525, holding foreign corporations only recognized by interstate comity.

Bankruptcy.—Assignees, under fraudulent assignment, are not chargeable as trustees in garnishment proceedings, p. 679.

Cited in Firebaugh v. Stone, 36 Mo. 115, holding rights of garnishee are not affected by garnishment, and in note on effect of fraud in assignments for benefit of creditors, 58 Am. St. Rep. 96. Cited obiter, Ware v. Wanless, 2 Wyo. 164, discussing impeachment of assignment for fraud.

Miscellaneous.—Cited obiter in The Watchman, 1 Ware, 243, F. C. 17,251, discussing assignments generally. Cited erroneously in Bender v. Crawford, 33 Tex. 751, 7 Am. Rep. 272.

REPORTS

OF

CASES

ARGUED AND ADJUDGED IN

THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

IN JANUARY TERM, 1830.

BY RICHARD PETERS,

Counselor at Law, and Reporter of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

VOLUME III.

IT has been found impracticable to include in one volume all the cases decided by the Supreme Court at January Term, 1830. The reporter was desirous to escape from the labor of preparing two volumes for the press, and still more desirous to avoid imposing upon the profession the double expense of the purchase of the cases in this form.

In his vindication, and in explanation of the course which has been adopted, he has been indulged with the permission of the court to publish the following correspondence;

WASHINGTON, March 20, 1830. }
Supreme Court Room. }

My Dear Sir:

I am exceedingly embarrassed on the subject of the publication of the Reports of the Cases decided at this term, and submit myself to the court for direction.

It is manifest that it will be impossible to comprehend the whole of the decisions, with the arguments of counsel, in one volume, of a size which will be convenient, and executed on a type such as is proper for the work. Should it be desired by the court, I am willing to publish two volumes, introducing in most of the cases the arguments of counsel; indeed, more than half the cases are now ready for the press, the arguments included; having intended to pursue the plan heretofore adopted. But the [*] objection to this is, *that the profession may consider the expense of two volumes a burthen and may complain. With the approval of the court, and their expression of a wish that the arguments shall be reported, I shall be entirely protected. If the court shall recommend or sanction the omission of the arguments, I shall be also safe from the censure of those gentlemen whose ability in the discussion of the cases which have been disposed of during the term entitles them to every illustration, and whose arguments it would, under other circumstances, give me great pleasure to insert in the work.

I have no desire to present the case in any form which can be construed as intending a claim on the government for additional compensation for delivering to the Department of State two volumes instead of one; and I wish to be understood as relinquishing any such claim or purpose. My whole object is to act in the matter as the court shall wish, and I shall have full compensation for any addition to my labors in their approbation. I am, sir, with great respect and esteem,

Your obedient servant, faithfully,

RICHARD PETERS.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL.

WASHINGTON, March 22.

My Dear Sir:

I laid your letter before the court and found a general disposition among the judges to approve of the course which you should yourself think most eligible. I believe we all think that the arguments at the bar ought, at least in substance, to appear in the reports. They certainly contribute very much to explain the points really decided by the court. If this cannot be done in one volume, I should think it advisable to give us two. With great respect and esteem, I am, dear sir,

Your obedient,

J. MARSHALL.

RICHARD PETERS, Esq.

OBITUARY.

THE obligation to record the decease of Mr. Justice Washington is felt with the deepest sensibility. Associations of years, during which it was the good fortune of the writer to possess his friendship and esteem, were thus terminated: his judicial career of thirty-one years, distinguished by all the lustre and usefulness that talent, learning and virtue could give, was closed by that event. He died at Philadelphia on the 26th day of November, 1829, in the sixty-eighth year of his age; and his remains were conveyed to Mount Vernon and deposited in the same tomb with those of his uncle; THE FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY.

It may be said with truth that Mr. Justice Washington belonged to two States—Virginia and Pennsylvania. He was born and educated in Virginia, and there, for some time, practiced his profession; he acquired his knowledge of the law in Pennsylvania; in that State the great portion of his eminent judicial labors were performed, and in that State he died. He was equally beloved, honored, and lamented in both States.

Mr. Justice Washington was the son of John A. Washington, Esquire, of Westmoreland County, Virginia, who was the next eldest brother of General Washington. His father was a gentleman of strong mind, and possessed the consideration and confidence of all who knew him. He was, with honor to himself, a delegate in the State Legislature of Virginia, viii]* and a magistrate of the county in which he resided. Bushrod Washington, his son, received a part of his classical education in the house of the inflexible patriot Richard Henry Lee, under a private tutor; his studies were continued under his paternal roof, and afterwards at William and Mary College. At that respectable institution commenced his intimacy and friendship with Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, with whom he became afterwards associated in the Supreme Court of the United States; and whose esteem, confidence and respect, he continued to possess in the fullest extent to the close of his life.

The invasion of Virginia by Lord Cornwallis called from their studies for its defense the gallant youth of the State, and among them Bushrod Washington, who joined a volunteer troop of cavalry under Colonel John F. Mercer, in the army commanded by the Marquis La Fayette. During the whole of the summer he remained in the field, and until Cornwallis had crossed James River. It was then supposed that the invaders intended to move on South Carolina; the troop was disbanded, and its members returned to their homes. In the following winter he came to Philadelphia, and, under the auspices and affectionate care of General Washington, he was placed as a student at law in the office of Mr. Wilson, a gentleman of great legal learning and high character, and who was afterwards appointed a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. After completing his studies, he returned to Virginia and practiced his profession in his native county with reputation and success. In 1787 he was chosen a member of the House of Delegates of Virginia; and the following year, as one of that body, he assisted in the adoption and ratification of the Constitution of the United States by the State of Virginia.

From Westmoreland he removed to Alexandria, a wider sphere for the exercise of his talents as an advocate and a jurist; and he went afterwards from thence to Richmond, and there *assumed and maintained an equal station with the gentlemen of that bar; whom to equal, has always been and continues to be conclusive evidence of the highest professional attainments and character.

During his arduous, industrious and extensive practice at the bar in Richmond and throughout the State, Judge Washington undertook to report the decisions of the Supreme Court of Virginia; a work in two volumes, of high authority in the courts of that State and in those of the Union.

He was married in 1785 to Miss Blackburn; he had no children. He was a devoted husband to an affectionate wife; and such was the strength of her conjugal attachment to her deceased husband that she survived him but three days.

His high and just reputation as a lawyer, the purity and integrity of his character, and the confidence and respect of the whole community with whom he lived, induced President Adams, in 1798, to appoint him an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to fill the vacancy which had occurred by the decease of Mr. Justice Wilson. He continued to hold that honored and honorable station until his death; and presided in the Circuit Court of New Jersey and in that of Pennsylvania from April, 1803, having been during that year assigned to the circuit courts composing the third circuit.

Judge Washington was the favorite nephew of President Washington, and the devisee of Mount Vernon, the much-loved residence of that pure, distinguished and venerated patriot. To Judge Washington he also gave his library, and he also bequeathed to him his public and private papers; at the same time appointing him one of his executors. These high and affectionate testimonials of confidence and esteem must have ever been held in proud possession by him on whom they were bestowed, and by whom they were deserved.

x*] *It is with peculiar satisfaction that the writer has been permitted by Mr. Justice Story to introduce here his evidence of the talents, the usefulness, the qualifications and the virtues of Mr. Justice Washington. This was given in a notice written by him immediately after that occurrence. Laudari a viro laudato.

"For thirty-one years Judge Washington held the station of Justice of the Supreme Court with a constantly increasing reputation and usefulness. Few men, indeed, have possessed higher qualifications for the office, either natural or acquired. Few men have left deeper traces in their judicial career of everything which a conscientious judge ought to propose for his ambition or his virtue or his glory. His mind was solid, rather than brilliant; sagacious and searching, rather than quick or eager; slow, but not torpid; steady, but not unyielding; comprehensive, and at the same time cautious; patient in inquiry, forcible in conception, clear in reasoning. He was, by original temperament, mild, conciliating, and candid; and yet was remarkable for an uncompromising firmness. Of him it may be truly said that the fear of man never fell upon him; it never entered into his thoughts, much less was it seen in his actions. In him the love of justice was the ruling passion—it was the master spring of all his conduct. He made it a matter of conscience to discharge every duty with scrupulous fidelity and scrupulous zeal. It mattered not whether the duty were small or great, witnessed by the world or performed in private; everywhere the same diligence, watchfulness and pervading sense of justice were seen. There was about him a tenderness of giving offense, and yet a fearlessness of consequences in his official character, which it is difficult to portray. It was a rare combination, which added much to the dignity of the bench, and made justice itself, even when most severe, soften into the moderation of mercy. *It gained confidence when it seemed least to seek it. It repressed arrogance by overawing or confounding it.

"To say that as a judge he was wise, impartial, and honest, is but to attribute to him those qualifications without which the honors of the bench are but the means of public disgrace or contempt. His honesty was a deep vital principle, not measured out by wordly rules. His impartiality was a virtue of his nature, disciplined and instructed by constant reflection upon the infirmity and accountability of man. His wisdom was the wisdom of the law, chastened and refined and invigorated by study, guided by experience, dwelling little on theory, but constantly enlarging itself by a close survey of principles.

"He was a learned judge. Not in that everyday learning which may be gathered up by a hasty reading of books and cases. But that which is the result of long-continued laborious services and comprehensive studies. He read to learn and not to quote; to digest and master, and not merely to display. He was not easily satisfied. If he was not as profound as some, he was more exact than most men. But the value of his learning was that it was the key-stone of all his judgments. He indulged not the rash desire to fashion the law to his own views; but to follow out its precepts with a sincere good faith and simplicity. Hence he possessed the happy faculty of yielding just the proper weight to authority; neither on the one hand surrendering himself to the dictates of other judges, nor on the other hand overruling settled doctrines upon his own private notions of policy or justice.

"But it is as a man that those who knew him best will most love to contemplate him. There was a daily beauty in his life which won every heart. He was benevolent, charitable, affectionate and liberal in the best sense of the terms. He was a Christian, full of religious sensibility and religious humility. Attached to the Episcopal *Church by education and [*xii choice, he was one of its most sincere, but unostentatious friends. He was as free from bigotry as any man; and at the same time that he claimed the right to think for himself, he admitted without reserve the same right in others. He was, therefore, indulgent even to what he deemed errors in doctrine, and abhorred all persecution for conscience sake. But what made religion most attractive in him, and gave it occasionally even a sublime expression, was its tranquil, cheerful, unobtrusive, meek and gentle character. There was a mingling of Christian graces in him which showed that the habit of his thoughts was fashioned for another and a better world."

At the session of the Supreme Court at January Term, 1830, Mr. Berrien, the Attorney-General of the United States, moved the court to have the proceedings of the bar and officers of the court, expressive of their high sense of the merits and talents of Mr. Justice Washington, entered on the record of the court. Mr. Chief Justice Marshall said:

"The sentiments of respect and affection which the gentlemen of the bar and the officers of the court have expressed for the loss of our deceased brother are most grateful to me, and I can say, with confidence, to all my brethren, no man knew his worth better or deplores his death more than myself; and this sentiment, I am certain, is common to his former associates. I am very sure, I may say for my brethren as well as for myself, that the application is most gratifying to us all; and that in ordering the resolutions to be entered on the minutes of our proceedings, we indulge our own feelings not less than the feelings of those who make the application."

Immediately on the decease of Mr. Justice Washington, the bar of Philadelphia assembled to testify their sense of the loss sustained in his decease by the court and by the nation. Resolutions expressive of their sentiments and feelings were unanimously adopted, and a gentleman of high *attainments and station [*xiii was requested to pronounce an eulogium on the deceased.

The bar of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania have caused to be placed a mural tablet of marble, in a recess immediately behind and above the seat of the judges, in the room lately arranged for the Circuit Court in the "Hall of Independence," in the city of Philadelphia, on which is inscribed:

THIS TABLET

Records

The affection and respect of

The Members of the Philadelphia Bar

for

BUSHROD WASHINGTON,

An Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Alike distinguished for Simplicity of Manners

and

Purity of Heart:

Fearless, dignified, and enlightened, as a Judge,

No influence or interest could touch his integrity or

Bias his Judgment:

A zealous patriot, and a pious Christian.

He died

At Philadelphia,

On the 26th of November, A. D. 1829,

Leaving

To his professional brethren

A spotless fame,

And to his country

The learning, labor and wisdom of a Long judicial Life.

JUDGES
OF THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
DURING THE TIME OF THESE REPORTS.

The Hon. JOHN MARSHALL, Chief Justice.
The Hon. WILLIAM JOHNSON, Associate Justice.
The Hon. GABRIEL DUVALL, Associate Justice.
The Hon. JOSEPH STORY, Associate Justice.
The Hon. SMITH THOMPSON, Associate Justice.
The Hon. JOHN M'LEAN, Associate Justice.
The Hon. HENRY BALDWIN, Associate Justice.
JOHN M'PHERSON BERRIEN, Esq., Attorney-General.
TENCH RINGGOLD, Esq., Marshal.
WILLIAM THOMAS CARROLL, Esq., Clerk.

RULES AND ORDERS

OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

February 11, 1830.—There having been two associate justices of the Supreme Court appointed since its last session, it is ordered that the following allotment be made of the Chief Justice and the associate justices of the said Supreme Court among the circuits, agreeably to the Act of Congress in such case made and provided, and that such allotment be entered on record, viz.:

For the First Circuit, the Hon. Joseph Story.

For the Second Circuit, the Hon. Smith Thompson.

For the Third Circuit, the Hon. Henry Baldwin.

For the Fourth Circuit, the Hon. Gabriel Duvall.

For the Fifth Circuit, the Hon. John Marshall, Chief Justice.

For the Sixth Circuit, the Hon. William Johnson.

For the Seventh Circuit, the Hon. John McLean.

March, 1830.—The court, on the second day in each term, hereafter, will commence calling the cases for argument in the order in which they stand on the docket, and proceed from day to day during the term in the same order; and if the parties or either of them shall be ready when the case is called, the same will be heard; and if neither party shall be ready to proceed in the argument, the cause shall go down to the foot of the docket, unless some good and satisfactory reason to the contrary shall be shown to the court. That ten causes only shall be considered as *liable to be called on each [*xvii] day during the term, including the one under argument, if the same shall not be concluded on the preceding day. No cause shall be taken up out of its order on the docket, or be set down for any particular day; except under special and peculiar circumstances, to be shown to the court. Every cause which shall have been twice called in its order and passed and put at the foot of the docket, shall, if not again reached during the term it was last called, be dismissed, and no longer continued on the docket.

August 12, 1796.—Ordered, that when process at common law or in equity shall issue against a State, the same shall be served on the governor, or chief executive magistrate, and Attorney-General of such State.¹

Montalet v. Murray, February Term, 1806.—Marshall, Ch. J., stated the practice of the court to be that when there is no appearance for the plaintiff in error, the defendant may have the plaintiff called and dismiss the writ of error; or may open the record and pray for an affirmation. In such a case costs go of course.¹

1.—These rules of court have been omitted in 1 Wheaton, 1 Peters, and 1 Condensed Reports. This omission arose from the fact that they were not regularly entered with the other rules of the court by the then clerk of the court at the time of their adoption.

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States.

AT

JANUARY TERM, 1830.

1*] *RICHARD R. KEENE, Plaintiff in Error,

MARGARET MEADE, Executrix of RICHARD
W. MEADE, deceased, Defendant in Error.

Clerical error—middle letter of name—parol and written evidence—practice.

A commission was issued in the name of Richard M. Meade, the name of the defendant being Richard W. Meade. This is a clerical error in making out the commission, and does not effect the execution of the commission. [6]

It may well be questioned whether the middle letter of a name forms any part of the Christian name of a party. It is said the law knows only of one Christian name, and there are adjudged cases strongly countenancing, if not fully establishing, that the entire omission of a middle letter is not a misnomer or variance. [7]

A witness, the clerk of the plaintiff, examined under a commission, stated the payment of a sum of money to have been made by him to the defendant, and that the defendant at his request made an entry in the plaintiff's rough cash book, writing his name at full length, and stating the sum paid to him, not so much for the sake of the receipt, as in order for him, the witness, to become acquainted with his signature, and the way of spelling his name. It is not necessary to produce the book in which the entry was made, and parol evidence of the payment of the money is legal. It cannot be laid down as a universal rule that where written evidence of a fact exists, all parol evidence of the same fact is excluded. [7]

It is not known that there is any practice in the execution or return of a commission requiring a certificate, in whose handwriting the depositions returned with the commission were taken down. All that the commission requires is *that the [*2 commissioners, having reduced the depositions taken by them to writing, should send them with the commission under their hands and seals to the judges of the court out of which the commission issued. But it is immaterial in whose handwriting the depositions are; and it cannot be required that they should certify any immaterial fact. [8]

A certificate by the commissioners that A. B., whom they were going to employ as a clerk had been sworn, admits of no other reasonable interpretation than that A. B. was the person appointed by them as clerk. [9]

It is not necessary to return with the commission the form of the oath administered by the commissioners to the witnesses. When the commissioners certify the witnesses were sworn and the interrogatories annexed to the commission were all put to them, it is presumed that they were sworn and examined as to all their knowledge of the facts. [10]

ERROR to the Circuit Court for the County of Washington in the District of Columbia.

In the Circuit Court the testator of the defendant in error, Richard W. Meade, instituted an action against Richard R. Keene, the plaintiff in error, for money lent and advanced to him in Spain, where Mr. Meade, at the time of the loan, resided and carried on business as a merchant. In order to establish the claims of the plaintiff below, a commission was issued to Cadiz; and under the same, certain depositions were taken, which were returned with the commission. The commission was directed to the NOTE.—Name, omission of, or error in, middle name, not material, nor a misnomer.—Idem sonans.—Initials. The addition of Senior or Junior forms no part of the name.

The law knows but one christian name, and the omission or insertion of the middle name, or of the initial letter of that name, in a conveyance, is immaterial. It is competent for the party to show that he is known as well without as with the middle name. Games v. Dunn, 14 Pet., 322; affirming 1 McLean, 321; Meade v. Keene, 3 Cranch, C. C., 51.

A bond with sureties and the oath of office of a receiver of public moneys, subscribed "B. F. E.," where the commission has issued to "B. E.," are valid. 2 Op. Att.-Gen., 332.

"Jr." is not an essential addition to, or a part of a name. Clark v. Gilbert, Burr., 207.

An assignment by P. P. Pitchlynn of a reservation in a treaty in favor of Peter Pitchlynn, where there is no doubt of the identity of the person, is good, as the law knows of but one christian name. 4 Op. Att.-Gen., 467.

The plaintiff declared by the name of William T. Robinson, and gave in evidence a deed to William Robinson, the omission of the middle letter was held to be an immaterial variance. Franklin v. Talmadge, 5 John., 84; 4 Watts, 329; 14 Pet., 322; Willes, 654; 1 Youngs, 602.
Peters 3.

A middle name, or initial, is no part of a name, and may be disregarded. The law knows only one christian name. Milk v. Christie, 1 Hill., 102; Roosevelt v. Gardener, 2 Cow., 463; Franklin v. Talmadge, 5 John., 84; Rex v. Newmau, 1 Ld. Raym., 562.

The addition of "Senior" or "Junior" is mere matter of description, and forms no part of the name. It is a casual and temporary designation. People v. Collins, 7 John., 549; Fleet v. Youngs, 11 Wend., 522; Lepiot v. Browne, 1 Salk., 7; 10 Mass., 203.

Where a man is known with the addition of Junior, the omission of that addition in an indictment is not, in a collateral proceeding, conclusive that he was not intended. Jackson v. Prevost, 2 Chines, 164.

The word "junior" is no part of a name, but is merely descriptive of the person. Its omission from the name of a grantee is merely presumptive commissioners in a case stated to be depending in the court in which Richard M. Meade was plaintiff, and Richard R. Keene defendant; and it was returned to the court under the hands and seals of the commissioners, who certified that the "execution of the commission appears in a certain schedule annexed."

In the schedule annexed to the commission was also the following certificate under the hands of the commissioners:

"We, the undersigned, appointed commissioners to examine evidences in a cause depending in the Circuit Court of the County of Washington in the District of Columbia, between Richard W. Meade, plaintiff, and Richard R. Keene, defendant, do hereby certify that we have severally taken the oath into the hands of each other prescribed in the herein annexed commission, and we further certify that we have likewise administered the oath prescribed by the same herein annexed commission to Mr. James M'Cann, the clerk we are going to employ for the execution of the same."

3*] *The commission "required the commissioners, or a majority of them, to cause to come before them all such evidences as shall be named or produced to them by either the plaintiff or defendant; and to examine them on oath touching their knowledge or remembrance of anything relating to the cause." The record does not show that any interrogatories were annexed to the commission.

The commissioners also certify as to the execution of the commission in the following words: "We, the undersigned, do certify that, in compliance with our duty, we shall examine the witnesses upon the following interrogatories, which we deem necessary first to establish."

Interrogatories returned with the commission were then administered to the witnesses, and the separate answers to each written and returned.

Frederick Rudolph, who was the clerk and book-keeper of Mr. Meade, testified as to one of the items of the account, "that on the defendant's receiving two hundred and fifty dollars, the defendant himself made the entry thereof in the rough cash book, writing his name at full length, probably at my own request, not so much for the sake of the receipt as in order for me to become acquainted with his signature and the way of spelling his name."

On the trial of the cause, the counsel for the defendant objected to the reading of the commission on the ground of a variance in the name of the plaintiff in the commission, the plaintiff being called Richard M. Meade, instead of Richard W. Meade. This objection was overruled by the court; the defendant's counsel also objected to the deposition of F. Rudolph, so far as the same went to prove the item of $250 in the plaintiff's account; alleging as the ground of the objection, that as there was a written acknowledgment made by the defendant, the writing should be produced, and the same could not be proved by parol. The plaintiff by his counsel offered to withdraw, and stated that he withdrew and waived that part of the deposition which went to prove the existence of a written acknowledgment or receipt, and he relied only on the proof of the actual payment of the amount *paid by [*4 the witness. The court overruled the objection and permitted the evidence to be read.

The defendant, by his counsel, also objected to the reading of the depositions returned with the commission, because the commissioners had not certified in whose handwriting the depositions were taken down, nor that they had appointed a clerk, nor administered the oath to their clerk, as required by the said commission; nor that the said witnesses were required to testify all their knowledge or remembrance of anything that may relate to the said cause, nor that they were sworn so to do, but were examined on particular interrogatories propounded by the commissioners themselves. But the court overruled the objections, and permitted the depositions to be read in evidence to the jury, &c.

The defendant's counsel excepted to the opinion of the court on the objections made to the evidence, and the court sealed a bill of exceptions; upon which the defendant prosecuted this writ of error.

Mr. Key, for the plaintiff in error, contended, that as there was written evidence of the payment of the sum of $250, it should have been produced; and that in its absence, no allegation of its loss having been made, parol proof of its contents could not be given. The entry in the book was the original and superior evidence.

The offer of the plaintiff's counsel to strike out that part of the deposition of Rudolph which referred to the written entry, did not prevent the influence of the fact that such evidence ex-evidence that the grantee was the father, and not the son, where both have the same name, and the presumption may be rebutted by showing that the grantor intended to convey to the son by the name and description contained in the deed. Padgett v. Lawrence, 10 Paige, 170; Lepiot v. Browne, 6 Mod., 198.

The law recognizes but one christian name. An error in the middle name may be disregarded as a surplusage. VanVoorhis v. Budd, 39 Barb., 479; Newton v. Maxwell, 2 Comp. & J., 215; 1 Dowl. Pr. C., 315.

The rule above stated, that the omission of a descriptive word, as junior or senior, or the middle letter between the christian and surname, is no misnomer, and needs no remedy, applies to ballots and votes. The People v. Cook, 14 Barb., 259, 261; S. C., affirmed, 8 N. Y. (4 Seld.), 67.

Initials and middle names are not recognized in law. Petition of John Snook, 2 Hilt., N. Y., 566.

Idem sonans.

If the name used were idem sonans with the true one, no variance would be held to exist; as if Se-grave were put for Seagrave. Williams v. Ogle, 2

Str., 889; and Benedetto for Beneditto has been considered no variance. Abitbol v. Benedetto, 2 Taunt., 401; 2 Camp., 487. Nor Josier for Josiah. Schooler v. Ashurst, 1 Little., 216. Nor Petris for Petrie, the name being a foreign one, and having the same sound in French. Petrie v. Woodworth, 3 Cal., N. Y., 219. Nor Laurence for Lawrence. Webb v. Lawrence, 2 Dowl. P. C., 81; 1 C. & M., 806. Nor Tinmarsh for Tidmarsh. Homan v. Tidmarsh, 11 Moore, 231. Nor Stafford for Stratford, 2 Chit., 355.

A variation in the spelling of plaintiff's name in a single letter between the writ and subsequent proceedings is immaterial. Leatherbarrow v. Ward, 5 Jur., 388; 1 Chit., 659, n.; Anon., 1 Chit., 660, n.

But on a bail-piece the name of Tarbart for Ta-bart is a fatal variance. Bingham v. Dickie, 5 Taunt., 814.

So, Frances for Francis, in recognizance and notice of bail, is fatal. Anon., 1 Moore, 126.

Initials.

A single letter, either a vowel or a consonant, may be a christian name, and not merely an initial letter of one. Regina v. Dale, 5 Eng. Law & Eq. R., 360; 15 Jur., 657.

isted, nor deprive the defendant of his right to its production.

As to the misnomer of the plaintiff, he argued that the commission was an ex-parte proceeding, and a strict scrutiny of it is warranted and demandable. The misnomer shows a different plaintiff from the real plaintiff in the cause.

He objected to the execution of the commission, as it did not appear that the interrogatories were those of the parties to the cause, but had been framed and put by the commissioners without notice of the same. Nor did it appear 5*] that *the clerk, who was sworn, wrote down the examinations of the witnesses; the certificate stating only that the clerk was sworn whom the commissioners "were about to employ." The clerk does not attest the depositions.

He also contended that the other matters stated in the court below were legal objections to the commission. (Cited, 5 Har. and John., 438.)

Mr. Lee and Mr. Jones, for the defendant in error, maintained that the objections made by the plaintiff in error were merely technical, and such as were exclusively in the power of the Circuit Court. This court has decided against such objections as ground of error. (7 Cranch, 208.)

As to the variance, it was said it was immaterial; or if material, should have been the subject of a plea; and if it had been pleaded, the plaintiff could have cured the defect by an averment that the person named in the commission and the plaintiff were the same. (Cited, 5 Bac. Ab., 215; 1 Wash. Rep., 257; 1 T. R., 235.)

The evidence of Rudolph was not to prove the contents of the memorandum, but the advance of the money by the witness as the plaintiff's agent. The entry in the book was but secondary evidence of the payment; and to claim that the whole of the account book should have been annexed to the commission was unreasonable; and yet it must have been so annexed, if the position of the plaintiff in error is correct.

It was also contended, that upon a fair construction of the certificate of the commissioners, the execution of the commission was legal and proper.

Mr. Justice THOMPSON delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes up on a writ of error to the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia, and the questions for decision grow out of bills of exception taken at the trial, and relate to the admission of evidence offered on the part of the plaintiff and objected to by the defendant.

The first objection was to the admission of the depositions taken under a commission issued under a rule or order of the court below, on the ground of a variance in the name of 6*] *the testator, Meade, as set out in the commission, from that stated in the title of the cause. The commission purports to be in a cause between Richard M. Meade, plaintiff, and Richard R. Keene, defendant, whereas, the name of the plaintiff is Richard W. Meade. The whole variance, therefore, consists in the use of M instead of W, the middle letter in the plaintiff's name. This objection, we think, Peters 3.

was properly overruled. It was a mere clerical mistake in making out the commission. The rule or order of the court for the commission was in the right name, Richard W. Meade; and the oath taken by the commissioners and administered to the clerk, and the witnesses who were examined, and all the proceedings under the commission were in the cause according to its right title. It was a mistake of the officer of the court, which the court on motion might have corrected on the return of the commission. It may be regarded as mere matter of form, and which has not in any manner misled the parties. And, indeed, it may well be questioned whether the defendant was at liberty to raise this objection. It has been urged at the bar that this was an ex-parte commission taken out by the plaintiff, and that the defendant has therefore waived nothing. But the record now before this court warrants no such conclusion. The mode and manner of taking out the commission is governed and regulated by the practice of the court below, and of which this court cannot judge. From the commission itself, and the interrogatories upon which the witnesses were examined, it would appear to have been a joint commission. The commissioners are required to examine all witnesses named or produced to them, either by the plaintiff or the defendant. And one of the interrogatories put to the witnesses was, "Do you know of any sum or sums of money paid by the defendant to the plaintiff in money, bills, or merchandises, which are not credited in the amount now before you?" It can hardly be presumed that such an interrogatory would have been put by the plaintiff. It was to elicit matter of defense, and which concerned the defendant only. The motion for the commission having been made by the plaintiff would not preclude the defendant from afterwards *joining in [*7 it with the consent of the plaintiff. And if it is to be viewed as a joint commission, the alleged mistake may be considered as made by both parties, and not to be taken advantage of by either; and, besides, it may well be questioned whether the middle letter formed any part of the Christian name of Meade. It is said the law knows only of one Christian name. And there are adjudged cases strongly countenancing, if not fully establishing, that the entire omission of a middle letter is not a misnomer or variance (Lit., 3, a; 1 Lord Ray., 563; 5 Johns., 84; 4 Johns., 119, note a); and if so, the middle letter is immaterial, and a wrong letter may be stricken out or disregarded.

The general objection to the testimony taken under the commission on account of the alleged variance having been overruled, the plaintiff's counsel read the deposition of F. Rudolph, which, in that part which went to prove the first item of $250 in the plaintiff's account, states that the defendant made the entry on the plaintiff's rough cash book himself; writing his name at full length at his request, not so much for the sake of the receipt as in order for him to become acquainted with his signature and the way of spelling his name. The witness fully proved the actual payment of the money. But the defendant objected to such parol proof, as written evidence of the payment existed and should be produced. This objection we think not well founded. The entry of the advance made by the defendant himself, under the circumstances stated, cannot be considered better evidence, within the sense and meaning of the rule on that subject, than proof of the actual payment. The entry in the cash book did not change the nature of the contract arising from the loan, or operate as an extinguishment of it, as a bond or other sealed instrument would have done. If the original entry had been produced, the handwriting of the defendant must have been proved, a much more uncertain inquiry than the fact of actual payment. It cannot be laid down as an universal rule that where written evidence of a fact exists, all parol evidence of the same fact must be excluded. Suppose the defendant had written a letter to the plaintiff acknowledging the 8*] receipt of the *money, it certainly could not be pretended that the production of this letter would be indispensable and exclude all parol evidence of the advance. And yet it would be written evidence. The entry made by the defendant in the cash book was not intended or understood to be a receipt for the money, but made for a different purpose; and even if a promissory note had been given as written evidence of the loan, the action might have been brought for money lent, and this proved by parol. The note must have been produced on the trial; not, however, as the only competent evidence of the loan, but to be cancelled, so as to prevent its being put into circulation; a reason which does not in any manner apply to the present case. This objection has been argued at the bar, as if the court permitted the plaintiff to withdraw or expunge that part of the deposition which related to the written acknowledgment, in order to let in the parol evidence. But this view of it is not warranted by the bill of exceptions. This was offered to be done by the plaintiff's counsel, but no such permission was given by the court. The parol evidence was deemed admissible, notwithstanding the written entry of the advance. The parol evidence did not in any manner vary or contradict the written entry, and no objection could be made to it on that ground. Nor does the nonproduction of the written entry afford any inference that, if produced, it would have operated to the prejudice of the plaintiff. Nor can it in any manner injure the defendant. The production of the written entry in evidence would not protect the defendant from another action for the same cause, as seemed to be supposed on the argument. The charge would not be cancelled on the book, but remains the same as before trial; and the defendant's protection against another action depends on entirely different grounds.

By the second bill of exceptions, several objections appear to have been taken to the reading of the depositions. These relate principally to the proceedings before the commissioners.

1. It is objected that the commissioners have not certified in whose handwriting the depositions were taken down.

9*] *We are not aware of any practice in the execution and return of a commission requiring such a certificate. And all that the commission requires is that the commissioners, having reduced the depositions taken by them to writing, should send the same with the commission, under their hands and seals, to the judges of the Circuit Court. But it is immaterial in whose handwriting the depositions are; and it cannot be required that they should certify any immaterial fact.

2. The second exception is that the commissioners have not certified that they had appointed a clerk, and administered to him the oath required by the commission.

This exception does not appear to be sustained in point of fact.

The commission directs the commissioners to administer the annexed oath to the person whom they shall appoint as clerk. And they certify that they had administered the oath annexed to the commission to James M'Cann, the clerk they were going to employ for the execution of the same. This certificate admits of no other reasonable interpretation than that the person named was the one appointed by them as clerk, and it states in terms that the prescribed oath was administered to him. The inference from the certificate is irresistible that the person employed as the clerk was the one to whom the oath was administered. And this is all the commission required. If employed as clerk, it follows, of course, that he must have been appointed as such. If objections like this are to set aside, testimony taken under a commission, but very few returns will stand the test.

3. The third exception is that the witnesses were not required to testify all their knowledge and remembrance of anything that related to the said cause.

The commission does not prescribe the form of oath, but directs generally that the witnesses produced should be examined upon their corporal oaths, to be administered by the commissioners, touching their knowledge or remembrance of anything that may relate to the cause aforesaid.

The commissioners do not certify what oath was administered *to the witnesses, [*10 but by way of caption to the interrogatories, state that "in compliance with our duty we shall examine the witnesses upon the following interrogatories, which we deem necessary first to establish." This form of expression may not be very accurate or intelligible. It may probably arise from what is required of the commissioners by their own oath, which is to examine the witnesses upon the interrogatories now, or which may hereafter, before the said commission is closed, be produced to and left with the commissioners by either of the said parties. The interrogatories which followed this caption were probably those which the commissioners had before them when the examination commenced; and, if so, it was proper for them first to examine the witnesses upon those interrogatories, leaving the examination open to such other interrogatories as might be submitted to them before the commission closed. But whatever might be the reason for this particular form of expression, it is not perceived that it warrants any conclusion that a proper oath was not administered to the witnesses. It cannot be presumed that these interrogatories were framed by the commissioners. It would be against the usual course of taking testimony on a commission, and, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we must assume that these interrogatories were framed by the parties in the ordinary course of such proceedings. And if this was a joint commission, as there is reasonable grounds to conclude it was, the interrogatories put to the witnesses did require them to testify as to all their knowledge of anything that related to the cause, or at all events to whatever the parties supposed related to it. And the commissioners expressly certify in their return that the witnesses produced and examined were sworn. The form of the oath administered to the witnesses is not set out in the return, nor is it necessary that it should be; and there is nothing from which the court can infer that the proper oath was not administered.

There is, therefore, no well-founded objection taken to the execution of this commission, [11*] and the depositions were properly admitted in evidence. The judgment of the court below is accordingly affirmed.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, holden in and for the County of Washington, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is considered, ordered, and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed, with costs and damages, at the rate of six per centum per annum.

Aff'g 3 Cranch, C. C., 51.
Cited—Hemp., 591.

12*] *THE UNITED STATES, Plaintiff's
in Error,
v.

THOMAS BUFORD, Defendant in Error.

Money received for the use of the United States—treasury statement—assignment to the government—statute of limitations—pleading—practice.

When money of the United States has been received by one public agent from another public agent, whether it was received in an official or private capacity, there can be no doubt but that it was received to the use of the United States; and they may maintain an action against the receiver for the same. [28]

B., a Deputy Commissary-General of the United States, received from M., a Deputy Quartermaster-General of the United States, the sum of $10,000, and acknowledged the same by a receipt signed by him with his official description. The United States had a right to treat M. as their agent in the transaction, by making B. their debtor, and to an action brought against him for money had and received, the statute of limitations is no bar. [29]

An account stated at the Treasury Department which does not arise in the ordinary mode of doing business in that department, can derive no additional validity from being certified under the Act of Congress. A treasury statement can only be regarded as establishing items for moneys disbursed through the ordinary channels of the department, where the transactions are shown by its books. In these cases the officers may well certify, for they must have official knowledge of the facts stated. [29]

But when moneys come into the hands of an individual, not through the officers of the treasury or in the regular course of official duty, the books of the treasury do not exhibit the facts, nor can they be known to the officers of the department. In such a case the claim of the United States for money thus in the hands of a third person must be established, not by a treasury statement, but by the evidence on which that statement was made.

Peters 3.

[29]

In England any instrument or claim, though not negotiable, may be assigned to the king, who can sue upon it in his own name. No valid objection is perceived against giving the same effect to an assignment to the government of this country. [30]

Where, before the transfer to the United States of an instrument which was the evidence of debt, the term of five years had elapsed, the period after which the statute of limitations was a bar, it can require no argument to show that the transfer of such claim to the United States cannot give it any greater validity than it possessed before the transfer. [30]

In the correct order of pleading it is necessary that the facts of the plea should be traversed by the replication, unless matter in avoidance be set up. It is not sufficient that the facts alleged in the replication be inconsistent with those stated in the plea; an issue must be taken on the material allegations of the plea. [31]

This court has repeatedly decided that the exercise of the discretion of the court below in refusing or granting amendments of pleadings or motions for new trials, affords no grounds for a writ of error. In overruling a motion for leave to withdraw a replication and file a new one, the court exercised its discretion; and the reason assigned, as influencing that discretion, cannot affect the decision. [31]

 ERROR to the Circuit Court of [*13
Kentucky.

The United States instituted an action of assumpsit in the Circuit Court of Kentucky to recover the sum of $10,000 from the defendant, which they alleged to have been received by him to their use. The claim of the United States arose under the following circumstances:

On the 21st December, 1812, at Lexington, Kentucky, James Morrison, a Deputy Quartermaster-General of the Army of the United States, paid to the defendant in error, Thomas Buford, then a Deputy Commissary of the United States, the sum of ten thousand dollars, and took from Mr. Buford a receipt for the same in the following words:

LEXINGTON, 21st December, 1822.

Received of James Morrison, Deputy Quartermaster-General, ten thousand dollars, for which sum I promise to account when called upon.

THOS. BUFORD,

Deputy Commissary, U. S. A.

Upon the settlement of his account with the United States, Mr. Morrison claimed a credit for the sum thus paid to Mr. Buford, which credit was refused to him; and afterwards, on the 3d March, 1823, Congress passed "an Act for the relief of James Morrison," by which the accounting officers of the treasury were authorized to allow to him in the settlement of his accounts the sum so advanced to Mr. Buford, "provided that the said James Morrison shall first assign and transfer to the United States all his right and claim to the moneys mentioned in a certain receipt given by the said Thomas Buford to the said James Morrison, bearing date the 21st day of December, 1812," with a proviso that if James Morrison should not be found indebted to the United States the whole of the amount so to be assigned, the balance should be repaid to him.

On the 7th of March, 1823, James Morrison made the following assignment to the United States, in compliance with the Act of Congress:

"*Now I, James Morrison, in pursu- [*14
ance of the provisions of the said law, do hereby assign and transfer to the said United States all my right and claim to the moneys mentioned in the said receipt. Witness my hand and seal, this 7th day of March, 1823.

"JAMES MORRISON."

Test. H. CLAY,
A. D. HARDIN.

Upon the execution of this assignment and the surrender of the receipt, the following account was made out and certified at the Treasury of the United States.

Dr. Thomas Buford, late Deputy Commissary, in account with the U. S. Cr.

GENERAL ACCOUNT OF ARREARAGES.

| | |
|---|-------------------------------------|
| To James Morrison, for amount received from him per receipt 21st December, 1812, for which he is accountable, | By bal. due U. States, - - $10,000 |
| $10,000 | |
| To bal. per contra, $10,000 | |

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, 3d Auditor's Office, March 7th, 1823.

Stated by RD. BURGESS.

Pursuant to the provisions of the Act of Congress passed 3d March, 1817, entitled, "An Act to provide for the prompt settlement of public accounts," a transcript of the account so stated and settled was certified for the purpose of maintaining a claim on Thomas Buford for the balance which thus appeared to be due to the United States.

In August, 1823, the attorney of the United States filed a declaration in the suit, in the District Court of Kentucky, for money had and received, which declaration set forth "that the defendant, on the 10th day of March, 1823, was indebted to the United States in the sum of ten thousand dollars, for so much money before that time had and received as an officer of the United States to their use, as by the account of the said defendant with the said United States, duly settled, examined and adjusted 15"] at the Treasury *Department on the said 10th day of March, 1823, and to the court shown, duly certified according to the Act of Congress of the United States in such case made and provided, fully appears."

To this declaration the defendant pleaded:

1. After oyer of the account; that the plaintiffs actio non, because "the declaration and the matters and things therein contained are not good and sufficient in law to have and maintain the said action," &c.

2. Because he does not owe the debt in the declaration mentioned and demanded, &c.

3. Because James Morrison, the assignor of the receipt and demand to the said plaintiffs, was, at the time of and before said assignment, and remained until the time of his death, indebted to him in a much larger sum of money than the said sum demanded, for money had and received by said Morrison to the use and benefit of said defendant; for money before that time lent and advanced at his special instance and request; for money paid, laid out and expended, at his like special instance and request; and being so indebted, said Morrison assumed upon himself and promised to pay said defendant the aforesaid sum of money whenever he should be thereunto afterwards requested; yet the said Morrison has not paid said defendant the aforesaid sum of money, or any part thereof; nor have the executors or administrators of said Morrison, since his death, or anyone for him or them, paid said defendant said sum of money, or any part thereof, but the same remains wholly unpaid; which said sum of money, or so much thereof as is equal to the demand of said plaintiffs, the said defendant offers to set off, and pleads as a set-off against said plaintiffs' demand, &c.

4. Because the cause of action and demand set forth by the plaintiffs did not accrue within five years next before the impetration of the original writ in the cause.

To these several pleas the plaintiffs demurred, for insufficiency; and the demurrer being overruled, the United States replied: "The matters and things contained in the third plea of the defendant are not good and sufficient in law to bar and *preclude the United [16 States from having and maintaining their action; and they further say that the matters and things contained in the fifth plea of the defendant of the statute of limitations are not good and sufficient in law to bar and preclude the plaintiffs from having their action," &c.

The court sustained the demurrer, and ordered that the third and fifth plea be overruled, and gave time to the defendant to put in other pleas.

And afterwards, at October Term, 1824, of the court, the defendant pleaded actio non, because the account upon which the plaintiffs' suit is founded was for money alleged to have been advanced by James Morrison to the defendant on the 21st day of December, 1812, in the district aforesaid, amounting to the sum of $10,000, for which, by the terms of the transaction and the express agreement of said parties thereto, said Buford was to account to said Morrison for the same, and that said account and claim of said Morrison was, on the 7th day of March, 1823, under and by virtue of an Act of Congress, assigned and transferred by said Morrison to said plaintiffs; and the said defendant in fact says, that said demand and cause of action aforesaid did not accrue to said Morrison within five years next before said assignment aforesaid, &c.

7. That on the 21st day of December, 1812, this defendant received from a certain James Morrison, the sum of ten thousand dollars, and executed to him a receipt therefor, that is to say, in the Commonwealth and District of Kentucky; and on the 7th day of March, 1823, the said Morrison assigned by his certain writing, to which is subscribed his proper hand, all his right and claim to the money in the said receipt specified as aforesaid, and upon that receipt and assignment aforesaid, and without any other consideration, and without the consent and privity of the defendant, the account in the declaration mentioned was settled, examined and adjusted at the Treasury Department of the United States, to which settlement and adjustment this defendant has at no time assented. And the defendant says that he did not undertake and assume to pay the said debt in the declaration *mentioned within five [17 years next before the assignment by the said Morrison, nor then, nor at any time subsequent.

8. Because he says that the assumpsit and demand of said plaintiff arose upon and by virtue of a claim which was held by virtue of one James Morrison for money by him advanced and loaned to said defendant on the 21st day of December, 1812, and which claim and demand of said Morrison was, by virtue of an Act of Congress on the 7th day of March, 1828, assigned and transferred to said plaintiffs. And the defendant in fact says that the said cause of action did not accrue or arise within five years next before the suing out of the original writ in this cause, &c.

9. And because the claim and demand of said plaintiffs was derived by assignment and transfer from James Morrison of a certain writing executed by the defendant to said Morrison acknowledging the receipt of ten thousand dollars by the defendant from Morrison, stipulating to account therefor to said Morrison under and by virtue of an Act of Congress, which assignment as aforesaid was made on the 7th day of March, 1823, and for no other consideration whatever. And the defendant in fact says that said Morrison, before and at the date of said assignment in the district aforesaid, was indebted to said defendant in a sum equal to the sum demanded by said plaintiff, to wit, the sum of eleven thousand dollars, for money by said defendant before that time loaned and advanced to the said Morrison for money had and received by said Morrison to the use of said defendant, and for money by said defendant paid, laid out and expended for said Morrison, and all at the special instance and request of said Morrison; and being so indebted, he, said Morrison, in consideration thereof, then and there assumed upon himself and promised said defendant to pay said sums of money whenever he should be thereto afterwards requested, and although often requested has not paid the same, which said sum of money said defendant is here willing and offers to set off against the plaintiffs' demand.

To the ninth plea the attorney of the United States filed a replication stating that the United States ought not to be barred by anything therein contained, because he says that [18*] the said James Morrison was not, at the date of said assignment in said plea mentioned, indebted to the said defendant, as in pleading the defendant hath alleged. Upon this replication issue was joined.

To the sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas the plaintiffs replied that the United States ought not to be barred by anything contained in the said pleas, because the demand in the declaration accrued for and in consideration of $10,000 of and belonging to the United States and by the said James Morrison as an officer of the United States, advanced to the said Thomas Buford as an officer of the United States, to wit, as Deputy Commissary of the United States, then and there, and to the use of the said United States, and by the said Thomas Buford in his official character as Deputy Commissary as aforesaid, receipted for to James Morrison in his official character as Deputy Quartermaster General. And the said attorney for the United States brings here into court the said receipt signed with the proper name of said Thomas, and in his official character as aforesaid, and assignment, and the Act of the Congress of the United States in the sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas of the defendants mentioned, duly certified according to the Acts Peters 3.

of the Congress of the United States in such case made and provided, which said sum of money of and belonging to the United States so as aforesaid advanced by the said Deputy Quartermaster-General to the said Deputy Commissary of the United States, and so as aforesaid receipted for, by said Thomas Buford as Deputy Commissary as aforesaid, is the same money and receipt and assignment in the said sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas of the defendant mentioned, and this the said attorney of the United States is ready to verify, wherefore, &c.

The defendant after craving oyer of the writing in the replication to the sixth, seventh, and eight pleas, rejoined that by reason of anything by the plaintiffs alleged in replying to the sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas of the defendant, the plaintiffs ought not to have and maintain their action against the defendant, because he says that the money received by him from the said Morrison was received upon an *individual transaction between the [*19] said Morrison and the defendant, and the express understanding and agreement that the defendant was to account therefor with the said Morrison, and not upon any contract for this defendant to account with the plaintiffs, and of this he puts himself upon the country.

The plaintiffs surrejoined and stated that the money demanded by the declaration and expressed in the receipt and assignment in the sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas of the defendants, was the proper money of the United States, lent and advanced by said Quartermaster-General to the said Thomas Buford, as Deputy Commissary, and to the use of the said United States, as in the replication to the said pleas, six, seven, and eight, is alleged.

The defendant demurred, and the United States having joined in the demurrer, the court gave judgment "that the law was with the defendant."

Afterwards, at a subsequent day of this same term, "the attorney for the United States moved to withdraw the replication to the pleas of the statute of limitation for the purpose of replying thereto a written agreement produced in court by the attorney, under the hand and seal of James Morrison and the said Buford, respecting the statute of limitations."

The writing referred to was as follows:

"Whereas, there is an item of ten thousand dollars in the account of James Morrison, late Deputy Quartermaster-General, charged by him as paid to Thomas Buford, Deputy Commissary-General, United States Army, or of purchases in December, 1812, suspended on the allegation by the proper officer of the War Department for the United States that Morrison should look to Buford for this money, and Morrison having been advised that it would be proper that he should institute a suit against Buford so as to preclude any question about the statute of limitations; but being willing to await a reasonable time to let Buford show, if he can, that said sum was paid, or properly accounted for by him; now Morrison agrees that he will not bring suit before 1st day of June, 1819, and Buford agrees that if suit is brought thereafter the statute of limitation should be no bar to Morrison's *recovery, if he is [*20] otherwise entitled to recover. In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals, this 20th day of December, 1819."

This motion was overruled by the court.

The record contained the following memorandum: "After the demurrer decided in this cause, the attorney for the United States produced the writing between James Morrison and said Buford respecting the statute of limitations, in the words and figures following (inserted), and moved for leave to withdraw the demurrer to the pleas of the statute of limitations for the purpose of replying to the said writing, and for cause shown, that he had come to the possession and knowledge of said writing since the decision of the court upon the demurrer. The court overruled the motion upon the ground that the writing would not be an avoidance of the statute, but only a substantive cause of action for breach of said covenant, expressing, however, that leave should be given if the writing would be a sufficient reply and evidence of the statute of limitations, to which opinion of the court in refusing to withdraw the demurrer and to reply the attorney for the United States excepted, and brought this writ of error."

The case was argued by Mr. Berrien, Attorney-General of the United States, for the plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. Wickliffe and Mr. Ogden for the defendant.

The Attorney-General contended that the court in pronouncing its judgment was bound to look at the whole record, and give judgment accordingly. (1 Stephens on Pleading, 163.) The original error was in allowing the plea of the statute of limitations, which could only be sustained on the ground that the United States had no original cause of action against Thomas Buford, and that the limitation had attached before this action was brought.

1. The United States had an original and good cause of action.

2. That if the assignment is to be referred to, still the right of action is in the United States. 21 3. The treasury settlement was conclusive against the defendant, and whether the right of action existed originally or derivatively, the statute was no bar to the suit by the United States.

As to the first point: the declaration alleges, and the replication and surrejoinder reiterate the allegation, that "this was the proper money of the United States, received by the defendant to the use of the United States," and the demurrer on the part of the defendant admitted the same. If the money of the United States is advanced by one agent of the government to another, this is prima facie, by necessary implication, an advance to the use of the government. In the case before the court, by the terms of the receipt given by the defendant, this is shown; as the receipt acknowledges the money to have been paid by James Morrison, "Deputy Quartermaster-General of the United States," to Thomas Buford, "Deputy-Commissary General;" and promises to account for the same. To whom was he to account but to "the Deputy Quartermaster-General," the agent of the United States. The money was received by the defendant as an officer of the United States from Morrison as an officer, and was therefore received to the use of the United States.

Under the provisions of the Act of Congress of 20th March, 1812, it was the duty of the Commissary-General to account to the Quartermaster-General, and thus the obligations of duty and those assumed by the receipt were the same. The transaction was official in its character, and was, therefore, one in which the rights of the United States were in full operation. Had Buford, in his accounts as an officer, in the settlement of those accounts with the United States given, credit for this sum, he would have been discharged from all liability to Morrison for the amount.

If the claim of the United States is to rest on the receipt given to Morrison and the assignment made of it under the Act of Congress, it was contended that the law which authorized the transfer gave to the receipt an assignable character, and authorized the United States to sue upon it in this form.

*The treasury settlement was evidence [*22] against the defendant, as he was within the objects of the provisions of the act. (Walton v. The United States, 9 Wheaton, 651.) In every case of "delinquency" in an officer, or anyone accountable to the United States, the settlement is evidence; and the privity or consent of the debtor is not required to give it validity.

The statute of limitations of Kentucky is not a bar to the suit of the United States. (The United States v. Hour, 2 Mass. Rep., 311.)

If the claim of the United States was under the assignment only, as the receipt is a promise "to account when called upon;" until called upon there was no cause of action, and the promise was not broken until the defendant was called on.

The court should have admitted the replication to be withdrawn, and the agreement between Buford and Morrison was a good answer to the plea of the statute of limitations.

Although the rule is admitted that error does not lie for matters in the discretion of a court, yet exceptions to this rule exist, and this is a case for an exception. (Manderville v. Wilson, 5 Cranch, 15.) The plaintiffs had no knowledge of the agreement which they desired to give in evidence until after the demurrer to the defendant's pleas; and he desired to make this a distinct matter in reply to allegation that the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. (Cited, Young v. The Commonwealth, 6 Binney's Reports, 88; Marine Insurance Company v. Hodgson, 6 Cranch's Rep., 206.)

The court having stated the reasons for the refusal of the motion of the plaintiff, they may therefore be examined; and when examined they will be found to be erroneous, and may be assigned as error. It was error to refuse the motion, because the plaintiffs were thus excluded from the benefit and legal operation of the evidence; and having the construction of the evidence presented for the decision of this court, if it should have been necessary. Upon a fair examination of the state of the [*23] pleadings, the plaintiffs' claim should have been allowed.

The agreement was a good bar to the statute. Its object was to prevent the operation of the statute. By it Morrison agreed not to bring suit before a day named, and Buford agreed that if suit should be brought thereafter, the statute should not be a bar.

In England the courts proceed on the principle that the bar created by the statute rests "on the presumption of payment," and whatever repels the presumption takes the case out of its operation. (2 Stark on Ev., 892.) The agreement between Morrison and Buford does this effectually. It admits the debt to have existed; it provides that time shall be allowed to show payment, and it implies a promise of payment on the condition of forbearance.

Mr. Wickliffe and Mr. Ogden, for the defendant, argued, that the liability of the defendant upon the receipt, was a private, and not a public responsibility; although the official description of the parties was used, it did not therefore become an act of an official character. The Deputy Quartermaster-General had no right to advance or pay the money of the United States to the Deputy Commissary. The officers were in different spheres, each accountable to their government, and not to each other. This is declared by the provisions of the fifth section of the Act of Congress of 1812.

Such were the views of the accounting officers of the treasury upon this subject, and therefore they considered the advance made by Morrison to Buford illegal. A special act of Congress was necessary to authorize the credit and to make the charge against Buford legal in the Treasury Department. It was legal from the date of that act, and not before. This was therefore a transaction between two officers of the government, unconnected in their official duties, and the United States did not necessarily derive from the same a right of action against the receiver of the money.

The provisions of the Acts of Congress authorizing treasury settlements and making them evidence, did not apply to such a case. These laws comprehended cases of disbursing officers liable to account to the United States; and the 24 certificate of the Treasury Department could be controverted by the defendant, and he had a right to do so by the usual practice and forms of pleading.

The sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas are good, if the defendant was not indebted to the United States. It is admitted that the statute of limitations does not run against the United States, but as between Morrison and Buford it did run; and when the assignment of the claim on the receipt was made the statute had attached, and the United States were in no better situation than was that of Morrison before and at the time of the assignment. The suit should have been instituted by the plaintiffs, as assignees, and it would have been in that form subject to the rights of the defendant growing out of the statute of limitations, and to all the offsets to which the defendant was entitled in his particular and private relations with Morrison.

The United States, if they claimed on the receipt and assignment, and desired to show that the statute did not run, should have stated the same in their replication, by alleging a demand within five years.

The case comes up without any opinion of the court upon the point of law. There is a question of law which arises in the pleadings, they having ended in a demurrer; and the pleadings, it is submitted, present the only question in the cause. The receipt is not in question. It may show a responsibility to Peters 3.

the United States by the defendant; but as it is not in the pleadings, it cannot aid the plaintiffs' case.

The question for the decision of this court is not whether the declaration is good, but whether the pleas are good. If they are, the defendant must go without day.

The declaration whether it must be considered as general or special, is a statement of a debt due to Morrison and assigned to the United States, and the pleas allege that if the debt existed it is barred by the statute of limitations, and there is no claim. This is not met by the United States. They do not traverse this, and thus put it in issue; nor do they traverse the defendant's allegation which is made, that the transaction with Morrison was private. The replication is therefore defective.

*It is not seen how this court can look [25 any further into the pleadings on a demurrer, and it must be conceded that the error is in the replication. The matters asserted in the pleas stand uncontradicted, and must be taken as true against the plaintiff. This is decisive of the cause. If Buford was, by the terms of the receipt, liable on demand, a demand should have been alleged.

The refusal of the court, after judgment in favor of the defendant, to allow the plaintiffs to withdraw the replication in order to set up the agreement, was in the exercise of their discretion, and not examinable in this court. To admit as ground of error the refusal of motions of this kind would be productive of frequent injustice. The record never shows why acts of the character of that complained of are done, and thus a superior court would often be found proceeding upon very different circumstances from those which existed in the case.

It is doubtful whether it is within the province of a court to interfere with such a decision as that now objected to. It is not a final judgment; and the final judgment upon the pleadings in the case is yet subsisting and must remain until reversed. The motion was to set aside the judgment, and this is not a ground of error. The rule is invariable that there should be something in the record upon which the court can exercise their judgment.

The principle recognized in this court in Bell v. Morrison (1 Peters, 351), in reference to the statute of limitations, establish the rule to be that an acknowledgment of the debt will not take the case out of the statute. There must be a promise to pay the debt. The courts of Kentucky have held these principles to be correct, and they support the decision of the Circuit Court upon the agreement between the defendant and Morrison.

Mr. Justice M'LEAN delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by writ of error from the Circuit Court of Kentucky to reverse a judgment obtained in that court against a claim prosecuted by the United States. The following errors are assigned by the Attorney-General:

*1. That the judgment of the Circuit [26 Court on the defendant's demurrer to the surrejoinder of the plaintiffs growing out of the sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas of the defendant, ought to have been for the plaintiffs, and not for the defendant.

2. That the court erred in not permitting the plaintiffs to withdraw their replication to the defendant's several pleas of limitation, and to plead the special agreement on that subject between Morrison and Buford.

The declaration contains but one count, in which it is alleged that the defendant was indebted to the United States in the sum of ten thousand dollars, for so much money by him before that time had and received as an officer of the United States to their use, as by account of the said defendant with the said United States, settled, examined and adjusted, at the Treasury Department, duly certified, fully appears, &c.

The treasury statement is as follows:

Dr. Thomas Buford, late Deputy Commissary, in account with the United States,

To James Morrison, for amount received from him per receipt, 21st December, 1812, for which he is accountable, - - - - - $10,000

The receipt referred to is in the following words:

Received of James Morrison, Deputy Quartermaster-General, ten thousand dollars, for which sum I promise to account to him when called on. Signed, Thomas Buford, Deputy Commissary of U. S. A.

Under the following Act of Congress this receipt was assigned to the United States:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, that the accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby authorized to allow James Morrison, late Deputy Quartermaster-General, in the settlement of his accounts, the sum of ten thousand dollars, which was advanced by James H. Pendell, an assistant Deputy Quartermaster-General, providing that the said James Morrison shall first assign and transfer to the United States all his right 27] and claim to the moneys mentioned *in a certain receipt by said Thomas Buford to said James Morrison, bearing date the 21st day of December, in the year 1812, &c." The words of the assignment are: "Now, I, James Morrison, in pursuance of the provisions of said law, do hereby assign and transfer to the United States all my right and claim to the moneys mentioned in said receipt. Witness my hand and seal this 7th day of March, 1823. Signed, James Morrison."

In the sixth plea the defendant says the plaintiffs actio non, because he says that the account upon which the plaintiffs' suit is founded was for money alleged to have been advanced by James Morrison to the defendant on the 21st day of December, 1812, in the district aforesaid, amounting to the sum of ten thousand dollars, for which, by the terms of the transaction and agreement of said parties thereto, said Buford was to account to said Morrison for the same, and that said account and claim of said Morrison was, on the 7th day of March, 1823, under and by virtue of an Act of Congress, assigned and transferred by said Morrison to said plaintiffs, and the said defendant in fact says that said demand and cause of action aforesaid did not accrue to said Morrison within five years next before said assignment, and this he is ready to verify," &c.

The seventh plea states the receipt of the money by the defendant from Morrison, the assignment of the receipt; and that without any other consideration, and without the consent and privity of the defendant, the account in the declaration mentioned was settled at the treasury, to which he has at no time assented; and the defendant says that he did not undertake and assume to pay the said debt in the declaration mentioned within five years next before the assignment by the said Morrison, nor then, nor at any time subsequent.

In the eighth plea the defendant says that the assumpsit and demand of said plaintiffs arose from and by virtue of a claim which was held by one James Morrison, for money by him advanced and loaned to said defendant, which was assigned, &c.

The attorney for the United States, in his replication, says that by anything contained in the sixth, seventh, and eighth *pleas of [28 the defendant, they ought not to be barred, because they say that the said demand in the declaration accrued for and in consideration of ten thousand dollars of and belonging to the United States, and by the said James Morrison as an officer of the United States, advanced to the said Thomas Buford as an officer of the United States, to wit, as Deputy Commissary, then and there to the use of the United States, and by the said Thomas Buford, in his official character as aforesaid, receipted to said James Morrison in his official character as Deputy Quartermaster-General, and the said attorney brings here into court the said receipt, signed with the proper name of the said Thomas in his official character as aforesaid, the assignment, and the Act of Congress, in the sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas of the defendant mentioned, duly certified, &c., which sum of money is the same as referred to in the above pleas, &c.

To this replication there is a rejoinder by the defendant asserting that the above sum of money was received upon an individual transaction, &c. The attorney for the United States, in his surrejoinder, says that the said money demanded by the declaration and expressed in said receipt and assignment in the sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas of the defendant, was the proper money of the United States, lent and advanced by the said Quartermaster-General to the said Thomas Buford as Deputy Commissary, and to the use of the said United States, &c.

To this the defendant demurs, which presents for consideration the sufficiency of the sixth, seventh, and eighth pleas of the defendant.

In behalf of the government it is contended, 1. That a good cause of action by the United States against Buford existed prior to the assignment.

2. That the treasury settlement gave a right of action, and also the assignment.

3. If the sum received by Buford from Morrison was public money, whether it was received in an official or private capacity, there can be no doubt that Buford received it to the use of the United States, and that they may maintain an action against him.

*The United States had a right to treat [29 Morrison as their agent in this transaction by making Buford their debtor, and to an action brought against him for money had and received the statute of limitations would be no bar. It is therefore important to consider on what ground the plaintiffs seek to recover in this case.

Is the declaration general or special? It contains only one count, and that sets out the cause of action arising from a settled account at the Treasury Department. The declaration must therefore be considered as special, and if the plaintiffs recover, they must recover upon the ground stated.

The treasury statement, the receipt and the assignment of it, are made a part of the declaration.

An account stated at the Treasury Department, which does not arise in the ordinary mode of doing business in that department, can derive no additional validity from being certified under the Act of Congress. Such a statement can only be regarded as establishing items for moneys disbursed through the ordinary channels of the department, where the transactions are shown by its books. In these cases the officers may well certify, for they must have official knowledge of the facts stated.

But where moneys come into the hands of an individual, as in the case under consideration, the books of the treasury do not exhibit the facts, nor can they be officially known to the officers of the department. In this case, therefore, the claim must be established, not by the treasury statement, but by the evidence on which that statement was made.

The account against Buford is founded on the receipt, and was made out on the day it was assigned by Morrison, under the special Act of Congress. Until this time Morrison was charged on the books of the treasury with this sum of ten thousand dollars, and there can be no doubt that he and his sureties were liable for it.

As the advance of this sum to Buford was not made in pursuance of any authority, the treasury officers had no right to release Morrison from liability by crediting his account with so much money paid to Buford.

The declaration being special upon the treasury account, *and the account being raised upon the assignment of the receipt, the claim of the United States to the sum in controversy as presented cannot be considered as existing prior to the assignment.

It is objected that, under this assignment, the United States may claim as assignees in equity, but not at law. This objection seems not to be well founded. In England any instrument or claim, though not negotiable, may be assigned to the king, who can sue on it in his own name. No valid objection is perceived against giving the same effect to an assignment to the government in this country. But the special Act under which this assignment was made puts this question at rest. This Act authorizes the assignment; consequently, when made, the legal right is vested in the government, and authorizes a charge against Buford on the books of the treasury.

As more than five years had elapsed from the date of the receipt to the assignment, the statute of limitations will bar a recovery of this claim unless the transfer of it to the United States has changed its character, or the terms of the receipt prevent the statute from operating, or, by some promise or agreement between Morrison and Buford, the statute has been waived.

It can require no argument to show that the transfer of any claim to the United States cannot give to it any greater validity than it possessed in the hands of the assignor. If the character of the claim be so changed as to exempt it from the operation of the statute of limitations after the transfer, such transfer cannot have the effect to take the claim out of the statute when it has run.

But it is contended that as the receipt promises to account for the sum of ten thousand dollars when called on, it was necessary for the defendant to show that no demand had been made, or that five years had elapsed subsequent thereto, and before the assignment.

In his plea the defendant states that the demand and cause of action did not accrue within five years next before said assignment, &c. If a demand had been made so as to prevent the effect of the statute, it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to plead over and allege [*31] the fact. They have not done it, and this allegation of the plea stands uncontradicted, and is consequently admitted to be true.

The defendant in his plea sets out that the loan of the money was obtained from Morrison, to whom the payment was to be made, and represents the transaction as a private one. In the replication the plaintiffs do not traverse this fact, but allege that the money belonged to the United States, and was advanced by Morrison as an officer of the United States to the defendant as an officer.

On the sufficiency of the plea, and the insufficiency of the replication, one of the counsel in the defense rests the cause.

In the correct order of pleading, it is necessary that the facts of the plea should be traversed by the replication, unless matter in avoidance be set up. It is not sufficient that the facts alleged in the replication be inconsistent with those stated in the plea; an issue must be taken on the material allegations of the plea.

In the case under consideration, it was material in the defense to show that the loan of this money was a private transaction, and such is the statement of the plea substantially. This fact should have been traversed in the replication. It was not done, and consequently the replication is bad on demurrer.

The writing set out in the bill of exceptions, it is insisted, shows a waiver of the statute by Buford. This writing was produced after the decision of the court was given on the demurrer, and leave was then asked to withdraw the replication to the plea of the statute of limitations for the purpose of pleading this covenant, of which, it was alleged that the attorney of the United States had no knowledge until after the decision on the demurrer. The court overruled the motion upon the ground that the writing would not be an avoidance of the statute, but afford only a substantive cause of action for a breach of its conditions.

The court, it is contended, in refusing leave to amend, decided the effect of this covenant, and that they erred in their construction of it.

*This court has repeatedly decided that [*32] the exercise of the discretion of the court below, in refusing or granting amendments of pleadings or motions for new trials, affords no ground for a writ of error. In overruling the motion for leave to withdraw the replication and file a new one, the court exercised its discretion, and the reason assigned as influencing that discretion cannot affect the decision.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is considered, ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed.

Criticised—13 How., 483, 485.

Cited—8 Pet., 381; 10 How., 132; 13 How., 483, 485; 17 How., 440, 441; 1 Wall., 598; 11 Wall., 676; 8 Otto, 488; 12 Otto, 554; McAl., 248.

33*] *ALEXANDER GORDON ET AL.,

v.

FRANCIS B. OGDEN.

Jurisdiction—amount in dispute—writ of error.

The plaintiff below claimed more than two thousand dollars in his declaration, but obtained a judgment for a less sum.

The jurisdiction of this court depends on the sum or value in dispute between the parties, as the case stands upon the writ of error in this court; not on that which was in dispute in the Circuit Court. [34]

If the writ of error be brought by the plaintiff below, then the sum which the declaration shows to be due may be still recovered should the judgment for a smaller sum be reversed; and, consequently, the whole sum claimed is still in dispute. [34]

But if the writ of error be brought by the defendant in the original action, the judgment of this court can only affirm that of the Circuit Court, and, consequently, the matter in dispute cannot exceed the amount of that judgment. Nothing but that judgment is in dispute between the parties. [34]

NOTE.—Jurisdiction of U. S. Supreme Court dependent on amount.

Under sec. 22 of the Judiciary Act of 1789, the matter in dispute must be money, or some right, the value of which can be calculated in money, to bring it within the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. DeKraft v. Barney, 2 Black., 704; Lee v. Lee, 8 Pet., 44; Carter v. Cutting, 8 Cranch, 251.

Controversy as to guardianship or custody of children is not within the section. Ritchie v. Manro, 2 Pet., 243; Barry v. Mercein, 5 How., 103.

The amount of the judgment is not material under the 25th sec. of the Judiciary Act, which authorizes a review of decisions in the State courts, against rights claimed under laws or treaties of the United States. Buel v. Van Ness, 8 Wheat., 312.

Nor on a question of personal freedom, the judgment of the court below being against such claims. Lee v. Lee, 8 Pet., 44.

Whatever may have been the amount claimed by the plaintiff in the court below, if the judgment in his favor be less than two thousand dollars, and the writ of error is sued out by the defendant below, the court has no jurisdiction; but if the writ of error in such case is brought by the plaintiff below, provided the amount claimed in his declaration exceeds two thousand dollars, the court has jurisdiction; because, should the judgment be reversed, he may still recover what he claims. Gordon v. Ogden, supra; Smith v. Honey, 3 Pet., 469; Knapp v. Banks, 2 How., 73; Grant v. McKee, 1 Pet., 248; Scott v. Lunt, 6 Pet., 349.

In action on money demand where the general issue is pleaded, the matter in dispute is the debt claimed in the body of the declaration, and not merely the damages alleged or the prayer for judgment at its conclusion. Lee v. Watson, 1 Wall., 337; Shacker v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 3 Otto, 241.

Where the declaration claimed one thousand dol-

WRIT of error to the Circuit Court for the District of Louisiana.

Mr. Ogden moved to dismiss the writ of error in this case, on the ground that the court had not jurisdiction of the cause, the sum in controversy not amounting to two thousand dollars, the amount for which a writ of error is allowed. He stated that the action was instituted for the violation of a patent, and the amount of the recovery in damages was four hundred dollars, by the verdict of the jury. If, under the provision of the patent law, the damages are to be trebled, it will not amount to a sum authorizing the writ of error.

Although the damages laid in the declaration are two thousand six hundred dollars, yet, after verdict, as the writ of error is taken by the defendant below, the only matter in dispute here is the amount of the verdict, or at most, treble that sum, being twelve hundred dollars. If the sum stated in the declaration shall be allowed to ascertain the amount in dispute in every case of tort or of claims of uncertain damages, the plaintiff, who might insert any sum in his declaration, could secure the right to a writ of error to this court.

Mr. Cox, for the plaintiff in error, the defendant below, *on the authority of Wilson v. Daniel (3 Dall. Rep., 401; 1 Condensed Reports, 185), contended that the matter in dispute originally determined the jurisdiction; and in this case the sum stated in the declaration ascertains the amount. He also cited Peyton v. Robertson (9 Wheaton, 527); Cooke v. Woodrow (5 Cranch, 14).

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

A motion had been made to dismiss this writ of error because the court has no jurisdiction over it. The plaintiff below claimed more than lars, and the plea alleged a set-off of four thousand, and judgment might be for the excess: Held, that the sum of three thousand and not one thousand was the amount in controversy, and consequently that the Supreme court had appellate jurisdiction. Ryan v. Bendly, 1 Wall., 66.

Exceptions as to part only will not prevent jurisdiction. United States v. McDaniel, 6 Pet., 634; The Same v. The Same, 7 Pet., 1. Nor apportionment of recovery. Shields v. Thomas, 17 How., 3; Rich v. Lambert, 12 How., 352; Stratton v. Jarvis, 8 Pet., 8; Spear v. Place, 11 How., 525; unless the rights of each party united in the action are separate and distinct. Clifton v. Sheldon, 23 How., 481; Rogers v. the St. Charles, 19 How., 108; Stratton v. Jarvis, 8 Pet., 4; The Rio Grande, 19 Wall., 178; Terry v. Hatch, 3 Otto, 44.

Interest cannot be added to give jurisdiction unless claimed as damages. Udall v. The Ohio, 17 How., 17.

Where the demand is not for money and the nature of the action does not require the value of the thing demanded to be stated in the complaint, the value is allowed to be given in evidence in either court. Ex-parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet., 634; Grant v. McKee, 1 Pet., 248.

The value may be shown by an appraisement by order of the court. United States v. The Union, 4 Cranch, 216; or by an admission, by the parties, of the value. Olwin v. Alexander, 6 Pet., 143.

The value as stated in the proceedings below, cannot be enhanced in the court above by affidavits, in order to give jurisdiction. Richmond v. City of Milwaukee, 21 How., 391.

The penalty in an injunction bond, in the court below cannot be referred to, to give jurisdiction. Brown v. Shannon, 20 How., 55.

Time will be given by the court to procure affidavits as to value of matter in dispute. Rush v. Parker, 5 Cranch, 287.

two thousand dollars in his declaration, but obtained a judgment for a less sum. The defendant below has sued out a writ of error, and contends now that the matter in dispute is not determined by the judgment, but by the sum claimed in the declaration.

This court has jurisdiction over final judgments and decrees of the Circuit Court where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of two thousand dollars. The jurisdiction of the court has been supposed to depend on the sum or value of the matter in dispute in this court, not on that which was in dispute in the Circuit Court. If the writ of error be brought by the plaintiff below, then the sum which his declaration shows to be due may be still recovered, should the judgment for a smaller sum be reversed; and consequently the whole sum claimed is still in dispute. But if the writ of error be brought by the defendant in the original action, the judgment of this court can only affirm that of the Circuit Court, and consequently the matter in dispute cannot exceed the amount of that judgment. Nothing but that judgment is in dispute between the parties. The counsel for the plaintiff in error relies on the case of Wilson v. Daniel (3 Dall. 401). That case, it is admitted, is in point. It turns on the principle that the jurisdiction of this court depends on the sum which was in dispute before the judgment was rendered in the Circuit Court. Although that case was decided by a divided court, and although we think, upon the true construction of the twenty-second section of the Judicial Act, the jurisdiction of the court depends upon the sum in dispute between the parties as the case stands upon the writ of error, we should be much inclined to adhere to the decision in Wilson v. Daniel, had not a contrary practice since prevailed. In Cooke v.

Woodrow *(5 Cranch, 13), this court said, [*35 "if the judgment below be for the plaintiff, that judgment ascertains the value of the matter in dispute." This, however, was said in a case in which the defendant below was plaintiff in error, and in which the judgment was a sufficient sum to give jurisdiction.

The case of Wise and Lynn v. The Columbian Turnpike Company (7 Cranch, 276) was dismissed because the sum for which judgment was rendered in the Circuit Court was not sufficient to give jurisdiction, although the claim before the commissioners of the road, which was the cause of action and the matter in dispute in the Circuit Court, was sufficient. The reporter adds that all the judges were present.

Since this decision we do not recollect that the question has been ever made. The silent practice of the court has conformed to it. The reason of the limitation is that the expense of litigation in this court ought not to be incurred unless the matter in dispute exceeds two thousand dollars. This reason applies only to the matter in dispute between the parties in this court.

We are all of opinion that the writ of error be dismissed, the court having no jurisdiction of the cause.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the District Court of the United States for the District of East Louisiana, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, and of the motion made by Mr. Ogden in this cause on a prior day of this term, to wit, on Thursday, the 28th of January of the present term of this court, to dismiss this writ of error for want of jurisdiction, the amount in controversy not exceeding the sum of two thousand dollars; it is ordered and adjudged by this court that the writ of

But not after a decision of the court as to value. United States v. The Union, 4 Cranch, 216.

A suit for account involving over $2,000: Held, within the appellate jurisdiction. McCormack v. Gray, 13 How., 26.

The sum due on a bond, and not the penalty, determines the jurisdiction. United States v. McDowell, 4 Cranch, 316.

But where the action is for the penalty, the amount of that is the criterion. Postmaster-General v. Cross, 4 Wash. C. C., 326.

In foreclosure, the amount claimed as due determines the question of jurisdiction. Bank of Alexandria v. Hooff, 7 Pet., 168; Sewall v. Chamberlain, 5 How., 6.

On injunction against execution, the amount claimed in the execution, and not the value of the property levied on, is the criterion of jurisdiction. Ross v. Prentice, 3 How., 771.

In bill for specific performance, see as to amount, Brown v. Shannon, 20 How., 55. In replevin, see Peyton v. Robertson, 9 Wheat., 527; as to goods seized for violation of revenue laws, see United States v. Eighty-four boxes of Sugar, 7 Pet., 453. In trover, see Cooke v. Woodrow, 5 Cranch, 13.

Where the libellant recovered in the District Court five hundred dollars, and upon appeal the decree was reversed by the Circuit Court, upon appeal to the Supreme Court the appeal was dismissed, the amount in controversy being but five hundred dollars. The D. R. Martin, 1 Otto, 365.

The amount of the matter in dispute requisite to give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction was increased by the Act of Feb. 16, 1875, ch. 77, s. 318, Stat. at L., 317, from a sum exceeding two thousand, to a sum or value exceeding five thousand dollars.

The Act of 1875 increasing the jurisdictional amount required to warrant an appeal to the Supreme Court, is in premise Court, to a sum exceeding five thousand dollars, makes no difference in the rule that neither interest nor costs upon the judgment below can enter into the computation. When the judgment was for five thousand dollars and costs of suit, it was held that a writ of error would not lie; for the amount did not exceed five thousand dollars. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rogers, 3 Otto, 565.

In actions for money, the amount of the judgment below is, presumably, the criterion for determining the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and unless it exceeds $5,000, an appeal does not lie. Troy v. Evans, 97 U. S.; 7 Otto, 1.

"Whenever, by the laws now in force, it is required that the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum or value of two thousand dollars, exclusive of costs, in order that the judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of the United States may be re-examined in the Supreme Court, such judgments and decrees hereafter rendered shall not be re-examined in the Supreme Court unless the matter in dispute shall exceed the sum or value of five thousand dollars, exclusive of costs." Act of Feb. 16, 1875; 18 Stat. at L., 315; Supplement to the Rev. Stat. of U. S., Vol. I., p. 13, sec. 3.

All cases arising under the provisions of the "Act to protect all citizens in their civil and legal rights," passed March 1, 1875, in the courts of the United States, are reviewable by the Supreme Court of the U. S. without regard to the sum in controversy. 1 Supp. to Rev. Stat. of U. S., 149, sec. 5; 18 Stat. at L., 335.

The judgments and decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the U. S. where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds $2,500. Act of Feb. 25, 1879; 20 Stat. L., 320; 1 Supp. to Rev. S. of U. S., 419, sec. 4.

error in this cause be, and the same is hereby dismissed for want of jurisdiction, on the ground that the sum in controversy does not exceed the sum of two thousand dollars, and the same is dismissed accordingly.

36*] *ANNA MARIA THORNTON, Executrix of WILLIAM THORNTON, Plaintiff in Error,

THE BANK OF WASHINGTON.

Demurrer to evidence—its effect—usury.

The party who demurs to evidence, seeks thereby to withdraw the consideration of the facts from the jury; and is therefore bound to admit not only the truth of the evidence, but every fact which that evidence may legally conduce to prove in favor of the other party. And if upon any view of the facts the jury might have given a verdict against the party demurring, the court is also at liberty to give judgment against him. [40]

The taking of interest in advance upon the discount of a note in the usual course of business by a banker, is not usury. This has been long settled and is not now open for controversy. [40]

The taking of interest for sixty-four days on a note is not usury, if the note given for sixty days according to the custom and usage in the banks at Washington was not due and payable until the sixty-fourth day. In the case of Renner v. The Bank of Columbia (9 Wheat., 581), it was expressly held that under that custom the note was not due and payable before the sixty-fourth day, for until that time the maker could not be in default. [40]

Where it was the practice of the party who had a sixty-day note discounted at The Bank of Washington to renew the note by the discount of another note on the sixty-third day, the maker not being in fact bound to pay the note according to the custom prevailing in the District of Columbia, such a transaction on the part of the banker is not usurious, although on each note the discount for sixty-four days was deducted. Each note is considered as a distinct and substantive transaction. If no more than legal interest is taken upon the time the new note has to run, the actual application of the proceeds of the new note to the payment of the former note before it comes due does not of itself make the transaction usurious. Something more must occur. There must be a contract between the bank and the party at the time of such discount that the party shall not have the use and benefit of the proceeds until the former note becomes due, or that the bank shall have the use and benefit of them in the meantime.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the County at Washington in the District of Columbia. This cause was brought before the court to reverse the judgment of the Circuit Court on a demurrer to the evidence offered by the defendants in error, the plaintiffs below, to sustain a claim on Mr. Thornton as indorser on a promissory note discounted at The Bank of Washington for the benefit of one Bailey, the maker of the note.

The facts of the case are stated in the opinion of the court, delivered by Mr. Justice STORY.

37*] *Mr. C. C. Lee and Mr. Jones, for the plaintiff in error, contended that the evidence offered by the plaintiffs below proved that usury had been taken on the note, and by the statute of usury in Maryland the note was declared void. If usury had been taken, the judgment of the Circuit Court must therefore be reversed.

The loan was made on a note payable in sixty days, which, with the days of grace, made it a loan for sixty-three days, and the bank had received the interest in advance by way of discount for sixty-four days.

The legislation of all mankind has been against usury; and the legislation of Maryland has been desirous and vigilant to suppress it. The principle in all courts acting under these laws has been, that if usury was found to have been taken, the wit of man would not evade the statute.

The transactions between the bank and the drawer of the note are admitted. It was a loan of money, and six renewals of the note took place in the year, and therefore the interest for six days was illegally taken. The series of loans are to be considered as one transaction. The notes were given for the accommodation of the drawer; and their renewals were expected, and were considered by the borrower and the bank as a part of the contract. The succeeding note was only substituted for that which had preceded it in order to enable the bank to charge and receive the interest, by way of discount, every sixty-three days. Every security was therefore tainted with the usury of the whole dealing. This position is fully maintained by the case of Cuthbert v. Hayley (8 T. R., 390). The law of Maryland relative to usury and that of England is the same, as was seen by this court in the case of Gaither v. The Bank of Georgetown (1 Peters, 37. Cited, also, Marshall, 349; 5 Taunt., 780; 7 Com. Dig., Usury, 627; 3 T. R., 530.)

The taking of interest by way of discount was a device which was originally, and long continued to be, considered a violation of the statute. (Barnes v. Worledge, Cro. James, 25; Comyn on Usury, 82; Noy, 171; 1 Bulstrode, 20.) These cases are confirmed in Marsh v. Martindale (3 Bos. & Pull., 154), and [*38] fully establish the principle that receiving interest beforehand is usury. (Comyn on Usury, 90.)

It is admitted that the practice of bankers to take "discount" is now allowed; but this is upon principles which do not authorize the practice which prevails with the defendants in error. As late as 14 George II., 7 Mod., 353, it was held by Mr. Chief Justice Wills that "otherwise the force of the statute would be taken away." The practice is since, however, considered legal for bankers to take interest in advance as discount. The allowance of this practice, upon the principles by which it is protected, is not evidence that the general principle of the law are altered. The expenses of postage, remittance and commission, are considered as paid by this advance. (Auriol v. Thomas, 2 T. R., 52; 1 Bos. & Pull., 144; Comyn on Usury, 128.)

That the principles of the law as originally established are not altered, cited Peake's Nisi Prius Cases, 200; Comyn, 125; 4 Taunt., 810; Brooke qui tam v. Middleton, 1 Camp., 445; Comyn, 132.

Banks are allowed to deduct interest, and, ex vi termini, discount. (Fleekner v. The Bank of the United States, 8 Wheat., 354.) But this does not allow the deduction of a greater amount than the interest for the actual advance. The bill of exceptions presents the custom of the bank as a justification of the proceeding. Custom is no protection. (Floyer v. Edwards,

Peters 3

1 Cowp., 112; Dunham v. Gould, 16 Johns., 367.)

It was argued that the practice of the bank to give notice of the dishonor of the bill on the fourth day after the sixty days does not relieve the case from difficulty; as this could only be done by proof that there was a forbearance until the fourth day, the very reverse of which is established by the evidence; nor will the practice of the bank to protest on the fourth day, and not before, assist the claim. The universal commercial rule is, that on the third day of grace the note is due; and on non-payment before or upon that day, the money may be demanded and suit brought.

The question in this case has been decided in New York. (Bank of Utica v. Wagner, 2 Cow. 39*] en's Rep., 712.) If more than *legal interest is reserved or taken, it is usury, whether by agreement or not. (3 Bigelow's Dig., 796; 4 Mass., 156; 15 Mass., 96.)

Mr. Lear and Mr. Webster, for the defendant in error, contended that the Maryland law of usury, passed in 1704, similar to the statute of Ann, had no application to the case. It was passed before the establishment of banks. The language is prohibitory as to any "person," and this may include "corporations sole," but not corporations aggregate. It is a criminal law, and a strict construction may be insisted upon. The insertion of a prohibition against taking more than six per centum in the charters of banks, is a proof that the general terms of the usury laws are not considered as extending to such corporations. It would not be necessary if this were the sound construction of the usury law.

In this case the whole question is whether there was an agreement for forbearance for the loan of money on which more than legal interest has been taken. It is agreed that, in England, discount or interest in advance is not usurious. The facts of the case do not show that the borrower had the money for less than sixty-four days. On the sixty-fourth day, according to the custom of the bank, the note would be protested. It is admitted that a custom of trade will not take a case out of this statute, but it will go a great way to explain a transaction. (2 T. R., 52; Cowp. Rep., 114; 2 W. Black., 792; 1 Bos. & Pull., 144; 3 Bos. & Pull., 154.)

Every new note was a separate transaction. At the end of each loan the loan was returned; and whether by a new negotiation of another note or by the repayment of the money from other means, does not connect the transactions or make them the same.

This is a demurrer to evidence, and everything is to be taken in favor of the defendant in error, the plaintiff in error having demurred in the Circuit Court. It is enough for this court if a jury could have presumed from the facts that the loan was for sixty-four days. The bank maintains that the borrower has had or might have had the money for that time, and interest may be deducted for that time. 40*] The evidence *authorizes this conclusion. The jury might have drawn the conclusion that no unlawful dealing was intended. The transaction was not considered as a permanent loan. The bank make no such engagement; and if the borrower of money thinks proper, Peters 3.

for the purposes of convenience or certainty, to obtain a loan on another note before the note already discounted is due, the bank have nothing to do with the purposes or object for which the second loan is asked. There is no necessary connection between the transactions. Both notes may run at the same time.

Mr. Justice Story, after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes before us on a demurrer to the evidence in the court below, taken by the original defendant, now plaintiff in error; and this, in our judgment, is very important to be considered in the determination of the case. The party who demurs to evidence seeks thereby to withdraw the consideration of the facts from the jury, and is therefore bound to admit not only the truth of the evidence as given but every fact which that evidence may legally conduce to prove in favor of the other party. And if upon any view of the facts the jury might have given a verdict against the party demurring, the court is also at liberty to give judgment against him.

The defense set up against this action by the defendant is that the transaction is usurious within the meaning of the statute of Maryland against usury, which (it is admitted) is substantially like the English statute on the same subject. To sustain the defense, it has been urged that the receipts of the interest in advance for sixty-four days upon the discount of the note is usury. But we are all of opinion that the taking of interest in advance upon the discount of notes in the usual course of business by a bank, is not usury. The doctrine has been long settled, and is not now open for controversy. The taking of the interest for sixty-four days is not usury, if the note, according to the custom and usage in the banks at Washington, was not due and payable until the sixty-fourth day. That custom was *complete- [*41 ly established, not only by the evidence in the present case, but by that in Renner v. The Bank of Columbia (9 Wheat. Rep., 581), which is referred to in this record. In the latter case it was expressly held by the court that under that custom the note was not due and payable before the sixty-fourth day, for until that time the maker could not be in default.

Then, again, it is argued that here there have been successive renewals of the note, or rather successive notes given by way of renewal of the original note, and that these renewals have been on the sixty-third day, and the money credited on that day on account of the existing note; and thus in effect sixty-four days' interest has been taken upon loans for sixty-three days only. If there had been proved any contract between the bank and the party for whose benefit the original discount was made, that the original note should be so renewed from time to time, and the extra day's interest thereupon be taken by the bank; so that the bank would have been bound to make the renewal, and the party would have been bound to renew and not to pay the note at maturity; there would have been strong grounds on which to rest the argument. But the difficulty is that no such contract is to be found in the evidence; and the party demurring to the evidence asks the court to infer it from facts which do not necessarily import it, and may well admit of an explanation favorable to the other party. It is quite consistent with every fact in the case that the original discount may have been made without any such contract; and that the application for the renewals may have been made from time to time by the party interested for his own accommodation, and without any previous understanding or co-operation on the part of the bank. For aught that appears, he was at liberty to have paid the original note, or any one of those afterwards given, at the time when it became due. If of choice he had paid it on the sixty-third day instead of the sixty-fourth, there is no pretense to say that it would have been a case of usury. If, instead of payment, he offers a new note for discount for the purpose of applying the proceeds to the payment or withdrawal of the former note under the 42*] like circumstances, the case is not substantially varied. Each note is considered as a distinct substantive transaction. If no more than the legal interest is taken upon the time the new note has to run, the actual application of the proceeds of the new note to the payment of the former note before it becomes due does not of itself make the transaction usurious. Something more must occur. There must be a contract between the bank and the party at the time of such discount that the party shall not have the use or benefit of the proceeds until the former note becomes due, or that the bank shall have the use and benefit of them in the meantime. Such a contract being illegal is not to be presumed; it must be established in evidence. The argument requires the court to infer such illegality from circumstances in their own nature, equivocal, and susceptible of different interpretations; and this in favor of the party demurring to the evidence. Even if the jury might have made such an inference from the evidence, we think it ought not to be made by the court; for the rule of law requires the court in such a case to make every inference and presumption in favor of the other party which the jury might legally deduce from the evidence; nor is this any hardship upon the party demurring to the evidence, for it is his own choice to withdraw from the jury, to whom it properly belongs, the consideration of the facts which he relies on as presumptive of usury.

Upon the other point suggested in the cause, whether banks are within the statute of usury, we entertain no doubt that they are. But, for the reasons already stated, we are of opinion that the judgment below ought to be affirmed.

Cited—3 Pet., 569; 7 Pet., 459; 15 How., 208; 17 How., 22; 4 Wall., 164; 16 Wall., 344; 5 Otto, 695; Abb. Adm., 571.

43*] *THOMAS WILLISON, Plaintiff in Error,

v.

ANDERSON WATKINS, Defendant in Error.

Landlord and tenant—estoppel—disclaimer of landlord's title—adverse claim by tenant in right of third party—tortious possession—landlord's right of entry—successor of tenant—ejectment—tenants in common—statute of limitations—case of Bell v. Morrison.

It is an undoubted principle of law, fully recognized by this court, that a tenant cannot dispute the title of his landlord, either by setting up a title in himself or a third person, during the existence of the lease or tenancy. The principle of estoppel applies to the relation between them, and operates with full force to prevent the tenant from violating that contract by which he claimed and held the possession. He cannot change the character of the tenure by his own act merely, so as to enable himself to hold against his landlord, who reposes under the security of the tenancy, believing the possession of the tenant to be his own, held under his title, and ready to be surrendered by its termination, by the lapse of time or demand of possession. [47]

The same principle applies to mortgagee and mortgagee, trustee and cestui que trust, and generally to all cases where one man obtains possession of real estate belonging to another by a recognition of his title. [48]

In no instance has the principle of law which protects the relations between landlord and tenant been carried so far as in this case, which presents a disclaimer by a tenant with the knowledge of his landlord, and an unbroken possession afterwards for such a length of time that the act of limitations has run out four times before he has done any act to assert his right to the land. [48]

When a tenant disclaims to hold under his lease he becomes a trespasser, and his possession is adverse, and as open to the action of his landlord as a possession acquired originally by wrong. The act is conclusive on the tenant. He cannot revoke his disclaimer and adverse claim so as to protect himself during the unexpired time of the lease. He is a trespasser on him who has the legal title. The relation of landlord and tenant is dissolved, and each party is to stand upon his right. [49]

If the tenant disclaims the tenure, claims the fee adversely in right of a third person or in his own right, or attorns to another, his possession then becomes a tortious one by the forfeiture of his right, and the landlord's right of entry is complete, and he may sue at any time within the period of limitation; but he must lay his demise of a day subsequent to the termination of the tenancy, for before that he had no right of entry. By bringing his ejectment he disclaims the tenancy and goes for the forfeiture. It shall not be permitted to the landlord to thus admit that there is no tenure subsisting between him and the tenant which can protect his possession from this adversary suit; and at the same time recover on the ground of there being a tenure so strong as that he cannot set up his adversary possession. [49]

A mortgagee, or direct purchaser from a tenant, or one who buys his right at a sheriff's sale, assumes his relation to the landlord with all its legal consequences, and is as much estopped from denying the tenancy. [50]

If no length of time would protect a possession originally acquired under a lease, it would be productive of evils truly alarming, and we must be convinced beyond a doubt that the law is so settled before we would give our sanction to such a doctrine; and this is not the case upon authorities. [51]

*The relation between tenants in common is in [*44 principle very similar to that between lessor and lessee. The possession of one is the possession of the other, while ever the tenure is acknowledged. But if one ousts the other, or denies the tenure, and receives the rents and profits to his exclusive use, his possession becomes adverse, and the act of limitations begins to run: so of a trustee, so of a mortgagee. [51]

In relation to the limitations of actions for the recovery of real property, the court think it proper to apply the remarks of the learned judge who delivered the opinion of the court in the case of Bell v. Morrison 1 (Peters, 360), and to say the statute ought to receive such a construction as will effectuate the beneficial objects which it intended

NOTE.—Tenant, or one holding under him, cannot dispute the title of his landlord. Disclaimer.

The possession of the tenant may become adverse, by the forfeiture of his term, so that the statute of limitations will begin to run in his favor, yet the landlord may maintain ejectment against him any time before the period prescribed by the statute has expired, without any other evidence of title than the proof of the tenancy. The tenant cannot, without surrendering possession, contest the landlord's right or title, until the lapse of the to accomplish—the security of titles and the quieting of possessions. That which has been given to it in the present case is, we think, conformable to its true spirit and intention, without impairing any principle heretofore established. [54]

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the District of South Carolina.

An action of trespass to try titles was brought in the Circuit Court of South Carolina on the 20th of April, 1822, by the defendant in error, against the plaintiff in this court, for the recovery of six hundred acres of land situated on the Savannah River. The title claimed by the plaintiff below and the evidence are fully stated in the opinion of the court.

On the trial in the Circuit Court the defendant proved that Samuel Willison, his father, had possession of the land in 1789, and cultivated it till the period of his death in 1802, from which time his widow and family possessed it until the death of his widow in 1815; and that from 1815 until this action was brought, the children retained possession by their tenants. That in the lifetime of Samuel Willison, Bordeaux, through whom the plaintiff claimed, was apprised that he claimed to hold the land by an adverse title. That the widow, in 1802, on demand made, refused to give possession to Ralph S. Phillips, who claimed the land and set up a title in herself, and was sued as a trespasser. That in 1793, Bordeaux and Willison were in treaty for the sale of this land; Bordeaux wishing to sell and Willison to purchase. The plaintiff then offered in evidence a power of attorney from Bordeaux to Willison, dated February, 1792, authorizing him to take possession of the land and sue trespassers; and that Willison was then a tenant of Bordeaux. The defendant having pleaded the statute of limitations (five years' ^{45*}adverse *possession giving a title under it) relied upon the foregoing facts. But the presiding judge overruled the plea, and instructed the jury that, when a tenancy had been proved to have once existed, the tenancy must not only be abandoned, but possession given up, before an adverse possession can be alleged. To this decision the defendant excepted.

The defendant brought this writ of error.

In the argument of the cause, the counsel for the plaintiff in error presented for the consideration of the court other exceptions besides that upon which the judgment of the Circuit Court was reversed. The decision of the court is exclusively upon the law arising on that which is stated.

The case was argued by Mr. Blanding and Mr. McDuffie for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Berrien, Attorney-General, for the defendant.

Mr. Justice BALDWIN delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of trespass to try titles, brought in 1822 in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina, by Watkins against Willison, for a tract of land containing six hundred acres, on the Savannah River. This land was originally granted to James Parsons, who conveyed to Ralph Phillips, whose estate was confiscated by an Act of Assembly of South Carolina, and vested in five commissioners appointed by the Legislature of that State. The five commissioners acted in execution of the law, but before any conveyance was made of the land in question, one of them had died, and two of the others had ceased to act, or resigned in 1783. The two remaining commissioners in 1788, conveyed this land to Daniel Bordeaux and R. Newman, who, in the same year, executed to the treasurer of the State a bond and mortgage to secure the payment of the purchase money, which, pursuant to an Act of Assembly passed for that purpose in 1801, was transferred and delivered to Ralph S. Phillips, the son of Ralph Phillips, to be disposed of as he should think proper; and by the same law the Confiscation Act, so far as it respected same period has legalized his own possession. Peyton v. Stith, 5 Pet., 485; Woodward v. Brown, 13 Pet., 1.

A tenant who disclaims to hold under his lease becomes a trespasser, and his possession is adverse. He cannot revoke his disclaimer and adverse claim, so as to protect himself under his lease. His act is conclusive on himself. The relation of landlord and tenant is dissolved, and each party stands upon his right. Walden v. Bodley, 14 Pet., 156; Brown v. Coreoran, 5 Cranch, C. C., 610.

A tenant who has disclaimed his landlord's title, and attorned to a third person, is not entitled to notice to quit. Jackson v. Wheeler, 6 John., 272; Sharpe v. Kelly, 5 Den., 431; Jackson v. Vincent, 4 Wend., 633; Woodward v. Brown, 13 Pet., 1.

But such tenant so disclaiming is still liable to his landlord for rent, or use and occupation. Scott v. Hawsman, 2 McLean, 180.

A person in possession of land, taking a lease from another who has bought and claims it, is estopped from denying the title of such other person, or showing that such person was but the trustee of the land for him. Fleming v. Gooding, 4 M. & Scott, 455; 10 Bing., 549; Johnson v. Baytup, 4 Nev. & M., 387; 3 Ad. & E., 188; Lucas v. Brooks, 18 Wall., 436; Clark v. Crego, 47 Barb., 599.

A tenant cannot controvert or dispute the title of his landlord. Ingraham v. Baldwin, 9 N. Y., 5 Seld., 45; Jackson v. Whedon, 1 E. D. Smith, N. Y., 141; 10 John., 292; 1 Cow., 575; 7 Cow., 717; 7 Wend., 401; Sands v. Hughes, 53 N. Y., 286; Tompkins v. Snow, 63 Barb., 525; Storer v. Stiner, 30 How. Pr., N. Y., 129; Agan v. Young, 1 Car. & M., 78; Doe v. Pegge, 1 Term R., 760; Hall v. Butler, 2 Per. & D., 374; 10 Ad.

& E., 204; Jew v. Wood, 1 Craig & P., 185; Perry v. House, Holt., 489.

But the tenant may show that the title of the landlord has been acquired by the tenant, or has expired or been terminated or extinguished, or been conveyed to a third person since the commencement of the tenancy. Agar v. Young, 1 Car. & M., 78; Nellis v. Lathrop, 22 Wend., 121; Evertson v. Sawyer, 2 Wend., 507; Downs v. Cooper, 1 Gale & D., 573; 2 Ad. & E. N. S., 256; Lawrence v. Miller, 1 Sandf. N. Y., 516; reversed, 2 N. Y., 2 Const., 245; Doe v. Marriott, 3 Nev. & M., 193; 5 B. & Adol., 1065; Jackson v. Rowland, 6 Wend., 666; Despard v. Walbridge, 15 N. Y., 374; Neave v. Moss, 1 Bing., 360; 8 Moore, 389; Jackson v. Welden, 3 John., 283; Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow., 123; Syburn v. Slade, 4 Term R., 682; Jackson v. Vincent, 4 Wend., 633; Jackson v. Delaney, 13 John., 537; Landon v. Watson, 2 Starkie, 230; Jones v. Clark, 20 Johns., 51; Bigler v. Furman, 58 Barb., 545; Marriott v. Edwards, 6 Car. & P., 208; Hilton v. Bender, 2 Hun, N. Y., 1; Hoag v. Hoag, 35 N. Y., 469; Doe v. Seaton, 2 Crompt., M. & R., 728; Moore v. Beaseley, 3 Ham. Ohio., 294; Marley v. Rogers, 5 Yerg., 217; Wells v. Mason, 4 Scam. Ill., 85; or that tenant has been ousted by title paramount. Moffat v. Strong, 9 Bosw., N. Y., 57.

A tenant, or one coming in under him, is estopped from controverting the title of his landlord. Doe v. Mills, 1 Nev. & M., 25; 2 Ad. & E., 17; Doe v. Lewis, 6 Nev. & M., 764; 5 Ad. & E., 277; 2 Har. & W., 152; Brooks v. Bridges, 2 Bing. N. C., 572; 2 Scott, 803; Doe v. Austin, 2 M. & Scott, 107; Marriott v. Edwards, 6 Car. & P., 208; Wood v. Day, 1 Moore, 389; 7 Taunt., 646.

Ralph Phillips, was repealed. A suit was brought on this bond in the name of the treasurer 46] of the State *in 1803, against Daniel Bordeaux, and prosecuted to final judgment against his administrators in 1817, when an execution issued, on which the land was sold and conveyed by deed from the sheriff to Anderson Watkins, the plaintiff in the Circuit Court, who claims by virtue of the sheriff's deed, and as standing in the relation of landlord to the defendant.

Samuel Willison, the father of the defendant, entered into the possession of the premises in question in 1789, and cultivated them till his death in 1802; from which time his widow and children possessed them till her death in 1815; since which time the children have retained possession by their tenants till the commencement of this suit.

In 1802 Ralph S. Phillips, who was then the assignee of the bond and mortgage, made a demand of the possession from the widow, who refused to give it up and set up a title in herself. He brought an action of trespass against her to try titles in January, 1803, in which he was nonsuited in November, 1805; and in March, 1808, he brought another action of the same nature against her, in which no proceedings were had after 1812, which, by the law and practice of South Carolina, operates as a discontinuance of the action.

In 1792 Bordeaux, the mortgageor, executed to Willison a power of attorney authorizing him to take possession of the land and sue trespassers. Willison was then a tenant of Bordeaux.

In 1793 they were in treaty for the sale of the land, Bordeaux wanting to sell and Willison to purchase. But during the lifetime of Willison, Bordeaux was apprised that he claimed to hold the land by an adverse title. The defendant exhibited no title other than what is derived from the possession of his father and the family.

The first question which arose on the trial was on the admission in evidence of the deed from the two commissioners to Bordeaux and Newman; the defendant alleging that no title passed by it because it was not signed by the other two commissioners. The Circuit Court overruled the objection; the deed was read, and this becomes the subject of the first error assigned in this court.

As the court have been unable to procure the 47] Confiscation *Act of South Carolina, we are unwilling to express any opinion on this exception without examining its provisions, which are very imperfectly set out in the record; and as the merits of the case can be decided on another exception we do not think it necessary to postpone our judgment.

The remaining exception is that the Circuit Court erred in charging the jury that the claim of the plaintiff was not barred by the act of limitations of South Carolina, which protects a possession of five years from an adverse title.

It appears from the record that the defendant and his family have been in possession of this land for thirty-three years next before this suit was brought; but whether that possession has been adverse to the title of the plaintiff during the whole of that time, or such part of it as will bring him within the protection of this law, becomes a very important inquiry.

The plaintiff contended at the trial that, by becoming the tenant of Bordeaux, Willison the elder and his heirs, so long as they remain in possession, are prevented from setting up any title in themselves, or denying that of Bordeaux, without first surrendering to him the possession and then bringing their suit. That the possession of the tenant being the possession of the landlord, he could do no act by which it could become adverse, so that the statute of limitations would begin to run in his favor or operate to bar his claim by any lapse of time however long.

The defendant, on the other hand, contended that from the time of the disclaimer to the tenancy by Willison, and the setting up of a title adverse to Bordeaux and with his knowledge, his possession became adverse, and that he could avail himself of the act of limitations if no suit was brought within five years thereafter.

It is an undoubted principle of law fully recognized by this court that a tenant cannot dispute the title of his landlord, either by setting up a title in himself or a third person, during the existence of the lease or tenancy. The principle of estoppel applies to the relation between them, and operates in its full force to prevent the tenant from violating that contract by which he obtained and holds possession. (7 Wheat., 535.) *He cannot change the [48 character of the tenure by his own act merely, so as to enable himself to hold against his landlord, who reposes under the security of the tenancy, believing the possession of the tenant to be his own, held under his title, and ready to be surrendered by its termination, by the lapse of time or demand of possession. The same principle applies to mortgageor and mortgagee, trustee and cestui que trust, and generally to all cases where one man obtains possession of real estate belonging to another by a recognition of his title. On all these subjects the law is too well settled to require illustration or reasoning, or to admit of a doubt. But we do not think that in any of these relations it has been adopted to the extent contended for in this case, which presents a disclaimer by a tenant with the knowledge of his landlord, and an unbroken possession afterwards for such a length of time that the act of limitations has run out four times before he has done any act to assert his right to the land. Few stronger cases than this can occur, and if the plaintiff can recover without any other evidence of title than a tenancy existing thirty years before suit brought, it must be conceded that no length of time, no disclaimer of tenancy by the tenant, and no implied acquiescence of the landlord, can protect a possession originally acquired under such a tenure.

If there is any case which could clearly illustrate the sound policy of acts of repose and quieting titles and possessions by the limitation of actions, it is in this. Here was no secret disclaimer, no undiscovered fraud; it was known to Bordeaux and was notice to him that Willison meant to hold from that time by his own title and on adverse possession. This terminated the tenancy as to him, and from that time Bordeaux had a right to eject him as a trespasser. (Adams on Eject., 118; Bull. N. P., 96; 6 Johns. Rep., 272.)

Had there been a formal lease for a term not then expired, the lessee forfeited it by this act of hostility; had it been a lease at will from year to year, he was entitled to no notice to quit before an ejectment. The landlord's action would be as against a trespasser, as much so as if no relation had ever existed between them.

49*] *Having thus a right to consider the lessee as a wrong-doer holding adversely, we think that under the circumstances of this case the lessor was bound so to do. It would be an anomalous possession, which as to the rights of one party was adverse and as to the other fiduciary, if after a disclaimer with the knowledge of the landlord and attornment to a third person, or setting up a title in himself, the tenant forfeits his possession and all the benefits of the lease he ought to be entitled to, such as result from his known adverse possession. No injury can be done the landlord unless by his own laches. If he sues within the period of the act of limitations he must recover; if he suffers the time to pass without suit, it is but the common case of any other party who loses his right by negligence and loss of time.

As to the assertion of his claim, the possession is as adverse and as open to his action as one acquired originally by wrong; and we cannot assent to the proposition that the possession shall assume such character as one party alone may choose to give it. The act is conclusive on the tenant. He cannot make his disclaimer and adverse claim so as to protect himself during the unexpired term of the lease; he is a trespasser on him who has the legal title. The relation of landlord and tenant is dissolved, and each party is to stand upon his right.

It is on this principle alone that the plaintiff could claim to recover in this action. If there was between him and the defendant an existing tenancy at the time it was brought, he had no right of entry. The lessee cannot be a trespasser during the existence of the lease, and cannot be turned out till its termination. At the end of a definite term the lessor has his election to consider the lessee a trespasser and to enter on him by ejectment; but if he suffers him to remain in possession, he becomes a tenant at will, or from year to year, and in either case is entitled to a notice to quit before the lessor can eject him. The notice terminates the term, and thenceforth the lessee is a wrong-doer and holds at his peril. (Woodfall's Land. and Ten., 218, 220; 2 Serg. & Rawle, 49.)

If the tenant disclaims the tenure, claims the fee adversely in right of a third person or his 50*] own, or attorns to another, his *possession then becomes a tortious one by the forfeiture of his right. The landlord's right of entry is complete, and he may sue at any time within the period of limitation; but he must lay his demise of a day subsequent to the termination of the tenancy, for before that he had no right of entry. By bringing his ejectment he also affirms the tenancy and goes for the forfeiture. It shall not be permitted to the landlord to thus admit that there is no tenure subsisting between him and defendant which can protect his possession from his adversary suit, and at the same time recover on the ground of there being a tenure so strong that he cannot set up his own adversary possession.

The plaintiff claims without showing any title in himself or any right of possession except what exists from the consequences of a tenancy, the existence of which he denies in the most solemn manner, by asserting its termination before suit brought.

The principle here asserted is not new in this court. In the case of Blight's Lessee v. Rochester (7 Wheat., 535, 549), the plaintiff's lessors claimed as heirs of John Dunlap; the defendant claimed by purchase from one Hunter, who professed to have purchased from Dunlap. The defendant acknowledged the title of Dunlap as the one under which he held. Dunlap had in fact no title; but the plaintiffs insisted that the defendant could not deny his title. The Chief Justice, in giving the opinion of the court, observes: If he holds under an adversary title to Dunlap, his right to contest his title is admitted. If he claims under a sale from Dunlap, and Dunlap himself is compelled to aver that he does, then the plaintiffs themselves assert a title against this contract. Unless they show that it was conditional and that the condition is broken, they cannot, in the very act of disregarding it themselves, insist that it binds the defendant in good faith to acknowledge a title which has no real existence.

We are not aware that in applying this doctrine to the case now before the court we shall violate any settled principle of the common law.

If a different rule was established, the consequences would be very serious. A mortgagee, a direct purchaser from a *tenant, [*51 or one who buys his right at a sheriff's sale, assumes his relations to the landlord with all their legal consequences, and they are as much estopped from denying the tenancy. If no length of time would protect a possession originally acquired under a lease, it would be productive of evils truly alarming, and we must be convinced beyond a doubt that the law is so settled before we could give our sanction to such a doctrine.

An examination of the authorities on this point relieves our minds from all such apprehensions by finding our opinion supported to its full extent by judicial decisions entitled to the highest respect, and which we may safely adopt as evidence of the common law.

The case of Horenden v. Lord Annesley was that of a tenant who had attorned to one claiming adversely to his lessor with his knowledge. In delivering his opinion Lord Redesdale entered into a detailed view of the decisions on the application of the Act of Limitations to trusts of real and personal estate in courts of law and chancery, and to fiduciary possessions generally. On the point directly before us he observes: "That the attornment will not affect the title of the lessor so long as he has a right to consider the person holding possession as his tenant. But as he has a right to punish the acts of his tenant in disavowing the tenure by proceeding to eject him, notwithstanding his lease; if he will not proceed for the forfeiture, he has no right to affect the rights of third persons on the ground that the possession was destroyed, and there must be a limitation to this as well as every other demand. The intention of the Act of Limitations being to quiet the possession of lands, it would be curious if a tenant for ninety-nine years, attorning to a person insisting he was entitled, and disavowing tenure to the knowledge of his former landlord, should protect the title of the original lessor for the term of ninety-nine years. That would, I think, be too strong to hold on the ground of the possession being in the lessor after the tenure had been disavowed to the knowledge of the lessor."

The relation between tenants in common is, in principle, very similar to that between lessor 52 and lessee: the possession of one is the possession of the other, while ever the tenure is acknowledged. (Cowp., 217.) But if one ousts the other or denies the tenure and receives the rents and profits to his exclusive use, his possession becomes adverse, and the Act of Limitations begins to run. (2 Scho. & Lef., 628, &c., and cases cited; 4 Serg. & Rawle, 570.) The possession of a trustee is the possession of the cestui que trust so long as the trust is acknowledged; but from the time of known disavowal it becomes adverse. So of a mortgagee, while he admits himself to be in as mortgagee, and therefore liable to redemption. (7 Johns. Ch., 114, &c., and cases cited.) But if the right of redemption is not foreclosed within twenty years, the statute may be pleaded; and so in every case of an equitable title, not being the case of a trustee, whose possession is consistent with the title of the claimant. (7 Johns. Ch., 122.)

After elaborately reviewing the English decisions on these and other analogous subjects, Chancellor Kent remarks: "It is easy to perceive that the doctrines here laid down are the same that govern courts of law in analogous cases, and the statute of limitations receives the same construction and application at law and in equity." (Kane v. Bloodgood, 7 Johns. Ch., 90, 122.) It is equally said that fraud as well as trust are not within the statute, and it is well settled that the statute does not run until the discovery of the fraud; for the title to avoid it does not arise until then; and pending the concealment of it, the statute ought not to run. But after the discovery of the fact imputed as fraud, the statute runs as in other cases; and he cites in support of this position, 1 Browne's Parliament. Cases, 455; 3 P. Wms., 143; 2 Scho. & Lef., 607, 628, 636, and the cases cited.

In the case of Hughes v. Edwards (9 Wheat., 490, 497), it was settled that the right of a mortgagee to redeem is barred after twenty years' possession by the mortgagee after forfeiture, no interest having been paid in the meantime, and no circumstance appearing to account for the neglect. (7 Johns. Ch., 122; 2 Sch. & Lef., 636.) The court in that case say, that in respect to the mortgagee, who is seeking to foreclose the equity of redemption, the general rule is that where the mortgagee 53 has been permitted to remain in *possession the mortgage will, after a length of time, be presumed to have been discharged by payment of the money or a release, unless circumstances can be shown sufficiently strong to repel the presumption; as payment of interest, a promise to pay, an acknowledgment by the mortgagee that the mortgage is still existing, or the like.

All these principles bear directly on the ease now before us; they are well settled and unquestioned rules in all courts of law and equity, and necessarily lead to the same conclusion to which this court has arrived. The relations created by a lease are not more sacred than those of a trust or a mortgage. By setting up or attorning to a title adverse to his landlord, the tenant commits a fraud as much as by the breach of any other trust. Why, then, should not the statute protect him as well as any other fraudulent trustee, from the time the fraud is discovered or known to the landlord? If he suffers the tenant to retain possession twenty years after a tenancy is disavowed and cannot account for his delay in bringing his suit, why should he be exempted from the operation of the statute more than the mortgagee or the mortgagee? We can perceive no good reasons for allowing this peculiar and exclusive privilege to a lessor; we can find no rule of law or equity which makes it a matter of duty to do it, and have no hesitation in deciding that in this case the statute of limitations is a bar to the plaintiff's action.

In doing this we do not intend to dispute the principle of any case adjudged by the Supreme Court of South Carolina. Of those which have been cited in the argument there are none which in our opinion controvert any of the principles here laid down, or profess to be founded on any local usage, common law, or construction of the statute of limitation of that State. One has been much pressed upon us, as establishing a doctrine which would support the position of the plaintiff, which deserves some notice. In the case in 1 Nott & M'Cord, 374, the court decide that where a defendant enters under a plaintiff, he shall not dispute his title while he remains in possession, and that he must first give up his possession and bring his suit to try titles. To the correctness of this principle we yield our assent, not as one professing to be peculiar to South *Carolina, [54 but as a rule of the common law applicable to the cases of fiduciary possession before noticed. It is laid down as a general rule, embracing in terms tenants in common, trustees, mortgagees and lessees, but disallowing none of the exceptions or limitations which qualify it and exclude from its operation all cases where the possession has become adverse, where the party entitled to it does not enter or sue within the time of the statute of limitations, or give any good reason for his delay; leaving the rule in full force wherever the suit is brought within the time prescribed by law. To this extent, and this only, the decision would reach. To carry it further would be giving a more universal application than the courts of South Carolina would seem to have intended, and further than we should be warranted by the rules of law. To extend it to cases of vendor and vendee would be in direct contradiction to the solemn decision in 7 Wheat., 525.

In relation to the limitation of actions for the recovery of real property, we think it proper to apply the remarks of the learned judge who delivered the opinion of this court in the case of Bell v. Morrison (1 Peters, 351), and to say that the statute ought to receive such a construction as will effectuate the beneficent objects which it intended to accomplish—the security of titles, and the quieting of possessions. That which has been given to it in the present case, is, we think, favorable to its true spirit and intention, without impairing any legal principle heretofore established.

Peters 3.

It is therefore the opinion of the court that the plaintiff in error has sustained his fourth exception, and that the judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed. The cause is remanded to the Circuit Court with directions to award a venire de novo.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON. Had I felt myself at liberty in the court below to act upon my own impressions as to the general doctrine respecting the defense which a tenant might legally set up in ejectment brought against him by his landlord, I certainly should have left it to the jury to inquire whether the possession of Willison ever was hostile to that of Bordeaux; a 55 fact the evidence *to prove which was very trifling, as appears even in this bill of exceptions. But there were produced to me official reports of adjudged cases in that State by the courts of the last resort, which appeared fully to establish that when once a tenancy was proved, the tenant could make no defense, but must restore possession, and then alone could he avail himself of a title derived from any source whatever inconsistent with the relation of tenant. Now, it ought not to be controverted that, as to what are the laws of real estate in the respective States, the decisions of every other State in the Union, or in the universe, are worth nothing against the decisions of the State where the land lies. On such a subject we have just as much right to repeal their statutes as to overrule their decisions.

I will repeat a few extracts from one of their decisions to show that they will at least afford an apology for the opinion expressed in the bill of exceptions upon the law of South Carolina, for I placed it expressly on their decisions, not my own ideas of the general doctrine.

The case of Wilson v. Weatherby (1 Nott & McCord's Rep., 373), was an action to try title, just such as the present, and heard before Cheves, Justice, in July, 1815. The defendant offered to go into evidence to show a title in himself, to which it was objected that as he had gone into possession under the plaintiff he could not dispute his title. The objection was sustained, and a verdict given for the plaintiff. The cause was then carried up to the Appellate Court, and the judgment below sustained, that court unanimously agreeing the law to be as laid down by the judge who delivered the opinion, in these terms: "The evidence offered by the defendant was of a title acquired by him after he went into possession under the plaintiff, and before he gave up possession. If he was at any time the tenant of the plaintiff, he continues so all the time unless he had given up the possession. The attempt to evade the rule of law by going out of possession a moment and then returning into possession did not change his situation at all, and especially as he left another person in possession, so that his possession was altogether unbroken. A distinct and bona fide abandonment of the possession *at least was necessary to have put [56 him in a situation to dispute the plaintiff's title. On the last ground, that the defendant was not at any time the tenant of the plaintiff, the defendant was not indeed a tenant under a lease rendering rent, but he nevertheless held under the plaintiff. This ground is founded on a misconception of the principle, which is not confined to the cases of tenants in the common acceptance of the term. These cases have only furnished examples of the application of the principle, which is, that wherever a defendant has entered into possession under the plaintiff, he shall not be permitted, while he remains in possession, to dispute the plaintiff's title. He has a right to purchase any title he pleases, but he is bound, bona fide, to give up possession, and to bring his action on his title and recover by the strength of his own title."

This is the leading case upon this doctrine in that State, and it is fully settled there that the wife, the executor, the heir, or the purchaser at sheriff's sale, is identified in interest with the previous possessor; as also that a statutory title is acquired by possession, under which one subsequently going out of possession may recover.

Understanding such to be the law of that State, I certainly did not hold myself bound or at liberty to inquire whether it accorded with the rules of decision in any other State. In principle, I am under the impression there is not much difference, or at least not more than that court was at large to disregard if they thought proper.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby reversed, and that this cause be, and the same is hereby remanded to the said Circuit Court, with directions to award a venire facias de novo.

Cited—5 Pet., 440, 442, 491; 9 Pet., 417; 10 Pet., 221, 223; 12 Pet., 262, 295; 13 Pet., 4; 14 Pet., 162; 16 Pet., 54; 4 How., 296; 18 How., 488; 5 Wall., 287; 9 Wall., 601; 1 McLean, 166; 2 McLean, 396, 399; Bald., 419; 2 Curt., 210.

*THE UNITED STATES, Appellants, [57 v.

ISAAC T. PRESTON, Attorney-General of Louisiana, Appellee.

Construction of Acts of Congress concerning importation of slaves.

The offense against the law of the United States, under the seventh section of the Act of Congress passed the 2d of March, 1807, entitled, "An act to prohibit the importation of slaves into any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States from and after the 1st of January, 1808," is not that of importing or bringing into the United States persons of color with intent to hold or sell such persons as slaves, but that of hovering on the coast of the United States with such intent; and although it forfeits the vessel and any goods or effects found on board, it is silent as to disposing of the colored persons found on board, any further than to impose a duty upon the officers of armed vessels who make the capture to keep them safely, to be delivered to the overseers of the poor or the governor of the State or persons appointed by the respective States to receive the same. [65]

The Josefa Segunda, having persons of color on board of her, was, on the 11th of February, 1818, found hovering on the coast of the United States, and was seized and brought into New Orleans, and the vessel and the persons on board were libeled in the District Court of the United States of Louisiana, under the Act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1807. After the decree of condemnation below, but pending the appeal to this court, the sheriff of New Orleans went on, with the consent of all the parties to the proceedings, to sell the persons of color as slaves, and sixty-five thousand dollars, the proceeds, were deposited in the registry of the court to await the final disposal of the law.

By the tenth section of the Act of 30th of April 1818, the six first sections of the act are repealed, and no provision is made by which the condition of the persons of color found on board a vessel hovering on the coast of the United States is altered from that in which they were placed under the Act of 1807, no power having been given to dispose of them otherwise than to appoint some one to receive them. The seventh section of the Act of 1818 confirms no other sales previously or subsequently made under the State laws but those for illegal importation, and does not comprise the case of a condemnation under the seventh section.

The final condemnation of the persons on board the Josefa Segunda took place in this court on the 13th of March, 1820, after Congress had passed the Act of the 3d of March, 1819, entitled, "An Act in addition to an Act prohibiting the slave trade," by the provisions of which persons of color brought in under any of the acts prohibiting traffic in slaves, were to be delivered to the President of the United States to be sent to Africa. It could not affect them.

In admiralty cases a decree is not final while an appeal from the same is depending in this court, and any statute which governs the case must be an existing valid statute at the time of affirming the decree below. If, therefore, the persons of color who were on board the Josefa Segunda when captured had been specifically before the court on the 13th of March, 1820, they must have been delivered up to the President of the United States to be sent to Africa, under the provisions of the Act of the 3d of March, 1819, and therefore there is no *claim to the proceeds of their sale under the law of Louisiana which appropriated the same. The court do not mean to intimate that the United States are entitled to the money, for they had no power to sell the persons of color. [65]

A PPEAL from the District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

The brig Josefa Segunda, a Spanish vessel, proceeding with a cargo of negroes from the coast of Africa to the Island of Cuba, was captured on the 11th day of February, 1818, off St. Domingo, by a regularly commissioned Venezuelan privateer, and on the 24th of the following April she was seized in the River Mississippi by custom-house officers of the United States, carried to New Orleans, and there the vessel and negroes were libeled at the suit of the United States in the District Court of the United States for the Louisiana District.

The libel alleged that the negroes were unlawfully brought into the United States with an intent to dispose of them as slaves, contrary to the provisions of the Act of Congress passed March 2d, 1807, entitled, "An Act to prohibit the importation of slaves," &c. (2 Story's Laws U. S., 1050.) The libel was filed on the 29th of April, 1818, and a claim was put in by the Spanish owners, alleging an unlawful capture of the brig; that the brig put into the Balize in distress, and without any intention to infringe or violate a law of the United States. The District Court condemned the brig and effects found on board to the United States, and the claimants appealed to this court.

At February Term, 1820, of this court, the sentence of the District Court of Louisiana was affirmed; the court having been of opinion that "the alleged unlawful importation could not be excused on the plea of distress;" and that "where a capture is made by a regularly commissioned captor, he acquires a title to the captured property which can only be divested by recapture, or by the sentence of a competent tribunal; and the captured property is subject to capture for a violation by the captors, of the revenue or other municipal laws of the neutral country into which the prize may be carried." (5 Wheat., 338.)

*After the decree of the District Court [*59] of Louisiana had been pronounced, and before the appeal to this court, the negroes found on board of the captured brig were, under the provisions of the fourth section of the Act of Congress, and under the Act of the State of Louisiana passed the 13th of March, 1818, delivered by the collector of the port of New Orleans, to the sheriff of the Parish of New Orleans; and they were by him sold for $68,000, and the proceeds lodged in The Bank of the United States, subject to the order of the District Court.

Upon the return of the cause to the district of Louisiana from this court, Mr. Roberts, an inspector of the revenue, and others, who alleged that they had made "military seizures" subsequent to that of the officers of the customs, filed claims to the moneys which were the proceeds of the sales of the brig and "effects," and of the negroes. Mr. Chew, the collector, conjointly with the naval officers, filed a like claim, and the court having dismissed the claims of Roberts and the asserted "military captors" and allowed those of the collector and other officers of the customs, the cause was again brought before this court. (10 Wheat., 312.)

This court, at February Term, 1825, decided that "the District Court, under the Slave Trade Acts, have jurisdiction to determine who are the actual captors under a State law made in pursuance of the fourth section of the Slave Trade Act."

The court also decided that "under the seventh section of this Act of the 2d of March, 1807, ch. 77, the entire proceeds of the vessel are forfeited to the use of the United States, unless the seizure be made by armed vessels of the navy or by revenue officers; in which case distribution is to be made in the same manner as prizes taken from the enemy."

The court also decided "that under the Act of the State of Louisiana of the 13th of March, 1828, passed to carry into effect the fourth section of the Act of 1807, and directing the negroes imported contrary to the act to be sold and the proceeds to be paid, 'one moiety for the use of the commanding officer of the capturing vessel and the other moiety to the treasurer of the Charity Hospital of New Orleans for the use and benefit of the said hospital; no other *person is entitled to the first [*60] moiety than the commanding officer of the navy or revenue cutter who may have made the seizure, under the seventh section of the Act of Congress.'"

The case having returned again to the District Court of Louisiana, Mr. Preston, as Attorney-General of that State, filed a claim on behalf of that State, setting forth the illegal importation of the negroes; that the greater part of them had been delivered over to the sheriff of New Orleans; that the sheriff had disposed of them under the law of the Legislature of Louisiana; that the proceeds of the sale—$68,000—were brought into the District Court by the order of the court, and that part of the same remains deposited in court. He insisted that the money belongs to the State, and has been brought into court contrary to law and the rights of the State, and prays for an account, and that the said money may be paid over to him so far as the same had not been disposed of conformably to the laws of Louisiana.
Peters 3.

In the District Court this claim was opposed on behalf of the United States.

The decree of the court was in favor of the claim, and an appeal was taken by the District Attorney of the United States to this court.

The case was argued by Mr. Berrien, Attorney-General, and Mr. Livingston for the United States, and by Mr. Jones for the appellee.

For the appellants it was contended:

1. That the proceedings in the District Court of Louisiana upon the claim of the appellee were irregular, the matter being of admiralty jurisdiction, and they should therefore have been by libel and monition.

2. That all proceedings relative to the matter in dispute had been regularly terminated by a final judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States.

3. That by the judgment of the Supreme Court the whole beneficial interest in the proceeds in question has been adjudged to the United States.

4. That with regard to that moiety of the 61 proceeds, which *by the law of Louisiana was directed to be paid over to the treasurer of the Charity Hospital of New Orleans, the proper claimant was the treasurer.

5. That any claim of the Attorney-General of Louisiana to the money in the District Court is unfounded; the sale of the negroes having been made without authority, and therefore void, and the whole amount of the sales having been paid without consideration; and as no title to the negroes was acquired by the purchase, the money belongs to those who paid the same to the sheriff of New Orleans. Upon this last point, and on no other, the opinion of the court was given.

For the United States it was argued, upon this point, that as the decision of this court in the case of the The Josefa Segunda, reported in 5 and 10 Wheaton, had established the principle which ruled the case, that in reference to negroes brought into the United States under the circumstances attending their capture and introduction they were not placed under the power of the Legislature of Louisiana, but for the purpose of being received by the sheriff of New Orleans for safe keeping, the sale made by the sheriff was invalid and without authority.

The provisions of the seventh section of the Act of 1807 are repealed by the Act of Congress of 1819, "An act in addition to acts Peters 3.

prohibiting the slave trade." (3 Story's Laws U. S., 1752.)

By this act a change in the regulations before adopted by the United States in relation to persons of color illegally introduced into the United States was established.

The power given by the Act of 1807 to the States to pass laws for the disposition of those persons was repealed by the Act of 1819. The United States had before that time been unwilling to direct the mode in which those persons should be treated, and it was considered most proper to refer the same to the legislation of the particular States into which they might be brought. By the Act of 1819, all such persons so found in the United States were directed to be transported to Africa. That act authorizes the President so to remove all negroes brought into the United States contrary to the Act of 1807, and repeals all prior acts repugnant to its provisions. Before *the passage of [62 the Act of 1819, the negroes who were on board the Josefa Segunda had not been finally condemned; as there was an appeal from the decree of condemnation in the District Court, depending and undecided, until February, 1820.

Until the final condemnation by this court in 1820, the negroes remained in the hands of the sheriff of New Orleans, under the protection of the United States, not as the property of the United States or of Louisiana, but under their care. No rights were vested or could vest by the decree of the District Court, as the appeal suspended the operation of that decree until affirmed by this court in 1820.

The sale of the negroes did not and could not become valid by any consent of the parties before the District Court. Until condemnation, undisturbed by an appeal, no rights existed in the court to order, or in the parties to consent to or authorize the sale.

When the case was disposed of in this court in 1820, the whole of the authority of the District Court of Louisiana, which had been exercised in 1818, was at an end, and that court could not legally proceed in the case. The Act of 1819 authorized the appointment of an agent, and provided funds for the purpose of removing all such persons, under the direction of the President of the United States, to Africa. It was a necessary consequence of this change in the policy of the government that all the provisions of the law of 1807 repugnant to its purposes should be repealed, and they were repealed. The powers given to the courts to condemn, and the powers given to the States to legislate in reference to those persons, ceased at the passage of the law of 1819; and that law, notwithstanding the sale made by the sheriff, found those negroes among its objects, and it operated upon them fully and effectually. This court has decided that no effective disposition of them had been or could be made by the Legislature of Louisiana, and they were consequently in the condition stated, and were the objects of the bountiful and liberal provisions of that law.

It cannot be maintained that the sale was authorized either by the Act of 1807 or by the law of Louisiana. The Act of *1807 [63 gave no power to the court to consent to or order the sale, and Louisiana could not interfere until after a sentence of condemnation, which should be final. The claimant, the Spanish owner of the brig, could not give the right to sell. Such is the nature and such are the effects of admiralty proceedings. It follows, therefore, that the money now in controversy was paid without consideration; it belongs to the purchaser of the negroes; and it cannot, therefore, under any circumstances, belong to the State of Louisiana.

The sale has been made in the execution of a special power delegated by Congress to the Legislature of Louisiana.

It is fully established by the decisions of this court that special powers must be strictly pursued and cannot be exceeded. The act gave no other powers, and did not give this power.

If the negroes, instead of being sold, had been distributed among the parties to await the final decree, and after the Act of 1819 had passed, the District Court of Louisiana had ordered them to be delivered to the sheriff of New Orleans for sale; looking to the provisions of the Act of 1819; to the repeal of the act of 1807, giving the legislatures of the States power to order a sale of those persons; to the provisions of the Act of 1819 securing to them the privileges of freemen to be returned to their native country; to the terms of that Act which embrace negroes delivered to the officers of the United States before or after the date of this law; could those persons be delivered to slavery? Would they not rather be subject to the order of the President to be returned to Africa? Can an illegal sale change the rights of the negroes?

Mr. Jones, for the appellee, contended that on the admissions of the counsel for the United States, if the Act of 1819 did not operate on the case, one moiety of the money in dispute belonged to the Charity Hospital of New Orleans. The provisions of the Act of 1807, taken together, forfeited the negroes, and gave the property in them or the proceeds of their sale to the State of Louisiana by placing them at the disposition of the State. By that law the negroes were to remain subject to such regulations as the State may make for the disposal of them. This gave the property in them to the State. Placing property at the disposal of a State necessarily gives the State the property. This flows essentially from the sovereign character of a State.

The provisions of the seventh section of the Act of 1807 provide for the corporal delivery of the negroes to the State officers. In the custody of those officers they remained until condemnation, which, as soon as it occurs, reverts to the time of seizure. It gives no right, but ascertains it. The judicial proceedings confirm and improve it, but do not create it. The Act of Congress having declared to whose benefit the forfeiture incurred by the violation of its provisions shall accrue, and that being the State, the condemnation does but confirm it.

As to the invalidity of the sale, it was contended that if the Admiralty Court had power to order a sale pendente lite, the agreement that the sale should be made was operative and equally effectual. The right of an admiralty court to do so exists under special circumstances; but consent supplied the necessity of such circumstances. It is to be presumed that there was an order of court to confirm the sale, as the money arising from it was deposited in the court under its order.

The property in the negroes having thus become that of the State of Louisiana under the law of 1807; that State having appointed an officer to take charge of them and legislated as to the disposal of them under the authority of that act; the District Court having condemned the negroes before the law of 1819, and that condemnation having established judicially the right of the State at the time of seizure, the provisions of the law of 1819 could not affect rights thus given, vested and executed.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON delivered the opinion of the court:

The case of The Josefa Segunda has been twice already before this court: the first time upon the question of condemnation, the second upon the application of several claimants to be preferred in the distribution of the proceeds.

It now comes up upon a claim to the proceeds of the sale of the persons of color found on board at the time of the seizure interposed by the law officer of the State of Louisiana.

The vessel was condemned under the seventh section of the Act of 1807 passed to abolish the slave trade. By the fourth section of the act, the State of Louisiana was empowered to pass laws for disposing of such persons of color as should be imported or brought into that State in violation of that law. The offense under the seventh section, on which this condemnation was founded, is not that of importing or bringing into the United States, but that of hovering on the coast with intent to bring in persons of color to be disposed of as slaves, contrary to law; and although it forfeits the vessel and any goods or effects found on board, it is silent as to disposing of the colored persons found on board, any farther than to impose a duty upon officers of armed vessels who may capture them to keep them safely, to be delivered to the overseers of the poor, or the governor of the State, or persons appointed by the respective States to receive the same.

The State of Louisiana passed an Act on the 13th of March, 1818, which recites the provisions of the fourth and seventh sections of the Acts of Congress, and authorizes and requires the sheriff of New Orleans to receive any colored persons designated under either of those sections, and the same to keep until the District or Circuit Court of the United States shall pronounce a decree upon the charge of illegal importation.

The second section makes provision for selling them upon receiving a certificate of such decision, and enjoins a distribution of the proceeds; one-half to the commanding officer of the capturing vessel, the other to the treasurer of the Charity Hospital of New Orleans.

In pursuance of this law of the State, it appears that after the decree of condemnation below, but pending the appeal in this court, the sheriff went on to sell, with the consent, it is said, of all parties; and $65,000, the sum now in controversy, was deposited in the registry of the court below to await the final disposal of the law.

The 20th of April, 1818, Congress passed an-66* other Act on *this subject, by the tenth section of which the six first sections of the Act of 1807 are repealed; but their provisions are re-enacted with a little more amplitude; and the fifth section of this act, which professes to reserve to the States the powers given in the former act as well as the language of the repealing clause, in the saving which it contains as to offenses, still confines all their provisions to the case of illegal importation, thus leaving the seventh section in force, but without any express power to dispose of the colored persons, otherwise than to appoint some one to receive them.

And so, likewise, the seventh section of the Act of 1818, which professes to confirm sales previously or subsequently made under the State laws, confines its provisions to sales made under condemnation for illegal importation; thus not comprising the cases of condemnation under the seventh section of the Act of 1807, at least so far as relates to this offense.

The final condemnation in this court took place March 13th, 1820; but previous to that time was passed the Act of March 3d, 1819, entitled, "An act in addition to an act prohibiting the slave trade," by which a new arrangement is made as to the disposal of persons of color seized and brought in under any of the acts prohibiting the traffic in slaves. By the latter act they are deliverable to the orders of the President; not of the States. And the repealing clause repeals all acts and parts of acts which may be repugnant to this act. So that if in the disposal of persons of color brought into the United States the provisions of this act embrace the case of such persons when brought in under the seventh section of the Act of 1807, the power to deliver them to the order of the States was taken away before the final decree in this court.

Such, in the opinion of the court, is the effect of the Act of 1819. And then the question is, how does it affect the present controversy?

Ever since the case of Yeaton v. The United States (5 Cranch, 286), the court has uniformly acted under the rule established in that case; to wit, that in admiralty causes a decree was not final while it was depending here, and any 67 *statute which governs the case must be an existing, valid statute, at the time of affirming the decree below.

Whatever was the extent of the legal power of the State over the Africans, it is clear that such power could not be exercised finally over them at any time previous to the final decree of this court; we must, therefore, consider whether, if they had been specifically before the court at the date of that decree, they must have been delivered up to the State or the United States: clearly to the United States. And, then, this claim of the State cannot be sustained. We would not be understood to intimate that the United States are entitled to this money, for they had no power to sell. Nor do we feel ourselves bound to remove the difficulties which grow out of this state of things.

With regard to the ground of irregularity; if not abandoned by the Attorney-General it was but slightly touched upon, and we know Peters 3.

of no other mode in the existing state of things, in which the rights of the parties could be reached, according to the course of the admiralty, but that here pursued.

On the question whether the decision in the second cause in which the subject of this seizure was before us was not final as to the rights of the United States, we are clearly of opinion that it was not, as against this party. Although this question might then have been raised by the State, and could as well then have been settled, yet it was not raised, nor was it the interest of any of the parties then before the court, that it should be raised.

The decree below must be reversed.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered, and decreed by this court, that the decree of the said District Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby reversed, and that the said cause be, and the same is hereby remanded for further proceedings to be had therein according to law and justice, and in conformity to the opinion of this court.

Cited—2 Wood. & M., 540.

*THE BANK OF THE UNITED [*68
 STATES AND SAMUEL W. VENABLE'S EXECUTORS

v.

JOHN T. SWAN.

Practice.

Where an appeal has been dismissed, the appellant having omitted to file a transcript of the record within the time required by the rule of court, an official certificate of the dismissal of the appeal may not be given by the clerk during the term. The appellant may file the transcript with the clerk during the term and move to have the appeal re-instated. To allow such a certificate would be to prejudice such a motion.

ON consideration of the motion made by Mr. Wirt, of counsel for the appellee, for leave to take from the office of the clerk of this court, before the adjournment of the present term of this court, an official certificate of the dismissal of this appeal, dismissed last Saturday, being the 30th of January of the present term of this court:

It is ordered that the said motion be overruled, and that the leave prayed for be refused; as under the practice of this court the appellants would have a right during the present term to lodge a transcript of the record of said appeal with the clerk of this court, and move to have the appeal re-instated; whereas, to grant the present prayer or motion would be to prejudice such a motion. Per Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL.

69*] *BELL ET AL., Plaintiffs in Error,

v.

CUNNINGHAM ET AL., Defendants in Error.

Principal and agent—disobedience of orders by agent—measure of damages—what constitutes ratification by principal.

C. & Co., merchants of Boston, owners of a ship proceeding on freight from Havana to the consignment of B. & Co. at Leghorn, and to return to Havana, instructed B. & Co. to invest the freight, estimated at four thousand six hundred pesos; the two thousand two hundred in marble tiles, and the residue, after paying disbursements, in wrapping paper. B. & Co. undertook to execute these orders. Instead, however, of investing two thousand two hundred pesos in marble, they invested all the funds which came into their hands in wrapping paper, which was received by the captain of the ship and was carried to Havana and there sold on account of C. & Co., and produced a loss, instead of the profit which would have resulted had the investment been made in marble tiles. As soon as information of the breach of orders was received, C. & Co. addressed a letter to B. & Co., expressing in strong terms their disapprobation of the departure from their orders, but did not signify their determination to disavow the transaction entirely and consider the paper as sold on account of B. & Co. Held, that C. & Co. were entitled to recover damages for the breach of their orders; that their not having given notice to B. & Co. that the paper would be considered as sold on their account, did not injure their claim; and that the amount of the damages may be determined by the positive and direct loss arising plainly and immediately from the breach of the orders.

If the principal, after a knowledge that his orders have been violated by his agent, receives merchandise purchased for him contrary to orders, and sells the same without signifying any intention of disavowing the acts of the agent, an inference in favor of the ratification of the acts of the agent may fairly be drawn by the jury. But if the merchandise was received by the principal, under a just confidence that his orders to his agent had been faithfully executed, such an inference would be in a high degree unreasonable. [81]

The faithful execution of orders which an agent or correspondent has contracted to execute is of vital importance in commercial transactions, and may often affect the injured party far beyond the actual sum misapplied. A failure in this respect may entirely break up a voyage and defeat the whole enterprise. Speculative damages, dependent on possible successive schemes, ought not to be given in such cases; but positive and direct loss, resulting plainly and immediately from the breach of orders, may be taken into the estimate. [85]

The jury, in an action for damages for breach of orders, may compensate the plaintiff for actual loss and not give vindictive damages. The profits which would have been obtained on the sale of the article directed to be purchased may be properly allowed as damages. [86]

THIS was a writ of error from the Circuit Court of Massachusetts, prosecuted by the defendant in the Circuit Court.

The bill of exceptions to the opinion of the court below *sets forth the pleadings and [*70 evidence, and exhibited the following case:

Cunningham & Loring, merchants of Boston, owners of the brig Halcyon, Skinner, master, chartered by them to proceed from Havana to Leghorn with a cargo of sugars, directed Bell, De Yough & Co., merchants at that place, and consignees of the brig, to purchase for them to be shipped to Havana by the Halcyon on her return to that port a quantity of marble tiles and wrapping paper. The letter containing these instructions was dated 15th September, 1824, and stated: "The whole amount of freight received at Leghorn will be about four thousand six hundred pesos; please invest two thousand two hundred in marble tiles; the balance, after paying disbursements, please invest in wrapping paper. We have further engaged whatever may be necessary to fill the brig on half profits, on account of which seven hundred pesos are to be paid in Leghorn, after purchasing tiles and paying disbursements, you will invest the balance in paper."

A duplicate of this letter was forwarded, to which the following postscript was added:

"P. S.—We have further engaged whatever may be necessary to fill the brig, on half profits, on account of which seven hundred pesos are to be paid in Leghorn. After purchasing the tiles and paying disbursements, you will invest the balance in paper, as before mentioned. In previous orders the reams have been deficient in the proper number of sheets. We will thank you to pay particular attention to this, as well as having all the sheets entire."

This letter was received by the plaintiffs in error on the 13th of November, 1824, and on

NOTE—Agent, liability of to principal, for disregard of orders or for negligence. Exceptions to the rule.

An attorney is liable to his client for negligence in conducting the business of the client. What is negligence? Williams v. Reed, 3 Mas., 405; Wilcox v. Plummer, 4 Pet., 174; Wynn v. Wilson, Hempst., 698.

An attorney liable to the party for an unauthorized appearance. Field v. Gibbs, Pet. C. C., 155.

An agent is answerable for any injury consequent upon his departing from his orders, however fair his motives may be. Manella v. Barry, 3 Cranch, 415; Short v. Skipwith, 1 Broek. Marsh., 103.

If a loss is incurred by agent's failure to comply with instructions, he will be liable, though his services were gratuitous. Walker v. Smith, 1 Wash., C. C., 152; 4 Dall., 389.

Where agent mixed his principal's money with his own and invested it in real estate, the agent not being able to distinguish his own from the effects of his principal, the real estate will be considered the property of the principal to be specifically conveyed to him, or sold for his benefit. Yates v. Arden, 5 Cranch, C. C., 526.

Where one has undertaken to procure insurance for another and neglects to do so, or insures insufficiently or different from his orders, he becomes liable as insurer. De Tastet v. Cronsillat, 1 Wash. C. C., 504; Morris v. Summer, 2 Wash. C. C., 203.

So, when agent omits to insure when instructed, and a loss occurs. Manny v. Dunlap, 1 Woolw., 372.

The relinquishment of commissions on an agency does not release the agent from responsibility to his principal. Walker v. Smith, 1 Wash. C. C., 152; 4 Dall., 389.

Ratification of agent's acts relieves him from liability for violation of his instructions. Cairnes v. Bleecker, 12 John., 300; Vianna v. Barclay, 3 Cow., 281; Corning v. Hill, 3 Hill, 552; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Sabine, 6 McLean, 393; McKinley v. Tucker, 6 Lans, 214.

The amount of damages against the agent is measured by the real or positive loss incurred through his unauthorized act or default. Hamilton v. Cunningham, 2 Broek. Marsh., 350; Bell v. Cunningham, 3 Pet., 69; Pope v. Barrett, 1 Mas., 117; Seul v. Briddle, 2 Wash. C. C., 150; Brewer v. Caldwell, 7 Rep., 389; Webster v. De Tastet, 7 Term R., 157; Hale v. Wall, 2 Gratt. Va., 424.

A commission merchant is liable to his principal if he sells contrary to his instructions or is guilty of negligence in the sale. But the receiving without objection the accounts of sales made on credit, is a waiver of previous instructions to sell for cash. Marshall v. Williams, 2 Biss., 255; 18 Int. Rev. Rec., 168.

An action for fraud, however, cannot be maintained. Peters 3.

the 9th of the December following they addressed a letter to Cunningham & Loring, in which they stated:

"The order you are pleased to give us for paper and marble tiles, to be paid for out of the freight of the Halcyon from Havana to our consignment, has our particular attention.

"You have done very right to send on this order, as the wrapping paper cannot be got in 71*] readiness before the end *of January, and, therefore, had it been delayed longer, could not have been in time for your brig Halcyon.

"We have contracted for five thousand reams at as near your limits as possible, the article being just now in great demand. The tiles shall be collected also."

On the 14th of January, 1825, they wrote to Cunningham & Loring:

"The wrapping paper ordered by yours of the 15th of September will be in readiness by the end of this month, and we shall have by that time, ready to ship, ten thousand marble tiles of twelve ounces, seven thousand six hundred of fourteen ounces, and six thousand two hundred of sixteen ounces, which will be about the investment you desire of the freight from the Halcyon."

On the 21st of January, 1825, the plaintiffs in error informed the defendants of the arrival of the Halcyon, and on the 21st of February they addressed them another letter, stating: "The sample of wrapping paper sent us by Messrs. Murdoch, Storey & Co. we found much inferior to any made in this State, and have executed your order with a much better article, although the difference in price bears no proportion. As your account current after purchasing the paper, which Captain Skinner told us was the better article for investment, gave only a small balance, we increased a little one quantity of paper and sent no tiles.

"We now hand you bill of lading and invoice, amounting to P2,801 18 for 473 packages of wrapping paper, shipped for your account and risk, on board your brig Halcyon, John Skinner, master, which, if found right, please to pass accordingly.

"Captain Skinner has been made aware of the superior quality of this parcel of paper, and that each ream is composed correctly of twenty quires of twenty-four and not sixteen sheets, as had been occasionally shipped; so that he will no doubt make an adequate price for it, because in reality the prices at which it is invoiced are reduced by this difference below those mentioned in your order."

The account current stated the investment of pesos 2,801 18 in wrapping paper, and showed that the balance *of the freight [*72 and other assets in the hands of the plaintiffs in error belonging to Cunningham & Loring had been absorbed in the disbursements of the brig, &c.

The Halcyon proceeded to Havana, and there the paper shipped by the plaintiffs in error was sold and the proceeds accounted for to Cunningham & Loring by their agents at that port. Had the marble tiles been shipped as ordered, there would have been a considerable profit in the transactions instead of the heavy loss sustained on the sales of the paper.

Cunningham & Loring, on being advised of the non-compliance by the plaintiffs in error with their instructions of the 15th of September, 1824, addressed the following letter to them:

"BOSTON, April 18th, 1825.

"MESSRS. BELL, DE YOUGH, & Co.

"Gentlemen: We have received your favor of February 21st. The following are extracts of our letter to you of 13th September, directing the investment of the freight per Halcyon. "The whole amount of freight received at Leghorn will be about 4,600 pesos; please invest 2,200 in marble tiles; the balance, after paying disbursements, please invest in wrapping paper. We have further engaged whatever may be necessary to fill the brig, on half profits, on account of which 700 pesos are to be paid in Leghorn; after purchasing the tiles and paying disbursements, you will invest the balance in paper."

"We are exceedingly disappointed that such positive directions were not complied with; they were given for sufficient reasons, and ained against agent, from the facts only that he exceeded his authority, and that a loss resulted therefrom. Price v. Keyes, 62 N. Y., 378; reversing S. C., 1 Hun, 177; 3 Thomp. & C., 720.

If a forwarding agent ship goods otherwise than as instructed by the owner, he is liable for damages done in the transportation. Wilts v. Mowall, 66 Barb., 511.

Agent for investment who loans his principal's money on second mortgages without the latter's knowledge or consent, is liable for loss thereby sustained irrespective of any question of actual fraud. Whitney v. Martins, 6 Abb. N. C., N. Y., 72.

The agent is responsible to his principal for the proper discharge of the authority entrusted to him, whether he receives compensation or not. Wilkinson v. Coverdale, 1 Esp., 75; Smith v. Lascelles, 2 Term R., 187.

He is thus liable for effecting insurance with irresponsible parties. Hurrell v. Bullard, 3 Fost. & F., 445.

The measure of damages would be the amount which the insured could have recovered if the agent had performed his duty faithfully. Smith v. Price, 2 Fost. & F., 748.

Where the authority of an agent is limited by instructions, it is his duty to adhere faithfully to them in all cases in which they ought properly to be applied; and if he necessarily exceeds his commission or powers, or risks the property of his principal, he is liable. Peters 3.

Principal without authority, he renders himself responsible to his principal for all loss or damage which naturally results from his acts. Dwight v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 33 N. Y., 610; Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y., 676; 4 Abb. Ct. App., 157; Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Penn. St., 393; Concier v. Ritter, 4 Wash. C. C., 551; Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis., 253; Whitney v. Merchants' Union Express Co., 104 Mass., 152; 6 Am. Rep., 207.

Where instructions are clear, precise, and imperative, they should be followed strictly and exactly. Williams v. Higgins, 30 Md., 404; Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Penn. St., 393; Rechtscheld v. Accommodation Bank of St. Louis, 47 Mo., 181; Brown v. Gran, 14 Pct., 479; Blot v. Bureau, 3 N. Y., 3 Comst., 78.

That the agent intended to benefit his principal is no legal excuse for disregarding his explicit instructions. Rechtscheld v. Acc. Bank of St. Louis, 47 Mo., 181; Evans v. Root, 7 N. Y., 3 Seld., 186; Scott v. Rogers, 4 Abb. Ct. App. (N. Y.), 157; 31 N. Y., 676.

Principal's instructions should not be construed as intended to be obligatory, unless they are distinct, positive, and express. Agent should not be held liable for a departure from the will of his principal, where his orders are ambiguous, doubtful, or not explicit. Vianna v. Barclay, 3 Cow., 281; Jervis v. Hoyt, 2 Hun. N. Y., 637; 5 Thomp. & C., 199; De Tastet v. Cronsillat, 2 Wash. C. C., 132, 137; Bessent v. Harris, 63 N. C., 542; Foster v. Rock-without authority to alter them. You omitted to invest the 700 pesos on account of the freight of 150 boxes marked T, which we regret, as we wished the funds at Havana; with this you would have had 4,240 pesos, which would have furnished the tiles, paid disbursements, and left 1,393 pesos to be invested in paper.

Very respectfully,

"CUNNINGHAM & LORING."

73*] *One of the partners of the firm being in Boston in 1827, an action was instituted against the plaintiffs in error in the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Suffolk for damages for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs by the conduct of the defendants; and on their petition, the defendants in the suit being aliens, was removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts.

On the trial of this cause in the Circuit Court, it was in evidence that the tiles ordered by the plaintiffs in the suit could have been procured by the defendants, and at prices which would have produced a profit to the plaintiffs.

During the trial exceptions were taken to the opinion of the court by the defendants in the Circuit Court, which exceptions are stated in the opinion of this court, and a verdict and judgment having been rendered for the plaintiffs, the defendants prosecuted this writ of error.

The case was argued by Mr. Ogden for the plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. Webster for the defendants.

For the plaintiffs, it was contended that the Circuit Court had erred in leaving to the jury the construction of the correspondence between the plaintiffs in the court below and the defendants, of the 15th September, 1824. The evidence being written, the construction of it was exclusively with the court. The course adopted by the defendants was in full accordance with the objects of the latter, as the paper could not be procured without previous orders, and they having been given and the defendants bound to take the paper so ordered, they were necessarily without the funds required to purchase the tiles.

The plaintiffs below were bound to give the defendants notice of their intention to claim damages from them for non-compliance with instructions, and their neglect to do this, as well as their having received the proceeds of the paper, was a waiver of all their claims. The letter of the 18th April, 1825, was not such a notice.

The rule adopted in the assessment of the damages was incorrect. The plaintiffs below were entitled to no more than the difference between the cost of the paper which had been shipped at Leghorn, and the price [*74 of tiles at that place. (Cited, 1 Vez., Jun., 509.

Mr. Webster, for the defendants in error, said that there were no questions of law in the case which presented any difficulty, and the facts clearly established a claim by the defendants on the plaintiffs in error for a manifest breach of instructions, and upon these facts the jury had given their verdict. As to the rule adopted by the jury for the assessment of the damages, they had exercised their sound discretion without any instructions from the court which interfered with this their peculiar province.

As to the notice of claim by the defendants in error of the 18th of April, 1825, it was sufficient. They might have rejected the articles altogether, or have received the proceeds arising from their sale in the regular course of trade, and claimed, as they have in this case, damages for the loss.

Notice of claim is not necessary. If the party does not intend to refuse the article altogether, it is not required; and the neglect to do so is no bar to a claim for damages.

In this case the letter of the defendants is an express disavowal of the acts of their agents. (Cited, Lorain v. Cartwright, 3 Wash. C. C. R., 151.)

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment rendered in the Court of the United States for the First Circuit and District of Massachusetts, in a suit brought by Cunningham & Co. against Bell, De Yough & Co., on a special contract.

Cunningham & Co., merchants of Boston, had let their vessel, the Halcyon, to Messrs Atkinson and Rollins, of the same place, to carry a cargo of sugars from the Havana to Leghorn. The cargo was consigned to Messrs. Bell, De Yough & Co., merchants of Leghorn; and well, 104 Mass., 167; Long v. Pool, 68 N. C., 479; Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall., 178.

An exception to the rule that an agent is bound to observe or obey his instructions, is, if by some sudden emergency or supervening overwhelming necessity or other unexpected event, clearly shown, it becomes impossible for the agent to comply with his instructions, or a literal compliance with them would frustrate the objects of the principal and amount to a sacrifice of his interests, it is the agent's duty, under the circumstances, to do the best he can in the exercise of a sound discretion, to prevent a loss to his principal, and if he acts in good faith and exercises a reasonable discretion, his acts will bind his principal. Greenleaf v. Moody, 13 Allen, 363; Forrestier v. Boardman, 1 Story, 43, 51; Williams v. Shackelford, 16 Ala., 318; Liottard v. Graves, 3 Caines, 226; Dusar v. Perit, 4 Binn., 361; Day v. Noble, 2 Pick., 615.

Agent not bound to follow instructions which require him to do an illegal or immoral act. Story on Agency, sec. 195; Wharton on Agency, sec. 542.

An agent is liable for disregarding express and positive instructions as to investing money, if the securities he takes are not good. Williams v. Higgins, 30 Md., 404.

Agent receiving illegal or depreciated currency in discharge of legacies or debts is liable, in good faith, for the full amount of the legacies or debts. Turner v. Turner, 36 Tex., 41.

A cashier of a bank who neglects to make demand of payment of a note, and thus discharges the indorser, who is the only responsible party, is liable to the bank for resulting damages. Bidwell v. Madison, 10 Minn., 13.

A bank or express company receiving a note or bill of exchange for collection is liable for any neglect of duty whereby any of the parties to the note or bill are discharged. Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 47 N. Y., 570; Montgomery Co. Bank v. Albany City Bank, 7 N. Y., 3 Seld., 459; Commercial Bank v. Union Bank, 11 N. Y., 1 Kern., 203; Reeves v. State Bank of Ohio, 8 Ohio St., 465; Nannemaker v. Lanier, 48 Barb., 234; Palmer v. Holland, 51 N. Y., 416; S. C., 10 Am. Rep., 616; Walker v. Bank of State of N. Y., 9 N. Y., 5 Seld., 582.

The agent may show that no loss or damage has resulted to the principal from the disobedience of the agent to the principal's instructions, or the agent's neglect to follow them. Fulsam v. Mussey, 10 Me., 297; Fornin v. Oswell, 3 Camp., 357; Suydam v. Allen, 20 Wend., 324; Frothingham v. Everton, 12 N. H., 239.

Peters 3.

Cunningham & Co. addressed a letter to the same house, instructing them to invest the freight, which was estimated at four thousand six hundred petso, two thousand two hundred in marble tiles, and the residue, after paying 75 disbursements, in wrapping *paper. Messrs. Bell, De Yough & Co. undertook to execute these orders. Instead, however, of investing the sum of two thousand two hundred petso in marble tiles, they invested the whole amount of freight which came to their hands, amounting to three thousand four hundred and forty-nine petso, and seven-thirds instead of four thousand six hundred, in wrapping paper, which was received by the captain of the Halcyon, shipped to the Havana, and sold on account of Messrs. Cunningham & Co. One of the partners of Messrs. Bell, De Yough & Co., having visited Boston on business, this suit was instituted against the company. At the trial, all the correspondence between the parties was exhibited, from which it appeared that Cunningham & Co., as soon as information was received that their orders had been broken, addressed a letter to Messrs. Bell, De Yough & Co., expressing in strong terms their disapprobation of this departure from orders, but did not signify their determination to disavow the transaction entirely, and consider the wrapping paper as sold on account of the house in Leghorn.

In addition to the correspondence, several depositions were read to the jury which proved that the orders respecting the marble tiles might have been executed without difficulty, but that the house in Leghorn, expecting to receive more money on account of freight than actually came to their hands, had contracted for so much wrapping paper as to leave so inconsiderable a sum for the tiles that they determined to invest that small sum also in wrapping paper.

At the trial, the counsel for the defendants in the court below prayed the court to instruct the jury on several points which arose in the cause. Exceptions were taken to the rejection of these prayers, and also to instructions which were actually given by the court, and the cause is now heard on these exceptions.

The defendants' counsel prayed the court to instruct the jury that the letter of the 9th of December, 1824, from the defendants to the plaintiffs, was notice to them of the exercise of the aforesaid authority in contracting for five thousand reams of paper to be paid for out of the freight money of the Halcyon, and was admitted by the plaintiffs in their *letter of the 7th of March, 1825, to be a rightful exercise of such authority; and that the freight money of the Halcyon was pledged for payment of the said quantity of paper.

But the court so refused to instruct the jury, because it did not appear on the face of the said letter at what price the said wrapping paper was purchased so as to put the plaintiffs in possession of the whole facts that there had been a purchase of paper to an extent and at a price which would amount to a deviation from the orders of the plaintiffs, or that defendants had deviated from such orders, without which there could arise no presumption of notice of any deviation from such orders, or of any ratification of any such deviation from such orders. But the court did instruct the jury that if, from the whole evidence in the case, the jury were satisfied that the letter of the 9th of December, connected with the letter of the 14th of January, did sufficiently put the plaintiffs in possession of all the facts relative to such purchase and the price thereof and of such deviation, and that the letter of the 7th of March in answer thereto was written with a full knowledge and notice of all the facts, and that the plaintiffs did thereupon express their approbation of all the proceedings and acts of the defendants relative to such purchase, then, in point of law, it amounted to a ratification thereof, even though there had been a deviation from the orders in this behalf.

Peters 3.

U. S., Book 7

This first exception is very clearly not supported by the fact, and was very properly overruled for the reasons assigned by the judge. The plaintiffs in that court, when the letter of the 7th of March, 1825, was written, had no reason to presume that their orders had been violated, and consequently could not be intended to mean by that letter to sanction such violation.

The said defendants' counsel further prayed the court to instruct the jury that, if they believed from the evidence submitted to them that the required quantity of tiles could be had in season for the return cargo of the Halcyon without any previous contract therefor, and that the five thousand reams of paper could not be had in season for said vessel without a previous contract therefor, that, inasmuch as the *plaintiffs admit, in their declaration, [77 that they did not furnish the defendants with freight money enough to purchase twenty-two hundred petso worth of tiles and pay the disbursements and pay for the said five thousand reams of wrapping paper, but only with three thousand four hundred and forty-nine petso, 7.3 (as in their declaration is expressed), and which latter sum was only sufficient for the payment of said disbursements and for the performance of the defendants' own contract in paying for said wrapping paper, the defendants were not holden to purchase any tiles, but were holden to ship the said five thousand reams of paper on board the Halcyon as the property of the plaintiffs.

But the court refused so to instruct the jury; and the court did instruct the jury that if the defendants undertook to comply with the original written orders of the plaintiffs, and no deviation therefrom was authorized by the plaintiffs, the defendants were bound, if funds to the amount came into their hands, in the first instance to apply two thousand two hundred petso of the funds which should come into their hands and be applied to this purpose to the purchase of tiles, and in the next place to deduct and apply as much as was necessary to pay the disbursements, and then to apply the residue to the purchase of paper; that if it were necessary or proper under the circumstances to make a purchase of the paper before the arrival of the vessel, the defendants were authorized to act upon the presumption that four thousand six hundred petso would come into their hands, and therefore the plaintiffs would have been bound by any purchase of paper made by the defendants, to the amount of the balance remaining of the said four thousand six hundred pesos, after deducting the two thousand two hundred pesos for tiles, and the probable amount of such disbursements. But that it was the duty of the defendants, if they had funds, to deduct in the first instance, from the whole amount, two thousand two hundred pesos for tiles; and if they did not, but chose to purchase paper without any reference thereto, it was a deviation from the plaintiffs' orders, and unless ratified by the plaintiffs the defendants *were answerable therefor: that if the defendants had purchased paper before the arrival of the vessel to the amount only of such residue or balance as aforesaid, and the funds had afterwards fallen short of the expected amount of four thousand six hundred pesos, the defendants were not bound to apply any more than the sum remaining in their hands, after deducting the amount of such purchase of paper, and such disbursements, to the purchase of tiles; and that after the receipt of the letters of the 20th of September and the duplicate of the 15th of September, if the defendants undertook to perform the orders therein contained, there was an implied obligation on them to apply the seven hundred pesos mentioned therein for the plaintiffs' benefit, to the purposes therein stated; that, to illustrate the case, if the jury were satisfied that the whole funds which came into the hands of the defendants for the plaintiffs (independent of the seven hundred pesos) were three thousand four hundred and fifty pesos, then the said seven hundred pesos should be added thereto as funds in the defendants' hands, making in the whole four thousand one hundred and fifty pesos.

In the view of the facts thus assumed by the court, and to illustrate its opinion, the practical result under such circumstances would be thus: the defendants were authorized to act on the presumption of funds to the amount of four thousand six hundred pesos. Deduct two thousand two hundred pesos for tiles and six hundred and fifty for probable disbursements, the balance left to be invested in paper would be one thousand seven hundred and fifty. The defendants would then be authorized, if the circumstances of the case required it, to contract for, or purchase to the amount of one thousand seven hundred and fifty pesos in paper, before the arrival of the vessel; and if the funds should afterwards fall short of the expected amount of four thousand six hundred pesos, the sum of one thousand seven hundred and fifty pesos, and the disbursements, say six hundred and fifty pesos, were to be first deducted out of the funds received, and the balance only invested in tiles. That if the funds *which actually came to the defendants' hands (without the seven hundred pesos) and the sum of seven hundred pesos were also received, the whole amount would be four thousand one hundred and fifty pesos, then the defendants would be justified in deducting therefrom for the purchase of paper one thousand seven hundred and fifty pesos, and disbursements six hundred and fifty pesos; leaving the sum of one thousand seven hundred and fifty pesos to be invested in tiles; and to this extent, if there was ratification, the defendants would be bound to invest for the plaintiffs in tiles, and were guilty of a breach of orders if they did not so invest, and the plaintiffs entitled to damages accordingly. But the court left the whole facts for the consideration of the jury, and stated the preceding sums only as illustrations of the principles of decisions if they were found conformable to the facts.

This prayer was properly overruled for the reasons assigned by the court. The orders were peremptory to apply two thousand two hundred pesos in the first instance to the purchase of tiles. The residue only of the funds which came to the hands of Bell, De Yough & Co. was applied to the purchase of wrapping paper; and the instruction that Bell, De Yough & Co. were justifiable in acting on the presumption that the whole sum mentioned in the letter of Cunningham & Co. would be received, and in contracting by anticipation for wrapping paper on that presumption, was as favorable to Bell, De Yough & Co. as the law and evidence would warrant. The only questionable part of the instruction is that which relates to the seven hundred pesos, mentioned in the postscript of that copy of the letter of the 15th of September, 1824, which went by the Halcyon. That postscript is in these words: "P. S.—We have further engaged whatever may be necessary to fill the brig, on half profits, on account of which seven hundred pesos are to be paid in Leghorn. After purchasing the tiles and paying the disbursements, you will invest the balance in paper as before mentioned. In previous orders the reams have been deficient in the proper number of sheets. We will thank you to *pay particular attention to this, as well [*80 as having all the sheets entire."

The court instructed the jury that if the defendants undertook to perform the orders, there was an implied obligation on them to apply the seven hundred pesos mentioned therein to the purposes therein mentioned.

No doubt can be entertained of the existence of this implied obligation if the seven hundred pesos were in fact received. This fact, however, could not be decided by the court, and was proper for the consideration of the jury. If the court took it from them, the instruction would be erroneous. Some doubt was at first entertained on this part of the case; but on a more attentive consideration of the charge that doubt is removed. The declaration that there was an implied obligation to apply the seven hundred pesos as directed in the letter and postscript, is not made in answer to any prayer for an instruction respecting the reception of this money, but respecting its application. The answer, therefore, which relates solely to the application, ought not to be construed as deciding that it was received. The judge afterwards, by way of illustration, shows the sum which might have been invested in wrapping paper consistently with the orders given by Cunningham & Co. on the hypothesis that the freight money would amount to four thousand six hundred pesos, and also on the hypothesis that the additional seven hundred pesos were received; and adds: "But the court left the whole facts for the consideration of the jury, and stated the preceding sums only as illustrations of the principles of decisions, if they were found conformable to the facts." We think, then, that the question whether the seven hundred pesos were actually received by Bell, De Yough & Co. was submitted to the jury on the evidence, and that there is no error in this instruction.

Peters 3.

The defendants' counsel did further pray the court to instruct the jury that inasmuch as the plaintiffs admit, in their declaration, that the freight money received by the defendants was three thousand four hundred and forty-nine pesos 7.3; and it appearing that the whole of 81] that sum had been absorbed *in the purchase of five thousand reams of wrapping paper, disbursements, and reasonable and customary charges; and that as the said plaintiffs did accept and sell the said five thousand reams of paper on their own account at the Havana, that such receipt and sale of the paper on their account, is, in law, a ratification of the acts of the defendants at Leghorn in the application of the whole of said freight money.

But the court refused so to direct the jury, because the instruction prayed for assumed the decision of matters of facts, and because the plaintiffs did not admit that the sum of three thousand four hundred and forty-nine pesos 7.3 was the whole sum or funds received as freight money by the defendants, but contended that the additional sum of seven hundred pesos was so received, and ought to be added thereto; and, because, whether the receipt and sale of the paper at Havana was a ratification of the acts of the defendants at Leghorn or not, was matter of fact for the consideration of the jury under all the circumstances of the case, and not matter of law to be decided by the court in the manner prayed for.

We think this instruction was properly refused by the court for the reasons assigned by the judge. It may be added in support of the statement made by the court, that though the first and second new count in the declaration claim only the sum mentioned by counsel in their prayer, the third claims a larger sum, and consequently left the plaintiffs in the court below at liberty to ask from the jury such sum within the amount demanded by the third count as the evidence would in their opinion prove to have come to the hands of the defendants. The question whether the receipt and sale of the sugars at the Havana amounted to a ratification of the acts of Bell, De Yough & Co. at Leghorn, certainly depended on the circumstances attending that transaction. If Cunningham & Co., with full knowledge of all the facts, acted as owners of the wrapping paper without signifying any intention of disavowing the acts of their agents, an inference in favor of ratification might be fairly *drawn by the jury. If the cargo from Leghorn was received and sold in the Havana under directions given at a time when Cunningham & Co. felt a just confidence that their orders would be faithfully executed by Bell, De Yough & Co., such an inference would be in a high degree unreasonable. This subject was, therefore, very properly left to the jury.

And the defendants' counsel furthermore prayed the court to instruct the jury as the plaintiffs' first new count, filed at this term by leave of court, that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs have set forth the letter of the plaintiffs to the defendants, of the 15th of September, 1824, as containing the special contract between the plaintiffs and defendants; and as the postscript to that letter contains a material part of the contract; and as the said postscript is not set forth in said count as part of said letter, but as wholly omitted; that the evidence offered by the plaintiffs in this behalf does not support and prove the contract as in that count is alleged.

But the court refused so to instruct the jury, being of opinion that the said postscript did not necessarily as a matter of law establish any variance between the first new count and the evidence in the case; and the court left it to the jury to consider upon the whole evidence in the case, whether that count was established in proof, and if in their opinion there was a variance, then to find their verdict for the defendants on that count.

On the 15th of September, 1824, Cunningham & Co. addressed a letter to Bell, De Yough & Co. containing the orders which have given rise to this controversy. This letter was sent by the Halcyon, and contained the postscript mentioned in this prayer for instructions to the jury. It was received on the 20th of January, 1825.

As the Halcyon was to make a circuitous voyage by the Havana, and Cunningham & Co. were desirous of communicating the contents of their letter by that vessel previous to her arrival, a duplicate was sent by the Envoy, which sailed a few days afterwards direct for Leghorn.

In this letter the postscript was omitted. It was received *on the 30th of November, [83 1824, and was answered soon afterwards with an assurance that the orders respecting the titles and wrapping paper would be executed.

The first new count in the declaration is on the special contract, and sets out at large the letter sent by the Envoy, which was first received, and to which the answer applied, in which Bell, De Yough & Co. undertook to execute the orders that were contained in that letter. It is undoubtedly true that a declaration which proposes to state a special contract in its words must set it out truly; but this contract was completed by the answer to the letter first received, and the obligation to apply the funds when received was then created. The plaintiffs below might certainly count upon this letter as their contract. Other counts in the declaration are general, and both letters may be given in evidence on them. The defendants might have objected to the reading of the letter by the Halcyon on the first new count; but the whole testimony was laid before the jury without exception, and the counsel prayed the court to instruct the jury that as the postscript was omitted in the letter stated in the first count, the evidence did not support the contract as in that count alleged.

This prayer might perhaps have been correctly made had no other letter been given in evidence than that received by the Halcyon. But as the very letter on which the count is framed and which was the foundation of the contract was given in evidence, the court could not have said with propriety that this count was not sustained. It was left to the jury to say whether there was a variance between the evidence and this count, and if in their opinion such variance did exist, they were at liberty to find for the defendants on that count. If there was any error in this instruction it was not to the prejudice of the plaintiffs in error.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh exceptions appear to have been abandoned by the counsel in argument, and were certainly very properly abandoned. These several prayers are founded on the assumption of contested facts, which were submitted and ought to have been submitted to the jury.

The eighth and last prayer is in these words: 84 "The defendants' *counsel prayed the court to instruct the jury that if they should find that any contract or promise was made by the defendants as to the purchase and shipment of twenty-two hundred petsos worth of tiles, and not performed (but broken), that the measure of damages was the value of the said sum of twenty-two hundred petsos at Leghorn and not at Havana; and that as the plaintiffs have taken and accepted another article of merchandise at Leghorn, viz., five thousand reams of wrapping paper of greater value than two thousand two hundred petsos, and which was purchased with the same moneys which plaintiffs aver should have been invested in marble tiles as aforesaid, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover any damages in this action.

But the court refused so to instruct the jury because the instruction prayed for called upon the court to decide on matters of fact in controversy before the jury. And the court did instruct the jury that, if upon the whole evidence they were satisfied that the orders of the plaintiffs had been broken by the defendants in not purchasing the tiles in the manner stated in the declaration, and that there had been no subsequent ratification by the plaintiffs of the acts and proceedings of the defendants, then that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover their damages for the breach thereof; that what the proper damages were, must be decided by them upon the whole circumstances of the case; that in their assessment of damages they were not bound to confine themselves to the state of things at Leghorn, and they were not precluded from taking into consideration the voyage to the Havana and the fact of the arrival of the vessel there, the state of the markets, and the profits which might have been made by the plaintiffs if their orders as to the tiles had been complied with; that the court would not lay down any rule for their government, except that they were at liberty to compensate the plaintiffs for their actual losses sustained as a consequence from the default of the defendants, but they were not at liberty to give vindictive damages.

This prayer consists of two parts. 1st. The measure of damages if the jury should be of opinion that the contract was broken. 2d. The 85 ratification of the acts of Bell, De *Yough & Co. by accepting at Havana another article in lieu of the tiles.

1. The measure of damages. The plaintiffs in error contend that the value of the money at Leghorn which ought to have been invested in tiles, and not its value at the Havana, ought to be the standard by which damages should be measured. That is, if his views are well understood, that the value of two thousand two hundred petsos at Leghorn, with interest thereon, and not the value of the tiles in which they ought to have been invested at the Havana, ought to be given by the jury.

This instruction ought not to have been given unless it be true that special damages for the breach of a contract can be awarded under no circumstances whatever; that an action for the breach of contract was equivalent, and only equivalent, to an action for money had and received for the plaintiffs' use. That the breach of contract consisted in the nonpayment of two thousand two hundred petsos; not in the failure to invest that sum in tiles. In fact, that under all circumstances, if no money came to the hands of the defendants, the damages in such an action must be nominal. This can never be admitted.

The faithful execution of orders which an agent or correspondent has contracted to execute is of vital importance in commercial transactions, and may often effect the injured party far beyond the actual sum misapplied. A failure in this respect may entirely break up a voyage and defeat the whole enterprise. We do not mean that speculative damages; dependent on possible successive schemes, ought ever to be given; but positive and direct loss, resulting plainly and immediately from the breach of orders, may be taken into the estimate. Thus in this case, an estimate of possible profit to be derived from investments at the Havana of the money arising from the sale of the tiles, taking into view a distinct operation, would have been to transcend the proper limits which a jury ought to respect; but the actual value of the tiles themselves, at the Havana, affords a reasonable standard for the estimate of damages. The instructions of the judge seem to contemplate this course, and his restraining *power would have corrected, by grant- [86 ing a new trial, any great excess in this particular. The rule that the jury was to compensate the plaintiffs for actual loss, and not to give vindictive damages, is thought by this court to have been correct. The declaration expressly claims the loss of the profits which would have accrued from the sale of the tiles.

That part of this prayer which relates to the ratification of the acts of Bell, De Yough & Co. by the receipt of the wrapping paper at the Havana has been fully noticed in the observations on the third exception.

This court is of opinion that there is no error in several instructions given by the Circuit Court to the jury, and that the judgment ought to be affirmed with costs and six per cent. damages.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed, with costs and damages, at the rate of six per centum per annum.

Cited—3 Wood. & M., 86.

*GEORGE B. MAGRUDER, Plaintiff [87
in Error,

v.

THE UNION BANK OF GEORGETOWN,
Defendants in Error.

Promissory note—indorser as administrator of maker—demand and notice—due diligence.

Peters 3.

An action was brought by The Union Bank of Georgetown against George B. Magruder as indorser of a promissory note drawn by George Magruder. The maker of the note died before it became payable, and letters of administration to his estate were taken out by the indorser. No notice of the nonpayment of the note was given to the indorser, or any demand of payment made until the institution of this suit. Held, that the indorser was discharged, and his having become the administrator of the drawer does not relieve the holder from the obligation to demand payment of the note and to give notice thereof to the indorser.

The general rule that payment must be demanded from the maker of a note, and notice of nonpayment forwarded to the indorser within due time in order to render him liable, is so firmly settled that no authority need be cited to support it. Due diligence to obtain payment from the maker is a condition precedent, on which the liability of the indorser depends. [90]

IN the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia for the County of Washington, the defendants in error instituted a suit against George B. Magruder, the plaintiff in error, upon a promissory note drawn by George Magruder in favor of and indorsed by the plaintiff in error, dated Washington, November 8th, 1817, for six hundred and forty-three dollars, twenty-one cents, payable seven years after date. After the making of the note, the drawer, George Magruder, died, and on the 18th of November, 1822, administration of his effects was granted to George B. Magruder, the plaintiff in error. The note having been due on the 11th of November, 1824, was not paid.

Upon the trial of the cause, the plaintiff, in support of the issue joined, offered in evidence to the jury the promissory note issued the 18th of November, 1823, the handwriting of the maker and the indorsement by the defendant having been admitted; and further proved that the defendant had, previous to the note falling due, taken out letters of administration in the County of Montgomery, in the State of Maryland, upon the personal estate of George Magruder, the maker of the said note, on the 18th 88*] of November, 1823; the *said George Magruder having previously departed this life. It was admitted that the note in question had never been protested, nor had any notice been given to this defendant that the note was not paid. Upon these circumstances the counsel for the defendant moved the court to instruct the jury, that before the plaintiff can recover in this action, it is essential for him to prove demand and notice to the indorser of the nonpayment; which not being done, the verdict should be for the defendant. But the court refused to give the instruction prayed for as aforesaid, and charged the jury that no demand of notice of nonpayment was necessary. To this refusal and instruction the counsel for the defendant excepted, and the court sealed a bill of exceptions and this writ of error was prosecuted.

The case was argued by Mr. Cove for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Dunlop and Mr. Key for the defendant.

Mr. Cove contended that the fact that the indorser of the note had become the administrator of the drawer did not release the holders of the note from any of the duties and legal obligations they were under to give notice to the indorser of the nonpayment of the note, and that payment was expected from him. The letters of administration were granted out of the District of Columbia; but if they had been issued within the District the law would have been the same.

Peters 3.

As a general rule notice was necessary, and notice must come from the holder of the note to apprise the party that he is looked to for payment. (Chitty, 293.)

The mere fact that the indorser had been the representative of the drawer did not imply a knowledge of the nonpayment of the note; and if it did, notice of its nonpayment was not thereby dispensed with. (Chitty, 293; 1 T. Rep., 167; 2 Con. Rep., 654.) The legal obligations of an indorser become complete on notice, and are not such until notice.

The obligation to give notice has been declared to exist in a case in which, if it ever could be excused, it would have been waived under its circumstances. Where one person *was a member of two partnerships, one [*89 of which signed and the other of which indorsed, it was held that presentment for payment was necessary to charge the indorser. (Bayley on Bills, 159.)

Mr. Dunlop and Mr. Key, for the defendant, admitted the general rule to be as stated by the counsel for the plaintiff in error; but exceptions had been allowed to the rule, and on the same principles the present was entitled to exemption from its stricter application.

In The Bank of Columbia v. French (4 Cranch, 161), when this note was drawn for the use of the indorser notice was not required. His knowledge that the obligation to pay was upon him made the notice unnecessary.

The plaintiff in error, as administrator of the drawer, became the payer of the note, and as such was bound to do so without demand; no demand on him being required, it was useless to give him notice that he had not done what he well knew he had omitted.

The purpose of the rule as to notice did not exist here; if notice was required to enable the indorser to secure himself by calling on the drawer, this could not be done; and as he had the estate of the drawer in his hands for his indemnity no demand of the indorser was necessary. (Bank of the United States v. Carneal, 2 Peters, 552.)

The law never requires that to be done which is useless; and therefore the defendant in error, who could not by the notice or by its omission have affected the rights of the indorser or his means of protecting himself from loss, was not required to give it.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by The Union Bank of Georgetown against George B. Magruder, as indorser of a promissory note made by George Magruder. The maker of the note died before it became payable, and letters of administration on his estate were taken out by the indorser. When the note became payable suit was commenced against the indorser *without [*90 any demand of payment other than the suit itself, without any protest for nonpayment, and without any notice that the note was not paid and that the holder looked to him as indorser for payment. Upon these circumstances the counsel for the defendant moved the court to instruct the jury, that before the plaintiff can recover in this action, it is essential for him to prove demand and notice to the indorser of the nonpayment, which not being done, the verdict should be for the defendant. But the court refused to give this instruction, and charged the jury that no demand or notice of nonpayment was necessary. To this opinion the counsel for the defendant in the Circuit Court excepted, and has brought the cause to this court by writ of error.

The general rule that payment must be demanded from the maker of a note, and notice of its nonpayment forwarded to the indorser within due time in order to render him liable, is so firmly settled that no authority need be cited in support of it. The defendant in error does not controvert this rule, but insists that this case does not come within it, because demand of payment and notice of nonpayment are totally useless, since the indorser has become the personal representative of the maker. He has not, however, cited any case in support of this opinion, nor has he shown that the principle has been ever laid down in any treatise on promissory notes and bills. The court ought to be well satisfied of the correctness of the principle before it sanctions so essential a departure from established commercial usage.

This suit is not brought against George B. Magruder as administrator of George Magruder, the maker of the note, but against him as indorser. These two characters are as entirely distinct as if the persons had been different. A recovery against George B. Magruder, as indorser, will not affect the assets in his hands as administrator. It is not a judgment against the maker, but against the indorser of the note. The fact that the indorser is the representative of the maker does not oppose any obstacle to proceeding in the regular course. The regular demand of payment may be made and the note protested for nonpayment, of which notice may be given to him as indorser with as 91] much facility as if the indorser had *not been the administrator. It is not alleged that any difficulty existed in proceeding regularly; the allegation is that it was totally useless.

The note became payable on the 8th day of November, 1824. The writ was taken out against the indorser on the 26th day of April, 1825. If this unusual mode of proceeding can be sustained, it must be on the principle that, as the indorser must have known that he had not paid the note as the representative of the maker, notice to him was useless. Could this be admitted, does it dispense with the necessity of demanding payment? It is possible that assets which might have been applied in satisfaction of this debt, had payment been demanded, may have received a different direction. It is possible that the note may have been paid by the maker before it fell due. Be this as it may, no principle is better settled in commercial transactions than that the undertaking of the indorser is conditional. If due diligence be used to obtain payment from the maker without success, and notice of nonpayment be given to him in time, his undertaking becomes absolute; not otherwise. Due diligence to obtain payment from the maker is a condition precedent, on which the liability of the indorser depends. As no attempt to obtain payment from the maker was made in this case, and no notice of nonpayment was given to the indorser, we think the Circuit Court ought to have given the instruction prayed for by the defendant in that court.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to award a venire facias de novo.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, holden in and for the County of Washington, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby reversed, and that the said cause be, and the same is hereby remanded to the said Circuit Court, with directions to award a venire facias de novo in said cause.

See S. C., 7 Pet., 291.

Cited—4 Pet., 384; 7 Pet., 287, 291; 10 Otto, 712.

*ROBERT CHINOWETH, JAMES [*92
TRACY, AND THOMAS WILMOUTH, Plaintiffs in Error,
v.

THE LESSEE OF BENJAMIN HASKELL
ET AL., Defendants.

Demurrer to evidence—its effect—description of land in a grant.

The defendant in the court below having withdrawn his cause from the jury by a demurrer to evidence, or having submitted to a verdict for the plaintiff subject to the demurrer, cannot hope for a judgment in his favor if by any fair construction of the evidence the verdict can be sustained. [96]

It is an obvious principle that a grant must describe the land to be conveyed, and that the subject granted must be identified by the description given of it in the instrument itself. The description of the land consists of the courses and distances run by the surveyor, and of the marked trees at the lines and corners, or other natural objects which ascertain the very land which was actually surveyed. [96]

If a grant be made which describes the land granted by course and distance only, or by natural objects not distinguishable from others of the same kind, course and distance, though not safe guides, are the only guides given, and must be used. [96]

The line which forms the western boundary of the land intended to be granted was never run or marked. In his office the surveyor assumed a course and distance, and terminates the line at two small chestnut oaks. But where are we to look for those two small chestnut oaks in a wilderness in which one man takes up fifty thousand acres and another one hundred thousand? or how are we to distinguish them from other chestnut oaks. The guide, and the only guide given us by the surveyor or by the grant, is the course and distance. [96]

It is admitted that the course and distance called for in a grant may be controlled and corrected by other objects of description which show that the survey actually covered other ground than the lines of the grant would comprehend. [98]

WRIT of error to the District Court of the Western District of Virginia.

This case was argued by Mr. Doddridge for the plaintiff in error, no counsel appearing for the defendant. He contended:

1. That Wilson does not prove the making of any actual survey of the three last lines, and all that he does prove is that he protracted them.

2. That in protracting the line D E he
Peters 3.

93*] guessed at a course *and distance which he supposed would reach Young's corner, which he missed about five miles.

3. That he only proves it to have been his intention to go to Young's corner. He did not in this certificate of survey call for a corner to Young, but only for two chestnut oaks in a country where there is scarcely any other timber.

4. That course and distance, as called for, may be corrected by other matters of description in the certificate and grant by any natural call or description which may identify a corner, or render it certain as "two chestnut oaks, corner to Robert Young's survey of one hundred thousand acres, &c., the first, second, or third corner, &c." Such correction of course and distance cannot be made by a secret, undisclosed intention that the two chestnuts he called for should be those at one of Young's corners.

5. The course and distances called for in the grant will locate the grant on the waters and water-courses precisely as stated in the grant. This appears by the surveyor's diagram, which, with the grant, is record evidence of this fact. Let the courses and distances called for be varied according to Wilson's secret intention, the case will be very different.

The grant calls to be on part of Clover Run, on Cheat River, and to include the waters of Pheasant Run. These descriptions suit either mode of locating the grant, but the grant calls to be on the waters of Tygart Valley, and to include part of the waters of Hornback's Run and the Cherry Tree Fork of Leading Creek. Whereas, as he would locate his grant, it will include not only part of the waters of Hornback's Run and the Cherry Tree Fork of Leading Creek, but all these two streams and their waters, and even all Leading Creek itself, of which they are small branches; and his survey will be, not on the waters of Tygart Valley River, but on the river itself, crossing it four times.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

The judgment in this cause was rendered by the Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia, in an ejectment brought by 94] the defendants in error to recover *fifty thousand acres of land, a part of which was in the occupation of the defendants in the court below. The defendants in that court disclaimed as to the part of the land for which judgment was entered against the casual ejector, and went to trial as to the residue. The original plaintiffs having the eldest title, the case depended entirely on the question whether their grant covered the land in dispute. If it be surveyed according to the courses and distances called for, it will entirely exclude that land. The plaintiffs, however, claim to survey it in such manner as to comprehend the tenements in possession of the defendants.

A survey was made, and the diagram of the surveyor, with his report, exhibits the respective claims of the parties. The diagram A B C D E F A represents the land claimed by the plaintiffs. A B C D G H A represents the land, which, as the defendants contend, the grant to the plaintiffs ought to cover. A B C and D form the northern side of the tract, and are admitted by both parties to be correctly laid down. The question is: whether the next line should run from D to E, as contended by the plaintiffs, or from D to G, as contended by the defendants. The line from D to G corresponds in course and distance with the call of the patent; it is S. nine W. four thousand six hundred poles. The line from D to E is S. twenty-eight degrees nine minutes west, four thousand eight hundred and fifty-four poles, varying nineteen degrees nine minutes from the course, and two hundred and fifty-four poles from the distance. This variance places the corner at E about five miles west from that of G, and produces a correspondent change in the two remaining lines which form the southern and western sides of the land.

At the trial the defendants demurred to the plaintiffs' testimony, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs, subject to the opinion of the court on the demurrer. The court overruled the demurrer and gave judgment for the plaintiffs.

The demurrer states that at the trial the plaintiff gave in evidence the plat and report made by the surveyor, which show that the lines from A to D which bind the land on the north, conform to the patent. That the other three lines—D *E, E F and F A—which [95] inclose the land on the west, south, and east, are not marked, nor is any corner found at F. At E. two chestnut oaks were found where two chestnut oaks were called for in the patent. They are marked as a corner previously made for Robert Young. The lines D. G., G. H. and H. A., laid down by the directions of the defendants conformably to the patent, are not marked.

The plaintiffs also gave in evidence the patent under which they claimed, dated the 9th of July, 1796, the conveyance of the patentees to them, and an official copy of the plat and certificate of survey on which the grant was founded. The land is described as lying on the waters of Tygart Valley River, Cheat River, to include the waters of Pheasant Run and a part of Clover Run, part of the waters of Benjamin Hornback's and Cherry Tree Fork of Leading Creek. They also gave in evidence the grants under which the defendants claimed, with the entries and surveys on which they were founded, which were younger than that under which the plaintiffs claimed. They also read the deposition of William Wilson. He deposes that he made the survey of fifty thousand acres in 1795. He proves that he began at A and ran the line on the north side of the tract to D. He then protracted a line intended to strike two chestnut oaks near the head of James's Run by the side of a path leading from Tygart Valley to the mouth of Seneca, which was a corner he had previously marked to a survey of one hundred thousand acres he had made for Robert Young. From those two chestnut oaks he ran to Tygart Valley River. Not having a sufficient distance, and finding that the line would cross the river several times, he extended the course and called for a white oak, because he knew there were white oaks thereabout. He does not know whither the course and distance would have carried him to the east or west side of the river. He then protracted a line to the beginning. On being cross examined he said he made the line from D to E in his office, and laid it down, intending to hit the two chestnut oaks near James's Run. He went to the two chestnut oaks and ran to the river (not quite half the line E F) where he stopped, and continued the line E F the proper distance, and also protracted the closing line F A. He had 96 no axeman *with him, consequently marked no trees. He was accompanied by only one individual, and does not allege that a chain was stretched.

The defendants in the District Court having withdrawn their cause from the jury by a demurrer to evidence, or having submitted to a verdict for the plaintiffs subject to that demurrer, cannot hope for a judgment in their favor if, by any fair construction of the evidence, the verdict can be sustained. If this cannot be done, the judgment rendered for the defendants in error must be reversed.

It is an obvious principle that a grant must describe the land to be conveyed, and that the subject granted must be identified by the description given of it in the instrument itself. For the purpose of furnishing this description and of separating the land from that which is not appropriated, the law directs a survey to be made by sworn officers, who, "at the time of making such survey, shall see the same bounded plainly by marked trees, except where a water-course or ancient marked line shall be the boundary." The persons employed to carry the chain are to be sworn by the surveyor to measure justly and exactly to the best of their abilities. The description of the land thus made by a survey is transferred into the grant. It consists of the courses and distances run by the surveyor, and of the marked trees at the lines and corners, or other natural objects which ascertain the very land which was actually surveyed. The courses and distances are less certain and less permanent guides to the land actually surveyed and granted than natural and fixed objects on the ground; but they are guides to some extent, and, in the absence of all others, must govern us. If a grant be made which describes the land granted by course and distance only, or by natural objects not distinguishable from others of the same kind, course and distance, though not safe guides, are the only guides given us, and must be used.

In the case at bar the line from D to E or from D to G, which forms the western boundary of the land intended to be granted, was never run or marked. In his office the surveyor assumed a course and distance, and terminates the line of two small chestnut oaks. But where 97 are we to look *for these two small chestnut oaks in a wilderness in which one man takes up fifty thousand acres of land, and another one hundred thousand? Or how are we to distinguish them from other chestnut oaks? The guide and the only guide given us by the survey or by the grant is the course and distance. We are to find them at the end of a line of four thousand six hundred poles, to be run south nine degrees west from the established corner at D. We are furnished with no other guide which may conduct us to them. That the surveyor had in his mind the two small chestnut oaks which he had marked as a corner to Robert Young can be of no avail, since he has not indicated this intention on his survey. He had impliedly indicated the contrary. When the established line or corner of a prior survey is made part of a boundary, it is usual to designate such marked line or corner by naming the person whose line or corner it is. The call for two small chestnut oaks without farther description would rather exclude the idea that they were already marked as the corner of a previous survey.

The fact that the surveyor on a subsequent day went to Young's corner, and without marking it as a corner for the survey he was then employed to make, walked along the line he intended for the southern boundary of the land nearly half the distance without marking a single tree, cannot in any manner affect the case.

In estimating this evidence we may inquire what weight would be allowed to it if the grantee claimed to hold the land actually within his patent lines, and this testimony was opposed to him by a junior patentee within those lines? We believe that no person would hesitate an instant to say that his title to the land actually within the lines of his patent was unquestionable. He cannot be permitted after the grant has issued to elect what ground it shall cover.

This opinion derives some additional weight from the general description of the country as made in the grant, and as shown on the plat and report of the survey made by order of court in the cause.

The grant calls to be on the waters of Tygart Valley, and to include part of the waters of Hornback's Run, and the *Cherry Tree [98 Fork of Leading Creek. This description accords with the survey as required by the plaintiffs in error. The grant, if placed as the defendants in error claim to place it, will include, as is shown by the survey made in the cause, not only part of the waters of Hornback's Run and the Cherry Tree Fork of Leading Creek, but all these two streams, and even all Leading Creek itself, of which they are small branches. It will also, instead of being on the waters of Tygart's Valley River, lie on the river itself, which it crosses several times. The general description, then, contained in the grant, fits the land comprehended within the lines of the patent much better than it does that which is claimed by the defendants in error.

It is admitted that the course and distance called for in a grant may be controlled and corrected by other objects of description, which show that the survey actually covered other ground than the line of the grant would comprehend. If the grant in this case had called for two small chestnut oaks marked as a corner to Robert Young's survey of one hundred thousand acres, the mistake in the course and distance would not have prevented the line from being run from the corner at D to the chestnut oak. So if a plain marked line, originally run from the one corner to the other, had shown that the land claimed was the land actually surveyed. But neither the grant nor the face of the plat furnishes any information by which the corner called for in the grant can be controlled. We are therefore of opinion that the defendant in error is not entitled to the land shown by the survey made in the cause to be in possession of the plaintiffs in error, and that the demurrer ought to have been sustained.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment in favor of the defendants in the District Court.

See—3 Wheat., 444; 6 Pet., 328.

99*] *JOHN INGLIS, Demandant,

v.

THE TRUSTEES OF THE SAILOR'S SNUG HARBOR IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

Charitable devise—uses and trusts—intention of testator—citizenship—English and American rule as to American antenati—allegiance—devise of estate “wheresoever and whatsoever in law or equity, in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy”—local law of real property—writ of right—cases discussed.

The testator gave all the rest and residue and remainder of his estate, real and personal, comprehending a large real estate in the city of New York, to the Chancellor of the State of New York, and recorder of the city of New York, &c. (naming several other persons by their official description), to have and to hold the same unto them and their respective successors in office to the uses and trusts, subject to the conditions and appointments declared in the will; which were; out of the rents, issue and profits thereof, to erect and build upon the land upon which he resided, which was given by the will, an asylum, or marine hospital, to be called “The Sailor’s Snug Harbor,” for the purpose of maintaining and supporting aged, decrepit and worn-out sailors, &c. And after giving direction, as to the management of the fund by his trustees, and declaring that the institution created by his will should be perpetual, and that those officers and their successors should forever continue the governors thereof, &c., he adds, “it is my will and desire that if it cannot legally be done according to my above intention by them without an Act of the Legislature, it is my will and desire that they will as soon as possible apply for an Act of the Legislature to incorporate them for the purpose above specified; and I do further declare it to be my will and intention that the said rest, residue,

&c., of my estate should be at all events applied for the uses and purposes above set forth; and that it is my desire all courts of law and equity will so construe this my said last will as to have the said estate appropriated to the above uses, and that the same should in no case, for want of legal form or otherwise, be so construed as that my relations, or any other persons, should heir, possess or enjoy my property, except in the manner and for the uses herein above specified.”

Within five years after the death of the testator the Legislature of the State of New York, on the application of the trustees, also named as executors of the will, passed a law constituting the persons holding the offices designated in the will and their successors a body corporate, by the name of “The Trustees of the Sailor’s Snug Harbor,” and enabling them to execute the trusts declared in the will.

This is a valid devise to divest the heir of his legal estate, or, at all events to affect the lands in his hands with the trust declared in the will.

If, after such a plain and unequivocal declaration of the testator with respect to the disposition of his property, so cautiously guarding against and providing for every supposed difficulty that might arise, any technical objection shall now be interposed to defeat his purpose; it will form an exception to what we find so universally laid down in all our books as a cardinal rule in the construction of wills, that the intention of the testator is to be sought after and carried into effect. If this intention cannot be carried into effect precisely in the mode at first contemplated by him consistently with the rules of law, he has provided an alternative, which, with the aid of the Act of the Legislature, must remove every difficulty. [113]

*In the case of *The Baptist Association v. [100 Hart’s Executors (4 Wheat., 27), the court considered the bequest void for uncertainty as to the devisees, and the property vested in the next of kin, or was disposed of by some other provisions of the will. If the testator in that case had bequeathed the property to the Baptist Association on its becoming thereafter and within a reasonable time incorporated, could there be a doubt but that the subsequent incorporation would have conferred on the association the capacity of taking and managing the fund? [114]

Whenever a person by will gives property and points out the object, the property, and the way in which it shall go, a trust is created unless he shows clearly that his desire expressed is to be controlled by the trustee, and that he shall have an option to defeat it. [119]

What are the rights of the individuals composing a society and living under the protection of the government when a revolution occurs, a dismemberment takes place, and when new governments are formed and new relations between the government and the people are established? A person

NOTE.—Wills, devise to trustees for charitable uses. As to devises and bequests to unincorporated associations, &c., see note to Baptist Association v. Hart, 4 Wheat., 1.

Unincorporated associations not capable of taking devise to charitable uses. Baptist Association v. Hart, 4 Wheat., 1; Goesele v. Bineler, 5 McLean, 223; Affirmed, 14 How., 539.

Subsequent incorporation confers on the association the capacity of taking and managing the fund. Inglis v. Trustees of Sailor’s Snug Harbor, supra.

Where a corporation has the legal capacity to take real and personal estate, it may take and hold it in trust, in the same manner and to the same extent as a private person. Vidal v. Girard, 2 How., 127; Miller v. Lerch, 1 Wall., Jr., C. C., 210.

Validity of particular bequests and devises to charitable uses, determined. Baptist Association v. Hart, 4 Wheat., 1; Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Pet., 566; Inglis v. Sailor’s Snug Harbor, supra; Henderson v. Griffin, 5 Pet., 151; Perin v. Carey, 24 How., 465; Cresson v. Cresson, 6 Am. Law Reg., 42; 5 Pa. Law J. Rep., 431; Ould v. Washington Hospital, 5 Otto, (95 U. S.) 303.

Uncertain legacies which are not given with sufficient definiteness to vest an interest in the beneficiaries intended, or to enable them to claim, cannot be carried into effect by the United States, on the ground that they are for charitable uses. Wheeler v. Smith, 9 How., 55; Barnes v. Barnes, 3 Crauch C. C., 269; See Fontain v. Ravenel, 17 How., 369.

By the laws of Maryland a bequest to an unincorporated association is void for want of power in the legatees to take. Meade v. Meade, Taney, 339, 359.

incorporated association is void for want of power in the legatees to take. Meade v. Meade, Taney, 339, 359.

If the grant or devise is too vague and indefinite to enable the court to detect to what charity the instrument refers, then the estate will follow the prescribed course of descent; otherwise the charity will be enforced. Russell v. Allen 7 Reporter, 614; Power v. Cassidy, 16 Hun. N. Y., 294; S. C., 54 How. Pr. R., 4; Ex-parte Goodrich, 2 Redf. N. Y., 45.

The support of foundlings is a charitable use and greater certainty in designating the beneficiaries intended, is not necessary. Ould v. Washington Hospital, 5 Otto, (95 U. S.) 303.

A devise to trustees, to grant and convey the trust estate to a corporation yet to be created in fee, for the purposes of the trust, may be sustained as an executory devise. Ould v. Washington Hospital, 5 Otto, (95 U. S.) 303.

The opinion prevailed extensively in this country for a considerable period that the validity of charitable endowments and the jurisdiction of courts of equity in such cases depended upon the statute 4 Eliz., ch. 4. By more recent discussions this idea has been exploded (Bright, Pa., 346; 7 Vt., 241; 2 How., 128); and one cannot but feel surprised that it ever prevailed. The statute is purely remedial and ancillary. Ould v. Washington Hospital, 5 Otto, (95 U. S.) 303.

By a statute of New York, a devise of lands in that State can only be made to natural persons, and to such corporations as are created under the born in New York before the 4th of July, 1776, and who remained an infant with his father in the city of New York during the period it was occupied by the British troops; his father being a royalist and having adhered to the British government and left New York with the British troops, taking his son with him, who never returned to the United States, but afterwards became a bishop of the Episcopal Church in Nova Scotia; such a person was born a British subject, and continued an alien, and is disabled from taking land by inheritance in the State of New York. [126]

If such a person had been born after the 4th of July, 1776, and before the 15th of September, 1776, when the British troops took possession of the city of New York and the adjacent places, his infancy incapacitated him from making an election for himself, and his election and character followed that of his father, subject to the right of disaffirmance in a reasonable time after the termination of his minority; which never having been done, he remained a British subject and disabled from inheriting land in the State of New York. [126]

The rule as to the point of time at which the American antenati ceased to be British subjects differs in this country and in England, as established by the courts of justice in the respective countries. The English rule is to take the date of the Treaty of Peace in 1783. Our rule is to take the date of the Declaration of Independence. [121]

The settled doctrine in this country is, that a person born here, but who left the country before the Declaration of Independence, and never returned here, became an alien and incapable of taking land subsequently by descent. The right to inherit depends upon the existing state of allegiance at the time of the descent east. [121]

The doctrine of perpetual allegiance is not applied by the British courts to the American antenati; and this court, in the case of Blight's Lessee v. Rochester (7 Wheat., 544), adopted the same rule with respect to the rights of British subjects here—that although born before the revolution, they are equally incapable with those born subsequent to that event of inheriting or transmitting the inheritance of lands in this country. [121]

The British doctrine, therefore, is that the American antenati, by remaining in America after the peace, lost their character of British subjects; and our doctrine is that by withdrawing from this country, and adhering to the British [101*] government, they lost, or perhaps more properly speaking, never acquired the character of American citizens. [122]

The right of election must necessarily exist in all revolutions like ours, and is well established by adjudged cases. [122]

This court in the case of M'Ilvaine's Lessee v. Cox (4 Cranch, 211), fully recognized the right of election; but they considered that Mr. Cox had lost that right by remaining in the State of New Jersey, not only after she had declared herself a sovereign State, but after she had passed laws by which she declared him to be a member of and in allegiance to the new government. [124]

Allegiance may be dissolved by the mutual consent of the government and its citizens or subjects. The government may release the governed from their allegiance. This is even the British doctrine. [125]

C. B., by her last will and testament, devised "all her estate, real and personal, wheresoever and whatsoever in law or equity, in possession, reversion, remainder or expectauey, unto her executors and to the survivor of them, his heirs and assigns forever," upon certain designated trusts; under the statute of wills of the State of New York (1 N. Y. Revised Laws, 364), all the rights of the testator to real estate, held adversely at the time of the decease of the testator, passed to the devisees by this will. [127]

It is the uniform rule of this court with respect to the title to real property, to apply the same rule which is applied to State tribunals in like cases. [127]

The right of an absent and absconding debtor to real estate held adversely, passed to and became vested in the trustees by the Act of the Legislature of New York, passed April 4, 1786, entitled, "An act for relief against absconding and absent debtors." [131]

In a writ of right the tenant may, on the mise joined, set up a title out of himself and in a third person. If anything which fell from this court in the case of Greene v. Lister (8 Cranch, 229), can be supposed to give countenance to the opposite doctrine, it is done away by the explanation given by the court in Greene v. Watkins (7 Wheaton, 31). It is there laid down that the tenant may give in evidence the title in a third person for the purpose of disproving the demandant's seisin: that a writ of right does bring into controversy the mere right of the parties to the suit; and, if so, it by consequence authorizes either party to establish by evidence that the other has no right whatever in the demanded premises, or that his mere right is inferior to that set up against him. [133]

In a writ of right on the mise joined on the mere right, under a count for the entire right, a demandant may recover a less quantity than the entirety. [135.]

THIS case came before the court at January Term, 1829, from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, on points of disagreement certified by the judges of that court. After argument by counsel, it was held under advisement until the present term.

laws of the State and are authorized to take by devise. A devise, therefore, of lands in that State to the government of the United States, is void. United States v. Fox, 4 Otto 94 (U. S.), 315.

A devise in trust, "for the purpose of founding an institution for the education of youth in St. Louis County, Mo." Sustained. Russell v. Allen, 8 Cont. L. J., 314.

A devise of real estate to an unincorporated society, for charitable uses, is valid. Bartlett v. Nye, 4 Met., 378; Washburn v. Sewall, 9 Met., 280.

The system of charitable uses as recognized in England, has no existence in New York; and no trust in realty can be devised except such as are permitted by the statutes of that State. Holmes v. Mead, 52 N. Y., 332.

A devise of lands in trust to be used and occupied for religious purposes, where there is no corporation in existence capable of taking, and none named in the will as the beneficiary of the trust, is invalid. Ibid.

In New York, a bequest which attempts to create a trust not valid by the revised statutes of that State, cannot be sustained merely because it is to charitable uses. Wetmore v. Parker, 7 Laus., 121; S. C. affirmed, 52 N. Y., 450.

What is a sufficient compliance with a general law, as to organization of a charitable institution, to enable it to take a legacy in New York. Betts v. Betts, 4 Abb., N. C., 317.

A misnomer or misdescription of the beneficiary will not invalidate a charitable devise or bequest;

if a corporation be intended, its identity may be established by parol. Lefevre v. Lefevre, 59 N. Y., 434.

What is a "charity," or a charitable corporation. Moriee v. Bishop of Durham, 9 Ves., 399, 405; Coggleshall v. Pelton, 7 Johns. Ch., 294; Perin v. Carey, 24 How., 506; Franklin v. Arnfield, 2 Sneed. Tenn., 305; Price v. Maxwell, 28 Penn. St., 35; Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, Mass., 539, 556; 2 Story, Eq. Jur., sec. 1194, §; Gooch v. Association for Relief, etc., 109 Mass., 558; Thomson v. Norris, 20 N. J. Eq., 489.

Mr. Binney in his argument in the famous Girard Will Case defined a charitable or pious gift to be "whatever is given for the love of God, or for the love of your neighbor, in the Catholic and universal sense—given from these motives and to these ends—free from the stain or taint of every consideration that is personal, private or selfish." Girard Will Case, 41; approved, 28 Penn. St., 35.

Lord Camden defines it to be "a gift to a general public use, which extends to the poor as well as the rich." Ambl., 652. This definition has been approved by high authority. See Coggleshall v. Pelton, 7 Johns. Ch., 294; Perin v. Carey, 24 How., 506; 2 Sneed. Tenn., 305.

That the title to real property by will, or devise, or deed, is governed by the law of the State in which it is situated, in all actions in the federal courts, see notes to Clark v. Graham, 6 Wheat., 577; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat., 132; Darby v. Mayer, 10 Wheat., 465; Jackson v. Chew, 12 Wheat., 153.

It was a writ of right brought in the Circuit Court for the recovery of certain real estate situate in the city of New York, whereof Robert Richard Randall died seized and possessed.

102*] *The count was upon the seisin of Robert Richard Randall, and went for the whole premises.

Paul R. Randall and Catherine Brewerton, a brother and sister of Robert Richard Randall, both survived him, but had since died without issue.

The demandant claimed his relationship to Robert Richard Randall through Margaret Inglis, his mother, who was a descendant of John Crooke, the common ancestor of Robert Richard Randall, Catherine Brewerton, and Paul R. Randall.

The tenants put themselves upon the grand assize, and the mise was joined upon the mere right.

The cause was tried at October Term, 1827.

The counsel for the tenants began with the evidence, and showed that they had been in possession for a number of years, claiming and holding the land as owners.

The seisin of Robert Richard Randall was then proved, and that he purchased from one Baron Poelnitz. The genealogy of the demandant as next collateral heir of Robert R. Randall, on the part of his mother, and that the blood of Thomas Randall, the father of Robert Richard Randall, was extinct, was proved.

It was in evidence that the British troops entered into New York on the 15th of September, 1776, and took and had full possession thereof, and of the adjacent bays and islands, and established a civil government there under the authority of the British commander-in-chief.

Evidence was given to prove that the demandant was not more than one year old when the British troops entered the city of New York, where he was born; that the father of the demandant was a native of Ireland, and had resided for some time in New York, and continued to reside there until he left there for England on the day of or the day before the evacuation of New York, the 25th of November, 1783. He took the demandant with him to England, remained there two years, was appointed a bishop, and went to Nova Scotia in 1785 or 1786, and there resided until his death. The mother of the demandant died in New York on the 21st of September, 1783, a little while before the evacuation thereof by the British troops. It was always considered by a witness

103*] *who testified in the cause, that Charles Inglis, the father of the demandant, was a royalist. The demandant was certainly born before the year 1779; in 1783 he could not speak plainly, and was considered not more than five years old, between four and five. He took his degree of master of arts in England, was there ordained a clergyman; his place of residence from the time he first arrived at Nova Scotia was with his father, and he has continued to reside there ever since. He went to England to be consecrated a bishop; which character he now holds, being Bishop of Nova Scotia. Charles Inglis, the father of the demandant, had four children, the eldest of which, a son, died an infant, 20th of January, 1782, two daughters and the demandant, who was the youngest child.

The following proceedings of a convention of the State of New York before the British entered the city were in evidence:

Tuesday Afternoon, July 16th, 1776.

Present, General Woodhull, president, and the members of the Convention.

Whereas, the present dangerous situation of this State demands the unremitted attention of every member of the Convention: Resolved, unanimously, that the consideration of the necessity and propriety of establishing an independent civil government be postponed until the first day of August next, and that in the meantime,

"Resolved, unanimously, that all magistrates and other officers of justice in this State who are well affected to the liberties of America be requested, until further orders, to exercise their respective offices, provided that all processes and other their proceedings be under the authority and in the name of the State of New York.

"Resolved, unanimously, that all persons abiding within the State of New York, and deriving protection from the laws of the same, owe allegiance to the said laws and are members of the State: and that all persons passing through, visiting, or making a temporary stay in said State, being entitled to the protection of the laws during the time of such passage, *visitation, or temporary stay, owe [104 during the same allegiance thereto.

"That all persons members of or owing allegiance to this State as before described, who shall levy war against the said State, within the same, or be adherent to the King of Great Britain, or others, the enemies of the said State, within the same, giving to him or them aid or comfort, are guilty of treason against the State, and being thereof convicted, shall suffer the pains and penalties of death."

The tenants gave in evidence the Acts of the Legislature of New York: "For the forfeiture of the estates of persons who adhered to the enemies of the State," &c., passed the 22d of October, 1779; the "act supplementary to the act to provide for the temporary government of the southern part of this State," &c., passed the 23d of October, 1779; and the supplement thereto passed the 27th of March, 1783.

Robert Richard Randall died in the city of New York between the 1st of June and the 1st of July, 1801, having on the 1st of June of that year made his last will and testament; probate of which was regularly made in the city of New York.

The provisions of the will of Robert Richard Randall under which the tenants claimed their title are the following:

"6. As to and concerning all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, both real and personal, I give, devise and bequeath the same unto the Chancellor of the State of New York, the mayor and recorder of the city of New York, the president of the Chamber of Commerce in the city of New York, the president and vice-president of the Marine Society of the city of New York, the senior minister of the Episcopal Church in the said city, and the senior minister of the Presbyterian Church in the said city, to have and to hold all and singular the said rest, residue, and remainder of my said real and personal estate, unto them the said Chancellor of the State, of New York, mayor of the city of New York, the recorder of the city of New York, the president of the Chamber of Commerce, president and vice-president of the Marine Society, senior minister 105 of the Episcopal Church, and *senior minister of the Presbyterian Church in the said city, for the time being, and their respective successors in the said offices forever, to, for, and upon the uses, trusts, intents and purposes, and subject to the directions and appointments hereinafter mentioned and declared concerning the same, that is to say: out of the rents, issues and profits of the said rest, residue, and remainder of my said real and personal estate, to erect and build upon some eligible part of the land upon which I now reside, an asylum, or marine hospital, to be called "The Sailor's Snug Harbor," for the purpose of maintaining and supporting aged, decrepit, and worn-out sailors, as soon as they, my said charity trustees, or a majority of them, shall judge the proceeds of the said estate will support fifty of the said sailors and upwards; and I do hereby direct that the income of the said real and personal estate, given as aforesaid to my said charity trustees, shall forever hereafter be used and applied for supporting the asylum, or marine hospital, hereby directed to be built, and for maintaining sailors of the above description therein, in such manner as the said trustees, or a majority of them, may from time, or their successors in office, may from time to time direct. And it is my intention that the institution hereby directed and created should be perpetual, and that the above-mentioned officers for the time being, and their successors, should forever continue and be the governors thereof, and have the superintendence of the same. And it is my will and desire that if it cannot legally be done according to my above intention by them without an Act of the Legislature, it is my will and desire that they will as soon as possible apply for an Act of the Legislature to incorporate them for the purposes above specified. And I do further declare it to be my will and intention that the said rest, residue and remainder of my real and personal estate should be at all events applied for the uses and purposes above set forth; and that it is my desire all courts of law and equity will so construe this my said will as to have the said estate appropriated to the above uses, and that the same should in no case, for want of legal form or otherwise, be so construed as that my relations or any other persons should 106 *heir, possess, or enjoy my property, except in the manner and for the uses herein above specified.

"And, lastly, I do nominate and appoint the Chancellor of the State of New York, for the time being at the time of my decease; the mayor of the city of New York, for the time being; the recorder of the city of New York, for the time being; the president of the Chamber of Commerce, for the time being; the president and vice-president of the Marine Society in the city of New York, for the time being; the senior minister of the Episcopal Church in the city of New York, and the senior minister of the Presbyterian Church in the said city for the time being; and their successors in office after them, to be the executors of this my last will and testament, hereby revoking all former and other wills, and declaring this to be my last will and testament."

It was admitted that at the time of the decease of Robert Richard Randall, and of the probate of the will, the offices named in the will were respectively filled by different persons, and that they, or some of them, immediately upon the death of the testator entered upon the premises under the will, claiming to be the owners in fee, until the Legislature of New York, on their application, on the 6th of February, 1806, passed "An Act to incorporate the trustees of the marine hospital called 'The Sailor's Snug Harbor, in the city of New York.'"

Those offices continued to be filled respectively by different persons from the time of the death of the testator until the time of the trial.

The act incorporating "the trustees of the marine hospital," &c., provides:

"Whereas, it is represented to the Legislature that Robert Richard Randall, late of the city of New York, deceased, in and by his last will and testament duly made and executed, bearing date the 1st day of June, in the year of our Lord 1801, did, after bequeathing certain specific legacies therein mentioned, among other things give and devise and bequeath all the residue of his estate, both real and personal, unto the Chancellor of this State, the mayor and recorder of the city of New York, the president of the Chamber of Commerce in *the city of New York, the president [107 and vice-president of the Marine Society of the city of New York, the senior minister of the Episcopal Church in the said city, and the senior minister of the Presbyterian Church in the said city, for the time being, and to their successors in office respectively, in trust, to receive the rents, issues and profits thereof, and to apply the same to the erecting or building on some eligible part of the land whereon the testator then resided, an asylum, or marine hospital to be called "The Sailor's Snug Harbor," for the purpose of maintaining and supporting aged, decrepit and worn-out sailors, as soon as the said trustees, or a majority of them, should judge the proceeds of the said estate would support fifty of such sailors and upwards; and that the said testator in his said will declared his intention to be that the said estate should at all events be applied to the purposes aforesaid, and no other; and if his said intent could not be carried into effect without an act of incorporation, he therein expressed his desire that the said trustees would apply to the Legislature for such incorporation; and, whereas, the said trustees have represented that the said estate is of considerable value, and if prudently managed will in time enable them to erect such hospital and carry into effect the intent of the testator; but that as such trustees, and being also appointed executors of the said will, in virtue of their offices, and only during their continuance in the said offices, they have found that considerable inconveniences have arisen in the management of the said estate from the changes which have taken place in the ordinary course of the elections and appointments to those offices, and have prayed to be incorporated for the purposes expressed in the said will, and such prayer appears to be reasonable: therefore,

"1. Be it enacted by the people of the State of New York represented in Senate and Assembly that John Lansing, Jun., the Chancellor of this State; De Witt Clinton, the mayor, and Maturin Livingston, the recorder of the city of New York; John Murry, the president of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York; James Farquhar, the president, and Thomas Farmer, the first vice-president of 108]* the Marine Society *of the city of New York; Benjamin Moore, senior minister of the Episcopal Church in the said city, and John Rogers, senior minister of the Presbyterian Church in the said city, and their successors in office respectively, in virtue of their said offices, shall be, and hereby are constituted and declared to be a body corporate, in fact and in name, by the name and style of The Trustees of The Sailor's Snug Harbor in the city of New York; and by that name they and their successors shall have continual succession, and shall be capable in law of suing and being sued, pleading and being impleaded, answering and being answered unto, defending and being defended, in all courts and places whatsoever, and in all manner of actions, suits, complaints, matters and causes whatsoever; and that they and their successors, may have a common seal, and may change and alter the same at their pleasure; and, also, that they and their successors, by the name and style aforesaid, shall be capable in law of holding and disposing of the said real and personal estate devised and bequeathed as aforesaid according to the intention of the said will; and the same is hereby declared to be vested in them and their successors in office for the purpose therein expressed; and shall also be capable of purchasing, holding and conveying any other real and personal estate for the use and benefit of the said corporation, in such manner as to them or a majority of them shall appear to be most conducive to the interest of the said institution."

The second section gives to the trustees the power to make rules and regulations, and to appoint officers for the government and business of the corporation, and provides for the mode of transacting the same.

The third section declares that "This act shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, and be construed in all courts and places benignly and favorably for the purposes therein intended."

On the 25th of March, 1814, an Act supplementary to the Act of Incorporation was passed, declaring that persons holding certain offices should act as trustees, and declaring it to be the duty of the corporation to make an annual re-109]* port of *their funds to the common council of the city of the state of their funds.

The counsel for the tenants gave in evidence the Act of the Legislature of New York "for relief against absconding and absent debtors," passed the 4th of April, 1786; and a report made to the Superior Court of Judicature of the State of New York of proceedings under the act against Paul Richard Randall, by which he was declared an absent debtor.

Under this act all the estate, real as well as Peters 3.

personal, of Paul Richard Randall, as an absent debtor, of what kind or nature soever, the same might be, were, on the 13th of November, 1800, attached, seized, and taken, and were, by the recorder of New York, under and in pursuance of the provisions of the law, upon the 22d of December, 1801, by an instrument of writing under his hand and seal, conveyed to Charles Ludlow, James Brewerton and Roger Strong, all of the city of New York, to be trustees for all the creditors of the said Paul Richard Randall, who afterwards duly qualified as trustees.

Subsequently, on the 14th of April, 1808, upon a further application to the recorder of New York, Paul Richard Randall being still absent, other trustees are appointed according to law, who were on the same day qualified to act as trustees.

The demandant gave in evidence the following rules of the Supreme Court of Judicature of the people of the State of New York:

"February 17th, 1804.

"In the matter of Paul Richard Randall, an absent debtor.

"On reading and filing the petition of Alexander Stewart, White Matlack, and Catherine Brewerton, agents and attorneys of the said Paul Richard Randall, and also reading and filing the answer of Charles Ludlow, James Brewerton, and Roger Strong, trustees for all the creditors of the said Paul Richard Randall, to the said petition, and on motion of Mr. Hamilton, attorney of the said Alexander Stewart, White Matlack, and Catherine Brewerton, it is ordered by the court that the said trustees pay to the said Paul Richard Randall, *or to his said agents and attorneys for [110 his use, the sum of five thousand five hundred dollars out of the moneys now remaining in the hands of the said trustees.

"August 9th, 1804.

"In the matter of Paul R. Randall, an absent debtor, and his assignees, &c.

"On reading and filing the petition of Alexander Phoenix, the attorney and agent for Paul Richard Randall, together with a certified copy of the power of attorney and the acknowledgments of the trustees and former attorneys of the said Paul thereunto annexed, and on motion of Mr. Van Wick, of counsel for the said Alexander, ordered that the rule heretofore in February Term last made in the said matter be vacated, and that the said sum of five thousand five hundred dollars, acknowledged to be still remaining in the hands of the said Charles Ludlow, James Brewerton, and Roger Strong, trustees as aforesaid, be paid over by them to the said Alexander Phoenix, as the attorney and agent of the said Paul Richard Randall."

It appeared in evidence that Catherine Brewerton died some time in or about the year of our Lord 1815, and that Paul R. Randall died some time in the year of our Lord 1820, Catherine Brewerton having first, while a widow, made her last will and testament, dated the 5th of June, A. D. 1815, duly executed and attested to pass real estate, and devised among other things as follows, that is to say:

"Secondly, I give, devise, and bequeath, all my estate, real and personal, whatsoever and wheresoever, in law or equity, in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy (excepting such as is herein otherwise specially mentioned), unto my executors hereinafter named and to the survivor of them, his heirs and assigns forever, upon trust nevertheless for the uses and purposes hereinafter mentioned and intended, that is to say, that my executors shall," &c.

Upon the trial of the cause in the Circuit Court the judges were opposed in opinion upon the following points, which were certified to the court:

111*] *I. Whether, inasmuch as the count in the cause is for the entire right in the premises, the demandant can recover a less quantity than the entirety.

II. Whether John Inglis, the demandant, was or was not capable of taking lands in the State of New York by descent, which general question presents itself under the following aspects:

1. Whether, in case he was born before the 4th of July, 1776, he is an alien, and disabled from taking real estate by inheritance.

2. Whether, in case he was born after the 4th of July, 1776, and before the 15th of September of the same year, when the British took possession of New York, he would be under the like disability.

3. Whether, if he was born after the British took possession of New York, and before the evacuation on the 25th of November, 1783, he would be under the like disability.

4. What would be the effect upon the right of John Ingles to inherit real estate in New York if the grand assize should find that Charles Ingles, the father, and John Ingles, the demandant, did, in point of fact, elect to become and continue British subjects and not American citizens?

III. Whether the will of Catherine Brewerton was sufficient to pass her right and interest in the premises in question so as to defeat the demandant in any respect; the premises being, at the date of the will and ever since, held adversely by the tenants in this suit.

IV. Whether the proceedings against Paul R. Randall, as an absent debtor, passed his right or interest in the lands in question to, and vested the same in the trustees appointed under the said proceedings, or either of them, so as to defeat the demandant in any aspect.

V. Whether the devise in the will of Robert Richard Randall of the lands in question is a valid devise, so as to divest the heir-at-law of his legal estate, or to affect the lands in his hands with a trust.

The cause was argued by Mr. Ogden and Mr. Webster for the demandant, and by Mr. Talcott 112*] and Mr. Wirt for the *tenants. The argument was commenced and concluded by the counsel for the tenants.

Mr. Justice Thompson delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes up from the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York upon several points, on a division of opinion certified by that court. In the examination of these points I shall pursue the order in which they have been discussed at the bar.

I. "Whether the devise in the will of Robert Richard Randall of the lands in question is a valid devise, so as to divest the heir-at-law of his legal estate, or to affect the lands in his hands with a trust."

This question arises upon the residuary clause in the will, in which the testator declares, "that as to and concerning all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, both real and personal, I give, devise and bequeath the same unto the Chancellor of the State of New York, the mayor and recorder of the city of New York, &c., (naming several other persons by their official description only) to have and to hold all and singular the said rest, residue and remainder of my said real and personal estate, unto them, and their respective successors in office, forever, to, for and upon, the uses, trusts, intents and purposes, and subject to the directions and appointments hereinafter mentioned and declared concerning the same, that is to say: out of the rents, issues and profits of the said rest, residue and remainder of my said real and personal estate, to erect and build upon some eligible part of the land upon which I now reside, an asylum, or marine hospital, to be called 'The Sailor's Snug Harbor,' for the purpose of supporting aged, decrepit, and worn-out sailors," &c. And after giving directions as to the management of the fund by his trustees, and declaring that it is his intention that the institution erected by his will should be perpetual, and that the above-mentioned officers for the time being and their successors should forever continue to be the governors thereof and have the superintendence of the same, he then adds, "and it is my will and desire that if it cannot legally be done according to my above intention by them *with- [*113 out an Act of the Legislature, it is my will and desire that they will as soon as possible apply for an Act of the Legislature to incorporate them for the purposes above specified. And I do hereby declare it to be my will and intention that the said rest, residue and remainder of my said real and personal estate should be at all events applied for the uses and purposes above set forth; and that it is my desire all courts of law and equity will so construe this my said will as to have the said estate appropriated to the above uses, and that the same should in no case, for want of legal form or otherwise, be so construed as that my relations or other persons should heir, possess or enjoy my property, except in the manner and for the uses herein above specified."

The Legislature of the State of New York, within a few years after the death of the testator, on the application of the trustees, who are also named as executors in the will, passed a law constituting the persons holding the offices designated in the will and their successors in office a body corporate, by the name and style of "The Trustees of the Sailor's Snug Harbor in the city of New York," and declaring that they and their successors, by the name and style aforesaid, shall be capable in law of holding and disposing of the said real and personal estate devised and bequeathed as aforesaid according to the intentions of the aforesaid will. And that the same is hereby declared to be vested in them and their successors in office for the purposes therein expressed.

If, after such a plain and unequivocal declaration of the testator with respect to the disposition of his property, so cautiously guarding against, and providing for every supposed difficulty that might arise, any technical objection shall now be interposed to defeat his purpose, it will form an exception to what we find so universally laid down in all our books as a cardinal rule in the construction of wills that the intention of the testator is to be sought after and carried into effect. But no such difficulty in my judgment is here presented. If the intention of the testator cannot be carried into effect precisely in the mode at first contemplated 114] by *him consistently with the rules of law, he has provided an alternative, which, with the aid of the Act of the Legislature, must remove all difficulty.

The case of the Baptist Association v. Hart's Executors (4 Wheat., 27), is supposed to have a strong bearing upon the present. This is, however, distinguishable in many important particulars from that. The bequest there was, "to the Baptist Association that for ordinary meets at Philadelphia." This association, not being incorporated, was considered incapable of taking the trust of a society. It was a devise in presenti, to take effect immediately on the death of the testator, and the individuals composing it were numerous and uncertain, and there was no executory bequest over to the association if it should become incorporated. The court therefore considered the bequest gone for uncertainty as to the devisees, and the property vested in the next of kin, or was disposed of by some other provision in the will. If the testator in that case had bequeathed the property to the Baptist Association on its becoming thereafter and within a reasonable time incorporated, could there be a doubt but that the subsequent incorporation would have conferred on the association the capacity of taking and managing the fund.

In the case now before the court there is no uncertainty with respect to the individuals who were to execute the trust. The designation of the trustees by their official character is equivalent to naming them by their proper names. Each office referred to was filled by a single individual, and the naming of them by their official distinction was a mere designatio personæ. They are appointed executors by the same description, and no objection could lie to their qualifying and acting as such. The trust was not to be executed by them in their official characters, but in their private and individual capacities. But, admitting that if the devise in the present case had been to the officers named in the will and their successors to execute the trust, and no other contingent provision made, it would fall within the case of the Baptist Association v. Hart's Executors.

The subsequent provisions in the will must remove all difficulty on this ground. If the first mode pointed out by the testator for carrying into execution his will and intention with 115] *respect to this fund cannot legally take effect, it must be rejected, and the will stand as if it had never been inserted; and the devise would then be to a corporation to be created by the Legislature, composed of the several officers designated in the will as trustees, to take the estate and execute the trust.

And what objection can there be to this as a valid executory devise, which is such a disposition of lands that thereby no estate vests at the death of the deviser, but only on some future contingency? By an executory devise a freehold may be made to commence in futuro, and needs no particular estates to support it. The future estate is to arise upon some specified contingency, and the fee-simple is left to descend to the heir-at-law until such contingency happens. A common case put in the books to illustrate the rule is: if one devises land to a feme sole and her heirs upon her marriage. This would be a freehold commencing in futuro without any particular estate to support it, and would be void in a deed though good by executory devise. (2 Black. Com., 175.) This contingency must happen within a reasonable time, and the utmost length of time the law allows for this is that of a life or lives in being and twenty-one years afterwards. The devise in this case does not purport to be a present devise to a corporation not in being, but a devise to take effect in futuro upon the corporation being created. The contingency was not too remote. The incorporation was to be procured according to the directions in the will as soon as possible on its being ascertained that the trust could not legally be carried into effect in the mode first designated by the testator. It is a devise to take effect upon condition that the Legislature should pass a law incorporating the trustees named in the will. Every executory devise is upon some condition or contingency, and takes effect only upon the happening of such contingency or the performance of such condition; as in the case put of a devise to a feme sole upon her marriage; the devise depends on the condition of her afterwards marrying.
Peters 3.

The doctrine sanctioned by the court in Porter's case (1 Coke's Rep., 24), admits the validity of a devise to a future incorporation. *In answer to the argument that the [116 devise of a charitable use was void under the statute 23 Hen. VIII., it was said that admitting this, yet the condition was not void in that case. For the testator devised that his wife shall have his lands and tenements upon condition that she, by the advice of learned counsel, in convenient time after his death, shall assure all his lands and tenements for the maintenance and continuance of the said free school and alms-men and alms-women forever. So that, although the said uses were prohibited by the statute, yet the testator hath devised that counsel learned should advise how the said lands and tenements should be assured for the uses aforesaid, and that may be advised lawfully, viz.: to make a corporation of them by the king's letters patent, and afterwards by license to assure the lands and tenements to them. So if a man devise that his executors shall, by the advice of learned counsel, convey his lands to any corporation, spiritual or temporal, this is not against any Act of Parliament, because it may lawfully be done by license, &c., and so doubtless was the intent of the testator; for he would have the lands assured for the maintenance of the free school and poor forever, which cannot be done without incorporation and license as aforesaid; so the condition is not against law; quod fuit concessum per curiam.

The devise in that case could not take effect

without the incorporation. This was the condition upon which its validity depended, and the incorporation was to be procured after the death of the testator. The devise, then, as also in the case now before the court, does not purport to be a present devise, but to take effect upon some future event. And this distinguishes the present case from that of the Baptist Association v. Hart's Executors in another important circumstance. There it was a present devise, here it is a future devise. A devise to the first son of A, he having no son at that time, is void; because it is by way of a present devise, and the devisee is not in esse. But a devise to the first son of A, when he shall have one, is good; for that is only a future devise, and valid as an executory devise. (1 Salk., 226, 229.)

The cases in the books are very strong to show that for the purpose of carrying into 117 effect the intention of the testator, *any mode pointed out by him will be sanctioned if consistent with the rules of law, although some may fail. In Thellusson v. Woodford (4 Ves., Jun., 325), Buller, Justice, sitting with the Lord Chancellor, refers to and adopts with approbation the rule laid down by Lord Talbot in Hopkins v. Hopkins: that in such cases (on wills) the method of the courts is not to set aside the intent because it cannot take effect so fully as the testator desired, but to let it work as far as it can. Most executory devises, he says, are without any freehold to support them; the number of contingencies is not material if they are to happen within the limits allowed by law. That it was never held that executory devises are to be governed by the rules of law, as to common law conveyances. The only question is whether the contingencies are to happen within a reasonable time or not. The Master of the Rolls in that case says (p. 329) he knows of only one general rule of construction equally for courts of equity and courts of law applicable to wills. The intention of the testator is to be sought for and the will carried into effect, provided it can be done consistent with the rules of law. And he adds another rule, which has become an established rule of construction; that if the court can see a general intention consistent with the rules of law, but the testator has attempted to carry it into effect in a way that is not permitted, the court is to give effect to the general intention, though the particular mode shall fail. (1 Peerc Wms., 332; 2 Brown's Ch., 51.)

The language of Lord Mansfield in the case of Chapman v. Brown (3 Burr., 1634), is very strong to show how far courts will go to carry into effect the intention of the testator. To attain the intent, he says, words of limitation shall operate as words of purchase; implication shall supply verbal omissions. The letter shall give way, every inaccuracy of grammar, every impropriety of terms, shall be corrected by the general meaning, if that be clear and manifest.

In Bartlet v. King (12 Mass. Rep., 543), the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts adopt the rule laid down in Thellusson v. Woodford, that the court is bound to carry the will into effect if they can see a general intention consistent with the rules of law, even if the particular mode or manner pointed out by the testator is illegal. And the court refer with approbation to what is laid down by Powell in his Treatise on Devises, 421, that a devise is never construed absolutely void for uncertainty, but from necessity: if it be possible to reduce it to certainty it is good. So, also, in Finlay v. Riddle (3 Binn. Rep., 162), in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, the rule is recognized that the general intent must be carried into effect, even if it is at the expense of the particular intent.

A rule so reasonable and just in itself, and in such perfect harmony with the whole doctrine of the law in relation to the construction of wills, cannot but receive the approbation and sanction of all courts of justice; and a stronger case calling for the application of that rule can scarcely be imagined than the one now before the court. The general intent of the testator, that this fund should be applied to the maintenance and support of aged, decrepit and worn-out sailors, cannot be mistaken. And he seems to have anticipated that some difficulty might arise about its being legally done in the particular mode pointed out by him. And to guard against a failure of his purpose on that account, he directs application to be made to the Legislature for an incorporation to take and execute the trust according to his will; declaring his will and intention to be that his estate should, at all events, be applied to the uses and purposes aforesaid; and desiring all courts of law and equity so to construe his will as to have his estate applied to such uses. And to make it still more secure, if possible, he finally directs that his will should in no case, for want of legal form or otherwise, be so construed as that his relations or any other persons should heir, possess or enjoy his property, except in the manner and for the uses specified in his will.

The will looks therefore to three alternatives:

1. That the officers named in the will as trustees should take the estate and execute the trust.

2. If that could not legally be done, then he directs his trustees to procure an act of incorporation, and vests the estate in it for the purpose of executing the trust.

*3. If both these should fail, his [*119 heirs, or whosoever should possess and enjoy the property, are charged with the trust.

That this trust is fastened upon the land cannot admit of a doubt. Wherever a person by will gives property and points out the object, the property, and the way in which it shall go, a trust is created; unless he shows clearly that his desire expressed it to be controlled by the trustee, and that he shall have an option to defeat it. (2 Ves., Jun., 335.)

It has been urged by the demandant's counsel that these lands cannot be charged with the trust in the hands of the heir, because the will directs that they shall not be possessed or enjoyed except in the manner and for the uses specified. That the manner and the use must concur in order to charge the trust on the land. But I apprehend this is a mistaken application of the term manner as here used. It does not refer to the persons who were to execute the trust, but to the mode or manner in which it was to be carried into effect, viz., by erecting upon some eligible part of the land an asylum, or marine hospital, to be called The Sailor's Snug Harbor. And the uses were, "for the purpose of maintaining and supporting aged, decrepit and worn-out sailors." Whoever, therefore, takes the land, takes it charged with these uses or trusts, which are to be executed in the manner above mentioned. And if so, there can be no objection to the Act of Incorporation and the vesting the title therein declared. It does not interfere with any vested rights in the heir; he has no beneficial interest in the land, and the law only transfers the execution of the trust from him to the corporation, and thereby carrying into effect the clear and manifest intention of the testator. But being of opinion that the legal estate passed under the will, I have not deemed it necessary to pursue the question of trust, and have simply referred to it as being embraced in the point submitted to this court.

If this is to be considered a devise to a corporation, it will not come within the prohibitions in the statute of wills (1 Revised Laws, 364). For this Act of Incorporation is, pro tanto, a repeal of that statute.

Taking this devise, therefore, in either of the 120*] points of view *in which it has been considered, the answer to the question put must be, that it is valid, so as to divest the heir of his legal estate, or, at all events, to affect the lands in his hands with the trust declared in the will.

If this view of the devise in the will of Robert Richard Randall be correct, it puts an end to the right and claim of the demandant, and might render it unnecessary to examine the other points which have been certified to this court had the questions come up on a special verdict or bill of exceptions. But coming up on a certificate of a division of opinion, it has been the usual course of this court to express an opinion upon all the points.

It is not, however, deemed necessary to go into a very extended examination of the other questions, as the opinion of the court upon the one already considered is conclusive against the right of recovery in this action.

II. The second general question is, whether John Inglis, the demandant, was or was not capable of taking lands in the State of New York by descent.

This question is presented under several aspects for the purpose of meeting what at present, from the evidence, appears a little uncertain as to the time of the birth of John Inglis. This question as here presented does not call upon the court for an opinion upon the broad doctrine of allegiance and the right of expatriation under a settled and unchanged state of society and government. But to decide what are the rights of the individuals composing that society and living under the protection of that government when a revolution occurs, a dismemberment takes place; new governments are formed; and new relations between the government and the people are established.

If John Inglis, according to the first supposition under this point, was born before the 4th of July, 1776. he is an alien, unless his remaining in New York during the war changed his character and made him an American citizen. It is universally admitted both in the English courts and in those of our own country, that all persons born within the colonies of North America, whilst subject to the crown of Great Britain, were natural born British subjects, and it *must necessarily follow that that [*121 character was changed by the separation of the colonies from the parent State, and the acknowledgment of their independence.

The rule as to the point of time at which the American antenati ceased to be British subjects, differs in this country and in England, as established by the courts of justice in the respective countries. The English rule is to take the date of the Treaty of Peace in 1783. Our rule is to take the date of the Declaration of Independence. And in the application of the rule to different cases, some difference in opinion may arise. The settled doctrine of this country is, that a person born here, who left the country before the Declaration of Independence and never returned here became thereby an alien, and incapable of taking lands subsequently by descent in this country. The right to inherit depends upon the existing state of allegiance at the time of descent east. The descent east in this case being long after the Treaty of Peace, the difficulty which has arisen in some cases where the title was acquired between the Declaration of Independence and the Treaty of Peace does not arise here. Prima facie, and as a general rule, the character in which the American antenati are to be considered will depend upon, and be determined by, the situation of the party and the election made at the date of the Declaration of Independence, according to our rule; or the Treaty of Peace according to the British rule. But this general rule must necessarily be controlled by special circumstances attending particular cases. And if the right of election is at all admitted, it must be determined in most cases by what took place during the struggle, and between the Declaration of Independence and the Treaty of Peace. To say that the election must have been made before, or immediately at the Declaration of Independence, would render the right nugatory.

The doctrine of perpetual allegiance is not applied by the British courts to the American antenati. This is fully shown by the late case of Doe v. Acklam (2 Barn. & Cresw., 779). Chief Justice Abbott says: "James Ludlow, the father of Frances May, the lessor of the plaintiff, was undoubtedly born a subject of Great Britain. He was born in a part of *Amer-[*122 iea which was at the time of his birth a British colony, and parcel of the dominions of the crown of Great Britain; but upon the fact found, we are of opinion that he was not a subject of the crown of Great Britain at the time of the birth of his daughter. She was born after the independence of the colonies was recognized by the crown of Great Britain; after the colonies had become United States, and their inhabitants generally citizens of those States, and her father, by his continued residence in those States, manifestly became a citizen of them." He considered the Treaty of Peace as a release from their allegiance of all British subjects who remained there. A declaration, says he, that a State shall be free, sovereign and independent, is a declaration that the people composing the State shall no longer be considered as subjects of the sovereign by whom such a declaration is made. And this court, in the case of Blight's Lessee v. Rochester (7 Wheat., 544), adopted the same rule with respect to the right of British subjects here—that, although born before the Revolution, they are equally incapable with those born subsequent to that event of inheriting or transmitting the inheritance of lands in this country. The British doctrine therefore is, that the American antenati, by remaining in America after the Treaty of Peace, lost their character of British subjects. And our doctrine is, that by withdrawing from this country and adhering to the British government they lost, or, perhaps, more properly speaking, never acquired the character of American citizens.

This right of election must necessarily exist in all revolutions like ours, and is so well established by adjudged cases that it is entirely unnecessary to enter into an examination of the authorities. The only difficulty that can arise is to determine the time when the election should have been made. (Vattel B. 1, ch. 3, sec. 33; 1 Dall., 58; 2 Dall., 234; 20 Johns., 332; 2 Mass., 179, 236, 244, note; 2 Pickering, 394; 2 Kent's Com., 49.)

I am not aware of any case in the American courts where this right of election has been denied, except that of Ainsley v. Martin (9 Mass., 454.) Chief Justice Parsons does there seem to recognize and apply the doctrine of 123 perpetual allegiance *in its fullest extent. He then declares that a person born in Massachusetts, and who, before the 4th of July, 1776, withdrew into the British dominions and never since returned into the United States, was not an alien; that his allegiance to the King of Great Britain was founded on his birth within his dominions, and that that allegiance accrued to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts as his lawful successor. But he adds what may take the present case even out of his rule: "It not being alleged," says he, "that the demandant has been expatriated by virtue of any statute or any judgment of law." But the doctrine laid down in this case is certainly not that which prevailed in the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts both before and since that decision, as will appear by the cases above referred to of Gardner v. Ward, and Kilham v. Ward (2 Mass.), and of George Phipps (2 Pickering, 394, note).

John Inglis, if born before the Declaration of Independence, must have been very young at that time, and incapable of making an election for himself; but he must, after such a lapse of time, be taken to have adopted and ratified the choice made for him by his father, and still to retain the character of a British subject and never to have become an American citizen if his father was so to be considered. He was taken from this country by his father before the Treaty of Peace, and has continued ever since to reside within the British dominions without signifying any dissent to the election made for him; and this ratification as to all his rights must relate back, and have the same effect and operation as if the election had been made by himself at that time.

How, then, is his father, Charles Inglis, to be considered? Was he an American citizen? He was here at the time of the Declaration of Independence, and, prima facie, may be deemed to have become thereby an American citizen. But this prima facie presumption may be rebutted; otherwise there is no force or meaning in the right of election. It surely cannot be said that nothing short of actually removing from the country before the Declaration of Independence will be received as evidence of the election; and every act that could be done to signify the choice that had been made, *except actually withdrawing from the [*124 country, was done by Charles Inglis. He resided in the city of New York at the Declaration of Independence, and remained there until he removed to England, a short time before the evacuation of the city by the British in November, 1783; New York, during the whole of that time, except from July to September, 1776, being in possession, and under the government and control of the British, he taking a part and acting with the British; and was, according to the strong language of the witness, as much a royalist as he himself was, and that no man could be more so. Was Charles Inglis under these circumstances to be considered an American citizen? If being here at the Declaration of Independence necessarily made him such, under all possible circumstances he was an American citizen. But I apprehend this would be carrying the rule to an extent that never can be sanctioned in a court of justice, and would certainly be going beyond any case as yet decided.

The facts disclosed in this case, then, lead irresistibly to the conclusion that it was the fixed determination of Charles Inglis, the father, at the Declaration of Independence, to adhere to his native allegiance. And John Inglis, the son, must be deemed to have followed the condition of his father, and the character of a British subject attached to and fastened on him also, which he has never attempted to throw off by any act disaffirming the choice made for him by his father.

The case of M'Ilvaine v. Cox's Lessee (4 Cranch, 211), which has been relied upon, will not reach this case. The court in that case recognized fully the right of election, but considered that Mr. Cox had lost that right by remaining in the State of New Jersey not only after she had declared herself a sovereign State, but after she had passed laws by which she pronounced him to be a member of and in allegiance to the new government; that by the Act of the 4th of October, 1776, he became a member of the new society, entitled to the protection of its government. He continued to reside in New Jersey after the passage of this law, and until some time in the year 1777, thereby making his election to become a member of the new government; and the doctrine of allegiance became applicable to his case, which rests on the *ground of a mutual compact between [*125 the government and the citizen or subject, which it is said cannot be dissolved by either party without the concurrence of the other. It is the tie which binds the governed to their government in return for the protection which the government affords them. New Jersey, in October, 1776, was in a condition to extend that protection, which Cox tacitly accepted by remaining there. But that was not the situation of the city of New York; it was in the possession of the British. The government of the State of New York did not extend to it in point of fact.

The resolutions of the Convention of New York of the 16th of July, 1776, have been relied upon as asserting a claim to the allegiance of all persons residing within the State. But it may well be doubted whether these resolutions reached the case of Charles Inglis. The language is, "that all persons abiding within the State of New York and deriving protection from the laws of the same, owe allegiance to the said laws and are members of the State." Charles Inglis was not, within the reasonable interpretation of this resolution, abiding in the State and owing protection to the laws of the same. He was within the British lines and under the protection of the British army, manifesting a full determination to continue a British subject. But if it should be admitted that the State of New York had a right to claim the allegiance of Charles Inglis, and did assert that right by the resolution referred to, still the case of M'Ilvaine v. Cox does not apply.

It cannot, I presume, be denied, but that allegiance may be dissolved by the mutual consent of the government and its citizens or subjects. The government may release the governed from their allegiance. This is even the British doctrine in the case of Doe v. Acklam, before referred to. The Act of Attainder passed by the Legislature of the State of New York by which Charles Inglis is declared to be forever banished from the State and adjudged guilty of treason if ever afterwards he should be found there, must be considered a release of his allegiance, if ever he owed any to the State. (1 Greenleaf's Ed. L. N. Y., 26.)

126*] *From the view of the general question referred to in this court, the answer to the specific inquiries will, in my judgment, be as follows:

1. If the demandant was born before the 4th of July, 1776, he was born a British subject; and no subsequent act on his part or on the part of the State of New York has occurred to change that character; he, of course, continued an alien, and disabled from taking the land in question by inheritance.

2. If born after the 4th of July, 1776, and before the 15th of September of the same year, when the British took possession of New York, his infancy incapacitated him from making any election for himself, and his election and character followed that of his father, subject to the right of disaffirmance in a reasonable time after the termination of his minority; which never having been done, he remains a British subject, and disabled from inheriting the land in question.

3. If born after the British took possession of New York, and before the evacuation on the 25th of November, 1783, he was, under the circumstances stated in the case, born a British subject; under the protection of the British government, and not under that of the State of New York, and, of course, owing no allegiance to the State of New York. And even if the resolution of the Convention of the 16th of July, 1776, should be considered as asserting a rightful claim to the allegiance of the demandant and his father, this claim was revoked by the Act of 1779, and would be deemed a release and discharge of such allegiance on Peters 3.

the part of the State, and which having been impliedly assented to by the demandant by withdrawing with his father from the State of New York to the British dominions and remaining there ever since, worked a voluntary dissolution by the assent of the government and the demandant of whatever allegiance antecedently existed, and the demandant at the time of the descent cast was an alien, and incapable of taking lands in New York by inheritance.

4. When Charles Inglis, the father, and John Inglis, his son, withdrew from New York to the British dominions, they had the right of electing to become and remain British subjects. And if the grand assize shall find that in point of *fact they had made [*127 such election, then the demandant at the time of the descent cast was an alien, and could not inherit real estate in New York.

III. The next question is, whether the will of Catherine Brewerton was sufficient to pass her right and interest in the premises in question so as to defeat the demandant in any respect; the premises being at the date of the will and ever since held adversely by the tenants in the suit. Mrs. Brewerton was the sister of Robert Richard Randall, and if the devise in his will is void and cannot take effect, she, as one of his heirs-at-law, would be entitled to a moiety of the lands in question. She died in the year 1815, having shortly before made her last will and testament, duly executed and attested to pass real estate. By this will she devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, in law and equity, in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy (except some specific legacies), unto her executors, upon certain trusts therein mentioned. If this will was therefore operative, so as to pass her right to her brother's estate, it will defeat the demandant's right to recover, as to one moiety of the premises in question.

The objection taken to the operation of this will is, that the premises were at the date thereof and ever since have been held adversely by the tenants in the suit.

The validity of this objection must depend upon the construction of the statute of wills in the State of New York. By that statute (1 N. Y. Rev. Laws, 364, sec. 1), it is declared that any person having any estate of inheritance, either in severalty, in coparcenary, or in common, in any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, may at his own free will and pleasure give or devise the same or any of them or any rent or profit out of the same or out of any part thereof to any person or persons (except bodies public and corporate) by his last will and testament, or any other act by him lawfully executed.

This being a question depending upon the construction of a State statute with respect to the title to real property, it has been the uniform course of this court to apply the *same rule that we find applied by the [*128 State tribunals in like cases. (1 Peters, 371.) This statute, upon the point now under consideration, has received a construction by the Supreme Court of the State of New York in the case of Jackson v. Furick (7 Cowen, 238). The question arose upon the validity of a devise in the will of Medceff Eden, the younger.

The objection was that at the time of the devise and of the death of the testator the premises in question were, and had been for several years before, in the adverse possession of the defendant, and that he and those under whom he claimed entered originally without the consent of the deviser or anyone from whom he claimed. The courts say the facts present the question whether the owner in fee can devise land which, at the time of the devise and his death, is in the adverse possession of another. That is, whether a person having a right of entry in fee-simple shall be said to have an estate of inheritance in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in the language of our statute of wills.

It is unnecessary to pursue the course of reasoning which conducted the court to the conclusion to which it came. The result of the opinion was, that under the comprehensive words used in the act, a right of entry as well as an estate in the actual seisin and possession of the deviser was advisable; and that an estate that would descend to the heir is transmissible equally by will. The judge who delivered the opinion adverted to some cases that had arisen in the same court, wherein a contrary doctrine would seem to have been recognized, but came to the conclusion that no decision had been made upon the point.

In the case of Wilkes v. Lion (2 Cowen, 355), decided in the Court of Errors, in New York, one of the points relied upon by the counsel for the plaintiff in error was that this same will of Medcef Eden, the younger, was inoperative as to the premises then in question; they being lands of which he was not seized at the time of his death. I do not find that any direct opinion was given upon this point; but the objection must have been overruled or the court could not have come to the conclusion it did.

It is said, however, by the demandant's 129 counsel, that these *cases do not apply to the one now before the court but only such estate as would descend to the heir of the deviser, and that the premises in question here would not descend to the heirs of Mrs. Brewerton for want of actual seisin. According to the rule laid down in Watkins on Descents, 23, that where the ancestor takes by purchase he may be capable of transmitting the property so taken to his own heirs without any actual possession in himself; but if the ancestor himself takes by descent, it is absolutely necessary in order to make him the stock or terminus from whom the descent should now run, and so enable him to transmit such hereditaments to his own heirs, that he acquire an actual seisin of such as are corporeal, or what is equivalent thereto, in such as are incorporeal.

It is very evident, however, that the court could not have intended to apply this rule to the construction of the statute of wills. For they say, in terms, that the question is whether a person having a right of entry in lands has an estate of inheritance devisable according to the provisions of the statute. But under the common law rule referred to, a person having only a right of entry would not be accounted an ancestor from whom the inheritance would be derived. (2 Black. Com., 209.) Such a construction would be in a great measure defeating the whole operation of the act.

The demandant in this case states in his count that upon the death of Robert R. Randall, the right of the land descended to Paul R. Randall and Catherine Brewerton in moieties. So that, by his own showing, she had a right of entry, which, according to the express terms of the decision in Jackson v. Varick, was devisable.

The answer to this question must accordingly be that the will of Catherine Brewerton was sufficient to pass her right and interest in the premises in question, notwithstanding the adverse possession held by the tenants in this suit at the date of the will.

IV. The fourth point stated is whether the proceedings against Paul Richard Randall, as an absent debtor, passed his right or interest in the lands in question to and vested the same *in the trustees appointed under the [130 said proceedings, or either of them, so as to defeat the demandant in any respect.

Paul R. Randall, as stated in the case, died some time in the year 1820. He and his sister, Mrs. Brewerton, were the heirs-at-law to the estate of their brother, Robert Richard Randall. If, therefore, the will of Mrs. Brewerton operated to pass her right, Paul R. Randall would be entitled to the other moiety. If her will did not operate, then he would be entitled to the whole of his brother's estate.

It does not appear from the case that any objections were made to the regularity of the proceedings against Paul R. Randall under the Absconding Debtor Act; and, indeed, the question, as stated for the opinion of this court, necessarily implies that no such objection existed. The question is whether his right in the land passed to and became vested in the trustees.

As this is the construction of a State law, this court will be governed very much by the decision of the State tribunals in relation to it. The question is whether a right of entry passes under the provisions of the Absconding Debtor Act of the State of New York. (1 Rev. Laws, 157.) By the first section of the act the warrant issued to the sheriff commands him to attach and safely keep all the estate, real and personal, of the debtor. The tenth section authorizes the trustees to take into their hands all the estate of the debtor, whether attached as aforesaid or afterwards discovered by them; and that the said trustees, from their appointment, shall be deemed vested with all the estate of such debtor, and shall be capable to sue for and recover the same. And the trustees are required to sell all the estate, real and personal, of the debtor as shall come to their hands, and execute deeds and bills of sale, which shall be as valid as if made by the debtor himself.

These are the only parts of the act which have a material bearing upon this point. And the first question that would seem to arise is whether the term estate, as here used, will extend to the interest which the debtor has in lands held adversely. An estate in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, signifies such interest as a person has therein, and is the condition *or circumstance in which the [131 owner stands with regard to his property. (Coke, sec. 245, a; 2 Black. Com., 103.)

The language of the act is broad enough to include a right of entry; and there can be no reason to believe that such was not the intention of the Legislature.

The doctrine of the Court of Common Pleas in England in the case of Smith v. Coffin (2 H. Black., 461), has a strong bearing upon this question. The language of this Absconding Debtor Act, with respect to the estate of the debtor to which it shall extend, is as broad as that of the English bankrupt laws, and the same policy is involved in the construction. In the case referred to, the court say, the plain spirit of the bankrupt law is that every beneficial interest which the bankrupt has shall be disposed of for the benefit of his creditors. On general principles, rights of action are not assignable, but that is a rule founded on the policy of the common law, which is averse to encouraging litigation. But the policy of the bankrupt law requires that the right of action should be assignable, and transferred to assignees, as much as any other species of property. Its policy is that every right belonging in any shape to the bankrupt should pass to the assignees.

The estate of the debtor, under the New York statute, becomes vested in the trustees by the mere act and operation of law without any assignment.

The courts in New York have given a liberal construction to this act whenever it has come under consideration, so as to reach all the property of the absconding debtor. In the matter of Smith, an absconding debtor (16 Johns., 107), the broad rule is laid down that an attachment under this act is analogous to an execution. And in the case of Hendy v. Dobbin (12 Johns, 220), when the proceeding was under another statute (1 Rev. Laws, 398), very analogous to the one under consideration, the court say there can be no doubt that the constable, under the attachment, could take any goods and chattels which could be levied on by execution. The authority in both cases is the same. And in Jackson v. Varick (7 Cowen, 244), it is laid down as a rule admitting of no doubt that a right of entry may be taken and sold under an execution.

132* It is said, however, that this right of entry does not pass, because by the tenth section of the act it is declared that the deeds given by the trustees shall be as valid as if made by the debtor, and that the debtor could not make a valid deed of lands held at the time adversely.

This objection does not apply to the case: the question does not arise upon the operation of a deed given by the trustees. The point is whether the trustees themselves had any interest in these lands: not whether they would give a valid deed for them before reducing the right to possession. If it should be admitted that they could not, it would not affect the present question. The right is vested in the trustees by operation of law, the act declaring that the estate shall be deemed vested in them on their appointment, and that they shall be capable to sue for and recover the same, implying thereby that a suit may be necessary to reduce the estate of possession.

Peters 3.

Again, it is said that after such a lapse of time it is to be presumed that all the debts of Paul R. Randall have been paid, and the trust, of course, satisfied; and that the estate thereupon became revested in Paul R. Randall.

This objection admits of several answers. It does not appear properly to arise under the point stated. But the question intended to be put would seem to be whether the right, being a mere right of entry, passed, and became vested in the trustees. If it did so vest it could not be revested except by a reconveyance, or by operation of law resulting from a performance of the trust by paying off all the debts of the absent debtor. And whether these debts have been satisfied is a proper subject of inquiry for the grand assize. There is not enough before this court to enable it to decide that point. It is a question of fact and not of law. If it was admitted that all the debts have been satisfied, the effect of such satisfaction would be a question of law. The evidence might probably warrant the grand assize in presuming payment; but even that may not be perfectly clear. The order of the court upon the trustees to pay to the agent or attorney of Paul R. Randall five thousand five hundred dollars out of the money remaining in their hands, does not purport to [*133 consider this sum as the surplus after payment of all the debts. It was to be paid out of the moneys remaining in the hands of the trustees, thereby fully implying that their trust was not closed. And if the fact of payment and satisfaction of the debts is left at all doubtful, this court cannot say, as matter of law, that the interest in the land became revested in Paul R. Randall. It must depend upon the finding of the grand assize.

It is objected, however, that the defense set up and embraced in the two last questions is inadmissible. That in a writ of right the tenant cannot, under the mise joined, set up title out of himself and in a third person. That it is a question of mere right between the demandant and the tenant. And it has been supposed that this is the doctrine of this court in the case of Green v. Lister (8 Cranch, 229). If anything that fell from the court in that case will give countenance to such a doctrine, it is done away by the explanation given by the court in Green v. Watkins (7 Wheat., 31); and it is there laid down that the tenant may give in evidence the title of a third person for the purpose of disproving the demandant's seisin. That a writ of right does bring into controversy the mere right of the parties to the suit, and if so, it by consequence authorizes either party to establish by evidence that the other has no right whatever in the demanded premises; or that his mere right is inferior to that set up against him. And this is the rule recognized in the Supreme Court of New York. In the case of Ten Eyck v. Waterberry (7 Cowen, 52), the court say that in a writ of right the mise puts the seisin in issue, as the plea of not guilty in ejectment puts in issue the title, and that under the mise anything may be given in evidence except collateral warranty. The same rule is laid down by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in the case of Poor v. Robinson (10 Mass. Rep., 131); and such appears to be the well-settled rule in the English courts. (Booth, 98, 115, 112; 3 Wilson, 420; 2 W. Black. Rep., 292; 2 Saund., 45 f., note 4; Stearns on Real Actions, 227, 228, 372.)

The answer to this question will accordingly be in the affirmative, unless the grand assize shall find that the trusts have been fully performed; and, if so, the interest in the land will 134 by operation of law become revested in Paul R. Randall.

V. Another point submitted to this court is whether, inasmuch as the count in the cause is for the entire right in the premises, the demandant can recover a less quantity than the entirety.

This is rather matter of form, without involving materially the merits of the case. And as the action itself has become almost obsolete, it cannot be very important how the point is settled. I have not, therefore, pursued the question to see how it would stand upon British authority. The leaning of the courts in that country is against the action and against even allowing almost any amendments, holding parties to the most strict and rigid rules of pleading; and it may be that the English courts would consider that the recovery must be according to the count. But whatever the rule may be there, I think it is in a great measure a matter of practice, and that we are at liberty to adopt our rule on this subject. And no prejudice can arise to the tenant by allowing the demandant to have judgment for and recover according to the right which, upon the trial, he shall establish in the demanded premises. The cases referred to, showing that a demandant may abridge his plaint, do not apply to a writ of right. This is confined to the action of assize, and authorized by statute 21 Hen. VIII., ch. 3. This statute has been adopted in New York (1 Rev. Laws, 88), but does not help the case. But independent of any statutory provision, I see no good reason why the demandant should not be allowed to recover according to the interest proved, if less than that which he has demanded.

It is the settled practice in the Supreme Judicial Court in Massachusetts, in a writ of entry, to allow the demandant to recover an undivided part of the demanded premises. The technical objection that the verdict and judgment do not agree with the count is deemed unimportant; the title being the same as to duration and quality, and differing only in the degree of interest between a sole tenancy and a tenancy in common. The tenant cannot be prejudiced by allowing this. He is presumed to know his own title, and might have disclaimed. 135 ed. *The courts in that State consider that with respect to the right to renew a part of the land claimed there is no distinction between a writ of entry and an action of ejectment. (2 Pick., 387; 3 Pick., 52.) Nor is it perceived that any well-founded distinction, in this respect, can be made between the action of ejectment and a writ of right.

The opinion of the court upon this point is, that under a count for the entire right, a demandant may recover a less quantity than the entirety.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON.

I concur in the opinion in favor of this devise; but this is one of those cases in which I wish my opinion to appear in my own words.

This case comes up on a certified difference of opinion on five points. I take them in their order on the record, not that in which they were argued. The first, which is a technical question and of minor importance, I shall pass over.

The second, which depends upon the civil or political relation in which the demandant Inglis stands to the State of New York, has been exhibited under four aspects. The first, contemplating him as born in the city of New York before the 4th of July, 1776. The second, as born after that period, but before the British obtained possession of the place of his birth. The third, as born in New York while a British garrison. The fourth, as born an American citizen, before the treaty of peace, but having elected to adhere to his allegiance to Great Britain. In the argument there was a fifth aspect of the question presented, which depended upon the Act of Confiscation and Banishment by the State against the father of the demandant. On the subject of descent, in Shanks' case, which having been argued first in order I had prepared first to examine; I have had occasion to remark that the right being claimed under the laws of the particular State in which the land lies, the doctrines of allegiance, as applicable to the demandant, must be looked for in the law of the State that has jurisdiction of the soil.

In this respect the laws of New York vary in nothing material from those of South Carolina. By the 25th article of the constitution [136 of New York of 1777, the common law of England is adopted into the jurisprudence of the State. By the principles of that law, the demandant owed allegiance to the King of Great Britain, as of his province of New York. By the Revolution that allegiance was transferred to the State, and the common law declares that the individual cannot put off his allegiance by any act of his own. There was no legislative act passed to modify the common law in that respect; and as to the effect of the Act of Confiscation and Banishment, the constitution of the State has in it two provisions which effectually protect the demandant against any defense that can be set up under the effect of that act. The thirteenth article declares, "that no member of the State shall be disfranchised or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to the subjects of the State by that constitution, unless by the laws of the land or the judgment of his peers." And the forty-first declares, "that no act of attainder shall be passed by the Legislature of the State for crimes other than those committed before the termination of the present war, and that such acts (which I construe to mean acts of attainder generally) shall not work a corruption of blood."

I shall therefore answer the second question in the affirmative; that is, that he was entitled to inherit as a citizen, born of the State of New York.

On the third question there were two points made. 1. That Mrs. Brewerton, having never entered, could not devise. 2. That the issue being joined upon the mere right, it was not competent for the tenant to introduce testimony to prove the interest out of the demandant, unless (I presume it was meant) the right be proved to be in the tenant. On the first of these points I am satisfied that the State of New York has not suffered the exercise of the testamentary power to be embarrassed with the subtleties of the English law respecting entries and adverse possessions. The words of their statute of wills are broad enough to carry any right or interest in lands, and such practically seems to have been the uniform understanding in that State.

Peters 3.

On the second point, under this question, the facts seem to furnish a very obvious answer.

137*] Whatever be the rule in *other cases, and I do not feel myself called upon to say what the rule is, it certainly can have no application here, since it is through Mrs. Brewerton that the demandant has to trace his title. Certainly, then, it must be a good defense if the tenant can establish that it could not pass through Mrs. Brewerton, if she had prevented its descending by an act of her own, valid to that purpose. That question, also, I should answer in the affirmative.

On the fourth question I feel it difficult to give a precise answer. An attachment, and conveyance under it, are equivalent to an execution executed. But then there is reason to believe that the situation in which we find this attachment is analogous to that of an execution, satisfied without the sale of this particular property levied upon. Then, could such an execution interfere with the rights of the heir?

It does not appear to me that this question can be answered until the fact of satisfaction can be affirmed or repelled. It is for or against the demandant, according to that alternative.

The fifth is the material question, and since it has been acknowledged in argument that this suit was instituted on the authority of the case of the Baptist Association, it is necessary first to determine the doctrine which that case establishes.

The devise there was of lands lying in Virginia; the intended devisee was an unincorporated society described in the will as meeting at Philadelphia; that society became incorporate under a law of Pennsylvania, not of Virginia, and then brought suit in equity in Virginia to recover the property devised.

At the hearing, the court decided upon the single question "whether the plaintiffs were capable of taking under that will," and accordingly this court certify an opinion to no other point. Its language is, "that the plaintiffs are incapable of taking the legacy for which this suit was instituted." And, notwithstanding the marginal notes of the reporter to the contrary, that I consider as the only point decided in the cause. What the law of the case would have been had the Attorney-General of Virginia 138] been made a party to the *suit, and (I presume also as a necessary inference) had the society been incorporated by Virginia in order to enable them to take the legacy, this court expressly declines deciding (p. 50); and certainly it would have been deciding between parties not before it, had it undertaken in that suit to pass upon the interest in or power over the subject existing in the State of Virginia. The statute of 43 Eliz. had been expressly repealed in Virginia previous to the death of Hart, the testator; and although the learned judge who delivered the opinion of the court goes so much at large into the origin, construction and effect of that statute, it could only Peters 3.

have been to prove all that the case required to have established, to wit, that it is under that statute alone that, even in England, a court of equity could extend to the complainants the relief which they craved. That statute being repealed in Virginia, it followed that the equity powers of the State courts, and of consequence that of the Circuit Court of the United States, could no longer be exercised over the subject of the charities embraced in that statute; that the State of Virginia, where the land lay, and not the State of Pennsylvania, stood in the relation of parens patriæ, and, therefore, that those powers and those rights which the crown exercises over charities in England in order to sustain and give effect to them, could only be exercised in that case by Virginia.

So far I consider the decision as authority, and so far it would require more than ordinary ingenuity to excite a reasonable doubt of its correctness. I consider it as too plain to be questioned that the powers which the Court of Chancery in Great Britain exercises over bequests of charities, in cases where the interest cannot vest under the rigid rules of law as applied to other bequests, is vested in that court by, or rather usurped under the statute of Elizabeth. I am not now speaking, it must be noted, of the power of the crown in such cases, but of the portion of the prerogative power over charities now exercised by the Court of Chancery in that kingdom.

I consider it as conclusive to prove the peculiar origin of this power, that there lies no appeal from the decision of the chancellor in *charity cases. (Cro. Ch., 40, 351; [139 4 Viner's Abridg., 496.) And when cases occur not enumerated in the statute of Elizabeth or not strictly analogous thereto, the crown still exercises the power of disposing of them by sign-manual. (See the cases collected in Viner Charit. Uses, G. 3, and note; also, 7 Ves., 490.) So that were the statute of Elizabeth repealed in England to-morrow, I see not by what authority this power could be exercised even there in the chancery courts. The history of this branch of the chancellor's jurisdiction proves that it could not be.

The plain object of the Act of 43 Eliz. is to place in commission a troublesome branch of the royal prerogative, and to vest the commissioners with power to institute inquests of office, or by other means to discover charities, or the abuse or misapplication of charities, and to authorize the board to exercise the same reach of discretion over such charities as the crown possessed, subject, however, to a revising and controlling power in the lord chancellor; not a mere judicial power, but a ministerial legislation and absolute power; a power, however, secondary or appellate in its nature, not original. This controlling power being absolute and final, soon swallowed up its parent, and became original and absolute. One judge admitted the precedent of an original bill in a charity case, a second judge satisfied his scruples upon that precedent, and other judges following regarded it as a settled practice. But in whatever way the power is exercised, whether as original or appellate, no other authority for its exercise has ever been claimed by the chancellor but the 43d Elizabeth.

The correctness of the decision of this court, therefore, in the Baptist Association case, cannot, I think, be disputed. And yet it does in no wise affect the case now before us. But, it is argued that if the statute 43 Elizabeth be in force in New York, and its courts can exercise an original power under it, or if they can pursue the intermediate steps necessary to the exercise of an appellate or revising power (six in number, I think, Lord Coke makes them, 2 Inst.), still it can only be a suit in chancery in the name of the people or of their attorney-general, or of the corporation constituted by 140] *them, although vested with all their interest in or power over the subject.

To me it appears demonstrable that the 43 Elizabeth introduces no new law of charities, makes none valid not valid before it passed, but simply places the right and power of the court over charities in other hands. If this were not the case, why should bequests to the universities and great schools, bequests in all cases constituting private visitors, and bequests to towns corporate (section 2 and 3), hospitals, &c., be excepted from its operation? Why should a more liberal rule be introduced with regard to the enumerated indefinite charities and the excepted cases remain subject to a more rigid system? Certainly the enumerated exceptions in that statute can lose nothing in point of merit or claim to public protection and indulgence by comparison with those acted upon by the statute. Indeed, the preamble explicitly confines the views of the Legislature to enforcing the application of the charities according to the charitable interest of the donor; it is the organization of a machine for carrying that interest into effect without introducing any new rule of law on the subject of construing, applying, or effectuating that intention.

What, then, was the law of that day, of the time when the 43 Elizabeth was passed on the subject of charitable donations? It was a system peculiar to the subject, and governed by rules which were applicable to no other; a system borrowed from the civil law, almost copied verbatim into the common law writers. This will distinctly appear by comparing Domat with Godolphin, in the Orphan's Legacy.

It has been said that there are neither adjudged cases nor dicta of elementary writers on the subject of the law as it stood previous to the 43 Elizabeth; but this I think is not quite correct. In Swinburn on Wills, as well as Godolphin's Orphan's Legacy, both books of great antiquity and high authority, we find all the rules for construing, enforcing and effectuating charities which have been maintained and acted upon in the chancery since the 43 Elizabeth, laid down as the existing laws of charitable devises; and yet the statute of Elizabeth is not quoted by either as the authority for 141] *their doctrines; but their margins are filled with quotations from books which treat of the civil and common law. (God. Orph. Leg., Sec. Ed., 1676, P. 1, ch. 5, sec. 4, p. 17; Swinb. on Wills, P. 1, sec. 16.) And in so modern a book as Maddock's Ch. (Vol. I., 47), we find the law laid down in these words: "It has been a uniform rule in equity, before as well as after the statute of 43 Elizabeth, ch. 4, that where uses are charitable, and the person has in himself full power to convey, the court will aid a defective conveyance to such uses;" and then goes on to enumerate all that variety of cases to which the English courts have applied the latitudinous principle that the statute of charitable uses supplies all the defects of an assurance which the donor was capable of making, even to a devise by a lunatic.

Nor are these authors without adjudications to sustain the position that the law was such before as well as after the statute 43 Eliz. Rolt's case in Moore, p. 855, was the case of a will which occurred long before the statute of Eliz. passed. The devise was of land not in use, and not devisable by law or custom; so that had it been to an individual, it had been clearly void. Accordingly, the heir-at-law entered; yet, after the statute of Elizabeth, it was hunted up and returned upon inquest under the statute; and the lord-chancellor on an appeal, having called in the aid of the two common law chief justices, they all held it a good limitation or appointment. Now, there never has been a time when a subsequent statute, general in its provisions as was that of charitable uses, could divest a right legally descended upon an heir-at-law. It follows that the devise must have been good without the aid of that statute; this decision took place in court twenty years after the date of the statute.

So also in Revett's case in the same book, p. 890, when the will was made and the death of the deviser took place in 1586, about seven years before the statute of 43 Elizabeth, and there had been no surrender, the land being copyhold, so that the devise to the charity was clearly void if made to an individual, and accordingly the younger son entered; the charity was enforced against the purchaser from the heirs, *under the idea that it was good [142] as an appointment; clearly in pursuance of the rule that wherever the donor has power to convey and manifestly intends to convey, the law will make good every deficiency in favor of charities.

And in the case of Sir Thomas Middleton, which also happened before the statute, and where the legal defect lay in the legal insufficiency of the party in interest, and which was not a case of devise, yet it was held good.

It is true Perkins gives an instance of a very early date (40 Edw. III.; see Perkins, sec. 510) of a devise to a society not incorporated with power to purchase, in which the devise was held void; but on that case it may be remarked that as the clergy had an exclusive possession of the Court of Chancery for many years after (to 26 Henry VIII.), it is easy to perceive how the law of charities came to be improved to what it appears to have been at the date of the cases quoted from Moore. And there are two other remarks applicable to the cases in Perkins. In a modified sense those devises are held to be void even at this day, and to need the aid of a royal prerogative still existing in the court to relieve the devisees against the rules of the common law. It is obvious that property devised to charities under such circumstances as prevent its vesting by the rules of common law, is placed in a situation analogous to that of escheat, and afterwards disposed of under the king's sign-manual according to his conscience, actual or constitutional; so that in a trial at common law, such devise would be held void unless aided by prerogative power.

And secondly, there is this difference between the case in Perkins and the present case, that the former is expressed in words which contemplate vesting presently; the latter in words which contemplate a future vesting; which I consider an all-important feature in the present case, and one which may give validity to the present devise without resorting to the aid of those principles which appear peculiar to charitable bequests.

But as a charity to be governed by the law of the State of New York, it appears to me all-^{143*}most idle to view this case with *reference to any other rule of decision than their own adjudications. The case of The Trustees of New Rochelle (7 Johns. Ch. Rep., p. 292), was a case of greater difficulties than the present; for there the devise is immediate in presenti to a devisee having no capacity to take at the time. The Legislature afterwards gave that capacity and the court held the devise valid; nor is it unimportant in that case to observe that the case in Ambler, 422, of the devise to "the poor inhabitants of St. Leonard's Shore-Ditch," is recognized as authority; as well as that of The Attorney-General v. Clarke, in the same book, 651.

Now, this decision seems full to these points: 1. That the Legislature of that State can, ex post facto, give a capacity to take a charity where there was no such capacity existing at the time of devise over, is a case where the future existence of that capacity was not contemplated by the testator. 2. That an act of incorporation, with capacity to take, dispenses with the presence of the representative of the State in a suit to recover such a charity.

What more can be required in the present case, especially where the devisee is the party demandant?

It is no objection to the authority of The New Rochelle case that it was a suit in equity; for in a case like the present, where nothing is wanting but a competent party to sue or be sued whenever that party comes in esse, there can be no reason why the suit should not be at law, if courts of law are competent to give relief. Had the devise been void in the case referred to, the estate must have vested in the legal representative, and could no more have been shaken in equity than at law.

But I have said that the defendant here might dispense with the aid of the peculiar principles of the law of charities; and my opinion distinctly is, that the devise is good upon general principles in every respect, unless it be in the time of vesting; then it is not restricted within the legal limits, since the Legislature may, by possibility, never constitute the corporation contemplated in the will.

It is, in general, true, that where there is a present immediate devise there must exist a ^{144*}competent devisee and a *present capacity to take. But it is equally true that if there exists the least circumstance from which to collect the testator's contemplation or intention of anything else than an immediate devise to take effect in presenti, then, if confined within the legal limits, it is good as an executory devise.

This is the case of a devise to an infant in ventre sa mere; and this the ground of the distinction in Hobart 33, of a present devise to a Peters 3.

corporation where it is or is not in progress towards positive existence.

Now, the present case is one clearly of an alternative devise to such and such official characters, if by virtue of that devise they can take in perpetuity and succession; and if not, then to them when constituted a body politic by positive statute. Here is clearly contemplated a future vesting to depend on a capacity to take to be created by a legislative act; and if the passing of that legislative act had been restricted by the will in point of time to the lives of the individuals filling those offices at the time of the death of the testator, on what possible ground could the devise have been impeached?

Does, then, the law invalidate the devise for want of such restriction or some other equivalent to it? It is perfectly clear that the law of England does not, and never did, as relates to charities; at least where there has been no previous disposition. In this respect it seems to constitute an exception to the law of executory devises, as is implied in the general reference to the prerogative of the crown to give it legal efficiency by his sign-manual, and as is distinctly recognized in the case of The Trustees of New Rochelle in the courts of New York; a case in which the plaintiffs might as well have waited forever upon the legislative will as in the present case.

There may be a reason for this distinction, since it depends upon the sovereign will to prevent the perpetuity at once; and the presumption is that the Legislature will not delay to do that which it ought to do. And whence at last arises this rule against perpetuities? It is altogether an act of judicial legislation, operating as a proviso to the statute of wills; a restriction upon the testamentary power. The authority *from which the exception [¹⁴⁵emanated could certainly limit it so as to prevent its extension to an object under the care of the sovereign power.

Upon the whole, I am of opinion that the Act of Incorporation was at least equivalent to the king's sign-manual, and vested a good legal estate in the tenant. That although in the interval it should have descended upon the heir, it descended subject to be divested and passed over by that exercise of prerogative power. But I perceive no necessity for admitting that it ever descended upon the heir; since the right of succession seems rather to be in the Commonwealth in the case of charities, as parens patriæ.

Mr. Justice STORY.

This cause was argued with great ability and learning at the last term of this court, and has been held under advisement until this time. In the interval I have prepared an opinion upon all the points argued by counsel; and upon one of those points of leading importance I have now the misfortune to differ from a majority of my brethren. Upon another leading point, that of the alienage of the demandant, my opinion coincides generally with that of the majority of the court; but the reasons on which it is founded are given more at large than in that now delivered by my brother Thompson. Under these circumstances I propose to deliver my opinion at large upon all the points argued in the cause, mainly in the order in which they were discussed by the counsel. It is not without reluctance that I deviate from my usual practice of submitting in silence to the decisions of my brethren when I dissent from them; and I trust that the deep interest of the questions and the novelty of the aspect under which some of them are presented, will furnish an apology for my occupying so much time.

The first point is, whether the devise in the will of Robert R. Randall of the lands in question is a valid devise, so as to divest the heir-at-law of his legal estate, or to affect the lands in his hands with a trust.

In considering this question, it appears to me that this court is to look into the terms of the 146] will, and to construe *it according to the intention of the testator. That intention has been justly said to constitute the pole star to guide courts in the exposition of wills. When the intention is once fairly ascertained, it is wholly immaterial that it cannot be carried into effect by the principles of law; for our duty is to interpret, and not to make wills for testators.

In looking at the terms of the present devise, it appears to me clear that the testator's intention was to vest in certain persons in their official, and not in their private capacity, all the residue of his estate for a certain charity stated in the devise. The language is, "I give and bequeath the same unto the Chancellor of the State of New York, the mayor and recorder of the city of New York, the president of the Chamber of Commerce," &c., &c. Did he by these terms mean to devise to the individuals who then occupied these offices the estate in question, or to the persons who might hold them at the time of his death, or to the persons who might successively from time to time hold them? It was certainly competent for him to devise to them personally, and in their private capacity, by their official description. If a testator were by his will to give an estate to the Bishop of New York for life, or to him and his heirs, without giving him his Christian or surname, there is no doubt that the devise might well take effect as a devise to the then incumbent in office as a descriptio personæ. The law does not require, to make a devise or legacy valid, that the party should be designated by his name of baptism or surname. It is sufficient if he be pointed out by any description, leaving no room for doubt as to the identity and certainty of the person. A devise to the eldest son of A is just as good as if his name were given. A devise to the present President of the United States could be just as good as if his name were written at large in the will. The maxim of law is, that the designation must be certain as to the person to take; and id certum est, quod certum reddi potest. There is no doubt, then, that the chancellor, mayor and recorder, &c., &c., of New York might take as individuals, if such were the intention of the testator. I go farther, and say, that if the testator did intend 147] the present devise to them in their *private characters, they would take not merely an estate for life in the premises, but an estate in fee. My reason is that the scope and objects of the charity, being perpetual, require that construction of the will to carry into effect the intention of the testator.¹

But the difficulty is in arriving at the conclusion upon the terms of the will that the testator did mean any devise to them in their private capacities. It is manifest from his language that he did not devise to the then chancellor, mayor and recorder, &c., &c., in their private capacities, because his language is that it is to the chancellor, &c., &c., "for the time being, and their respective successors in the said offices forever." It is, then, a devise to them, as officers, during their continuance in office, and the estate is to go to their successors in office forever; so that none of the devisees are to take any certain estate to themselves, but only while they continue in office. It is said that the court may reject the latter words if inconsistent with the avowed intention and objects of the will. If the other language of the will required an interpretation of these words different from the ordinary meaning, there might be good ground for such an argument; but that the devise will, in point of law, become ineffectual if they are not rejected, furnishes no ground for the court to exclude them. Words which are sensible in the place where they occur, and express the testator's intention, are not to be rejected because the law will not carry into effect that intention. If it were otherwise, courts of law would make wills and not construe them. But what ground is there to say that the words "for the time being" and "their successors in office" ought to be rejected? The former clearly designate what chancellor, mayor and recorder, &c., &c., are meant. How, then, can the court take one part and reject the other part of the description? How can the court say that the testator meant the then incumbents in office, when he has spoken of them as the incumbents for the time being? His intention clearly is that the charity shall be a perpetuity. He devises to the successors in *office [*148] forever. They are to be the administrators of the charity forever. Upon what ground can the court exclude the successors from the administration of the charity, when the testator has so designated them? Why may we not equally well exclude the present incumbents as the future? Both are named in the will; both are equally within the view of the testator of equal regard. Suppose all the other incumbents had died, or had been removed from office, is there a word in the will that shows that they or their heirs could still act as trustees when they ceased to possess office in exclusion of the actual incumbents? If not, how can the court say that it will defeat the main intention as to the administrators, and yet fulfil the charity as the testator designed it should be executed?

But this exposition does not rest on a single clause of the will. It pervades it in all the important clauses. In another clause of the will the testator directs, that the trustees shall administer the charity "in such manner as the said trustees or a majority of them may from time to time, or their successors in office may from time to time direct." And, again, the testator adds, "it is my intention that the institution hereby directed and created should be perpetual, and that the above-mentioned officers for the time being, and their successors should forever continue and be the governors thereof, and have the superintendence of the same." Here is a most deliberate restatement of his intention and objects. The governors and administrators of his charity are not to be the then incumbents in office, but the officers for the time being; not the individuals when out of office, but their successors in office. What right, then, can this court have to say that the successors in office shall not be governors? Would it not be a plain departure from the express intention and solemn declarations of the will? The testator seems to have been apprehensive that, after all, there might be some impediment in carrying his intention into effect. What, then, does he provide? That his intention shall be disregarded? That provisions of his will, as to successors, &c., &c., shall be disregarded or rejected? No, so far from it that he goes on to provide for the emergency, so as 149) to *give full effect to his intention. His words are, "that it is my will and desire that if it cannot be legally done according to my above intention by them (the trustees) without an act of the Legislature, it is my will and desire that they will as soon as possible apply for an act of the Legislature to incorporate them for the purposes above specified." So that the successors in the manner above mentioned constituted a primary, as well as a perpetual object of the devise. It seems to me so plain and clear upon the language of the will, that the testator never abandoned the intention of having the trustees take in their official and not in their private capacity, that, with great deference to the judgment of others, I am unable to perceive any ground on which to rest a different opinion.

Peters 3.

1.—Cruise's Digest, Devise, ch. 11, sect. 72.

If this is so, then it is next to be considered whether such devise is void at law. I am spared the necessity of going at large into that question by the decision of this court in the case of The Trustees of the Philadelphia Baptist Association v. Hart's Executors (4 Wheat. Rep., 1), where the subject was very amply discussed; and for reasons, in my judgment unanswerable, it was there decided that such a devise was void at law. Upon that occasion I had prepared a separate opinion; but that of the Chief Justice was so satisfactory to me that I did not deem it necessary to deliver my own.

If the devise was void at law at the time when it was to have effect, viz., at the death of the testator, the subsequent Act of the Legislature of New York could not have any effect to divest the vested legal title of the heirs of the testator. The devise was not a devise to a corporation not in esse, and to be created in futuro. It was a devise in presenti, to persons who should be officers at the death of the testator, and to their successors in office. The vesting of the devise was not to be postponed to a future time, until a corporation could be created. It was to take immediate effect; and if the trustees could not exercise their powers in the manner prescribed by the testator, they were to apply to the Legislature for an act of incorporation. Assuming, then, that a devise per verba de futuro to a corporation not in esse 150) which *is to take effect when the corporation should be created, would be good and vest, by way of executory devise, in the corporation when created, as seems to have been Lord Chief Justice Wilmot's opinion (Wilmot's Opinion, p. 15); it is a sufficient answer that such is not Peters 3.

the present case. From the other report of the same case, Attorney-General v. Downing (Amb. 550, 571), and Attorney-General v. Bowyer (3 Ves., 714, 727), I should deduce the conclusion that the case turned upon the peculiar doctrines of the Court of Chancery in respect to charities; and that Lord Camden's opinion was founded on that. His judgment is not, as far as I know, in print; and whether he thought that at law a devise in futuro to an executory corporation would be good, does not appear. In the case before him he acted upon it as a charitable trust, not as a devise of the legal estate.¹

But it is said that there are cases in which it has been held that a devise to persons in their official capacity is good to the party in his natural capacity; and that it is not true that because the devisees cannot take in succession they cannot take at all: a case from Brook's Abridgement, title, Corporation, pl. 34, is relied on. There the principal point was of a different nature: whether a corporation composed of a master and fraternity could present the master to a benefice. And Pollard, J., on that occasion said: "If J. S. is dean of P., I may give land to him by the name of dean, &c., and his successors, and to J. S. and his heirs, and there he shall take as dean, and also as a private man; and he is tenant in common with himself." Now, the plain meaning of this is, that because he took one moiety in his official capacity to him and his successors, that did not disable him to take the other moiety to him and his heirs, but he held the latter in his private capacity. Another case is from Co. Litt., 46 b., where it is said, if a lease for years be made to a bishop and his successors, yet his executors and administrators shall have it in autre droit; for regularly no chattel can go in succession in case of a sole corporation, no more than *if a lease be made to a man 151 and his heirs it can go to his heirs.² Now, in the case of a sole corporation, it is manifest that the intention is to give the chattel to the actual incumbent in office for his life, and he is entitled to hold it beneficially. But no chattel can pass in succession; and then the question arises whether the court will declare the gift void as to the residue of the term, or consider the gift absolute. The construction adopted has been to consider the intent to be executed cy pres; and, as the testator intended to give the whole, to vest the term absolutely in the bishop, and then by operation of law it would go to his assigns. But this is a case of a sole corporation, where the party is capable to take in his corporate, as well as in his natural capacity for life. The present is a case of aggregate persons not capable of taking in a corporate capacity. To give the estate to them in their natural capacity, and for life only, would defeat the testator's intention; for he meant a perpetuity of trust, and to persons in office, however often the incumbents might change: to give them in their natural capacities an estate for life when not officers would defeat the primary object which he had in view. He meant no beneficial interest to any

1. See also, 1 Roll. Ab. Devise, H., sec. 1; Com. Dig. Devise, K.

2. See Co. Litt., 9, a.

incumbent, but a charitable trust to a succession of official trustees.¹

It is also said that in a will a particular may be made to yield to a more general intent. Certainly it may; but then the difficulty in the application of this rule to the present case is, that the argument insists upon a construction which I cannot but deem an overthrow of the general, to subserve an intent not indicated. Because the testator has expressed an intent to be carried into effect one way, which cannot consistently by law be so; and the court can see another way by which he might have carried it into effect, if he had thought of it; it does not follow that the court can do that which the testator might have done, and new-model the provisions of the will. If a testator should per verba de presenti devise an estate to a corporation not in esse, *and he knew the fact, or mistook the law, the court could not construe the words as de futuro, and declare it a good devise to a corporation to be created in futuro. The case in 1 Roll. Abridg. Devise, H., l. 50, is decisive of that. The general intention here appears to me to be to create a perpetual trust in certain trustees in succession, for charity; and I can perceive no particular intent, as distinguishable from that general intent. The perpetuity, the succession and the trusteeship are in his view equally substantial ingredients. So far from allowing any other than the official trustees to administer it, he even points out that if the trust cannot be executed by them, the estate, if it descends to his heirs, shall descend clothed with a trust. And he even appoints the same trustees and their successors in office executors of his will.

I come now to the other part of the question, whether, if the devise be void at law, the estate in the hands of the heirs is affected with the trust in favor of the charity. It appears to me most manifest that it is affected by the trust, if we consult either the intention of the testator or the express terms of the will. The closing paragraph of the will is, in my view of it, decisive, as creating an express trust in the heirs. "It is," says the testator, "my desire, all courts of law and equity will so construe this my said will, as to have the estate appropriated to the above uses; and that the same should in no case, for want of form or otherwise, be construed as that my relations or any other persons, should heir, possess, or enjoy my property, except in the manner and for the uses herein above specified."

If no trustees had been named in the will to execute the charity, it seems to me very clear that these terms would have created a trust in the heirs. There cannot, as I think, be a doubt, that independent of the statute of mortmain, (9 Geo. II., ch. 26), the present devise would be held a good charitable devise, and would be enforced in equity, at least since the statute of 43d of Elizabeth of charitable uses. The case of White v. White; of Attorney-General v. Downing (Amb. Rep., 550, 571); of Attorney-General v. Tancred (Amb., 351; S. C., 1 Eden's Rep., 10); and of Attorney-General v. Bowyer (3 Ves., 714, 717), would alone [*153] be decisive; but there are many others to the same effect.² Whether the statute of 43 Elizabeth is in force in the State of New York, or whether, independent of any enactment, a court of equity could enforce this as a charitable trust in the exercise of its general jurisdiction, or as the delegate, for this purpose, of the parental prerogative of the State; or whether such court could hold it utterly void; it is unnecessary for us to consider; that point may well enough be left to the decision of the proper State tribunal, when the case shall come before it. At present I do not think it necessary to say more than that if the trust be utterly void, then the heirs would by operation of law take the legal estate stripped of the trust. If the trust be good, then it is knit to the estate, and the heirs take it subject to the trust.

But it is said that if the trust be valid, the Legislature had a perfect right to enforce it, and their Act of Incorporation amounts to a legal execution of the trusts, and vests the estate in the corporation. Now, whatever may be the rights of the State as parens patriæ to enforce this charity, it can enforce it only as a trust. If the legal estate is vested in the heirs subject to the trust, the Legislature cannot by any act, ipso facto, divest that legal title, and transfer it to the corporation. It is one thing to enforce a charitable trust, and quite another thing to destroy the legal rights of the parties to which it is attached. If the devise had been to certain trustees by name, upon trust for the charity, could the Legislature have a right to divest the legal title? The case of The Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward (4 Wheat. Rep., 518), in its principles, bears against such a doctrine. The right to enforce the trust and operate upon the legal estate is a right to be exercised by judicial tribunals, and not by legislative decrees. The doctrine of the Supreme Court of New York is that the Legislature thereof has no authority to divest vested legal rights.³

*But I cannot admit that the Act of [*154] Incorporation was intended to have such an effect; it has no terms which divest the legal title of the heirs; it merely incorporates the trustees and their successors, and clothes them with the usual powers to carry the trust into effect. It presupposes that the estate was already vested in them by the will. They are made "capable in law of holding and disposing of the estate" devised by the will. It is true that the uses are added, "and the same (estate) is hereby declared to be vested in them and their successors in office for the purposes therein (in the will) expressed." But this was not, as I think, intended to vest the estate in them as a legislative investiture; but to declare that the estate was vested in them for the purposes of the charity and not otherwise. The preamble of the act, too, shows that the trustees did not ask to have the estate vested in them, but that inconveniences had arisen in the management of the es-

1. See 2 Preston on Estates, 5, 6, 7, 46, 47, 48, Common Dig. Estates, a. 2.

2. See note on Charitable Uses, 4 Wheat. Rep. Appendix, 1, 11, 12; Coggeshall v. Felton, 7 Johns. Ch. Rep., 292; Kirkbank v. Hudson, 7 Price, 212.

Duke Charitable Uses, by Bridgman, p. 361, 374, 375, 390.

3.—Dash v. Van Cleek, 7 Johns. Rep., 477; Bradshaw v. Rogers, 20 Johns. Rep., 103; Catlin v. Jackson, 8 Johns., 520; Terrett v. Taylor, 9 Cranch, 93; Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Peters, 627, 657.

tate from the changes of office. This is very strong to show that the Legislature acted solely for the purpose of avoiding such inconveniences, and not to give them an estate to which they then had no title, and which they then professed to have in their management.

In every view, therefore, in which I can contemplate this point, I feel compelled to say that the devise, if a valid devise, is not a devise valid so as to divest the heir-at-law of his legal estate; but that the devise can have effect, if at all, only as a trust for a charity fastened on the legal estate in his hands.

In this opinion as to the nature and effect of the devise, in which I have the misfortune to differ from that of the court, I am authorized to say that I have the concurrence of the Chief Justice.

Another question is whether the demandant was or was not capable of taking lands in the State of New York by descent? And this question is presented upon four different aspects of the facts.

In order to explain the views which I take of 155 this part of the case, it will be necessary to state some general principles upon the subject of alienage. The rule commonly laid down in the books is that every person who is born within the ligeance of a sovereign is a subject; and, e converso, that every person born without such allegiance is an alien. This, however, is little more than a mere definition of terms, and affords no light to guide us in the inquiry what constitutes allegiance, and who shall be said to be born within the allegiance of a particular sovereign; or, in other words, what are the facts and circumstances from which the law deduces the conclusion of citizenship or alienage. Now, allegiance is nothing more than the tie or duty of obedience of a subject to the sovereign under whose protection he is; and allegiance by birth is that which arises from being born within the dominions and under the protection of a particular sovereign. Two things usually concur to create citizenship; first, birth locally within the dominions of the sovereign; and second, birth within the protection and obedience, or in other words, within the ligeance of the sovereign. That is, the party must be born within a place where the sovereign is at the time in full possession and exercise of his power, and the party must also at his birth derive protection from, and, consequently, owe obedience or allegiance to, the sovereign, as such, de facto.¹ There are some exceptions which are founded upon peculiar reasons, and which, indeed, illustrate and confirm the general doctrine. Thus, a person who is born on the ocean is a subject of the prince to whom his parents then owe allegiance; for he is still deemed under the protection of his sovereign, and born in a place where he has dominion in common with all other sovereigns. So the children of an ambassador are held to be subjects of the prince whom he represents, although born under the actual protection and in the dominions of a foreign prince. Birth within the dominions of a sovereign is not always sufficient to create citizenship, if the party at the time does not derive 156 protection from its sovereign *in virtue of his actual possession; and, on the other hand, birth within the allegiance of a foreign sovereign does not always constitute allegiance, if that allegiance be of a temporary nature within the dominions of another sovereign. Thus, the children, of enemies, born in a place within the dominions of another sovereign then occupied by them by conquest, are still aliens; but the children of the natives born during such temporary occupation by conquest, are, upon a reconquest or re-occupation by the original sovereign, deemed, by a sort of postliminy, to be subjects from their birth, although they were then under the actual sovereignty and allegiance of an enemy.

The general principle of the common law also is, that the allegiance thus due by birth cannot be dissolved by any act of the subject. It remains perpetual unless it is dissolved by the consent of the sovereign or by operation of law. Upon the cession of a country it passes to the new sovereign; for the sovereign power is competent to transfer it by a voluntary grant. Upon the conquest of the country it passes by operation of law to the conqueror; who as sovereign de facto has a right to the allegiance of all who are subdnd by his power and submit to the protection of his arms. Upon the abdication of the government by one prince, it passes by operation of law to him whom the nation appoints as his successor. Thus, by the conquest of England, the allegiance of all Englishmen passed to William the Conqueror; by the abdication of James II. their allegiance passed to William of Orange; and by the cession to France of the Anglo-French provinces of England, the allegiance of the natives passed to the new sovereign. These cases are plain enough upon the doctrines of municipal law, as well as upon those which are recognized in the law of nation.

But a case of more nicety and intricacy is when a country is divided by a civil war, and each party establishes a separate and independent form of government. There, if the old government is completely overthrown and dissolved in ruins, the allegiance by birth would seem by operation of law to be dissolved, and the subjects left to attach themselves to such party as they may choose, and thus to become the voluntary subjects, *not by birth, [157 but by adoption, of either of the new governments. But where the old government, notwithstanding the division, remains in operation, there is more difficulty in saying, upon the doctrine of the common law, that their native allegiance to such government is gone, by the mere fact that they adhere to the separated territory of their birth, unless there be some act of the old government virtually admitting the rightful existence of the new. By adhering to the new government, they may indeed acquire all the rights, and be subject to all the duties of a subject to such government. But it does not follow that they are thereby absolved from all allegiance to the old government. A person may be (what is not a very uncommon case) a subject owing allegiance to both governments, ad utriusque fidem regis. But if he chooses to adhere to the old government and not to unite with the new, though governing the territory of his birth, it is far more difficult to affirm that the new government can compel or claim his allegiance in virtue of his birth, although he is not within the territory, so as to make him responsible criminally to its jurisdiction. It may give him the privileges of a subject, but it does not follow that it can compulsively oblige him to renounce his former allegiance. Perhaps the clearest analogy to govern such cases is to bring them within the rule that applies to cases of conquest, where those only are bound to obedience and allegiance who remain under the protection of the conqueror.

1.—See Calvin's case, 7 Co., 1; Doe, ex dem. Duroure, v. Jones, 4 Term Rep., 300; 1 Bl. Comm. Peters 3.

The case of the separation of the United States from Great Britain is, perhaps, not strictly brought within any of the descriptions already referred to; and it has been treated on many occasions both at the bar and on the bench as a case sui generis. Before the revolution all the colonies constituted a part of the dominions of the King of Great Britain, and all the colonists were natural-born subjects, entitled to all the privileges of British-born subjects, and capable of inheriting lands in any part of the British dominions, as owing a common allegiance to the British crown. But in each colony there was a separate and independent government established under the authority of the crown, though in subordination to it. In this posture of things the Revolution 158]* came; and the Declaration of Independence acting upon it, proclaimed the colonies free and independent States; treating them not as communities in which all government was dissolved and society was resolved into its first natural elements, but as organized States, having a present form of government, and entitled to remodel that form according to the necessities or policy of the people. The language of the Declaration of Independence is, that Congress solemnly publish and declare, "That these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown; and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as free and independent States they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do." It is plain that this instrument did not contemplate an entire dissolution of all government in the States; which would have led to a subversion of all civil and political rights and a destruction of all laws. It treated the colonies as States, and simply absolved them from allegiance to the British crown, and all political connection with Great Britain. The States so considered it; some of them proceeded to act and legislate before the adoption of any new constitution; some of them framed new constitutions; and some of them have continued to act under their old charters down to the present day. They treated the case as it was treated in England upon the abdication of James II., and provided for it by resorting to that ultimate sovereignty residing in the people, to provide for all cases not expressly provided for in their laws.

Antecedent to the revolution the inhabitants of the colonies, whether natives of the colonies or of any other of the British dominions, owed no allegiance except to the British crown. There was not, according to the common law, any secondary or subordinate allegiance to the colony itself, or the government therein established, as contradistinguished from the general allegiance to the British crown. When, therefore, the Declaration of Independence absolved all the *States from allegiance to the British 159 crown, it was an act of one party only. It did not bind the British government, which was still at liberty to insist, and did insist upon the absolute nullity of the act, and claimed the allegiance of all the colonists as perpetual and obligatory. From this perplexing state of affairs, the necessary accompaniment of a civil war, it could not escape the notice of the eminent men of that day that most distressing questions must arise; who were to be considered as constituting the American States on one side, and "the State of Great Britain" on the other? The common law furnished no perfect guide, or rather, admitted of different interpretations. If, on the one side, it was said, that all persons born within a colony owed a perpetual allegiance to that colony whoever might be the sovereign, the answer was that the common law admitted no right in any part of the subjects to change their allegiance without the consent of their sovereign, and that the usurpation of such authority was itself rebellion; for "nemo potest exuere patriam" was the language of the common law. In respect to persons who were not natives, but inhabitants only in a colony at the time of the assertion of its independence, there was still less reason to claim their allegiance. If they were aliens, there was no pretense to say that they could be bound to permanent allegiance against their will. If they were born in England, or elsewhere in the British dominions out of the colony, they were as little bound to permanent allegiance; because they inhabited, not as colonists, but as British subjects. In respect to both these cases (i. e., foreigners and British subjects), no colony, upon assuming to be an independent State, could, against their will, make them members of the State. It would be an exercise of authority not flowing from its rights as an independent State, and at war with the admitted rights of other nations, by the law of nations, to hold the allegiance of their own subjects. In order, therefore, to make such persons members of the State, there must be some overt act or consent on their own part to assume a character; and then, and then only, could they be deemed, in respect to such colony, to determine their right of election.

Under the peculiar circumstances of the Revolution, the *general (I do not say 160 the universal) principle adopted was to consider all persons, whether natives or inhabitants upon the occurrence of the Revolution, entitled to make their choice either to remain subjects of the British crown or to become members of the United States. This choice was necessarily to be made within a reasonable time. In some cases that time was pointed out by express Acts of the Legislature; and the fact of abiding within the State after it assumed independence, or after some other specific period, was declared to be an election to become a citizen. That was the course in Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In other States no special laws were passed, but each case was left to be decided upon its own circumstances, according to the voluntary acts and conduct of the party. That the general principle of such a right of electing to remain under the old or to contract a new allegiance was recognized, is apparent from the cases of the Commonwealth v. Chapman (1 Dall. Rep., 53); Caignet v. Pettit (2 Dall. Rep., 234); Martin v. The Commonwealth (1 Mass. Rep., 347, 397); Pulmer v. Downer (2 Mass. Rep., 179, note); S. C. Dane's Abridg., ch. 131, art. 7, sec. 4; Kilham v. Ward (2 Mass. Rep., 236) and Gardner v. Ward (2 Mass. Rep., 244, note); as explained and adopted in Inhabitants of Cummington v. Inhabitants of Springfield (2 Pick. Rep., 394, and note); Inhabitants of Manchester v. Inhabitants of Boston (16 Mass. Rep., 230) and Milvaine v. Cox's Lessee (4 Cranch, 209, 211).¹ But what is more directly in point, it is expressly declared and acted upon by the Supreme Court of New York, in the case of Jackson v. White (20 Johns. Rep., 313). It appears to me that there is sound sense and public policy in this doctrine, and there is no pretense to say that it is incompatible with the known law or general usages of nations. The case of Ainslie v. Martin (9 Mass. Rep., 454), proceeds upon the opposite doctrine; but that case stands alone, and is incompatible with prior as well as subsequent decisions of the same court; and 161 so it has been *treated by Chancellor Kent in his learned commentaries. (2 Kent's Comm., 35, 52.)

Another point which necessarily arises in the present discussion is, whether a party, who, by operation of law or by the express enactment of the Legislature of a State, after the Declaration of Independence, became a citizen of the State, could afterwards by any act of his own, flagrante bello, divest himself of such citizenship. It is clear that during the war, however true it might be that the State by its own declaration or by his consent might hold him to his allegiance as a citizen and absolve him from his former allegiance, such declaration or consent could be binding only between him and the State, and could have no legal effect upon the rights of the British crown. The king might still claim to hold him to his former allegiance, and until an actual renunciation on his part, according to the common law he remained a subject. He was, or might be held to be, bound ad utriusque fidem regis. In an American court we should be bound to consider him as an American citizen only; in a British court he could, upon the same principle, be held a British subject. Neutral nations would probably treat him according to the side with which he acted at the time when they were called upon to decide upon his rights. It might well be presumed that from various motives numbers would change sides during the progress of the contest; some because they were compulsively held to allegiance, and others, again, from a sincere change of opinion. It is historically true that numbers did so change sides. The general doctrine asserted in the American courts has been that natives who were not here at the Declaration of Independence but were then, and for a long while afterwards remained, under British protection, if they returned before the Treaty of Peace, and were here at that period were, to be deemed citizens. If they adhered to the British crown up to the time of the treaty they were deemed aliens; some of the cases already referred to are full to this point, and particularly Kilham v. Ward, and Gardner v. Ward. In respect to British subjects not natives who joined us at any time during the war and remained with us up to the peace, a similar rule of deeming them citizens has *been adopted. The cases [162 in 9 Mass. Rep., 454; 2 Pick. Rep., 394; and 5 Day Rep., 169, are to this effect. The ground of this doctrine is that each government had a right to decide for itself who should be admitted or deemed citizens; that those who adhered to the States and to Great Britain, respectively, were, by the respective governments, deemed members thereof; and that the Treaty of Peace acted by necessary implication upon the existing state of things, and fixed the final allegiance of the parties on each side, as it was then, de facto. Hence the recognition on the part of Great Britain of our independence by the Treaty of 1783, has always been held by us as a complete renunciation on her part of any allegiance of the then members of the States, whether natives or British born. And the same doctrine has been in its fullest extent recognized in the British courts in the case of Thomas v. Acklam (2 Barn. & Cress., 779.) Lord Chief Justice Abbott, in delivering the opinion of the court on that occasion, said that "the declaration in the treaty that the States were free, sovereign, and independent States, was a declaration that the people composing the State shall no longer be considered as subjects of the sovereign by whom such declaration is made." And in a subsequent case, Auchmuty v. Mulcaster (8 Dowl. & Ry. Rep., 593; S. C., 5 Barn & Cress., 771), the same court held that a native American born before the Declaration of Independence who adhered to the royal cause during the war, still retained his allegiance, and was to be deemed, not an American citizen, but a British subject. Mr. Justice Bayley, on that occasion, said, "the king acknowledges the United States to be free, sovereign, and independent States." "Who are made independent? The States. Does not this mean the persons who at that time, (of the treaty) composed the American States" (8 Dowl. & Ry., 603)? And again, he added, "the treaty, &c., &c., made those persons who were at that period of time adhering to the then American government or constituted authorities, free of their allegiance to the crown of these kingdoms, and left them to adopt their allegiance to the new government."

In Kilham v. Ward (2 Mass. Rep., 236), and Gardner v. Ward (2 Mass. Rep., 244, [163 note), a like doctrine was avowed. The language of the court there was, that by the treaty those who by their adherence and residence had remained the subjects of the King of Great Britain on the one part, and those who by their adherence and residence were then the people of the United States on the other part, were reciprocally discharged from all opposing claims of allegiance and sovereignty. This doctrine appears to me so rational and just, and founded upon such a clear principle of reciprocity and public policy, that it is, I own, extremely difficult for me to admit that the treaty does not indispensably require that interpretation. It is true that the treaty contains no renunciation on our part of the allegiance of any of our citizens who had adhered to the British crown, but the reason of the omission is obvious. Great Britain claimed the allegiance of all the colonists as British subjects; she renounced by the treaty that claim as to all who then adhered to the American States. We acquiesced in that result; and must, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, be deemed to admit the allegiance to have been retained of all whose allegiance was not expressly or impliedly renounced.

1.—See also Chase, J., in Ware v. Hylton, 3 Dall., 225; 1 Peters' Condens. Rep., 199; Hebron v. Colchester, 5 Day's Rep., 169.

I am compelled, however, to admit the language of this court in M'Ilvaine v. Cox's Lessee (4 Cranch, 209, 214) leads to an opposite conclusion. There is no doubt that the Treaty of Peace does not ascertain who are citizens on the one side or subjects on the other. That is a matter partly of law and partly of fact; but when the fact is ascertained that the party was de facto at the time under the allegiance of, and adhering to either government, he is to be treated as a subject of that government, and as such, a party to the treaty. What right have the American States to say that all persons shall be deemed citizens who, at any time previous to the treaty, were deemed citizens under their laws, any more than Great Britain has, to hold all persons subjects whom she had previously deemed subjects in virtue of their original allegiance. Each party must, I think, be presumed to deal with the other upon the footing of equal rights as to allegiance, and to act upon the status in quo the treaty found them. If, however, the case of M'Ilvaine v. Cox's Lessee [164*] is to be deemed not *an administration of local law but of universal law and the interpretation of treaties, it overthrows the reasoning for which I contend. I cannot admit its universality of application; on the contrary, sitting in Massachusetts, I should feel myself constrained to re-examine the doctrine as applicable to that State upon a point which affected her political rights and her soil, and which the courts of the State had the most ample jurisdiction to entertain and determine. In New York there is no decision either way; and it seems to me, therefore, that it is fit to be re-examined upon principle. I adopt the suggestion of Lord Chief Justice Abbott in Doe, ex dem. Thomas, v. Acklam (2 Barn. & Cress., 798), that the inconvenience that must ensue from considering any large mass of the inhabitants of a country to be at once citizens and subjects of two distinct and independent States, and owing allegiance to each, would, if the language of the treaty could admit of any doubt of its effect, be of great weight toward the removal of that doubt. The treaty ought to be so construed as that each government should be finally deemed entitled to the allegiance of those who were at that time adhering to it.¹

With these principles in view, let us now come to the consideration of the question of alienage in the present case. That the father and mother of the demandant were British-born subjects is admitted. If he was born before the 4th of July, 1776, it is as clear that he was born a British subject. If he was born after the 4th of July, 1776, and before the 15th of September, 1776, he was born an American citizen, whether his parents were at the time of his birth British subjects or American citizens. Nothing is better settled at the common law than the doctrine that the children even of aliens born in a country while the parents are resident there under the protection of the government and owing a temporary allegiance thereto, are subjects by birth. If he was born after the 15th of September, 1776, and his parents did not elect to become members of the State of New York but adhered to their native allegiance at the time of his birth, *then [165 he was born a British subject. If he was in either way born a British subject, then he is to be deemed an alien and incapable to take the land in controversy by descent; unless he had become at the time of the descent cast an American citizen by some act sufficient in point of law to work such a change of allegiance.

His parents being born British subjects, it is incumbent upon those who set up the defense to establish that having a right of choice, his parents elected to become American citizens. This is attempted to be deduced by operation of law from certain resolutions and acts of the government de facto of the State of New York. As early as the 15th of September, 1776, his parents joined the British troops in New York, and remained under the protection of the British arms during the war. At the close of the war his father withdrew (his mother being then dead) with the British authorities; and he continued ever afterwards under the protection and allegiance, de facto, of the British crown. So far as the acts, therefore, of the parents, manifested by a virtual adherence to the British side, go, they negative any intentional change of native allegiance. But it is said that they were bound to make their election in a reasonable time. I agree to this; but the effect of the omission to manifest an election in favor of the State of New York was, in my judgment, decisive of their adhering to the allegiance of their native sovereign. But if it were otherwise, if the election to remain British subjects must be affirmatively established, still, I think, in point of law, under all the circumstances, an election by taking the British protection in September, 1776, was within a reasonable time; and the case of Jackson v. White (20 Johns. Rep., 313), in my judgment warrants such a conclusion.

But it is said that the ordinance of the 16th of July, 1776, which declares "that all persons abiding within the State of New York and deriving protection from the laws of the same, owe allegiance to the said laws, and are members of the State," by necessary conclusion and operation of law made the parents of the demandant American citizens; because they were then abiding within the State and deriving *protection from its laws. Now, as- [166 suming that the Convention of the State of New York had plenary powers for this purpose, so as to bind a British subject not born in New York to allegiance to the State from the mere fact of his local residence at the time (a proposition that is encumbered with many difficulties), the term "abiding," as here used, has never been construed to exclude the right of election of persons who were inhabitants at that period to adhere to the old or contract a new allegiance. The case of Jackson v. White (20 Johns. Rep., 313) is decisive of that.

1.—See also 1 Wood. Lect., 382; Dane's Abridg. ch. 131, art. 7.

We must then give a rational interpretation to the word consistent with the rights of parties, and the accompanying language of the ordinance. By "abiding", in the ordinance, is meant not merely present inhabitants, but present inhabitancy coupled with an intention of permanent residence. This is apparent from the next clause of the ordinance, where it is declared "that all persons passing through, visiting, or making a temporary stay in the State being entitled to the protection of the laws during the time of such passage, visitation, or temporary stay, owe during the same allegiance thereto." Their "temporary stay" is manifestly used in contradiction to "abiding," and shows that the latter means permanent intentional residence. So Mr. Chief Justice Spencer, in Jackson v. White (20 Johns. Rep., 313, 326), considered it. He says, "residence in this State prior to that event (the Declaration of Independence) imported nothing as regards the election or determination of such residents to adhere to the old or adopt the new government. The temporary stay, mentioned in the resolution of the convention, passed only twelve days after the Declaration of Independence by Congress, and within five days after the adoption of the declaration by the Convention of this State, clearly imports that such persons who were resident here without any intention of permanent residence, were not to be regarded as members of the State;" they had a right to a reasonable time, therefore, after the ordinance was passed, to decide whether, with reference to the new government, they would adopt a permanent residence in the State and to become members thereof.

A similar declaration is to be found in the 167 statute of 1777 of *Massachusetts, and there the term "abiding" has been construed not only to apply to an intention of permanent residence, but of a prospective abiding.¹ The reasoning in the Commonwealth v. Chapman (1 Dall. Rep., 53), persuasively conducts us to a similar conclusion. This ordinance, then, cannot be deemed to dissolve the native allegiance of the parents of the demandant, unless it shall be clearly established that they intended a permanent residence in New York, and to become members of the State under the new government, anterior to their assuming British protection in September, 1776.

But even admitting that his parents did elect to become citizens of New York before the 15th of September, 1776, still I am of opinion that the demandant, if he was born after the British took possession of the city of New York in September, 1776, while his parents were under the protection of and adhering to the British government de facto, was to all intents and purposes an alien born. To constitute a citizen the party must be born not only within the territory but within the ligeance of the government. This is clear from the whole reasoning in Calvin's case, (7 Co., 6, a. 18, a. b.).²

1.—See opinion in note, 2 Pick. Rep., 394, 395.

2.—See also Com. Dig. Alien; Bac. Abridg. Alien., A.

Now, in no just sense can the demandant be deemed born within the ligeance of the State of New York if, at the time of his birth, his parents were in a territory then occupied by her enemies and adhering to them as subjects, de facto, in virtue of their original allegiance.

The Act of the 22d of October, 1779, which confiscates the estate of the parents of the demandant, throws great light upon this part of the subject; it demonstrates that they were deemed to be then adhering to the British, the enemies of the State. It begins with a preamble reciting that "divers persons holding or claiming property within this State have voluntarily been adherent to the said king (of Great Britain), his fleets and armies, enemies to this State, and the said other United States, with intent to subvert the government and liberties of this State and of the said other United States, *and to bring the [168 same into subjection to the crown of Great Britain; by reason whereof the said persons have severally justly forfeited all right to the protection of this State, and to the benefit of the laws under which such property is held or claimed." It further declares that the public safety requires "that the most notorious offenders should be immediately hereby convicted and attained of the offense aforesaid, in order to work a forfeiture of their respective estates and invest the same in the people of this State." It then enacts "that John Murray, Earl of Dunmore, &c., &c., Charles Inglis of the said city (of New York), and Margaret his wife (the parents of the demandant), &c., &c., be, and each of them are hereby severally declared to be ipso facto convicted and attained of the offense aforesaid;" and then declares their estates forfeited. In the second section it enacts that the same persons "shall be, and hereby are declared to be forever banished from this State, and each and every of them who shall at any time hereafter be found in any part of this State, shall be, and hereby is adjudged and declared guilty of felony, and shall suffer death."

This act deserves an attentive consideration on several accounts. It is apparent upon its face that it is not an act which purports to be an attainder of citizens of the State only on account of their treason in adhering to the public enemies; for it embraces persons who never were nor were pretended to be citizens; neither does it affect to confiscate the property on account of the alienage of the persons named therein, by way of escheat. The persons described as subjects of attainder are, "persons holding or claiming property within this State," which description equally applies to citizens and British subjects, and may include foreigners of other nations. It seems, indeed, a summary exercise of the ultimate power of sovereignty, in inflicting the penalty of confiscation upon the property of enemies, jure belli. But it demonstrates clearly the sense of the Legislature that the persons named therein were at that time voluntary adherents to the British crown, and enemies of the State; and it affords a very cogent presumption of such adherence from the time that they first came under British *protection. It farther [169 denounces such persons as enemies or traitors who have forfeited all right to the protection of the State, and punishes them by a sentence of perpetual banishment, and makes their residence within the State a capital felony.

Such a sentence, under such circumstances, must be deemed on the part of the State a perpetual renunciation of the allegiance of those persons, and to deprive them of the rights, and to absolve them of the duties of citizens. There can be no allegiance due where the sovereign expressly denies all protection and compels the party to a perpetual exile. In this view of the matter, the demandant's parents were by the sovereign act of the State itself absolved from all future allegiance, even if they had antecedently owed any to the State. In this state of things the Treaty of 1783 found the father adhering to the British crown as a native-born subject.

What, then, is the operation of the Treaty of 1783? It is clear to my mind that the father of the demandant must be considered as a party to that treaty on the British side. I say this upon the presumption, which is not denied, that he was then adhering to the British crown; and that he was there recognized and protected as a subject owing allegiance to the British crown. In this state of things the treaty must, upon the grounds which I have already stated, be deemed to operate as an admission that he was in future to owe no allegiance to the State of New York, but he was to be deemed a British subject.

The question then arises as to what was the operation of the treaty upon his son, the demandant, who was then an infant of tender years and incapable of any election on his own part. It appears to me that upon principles of public law as well as of the common law, he must, if born a British subject, be deemed to adhere to and retain the national allegiance of his parents at the time of the treaty. Vattel considers the general doctrine to be that children generally acquire the national character of their parents. (Vattel, B. 1, ch. 19, sec. 212, 219); and it is certain, both by the common law and the statute law of England, that the demandant would 170 be deemed a British subject. The argument itself assumes that the demandant now acts officially in that character, and that ever since his arrival of age he has adhered to his British allegiance.

Upon the whole, upon the point of alienage as presented in the case, the following are my opinions under the various postures of the facts:

1. That if the demandant was born before the 4th of July, 1776, he was born a British subject.

2. That if he was born after the 4th of July, 1776, and before the 15th of September, 1776, he was born an American citizen; and that it makes no difference in this respect whether or not his parents had at the time of his birth elected to become citizens of the State of New York by manifesting an intention of becoming permanently members thereof, in the sense which I have endeavored to explain.

3. That if the demandant was born after the 15th of September, 1776, when the British took possession of New York, and while his parents were there residing under the protection of and adhered to the British crown as subjects, de facto, he was born a British subject, even though his parents had previously become citizens of the State of New York.

4. That if the demandant was born after the 15th of September, 1776, and could be deemed (as I cannot admit) a citizen of the State of New York in virtue of his parents having before the time of his birth elected to become citizens of that State, still his national character was derivative from his parents, and was, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, liable to be changed during the Revolutionary War; and that if his parents reverted to their original character as British subjects, and adhered to the British crown, his allegiance was finally fixed with theirs by the Treaty of Peace.

5. That it was competent for the British government to insist, at all times during the Revolutionary War, upon retaining the allegiance of all persons who were born or became subjects; and for the American States to insist in the like manner. But that the Treaty of Peace of 1783 released all persons from any other allegiance than that of the party to whom they then adhered and under whose allegiance they *were then, de facto, found. That if [171] the demandant's father was at that time so adhering, it was a final settlement of his allegiance on the British side; and that the demandant, unless born after the 4th of July, 1776, and before the 15th of September, 1776, remained, to all intents and purposes, a British subject.

6. That if the case of M'Irvine v. Cox's Lessee (4 Cranch, 209), should be thought to have overturned this doctrine so that it is no longer re-examinable, still that in this case the parents had a right to elect to which government they would adhere; and that a period up to the 15th of September, 1776, was not an unreasonable time for that purpose; and that unless some prior clear act of election could be shown, the adherence to the British from the 15th of September to the close of the war, afforded strong evidence to repel the presumption of any prior election to become citizens, arising from the fact of abiding in the State up to that period.

From these views, meaning to be understood to leave any disputed facts open for inquiry (although no other facts seem in dispute except the actual period of the birth of the demandant), my judgment would be that the demandant was, unless he was born between the 4th of July and the 15th of September, 1776, an alien at the time of the Treaty of 1783, and has ever since remained so. I agree to the doctrine in Dawson's Lessee v. Godfrey (4 Cranch, 321), that the right to inherit depends upon the existing state of allegiance at the time of the descent, cast, and not merely upon a community of allegiance at the time of birth; and the same doctrine is recognized in the fullest manner in the British courts.¹ If the demandant, then, was an alien at the time of the descent cast, he is incapable to inherit the estate in point of law.

But it has been suggested as matter of doubt whether alienage of the demandant can be taken advantage of or rejected on the issue joined. This objection cannot, in my opinion, be maintained; it is laid down in the books that everything in bar upon the merits may be

1.—Doc. ex dem. Thomas, v. Acklam, 2 Barn. & Cress., 779.

172*] given in evidence under *the mise except collateral warranty; so it is said in Brooks's Ab. Droit, 48; and Booth on Real Actions, 112. That also seems to have been the opinion of the court in Tyssen v. Clarke (2 Wils. Rep., 541). Whether the proposition can be maintained in its general latitude it is unnecessary now to consider; but it is certainly necessary for the demandant to prove his title as set forth in the writ. If he claims by descent from an ancestor who was seized, he must show that he is heir and capable to take by descent. The seisin of the ancestor is nothing without establishing his heirship. The cases of Green v. Lister (8 Cranch, 229), and Green v. Watkins (7 Wheat. Rep., 28), are decisive that in a writ of right the title and mere right of each party are in issue; and each may establish that the title of the other wholly fails. If, therefore, the demandant has no title by descent, the tenant may show it; for it goes to the very foundation of his claim.

In this connection it may be well to dispose of another objection which was much pressed at the argument. It is this: The demandant in his count alleges the seisin of Robert R. Randall, and makes title by descent to the premises as his next collateral heir on the part of his mother. At the death of Robert R. Randall, he left a brother, Paul R. Randall, and a sister, Catherine Brewerton, on whom the alleged right to the lands descended in moieties, and through whom (though not from whom) the demandant deduces his title by descent, they having died without issue. The tenants offered evidence to establish that Catherine Brewerton had disposed of her right in the premises by will; and that the right of Paul R. Randall also had been transferred during his lifetime. Now, the objection is, that this evidence is inadmissible, because it is an attempt to set up the title of third persons to defeat a recovery in a writ of right, which is inadmissible. The cases of Green v. Lister (8 Cranch, 229), and Green v. Watkins (7 Wheat. Rep., 28), have been relied on to support this objection. Nothing is better settled in this court than the doctrine that a better title in third persons cannot be set up to defeat a recovery in a writ of right, because that writ brings into controversy and comparison

173*] the titles of the parties *only; but it is perfectly consistent with this doctrine, that the tenant may show that the title set up by the demandant is in fact no title at all. One material allegation in the present count is its seisin of Robert R. Randall, the ancestor; and this seisin is admitted, and, indeed, constitutes a part of the title of both parties in the present case. Another material allegation is that the right to the demanded premises descended to the demandant as heir. Now, it is clear upon the general principles of pleading, that what is essential to the demandant's right, as stated in his count, must, when that right is denied by the issue, be proved by the demandant and may be disproved by the tenant. If, therefore, the demandant be incapable of taking as heir by descent, although there be a right, that may be shown by the tenant as if he be an alien, because it defeats the asserted descent of the title. On the other hand, if the heirship be admitted, and the right was parted with by the ancestor or by any other person upon whom it intermediately devolved before it could reach the demandant, that, for a better reason, may be shown, because it shows that no right or title descended at all. Both are necessary to establish the demandant's claim; there must be a right or title subsisting capable of descent and a capacity in the demandant to take as heir. If the ancestor has actually parted with his whole right and title in the premises by a legal conveyance, how can it be said that there remains any descendible right in him? If his right has been parted with by any intermediate heir by a legal conveyance, how can it be said to have devolved upon the demandant? The true and real distinction is this: if the demandant shows any right, as stated in his count to have descended to him from his ancestor, the tenant cannot show that there is a better right subsisting in a third person under whom he does not claim, for that does not disprove the title of the demandant as asserted in his writ; and if the demandant's title, such as it is, is better than the tenant's, then the demandant ought to recover; but the tenant may show that the demandant has no right whatsoever by descent, for the possession of the tenant is sufficient against any person who does not show any right, or a better right. And this, *as I understand it, is the doctrine in [174 Green v. Watkins (7 Wheat. Rep., 28). Here, title in third persons is offered, not to prove that there is a better outstanding title, but that no right whatsoever descended to the demandant, as he claims in his count. It seems to me that it is clearly admissible.

The next point is whether the will of Catherine Brewerton was sufficient to pass her right and interest in the premises in question so as to defeat the demandant in any respect; the premises being at the date of the will, and ever since, held adversely by the tenants in the suit.

If this point were to be decided with reference purely to the common law of England, there might be some reasons for doubt. The question whether a right of entry was under the British statute of wills devisable, seems never to have been directly decided until a recent period. There is, indeed, to be found in prior cases, many dicta going to affirm the doctrine that such a right of entry is not devisable. Such seems to have been the opinion of Lord Holt in Bunker v. Cook (11 Mod. R., 122), and of Lord Eldon in Attorney-General v. Vigor (8 Ves., 282), as well as of other judges in former times, whose dicta are collected and commented on in Goodright v. Forrester (8 East's Rep., 552, 566, and 1 Taunt. Rep., 604).¹ There are also dicta the other way; and at all events there is reasoning which leads to the conclusion that in modern times the judges have been disposed to give a far more liberal construction to the statutes, and to hold that whatever is descendible is devisable. The cases of Jones v. Roe (3 Term Rep., 88), and Goodtitle d. Gurnall v. Wood (Willes's Rep., 211; 3 Term Rep., 94), by Lord Kenyon, are most material. In Goodright v. Forrester (8 East's Rep., 552), the Court of King's Bench held a right of entry not devisable. But when that case came before the Court of the Exchequer Chamber in error, Lord Chief Justice Mansfield very much doubted that point, and the case was finally decided on another. But it is the less necessary to consider this question upon the English authorities, because it has undergone an express adjudication in the State of New *York upon the construction of their own statute of wills. The statute of New York enacts that any person having an estate of inheritance in lands, tenements and hereditaments, shall have a right to devise them. In Jackson v. Varick (7 Cowen's Rep., 238), the Supreme Court of New York, upon very full consideration, held that under this statute a right of entry being an hereditament, was devisable. And this court, in Waring v. Jackson (1 Peter's Rep., 571), understood it to be the settled rule in that State that an adverse possession did not prevent the passing the property by devise. This, then, being a point of local law upon the construction of a statute of the State, according to the uniform course of this court in cases of that nature, we should hold it decisive, whatever original doubts might otherwise have surrounded it. But, as one, I confess myself well satisfied with that decision upon principle. It is rational and convenient; and if I should have felt difficulty in arriving at it through the authorities, I should not be inclined to disturb it when made.

1.—See also Com. Dig. Devise, M.

It has been said that the present case differs from that in 7 Cowen's Rep., 238, in this, that the demandant claims through, but not under Mrs. Brewerton, not as her heir, but as heir of Robert R. Randall; and that the estate was not descendible to her heirs according to the known principles of the common law, as she was never seized of the premises, but to Robert's heirs, as the person last seized. That is true, but it does not alter the application of the principle of law. If Mrs. Brewerton had been possessed of a reversion by descent from Robert R. Randall, and she had died before the life estate fell in, it would not have gone to her heirs, but to his. And yet there is no doubt that she might grant such a reversion, or devise it, and it would pass by her will to the devisee and thus interrupt the descent. So, if Mrs. Brewerton had a right of entry in the premises and she could devise it, it is of no consequence that it would not, if undevised, have passed to her heirs; for having the jus disponendi, when she exercises it, it passes her right to her devisee and so interrupts the descent to the heirs of Robert *R. Randall. It appears to me, therefore, that as to the moiety of Mrs. Brewerton it passed under her will, and that the demandant, in any view of his claim, has no title to a moiety of the demanded premises. A right of entry may well pass under the devise of an hereditament.¹

The next question is whether the proceedings against Paul R. Randall, as an absent and absconding debtor, passed his right or interest to the other moiety in the lands in question to and vested the same in the trustees appointed under the same proceedings, so as to defeat the demandant in any respect.

The answer must depend upon the true construction of the Absconding Debtor Acts of 1786 and 1801 as compared with those proceedings. At the time of those proceedings the premises were in the adverse possession of the tenants; and, consequently, Paul R. Randall had only a right of entry. And the question is, whether that right of entry passed by the statutes to the trustees; and if so, whether it did not by operation of law revest in him after all these proceedings were functi officio, his debts being paid and the surplus paid over to him.

At the common law a right of entry is clearly not grantable or assignable. The party has, in the sense of the common law, no estate in lands of which he is disseized; but his estate is said to be turned to a right, and can be recoverable only by an entry or an action. In the mean time he has not any estate in the lands, but he has merely the right to the estate. For this doctrine it is necessary to do no more than to refer to Littleton, sec. 347; Co. Litt., 214 and 345, a. b.; Preston on Estates, 20, and Com. Digest, Assignment, C. 1, 2, 3, and Grant, D. (a.) Unless it shall appear that the common law has been differently construed in New York, or altered by some local statute, the same rule must be presumed to prevail there; for, by the constitution of that State, the common law forms the basis of its jurisprudence. No case has been cited in which the rule of the common law on *this subject has been [*177 overturned, or in which it has been decided that the word "estate" includes a right of entry, proprio vigore.

But it is said that by the law of New York a right of entry is attachable, and may be taken and sold on execution; and that an attachment under the Absconding Debtor Acts of 1786 and 1801 is deemed analogous to an execution.² It may, doubtless, well be so deemed in a general sense; but it by no means necessarily follows that because there is such an analogy, therefore, whatever may be taken in execution may be taken on such attachment, or, e converso. The subject of levies under execution is expressly provided for by the statute of New York of the 31st of March, 1801; and what effects or estate may be taken in execution depends upon the true construction of the terms of that act. It declares that "all the lands, tenements, and real estate" of every debtor shall be liable to be sold upon "execution," &c., for the payment of any judgment against him for debt or damages. What has been the judicial construction of these words in this act, whether they include a right of entry does not, as far as my researches extend, appear ever to have been decided. It is indeed suggested by Mr. Justice Woodworth, in delivering the opinion of the court in Jackson v. Varick (7 Cowen's Rep., 238, 244), that the reasonable construction is that it includes such a right; but the point was not then before the court, and he does not treat it as a point settled by adjudication. The words to which he refers in another part of the act, giving the form of the execution (sec. 9) in which it is confined to lands and tenements whereof the debtor was seized on the day when the same land became liable to the debt (by the judgment), would rather incline one to a different conclusion. And it is certain that under the statute of Westminster 2, ch. 18, subjecting lands to execution, lands of which the debtor is disseized at the time of the judgment cannot be taken in execution.³ Be this as it may, it is

1.—See Coffin v. Smith, 2 H. Bl., 444.

2.—Matter of Smith, 16 Johns. Rep., 102.

3.—1 Roll. Abridg., 888, Com. Dig. Execution, c. 14.

178] certain that in New York the process *upon executions and under the Absconding Debtor Act are not co-extensive in their reach. A judgment is not a lien upon a mere equity; and such an equity (not being an equitable estate under the statute of uses of 1787 (sec. 4) is not an interest which can be sold on execution. And choses in action do not appear to be within the scope of the act respecting executions; for the language confines it to "goods and chattels." Yet choses in action by the express terms of the Absconding Debtor Acts pass under the attachment; and there are various other interests which may well pass under these acts which yet are not liable to be taken under a common execution. Several cases illustrative of this position will be found collected in Mr. Johnson's Digest, title Execution 2(a).

It appears to me, then, that the true mode by which we are to ascertain whether a right of entry passes under the Absconding Debtor Acts is not by any forced analogy to the case of common executions, but by a just interpretation of the terms of the act themselves. The Act of 1801 is in substance a revision of the Act of 1786; no material distinction between them, applicable to the case before the court, has been pointed out at the argument; and they may therefore be treated as substantially the same.

The Act of 1801 begins (sec. 1) by providing for cases of absconding and absent debtors, and upon proof thereof, provides that a warrant shall issue to the sheriff commanding him to attach and safely keep "all the estate, real and personal, of such debtor," and make and return a true inventory thereof. Goods, effects and choses in action are expressly declared to be within the reach of the act. It afterwards proceeds to provide for the appointment of trustees, and authorizes them (sec. 2) "to take into their hands all the estate of such debtor, whether attached as aforesaid, or afterwards discovered by them, and all books, vouchers and papers relating to the same; and the said trustees, from their appointments, shall be deemed vested with all the estate of such debtor, and shall be capable to sue for and recover the same; and all debts and things in action due or belonging to such debtor, and all

179*] the estate attached as aforesaid, *shall be by the sheriff, &c., delivered to the said trustees; and the trustees, or any two of them, shall sell at public vendue after fourteen days' previous notice of the time and place all the estate, real and personal, of such debtor as shall come to their hands, and deeds and bills of sale for the same make and execute, which deeds and bills of sale shall be as valid as if made by such debtor, &c. The act afterwards goes on to provide for the distribution of the proceeds of the sales among the creditors, and then declares, that "the surplus, if any, after all just debts and legal charges as aforesaid are satisfied, shall be paid to such debtor or his legal representatives." There is no provision in the act as to what shall be done in respect to any property which never came to the hands of the trustees, nor of any property remaining unsold by them when all the debts were satisfied; and the omission may easily be accounted for from the general policy of the act; for the language is, that the trustees shall sell all the estate which comes to their hands. If the point were material

Peters 3.

I should strongly incline to the opinion that the act did not absolutely divest all right and title out of the debtor of any of his estate, which should not come to the hands of the trustees and be sold by them. But whether this be so or not, I am clearly of opinion that when once all the purposes of the trust are satisfied, and all the debts are paid, if the trustees have any legal interest or title vested in them in the estate of the debtor remaining unsold, it is subject to a resulting use for the benefit of the debtor, in the same manner as the surplus of the property sold. Suppose, before the sale, all the debts should be paid, must the trustees go on to sell? Suppose all the debts are paid by a sale merely of the personal estate, is not their trust extinguished? The trustees take all the estate in the first place for the benefit of the creditors, and in the next place, they being paid, for the benefit of the debtor. Subject to the rights of the creditors, the use is in him; and by operation of law the estate reverts in him as soon as the trust for the creditors is exhausted or extinguished. This seems to me a reasonable, if not a necessary construction of the act; for it has provided for no express reconveyance *by the trustees [180 to the debtor in any case whatsoever. It certainly could not intend to deprive him of his inheritance after all his debts were paid. And it is but just to give the act a construction favorable to the debtor, when all its other objects are accomplished. In the present case the whole proceedings afford a strong presumption that all the debts of P. R. Randall have been paid; and none are pretended to exist. His right of entry in the demanded premises was never sold by the trustees; and even if it vested in them, it afterwards by operation of law reverted in him, if the trusts were all defunct and satisfied. But I go farther, and incline to the opinion that his right of entry in the demanded premises did not pass to the trustees under either of the attachments. The language of the acts of 1786 and 1801 is indeed quite broad, and extends to all the "estate, real and personal," of the debtor. But a right of entry is not, as has been already shown, an "estate" in any just and legal sense of the word. Neither is it a "thing in action;" for it does not depend upon any right to sue, but may be enforced by a mere entry. Indeed, a right of action and a right of entry are often used in contradistinction to each other.

The case of Smith, &c., v. Coffin (2 H. Bl., 444) turns altogether upon other considerations, and upon the interpretation of the words of the English bankrupt laws. Words of a very broad import are used in those laws; and the policy of them is far more extensive than that which governs the laws of New York, now under construction. A construction might be properly adopted in respect to the bankrupt laws, which would not apply to the Absconding Debtor Acts of New York. The general policy of the common law is to discourage the grant or sale of mere rights of entry and action, with a view to suppress litigation. This policy spreads itself over many important interests; and is so fundamental, that nothing but a very clear expression of the legislative intention ought, in my judgment, to overthrow it. No such intention is to be found in the Acts of 1786 and 1801. Can it be reasonably presumed that the Legislature meant to authorize the sale of a right of entry to a purchaser? If not, was it 181] the intention to enable the trustees *to reduce the right into possession, and afterwards to sell the same? I think the former was manifestly not the intention of the Legislature; and I found myself on the very words of the acts. The trustees are to sell, not all the estate of the debtor, but all the estate, real and personal, "as shall come to their hands;" that is, as I construe the words, such as they shall reduce into possession; so that the estate may bring its uncontroverted value. But for the reasons already stated I incline also to the opinion that it was not the intention of the Legislature to pass the right of entry to the trustees so that they might be enabled to reduce it into possession.

But, supposing it to be otherwise, still it appears to me there is much reason to contend that the trustees, if they took the right of entry at all, took it sub modo and exactly as Paul R. Randall held it. The Legislature did not intend to invest them with a better right than he had. He had a right of entry into the estate vested in him by descent, and he might perfect his estate by an actual entry during his lifetime. But if he died without such entry, then the right to the estate devolved not upon his own heir, but upon the next heir in the line of descent of Robert R. Randall. In this view of the act the trustees were bound, then, to reduce the right of Paul R. Randall into possession during his lifetime, if they meant to perfect their title thereto. Not having done so, the title devolved upon the next heir who claimed, not through them, but from the ancestor from whom Paul R. Randall took it. This, however, is not the main ground on which I rely, though it fortifies some of the considerations already mentioned. The main ground on which I rely is, that whatever construction of the act may be adopted in other respects, as soon as all the trusts of the assignment are executed there arises a resulting use to the debtor, which, by operation of law, will revest all the unsold estate in him.

Upon the whole, my opinion is that the proceedings against Paul R. Randall did not pass his right or interest in the lands in question so as to defeat the demandant in any respect; but if they did, and all the trusts have been satisfied, there is a resulting use to him in the unsold estate.

The next question is, whether, inasmuch as 182] the count in *the cause is for the entire right in the premises, the demandant can recover a less quantity than the entirety.

This is a question somewhat involved in technical learning, and therefore requires an accurate examination of the authorities. Reasoning upon general principles and the analogies of the law, there would be little difficulty in deciding it in the affirmative; for it is deciding no more than that he who has a right shall recover according to his right, so, always, that he does not recover more than he sues for. No injury is done to the tenant by allowing the demandant who sues for ten acres and shows a title only to one to recover for the latter; nor if he sues for an entirety and shows title to a moiety, to recover for the latter. And it is in furtherance of justice that he should so recover; because it prevents multiplicity of suits. For if his suit should abate for this fault (and that is the only judgment which could be pronounced) he would still be entitled to a new action for the part to which he had shown title. The falsity of the former writ would constitute no bar.

Let us see, then, how the case stands upon authority. By the old common law, if the writ of the demandant was falsified by his own confession (for it is far from being certain that it was ever true, when found by a verdict upon the merits, after the general issue joined)¹ as to anything or part of a thing demanded in the writ, it abated for the whole. If the matter did not appear on the face of the record, but was to be made out by facts dehors, then the tenant, if he meant to avail himself of it, was compelled to do it by a plea in abatement. Thus, if he meant to avail himself of nontenure of the whole, or a part, he must plead it. But where, upon the whole record, the falsity of the writ was apparent by confession of the party, there, although the tenant had not pleaded in abatement, it was the duty of the court, ex officio, to abate the writ.

Now, at the common law, there are two sorts of writs in *real actions. In one the [183 demand is in a general form, without specification of any lands in particular. Thus, in the writ of assize, the demand is that the tenant "unjustly and without judgment hath disseized him of his freehold in C"² without any further description of the land. So in the writs of dower, the demand is of the demandant's "reasonable dower, which falleth to her of the freehold, which was of A, her late husband in C, whereof she hath nothing"³ without more. The plaint or count is less general, and specifies the particulars of the demand, as a messuage, ten acres of land, &c.⁴ In the other sort of writs, the writ itself is as special as the count. Such is the case of all precipes quod reddat, such as writs of right, and writs of entry, &c., where the demand is of a certain messuage, or ten acres of land, &c., &c., and the exigency of the writ is that the said tenant should render the same to the demandant without delay.⁵ Now, it was upon this difference that a distinction took place in the common law as to the right of the demandant to abridge his demand. If the writ was special, he could not abridge his demand in any case. If the writ was general, de libero tenemento, he might abridge his demand at his pleasure, so always that he did not abridge it of a moiety or portion where he sued for the entirety of a thing; as if he sued for ten acres he might abridge it to five; but if he sued for the whole of a messuage he could not abridge it to a moiety. This doctrine will be found at large in many cases; but it is nowhere better expounded than in the opinion of Mr. Justice Juyn (afterwards Chief Justice) in 14

166; Fitz., N. B., 147.

4.—Com. Dig., Assize, B. 11; Booth on Real Actions, 212, and note.

5.—Fitz., N. B., 1, 5, 191; Booth Real Actions, 1, 83, 88, 91, 172.

1.—See Plowden, 424, 6; Hobart's Rep., 282, 6; Fitz., Abridg., Breve, 272; 9 Hen., 6, 54; 11 Co., 45; Theol. Dig., Lib. 16, ch. 5.

2.—Booth on Real Actions, 210; Fitz., N. B., 177.

3.—2 Saund. Rep., 43; Booth on Real Actions,

Hen. VI, p. 3, 4. He said, "that in all cases where the writ is de libero tenemento generally, as in assize and writs of dower, where the writ is of her reasonable dower, &c., the demandant may abridge his plaint or demand; and the reason is because, although he abridges some acres, yet the writ remains true as to the rest, it being liberum tenementum still. But where a certain 184 number of acres is demanded in the writ, as in a formedon, the demandant cannot abridge, for he acknowledges his writ false; and where a writ is acknowledged to be false in part, it must abate it in the whole; but if in an assize the writ be, he unjustly disseized him de libero tenemento in A and B, and he would abridge his demand as to all in B, he shall not abridge; for his writ is false; which supposes him disseized of the tenement in A and B." As to this last position there is some difference in the authorities; but the general position is unquestionable law¹. But this doctrine, even in relation to assizes, was of little value to the demandant in many cases, because it stopped short of the most common sources of mistake. If, therefore, he counted against one as tenant of the whole, and he pleaded nontenure as to part, or joint tenancy, &c., and it appeared by confession or otherwise that the plea was true, the writ abated as to the whole, for the falsity of the writ was established in this, that the tenant was sued as the tenant of the whole, and was tenant only of part. This mischief was cured by the statute 25 Edw. III., ch. 16, which provided, "that by the exception of nontenure of parcel, no writ shall be abated but for the quantity of the 'nontenure, which is alleged'². Still, however, many difficulties remain behind; for if a party sue for an entirety, as of a manor, or a messuage, or one acre, and a bar was pleaded as to a moiety, or part of the land put in view, &c., in the plaint, the defendant could not abridge his plaint to the moiety left, since his writ was for an entirety, and so far false: the distinction was nice, for he might abridge his plaint from two or ten acres to one acre; but not as to the extent of his title or right in the land put in view. Such, however, as the distinction was (and it suited the subtlety of the times) it prevailed until the statute of 21 Hen. VIII., ch. 3, which provided, that in assizes the demandant might in all such cases abridge his plaint, and proceed for the residue.³ But 185 this statute is confined to assizes; and, therefore, left the common law in full force as to all other real actions.

Such is a brief review of the doctrine at common law in respect to the abridgement of plaints by the demandant. It is not, however, to be imagined that the old authorities are all in harmony on this subject. On the contrary, diversities of opinion seem to have existed from an early period. In Godfrey's case (11 Co., 42, 45), the court proceeded mainly on the rule already stated. Lord Coke, however, thought that the common and true rule and difference is where a man brings an action, be the suit general or certain and particular, and he demands two things, and it appears of his own showing that he cannot have an action or better writ for one of them, there the writ shall not abate for the whole, but shall stand for that which is good. But when a man brings an action for two things, and it appears that he cannot have this writ for one thing, but may have another in another form, there the writ shall abate for all, and shall not stand for that which is good. The distinction has sound sense in it; but it is inapplicable to the present case; because here the plaintiff has not shown upon the pleadings that he has no title to maintain his writ for the whole.⁴

Writs of precipe quod reddat, then, except so far as the statute 25 Edw. III., of nontenure aided them, stood upon the footing of the common law. In respect to them, therefore, the demandant could not abridge his claim except in cases of nontenure; and if his writ could not by his own confession be maintained for the whole for which he sued, his writ abated for the whole; and it was not material whether he sued for the entirety of a certain number of acres and showed title to a less number, or whether he sued for the whole or a moiety, and showed title only to a less aliquot part.⁵ But *unless the falsity of his writ appeared by his own confession, even though it appeared by the verdict, the better opinion was that the writ was not abated for the whole. Plowden, indeed, in Bracebridge v. Cook (Plowden, 424), thought the objection fatal. But Lord Hobart, in Clanrickard v. Sidney (Hob., 272, 282), condemned that opinion as erroneous, and against common experience in his day. And in this last case it was further held that the variance was but matter of form, and at all events cured by the statute of jeofails of 18 Elizabeth, ch. 14, after a verdict, even though it appeared by confession of the party upon the pleadings. In that case the writ was formedon for an entirety; and upon the demandant's own confession it appeared that he was entitled to recover but two-thirds. But the court held that the parties having gone to trial upon an issue, and the jury having found a special verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the two-thirds, his suit was not abatable for the whole, but the error was cured by the statute of jeofails of 18 Elizabeth, ch. 14.⁶ Whoever will read Lord Hobart's learned opinion upon that occasion will perceive the most solid reasons brought in support of it. The doctrine that if a demandant sue for an entirety, he may yet after verdict recover for a moiety, is not only supported by the case in Hobart's Rep., 172, but by the case

1.—See Com. Dig., Abridg., A; 2 Saund. Rep., 44 and note 4; Gilb. Com. Pl., 199, 201, 202, 203; Brooks, tit. Abridg.; 14 Hen. VI., p. 4; 9 Hen. VI., p. 42; 3 Lev., 63; Vin., tit. Abridg.; Theol. Dig., Lib. 16, ch. 2; Bac. Abridg., Abatement, L.

2.—See Gilb. Hist. C. P., 201.

3.—See Com. Dig., Abridgement, B; Viner, tit. Abridgement; Theol. Dig., Lib. 8, ch. 28; Id., Lib. 16, ch. 2; Keilway, 116, pl. 56; 5 Hen. VII.; 19 Hen. VI., 13; Brooks, Abridgement, pl. 2.

4.—See 1 Saund. R., 282, 285, note 7; Com. Dig. Peters 3.

Abatement, M. N.; Cro. Jac., 104; Theol. Dig., B. 8, ch. 23, sec. 13; 9 Hen. VII., 4 (b).

5.—See Com. Dig. Abatement, L. 1, 2, M.; Saville's Rep., 86; Clanrickard v. Sidney, Hob., 273, 274, 279, 282; Com. Dig. Abridgement, B.; Chatham v. Sleigh, 3, Lev. 67; Viner, tit. Abridgement; Fitzherbert's Abridgement, tit. Breve, 272; Plowden, 424.

6.—See Bacon's Abridgement, Amendment, B. Theol. Dig., Lib. 16, s. 15, 18; 2 Roll. Ab., 719, pl. 19 Cooper v. Frankling, 1 Roll. R., 384; S. C., 3 Bulst R., 148.

Cooper v. Frankling (1 Roll. Rep., 384; S. C., 3 Bulst., 148, and 2 Roll. Ab. Trial, p. 719, pl. 12). The doctrine, that if he sue for a moiety he may recover for a less aliquot part, may be deduced from the same causes, for it stands upon the same reasoning as that applicable to entireties. So was the reasoning in Saville's Rep., 48, pl. 165.¹ There are many cases in ejectment where the same doctrine has been maintained, and in none of them has any distinction been asserted between an ejectment and real actions. The ground of argument has been the variance between the count and verdict; so that it has turned upon the falsity of the plaintiff's 187] claim and title as propounded in his writ and proved at the trial. So was the case of Ablett v. Skinner (1 Sid., 229), where the ejectment was for one-fourth part of a fifth part; and the plaintiff's title upon the trial was but one-third part of a fourth of a fifth part; and yet it was held that he was entitled to recover according to his title. That case was recognized and fully confirmed in the case of Denn d. Burges v. Purvis (1 Burr. Rep., 326); where in ejectment the plaintiff sued for a moiety and recovered a third. Lord Mansfield relied on the analogous doctrine in cases of assize.

It may then be assumed as certain, that from the time of Lord Hobart the general doctrine has been that the demandant in any real action is entitled to recover less than he demands in his suit, whether he demands an entirety or an aliquot part, if the variance is not taken advantage of until after a verdict found on trial had. If, indeed, the matter is pleaded in abatement, it is fatal to the whole suit. So if it appears of record by the confession of the demandant in the course of the pleadings, the writ is abatable for the whole, if the tenant choose to take advantage of it before verdict. But if the parties go to trial upon the merits, and a verdict, general or special, is found of any part for the demandant, there the variance between the writ and the title, even though by the confession of the demandant upon the pleadings, is cured by the statute of amendments of 18 Elizabeth, ch. 14. This, then, being the state of the law at the time of the emigration of our ancestors, and the statute of Elizabeth being a remedial and not a penal law, and the general principle being that statutes made in amendment of the law before that period constitute a part of our common law, the court might, if it were necessary, resort to this principle to support the present suit. But such a resort is not necessary; because, in the first place, the present case is not one where the defect appears upon the confession of the party; but if at all, appears from facts proved at the trial upon the general issue. In the next place, the provisions of the Judiciary Act of 1789, ch. 20, sec. 32, upon the subject of amendments and jeofails, are far more extensive than the English statutes, and would justify the most 188] comprehensive construction in favor of the demandant. And in the last place, the original nicety of the common law doctrine upon this subject, at least since the time of Lord Hobart, seems to have given way (where the matter was not pleaded in abatement) to the doctrine of common sense. As far as we can trace it, it has been long established in England. Its existence in America has never been maintained by any positive decision in its favor. On the contrary, in Massachusetts, where real actions constitute the ordinary remedy for disseisins and ousters, it has been solemnly adjudged, upon a careful consideration of the English authorities, that the demandant may in all cases recover less than he sues for, whether he sues for an entirety or an aliquot part. So are the cases of Dewy v. Brown (2 Pick. Rep., 387); and Somes v. Skinner (3 Pick. Rep., 52); and the opinion of very able commentators upon this branch of the law.² There is nothing in the case of Green v. Litter (8 Cranch, 229, 242) which trenches upon this doctrine. So far, indeed, as that case goes, it is favorable to the demandant.

I have not thought it necessary to go into a particular examination of the point whether, if the variance between the demandant's title and his demand in his writ be apparent only by the finding of the jury upon the general issue, and not by the pleadings of the parties, or the confession of the demandant, the writ was abatable for the whole upon the old doctrine of the common law. There is much reason to believe, as has been already intimated, that under such circumstances the variance was never fatal to a recovery pro tanto; and the modern doctrine in England is certainly in favor of a recovery. But whether it be so or not, independent of the statute of jeofails, that statute certainly cures the defect upon the principles already stated.

Upon the whole, my opinion is that this question ought to be certified in favor of the demandant.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the *Southern [189 District of New York, and on the questions and points on which the judges of the said Circuit Court were opposed in opinion, and which were certified to this court for its opinion in pursuance of the Act of Congress for that purpose made and provided, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is the opinion of this court:

I. That although the count in the cause is for the entire right in the premises, the demandant may recover a less quantity than the entirety.

II. And under the second general point, the following answers are given to the specific questions:

1. If John Inglis, the demandant, was born before the 4th of July, 1776, he is an alien, and disabled from taking real estate by inheritance.

2. If he was born after the 4th of July, 1776, and before the 15th of September of the same year when the British took possession of New York, he would not be under the like disability.

3. If he was born after the British took possession of New York, and before the evacuation on the 25th of November, 1783, he would be under the like disability.

1.—Sec Scot and Scot's case, 4 Leon. R., 39; Com. Dig. Abatement, M.

2.—Jackson on Real Actions, 296; Stearns on Real Actions, 204.

4. If the grand assize shall find that Charles Inglis, the father, and John Inglis, the demandant, did, in point of fact, elect to become and continue British subjects and not American citizens, the demandant is an alien, and disabled from taking real estate by inheritance.

III. The will of Catherine Brewerton was sufficient to pass her right and interest in the premises in question, so as to defeat the demandant's right to recover, so far as her right or interest extended.

IV. The proceedings against Paul Richard Randall, as an absent debtor, passed his right or interest in the lands in question to, and vested the same in the trustees appointed under the said proceedings, so as to defeat the demandant's right to recover so far as his right or interest extended; unless the grand assize shall find that the trusts vested in the trustees have been performed; and, if so, the said proceedings will not defeat the demandant in any respect.

190*] *V. The devise in the will of Robert Richard Randall of the lands in question is a valid devise, so as to divest the heir-at-law of his legal estate.

Whereupon, it is ordered and adjudged by this court to be certified to the judges of the said Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York:

I. That, although the count in the cause is for the entire right in the premises, the demandant may recover a less quantity than the entirety.

II. And under the second general point, the following answers are given to the specific questions:

1. If John Inglis, the demandant, was born before the 4th of July, 1776, he is an alien, and disabled from taking real estate by inheritance.

2. If he was born after the 4th of July, 1776, and before the 15th of September of the same year when the British took possession of New York, he would not be under the like disability.

3. If he was born after the British took possession of New York, and before the evacuation on the 25th of November, 1783, he would be under the like disability.

4. If the grand assize shall find that Charles Inglis, the father, and John Inglis, the demandant, did, in point of fact, elect to become and continue British subjects and not American citizens, the demandant is an alien, and disabled from taking real estate by inheritance.

III. The will of Catherine Brewerton was sufficient to pass her right and interest in the premises in question, so as to defeat the demandant's right to recover, so far as her right or interest extended.

IV. The proceedings against Paul Richard Randall, as an absent debtor, passed his right or interest in the lands in question to, and vested the same in the trustees appointed under the said proceedings, so as to defeat the demandant's right to recover so far as his right or interest extended, unless the grand assize shall find that the trusts vested in the trustees have been performed; and, if so, the said proceedings will not defeat the demandant in any respect.

ceedings will not defeat the demandant in any respect.

*V. The devise in the will of Robert [191 Richard Randall of the lands in question is a valid devise, so as to divest the heir-at-law of his legal estate.

All of which is accordingly hereby certified to the said Circuit Court.

Mr. Webster, on a subsequent day of the term, submitted to the court an application in behalf of the demandant for a re-argument of this case. He presented, as the ground of the application, a statement in writing signed by the counsel in the case, Mr. Ogden and himself, representing "that the question in this cause, which arises on the construction of the will of Robert Richard Randall, is one not only of great importance, but certainly of no small difficulty. The case was argued at a time when there were six judges on the bench. At the time of the decision there were but five judges living who had heard the cause; of these five, three were against the demandant upon the construction of the will, being a minority of the whole court. Under these circumstances, as counsel for the demandant in a foreign country, the counsel feel it their duty to ask for a re-argument; the more particularly, as it appears from an affidavit now submitted to the court, that a sister of the demandant, who is now and long has been a feme covert, in case of a decision upon the construction of the will in favor of the demandant, is not subject to the disability of alienism, and may, therefore, maintain a suit to recover the property in dispute."

Mr. Wirt objected to the re-argument, alleging that should it be allowed, it would establish a precedent which would render every decision of the court uncertain and incumber the court with heavier duties than it could perform. It was without example in the whole course of the court since its organization.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL* delivered [*192 the opinion of the court:

The court have considered the application for a re-argument in this case. It must be a very strong case, indeed, to induce them to order a re-argument in any of the causes which have been once argued and decided in this court. The present case has been very fully considered, and the court cannot perceive any ground in the present application to induce them to consent to the motion. It is therefore overruled.¹

Cited—3 Pet., 245; 14 Pet., 628; 14 How., 274; 17 How., 540; 18 How., 238; 19 How., 577; 20 How., 20, 250; 5 Otto, 313; McAl., 189, 190; 2 Cliff., 492; 2 Sawy., 122, 128; 3 Woods, 448, 460, 480; 3 McAr., 578.

1.—In the Appendix will be found the opinion of Mr. Justice Story, prepared in the case of the Baptist Association v. Hart's Executrix (4 Wheat., 1), which, by his liberal kindness, the reporter has been authorized to insert in this volume. It will be found to illustrate very fully some of the principles decided in this cause.

193*] Ex-parte* TOBIAS WATKINS.Habeas corpus—jurisdiction in criminal cases—judgment—jurisdiction of Circuit Court for District of Columbia—cases discussed.

A petition was presented by Tobias Watkins for a habeas corpus for the purpose of inquiring into the legality of his confinement in the jail of the County of Washington, by virtue of a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States of the District of Columbia, rendered in a criminal prosecution instituted against him in that court. The petitioner alleged that the indictments under which he was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment, charge no offense for which the prisoner was punishable in that court, or of which that court could take cognizance; and, consequently, that the proceedings were coram non iudice.

The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction in criminal cases which could reverse or affirm a judgment rendered in the Circuit Court in such a case, where the record is brought up directly by writ of error. [201]

The power of this court to award writs of habeas corpus is conferred expressly on this court by the fourteenth section of the Judicial Act, and has been repeatedly exercised. No doubt exists respecting the power.

No law of the United States prescribes the cases in which this great writ shall be issued, nor the power of the court over the party brought up by it. The term used in the Constitution is one which is well understood, and the Judicial Act authorizes the court, and all the courts of the United States, and the judges thereof, to issue the writ "for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of commitment." [201]

The nature and powers of the writ of habeas corpus. [202]

A judgment in its nature concludes the subject on which it is rendered, and pronounces the law of the case. The judgment of a court of record whose jurisdiction is final, is as conclusive on all the world as the judgment of this court would be. It is as conclusive on this court as on other courts. It puts an end to inquiry concerning the fact by deciding it. [202]

With what propriety can this court look into an indictment found in the Circuit Court, and which has passed into judgment before that court? We have no power to examine the proceedings on a writ of error, and it would be strange if, under color of a writ to liberate an individual from an unlawful imprisonment, the court could substantially reverse a judgment which the law has placed beyond its control. An imprisonment under a judgment cannot be unlawful, unless that judgment be an absolute nullity; and it is not a nullity if the court has general jurisdiction of the subject, although it should be erroneous. [203]

The Circuit Court for the District of Columbia is a court of record, having general jurisdiction over criminal cases. An offense cognizable in any court is cognizable in that court. [203]

If the offense be punishable by law, that court is competent to inflict the punishment. The judgment of such a tribunal has all the obligation which the judgment of any tribunal can have. To determine whether the offense charged in the indictment be legally punishable or not, is among the most unquestionable of its powers and duties. The decision of this question is the exercise of its jurisdiction, whether its judgment be for or against the prisoner. The judgment is equally binding in one case and in the other, and must remain in full [194*] force, unless reversed regularly by a superior court capable of reversing it. If this judgment is obligatory, no court can ever look behind it. [203]

Had any offense against the laws of the United States been in fact committed, the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia could take cognizance of it. The question whether any offense was committed, or was not committed; that is, whether the indictment did or did not show that an offense had been committed, was a question which this court was competent to decide. If its judgment was erroneous, a point which this court does not determine, still it is a judgment; and until reversed, cannot be disregarded. [203]

NOTE.—Habeas corpus, nature of, and when granted.
See note to The United States v. Hamilton, 3 Dall., 18.

It is universally understood that the judgments of the courts of the United States, although their jurisdiction be not shown on the pleadings, are yet binding on all the world, and that this apparent want of jurisdiction can avail the party only on a writ of error. The judgment of the Circuit Court in a criminal case is of itself evidence of its own legality, and requires for its support no inspection of the indictment on which it is founded. The law trusts that court with the whole subject, and has not confided to this court the power of revising its decisions. This court cannot usurp that power by the instrumentality of a writ of habeas corpus. The judgment informs us that the commitment is legal, and with that information it is our duty to be satisfied. [207]

The cases of The United States v. Hamilton (3 Dall. Rep., 17); Ex-parte Burford (3 Cranch's Rep., 447); Ex-parte Bollman and Swartwout (4 Cranch 75); and Ex-parte Kearney (7 Wheat., 39); examined. [207]

THIS case came before the court on a petition for a habeas corpus, on the relation of Tobias Watkins, setting forth that at May Term, 1829, of the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia, in the County of Washington, certain presentments were found against him; upon three of which trials were had, and verdicts passed against him; upon which judgments were pronounced, purporting to condemn him to the payment of certain pecuniary fines and costs, and certain terms of imprisonment for the supposed offenses therein. For the nature and terms of the indictments, and of the convictions and judgments thereon, the petition referred to the same. Copies and exemplifications of the records of the proceedings were annexed to the petition.

The petition proceeded to state that, immediately on the rendition of the judgments, and in the pretended pursuance and execution of the same, the petitioner was, on the 14th of August, 1829, committed to the common gaol of Washington County, in which he has since been confined, under color and pretense of the authority, force, and effect of the said indictments; that he is well advised by counsel that the said convictions and judgments are illegal and wholly void upon *their faces, and [*195 give no valid authority or warrant whatever for his commitment and imprisonment; that the indictments do not, nor does any one of them charge or import any offense at common law whatever, cognizable in the course of criminal judicature, and especially no offense cognizable or punishable by the said Circuit Court; and that his imprisonment is wholly unjust, and without any lawful ground, warrant or authority whatever.

The petitioner prays the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus, to be directed to the marshal of the District of Columbia, in whose custody, as keeper of the gaol of the District, the petitioner is, commanding him to bring the body of the petitioner before the court, with the cause of his commitment; and especially commanding him to return with the writ the record of the proceedings upon the indictments, with the judgments thereupon; and to certify whether the petitioner be not actually imprisoned by the supposed authority, and in virtue of the said judgment.

The first indictment referred to in the petition charged the petitioner as fourth auditor of the Treasury of the United States, and as such having assigned to him the keeping of the accounts of the receipts and expenditures of the public moneys of the United States in regard to the Navy Department; with having obtained for his private use the sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars, the money of the United States, by means of a draft for that sum on the navy agent of the United States at New York, which draft was drawn by him in the city of Washington, in favor of C. S. Fowler, on the navy agent at New York, and negotiated in the city of Washington on the 16th of January, 1828; the said sum of money having been by him represented to the Secretary of the Navy as required by the navy agent for the uses of the United States, and so represented in a requisition made to the navy agent for a warrant on the Treasury of the United States for the amount of the draft, with other sums included in the requisition.

The second indictment charged the petitioner with having received from the navy agent of the United States at New York, the sum of three hundred dollars, money of the United 196 States, by means of fraudulent misrepresentations made to the navy agent, contained in a letter addressed to him on the 8th of October, 1827, in which it was falsely stated that the said sum of three hundred dollars was required for the use of the United States; and that the same was so obtained from the navy agent, by a draft on him in favor of C. J. Fowler, by whom the money was paid to the petitioner, on his having negotiated the draft.

The third indictment charged the petitioner with having procured to be drawn from the Treasury of the United States the sum of two thousand dollars, by means of a requisition from the Secretary of the Navy; a blank requisition left by that officer in his department having, on the representation of the petitioner that the same was required for the public service by the navy agent at Boston, been filled up for this purpose; and for which he drew and negotiated drafts in the city of Washington, at different times, in favor of C. J. Fowler, in different sums amounting to two thousand dollars, and appropriated the same to his own use.

Messrs. Jones and Coxe moved for a rule on the United States, to show cause why a habeas corpus should not issue, and proposed that the argument should take place on the motion upon all the points involved in the case. Mr. Berrien, Attorney-General, objected to an argument on the motion. He stated that he was prepared to go into the argument on the return of the rule, but was not willing to do so on the motion.

The counsel for the petitioner observed, that in Kearney's case (7 Wheat.), the argument took place on the motion; and, as in this case the petition brought up the indictments and the judgments of the Circuit Court, the whole matter was now fully before the court.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL said that the counsel for the petitioner and the Attorney-General might arrange among themselves as they thought proper when the argument should come on, either on the motion or the return. This not having been done, the rule was awarded returnable on the following motion day.

197* On the return of the rule, Mr. Coxe and Mr. Jones, for the petitioner, contended that no offense was charged in the indictments which was within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court for the County of Washington, and therefore all the proceedings of that court were nullities and void.

1. All the proceedings of a court beyond its jurisdiction are void. (Wise v. Withers, 3 Cranch, 331; 1 Peters' Condensed Rep., 552; Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch, 241, 268, 552; Doe v. Harden, 1 Paine' Rep., 55, 58, 59.)

2. In the case where a court acting beyond its jurisdiction has committed a party to prison, a habeas corpus is the proper remedy, and affords the means of trying the question. (3 Cranch, 448; 1 Peters' Condensed Rep., 594; Bollman and Swartwout, 4 Cranch, 75; Kearney's case, 7 Wheat., 38.)

3. The writ does not issue of course, but the party must show that he is imprisoned by a court having no jurisdiction. (1 Chitty's Crim. Law, 124, 125; 7 Wheat., 88.) A habeas corpus is a proper remedy for revising the proceedings of a court in a criminal case. (1 Chitty's Crim. Law, 180.)

It was argued for the petitioner, that it has been decided in many cases that a writ of habeas corpus may issue so as to make its action equivalent to that of a writ of error. (1 Chit. Crim. Law, 180.)

The Circuit Court is a court of general criminal jurisdiction in cases within the local law, and within the law of Maryland. What is the effect of the clause of the Act of Congress establishing this court? It is to give it cognizance of "all offenses;" but this does not mean that extraordinary powers are given to make new offenses, and to punish all acts deemed offenses. Offenses are the violations of known and established local laws. The statute means offenses against the laws of the United States in their sovereignty, and against the local laws of the district.

For the purposes of this inquiry it is immaterial whether the Circuit Court is or is not of limited jurisdiction. However extended its jurisdiction may be, it has defined limits, and these restrain it.

Suppose the court should entertain jurisdiction of cases *certainly not criminal, [198 would not a decision in such a case be a nullity? As if on the face of an indictment an act which is of a civil nature should be made criminal. The court is limited to offenses committed within its jurisdiction. Should it take cognizance of an act done in England, would not this court interfere?

It is admitted that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive, when the case is one properly submitted to the operation of that jurisdiction. But it is not sufficient to say that its jurisdiction is general; it should also appear it had jurisdiction of the offense charged. (Cited, Rose v. Himely, 5 Cranch, 313; Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch, 9.)

It is asked whether this court will look into any criminal case which has passed under the judgment of the Circuit Court. Suppose a sentence imposed not authorized by law; would not this court interfere by its writ of habeas corpus?

It is not contended that every excess of jurisdiction is within the principle claimed. There is a difference between a rule which is reasonable, and that which goes into extravagance. It may not be defined, but it can be felt; and this is a case where this rule can apply. The position that the decision of an inferior court of the United States in a criminal case cannot be inquired into unless there is an appellate jurisdiction in such cases, goes too far; and runs into the argumentum in absurdum.

In all the cases which have come before this court in which a writ of habeas corpus has been applied for, the decision has been in favor of the jurisdiction. There has been enough shown here in this preliminary question to authorize the writ, as the only inquiry is, whether the judgment of the Circuit Court is conclusive upon all the matters before the court.

The counsel for the petitioner proceeded to argue at large upon authorities that the offenses charged in the indictments were not cognizable in the Circuit Court. As this point was not noticed in the opinion of the court, the argument is omitted. (They cited 7 Cranch, 32; 1 199*] Wheat., 415; 1 Gall., *488; 2 East, 814; 2 Maule and Selw., 378; 4 Wheat., 405, 424, 430, 410, 416, 427; 1 Cranch, 164.)

The Attorney-General denied that it was competent for this court to revise the proceedings of the Circuit Court in a criminal case, or to award a habeas corpus to bring into revision such proceedings.

No such case was to be found since the organization of the court; and as writs of error and appeals are expressly limited to cases which are not criminal, the issuing of such a writ, and for such a purpose, would be contrary to law.

He contended that the cases of Bollman and Swartwout was not an authority for the claim of the petitioner. That was a case of bail, and not a case in which the judgment of a court had passed. In Kearney's case the writ of habeas corpus was refused; the petitioner being in confinement for contempt, which was considered equivalent to a sentence of the court.

It is now to be decided in the case before the court, whether they will, through the means of a habeas corpus, revise the sentence of an inferior court in a criminal case, so as to determine whether it had jurisdiction of the offense charged in an indictment found in that court.

The petition asserts, 1. That no offense is charged in the indictment cognizable by the law of Maryland.

2. That no offense is charged which is cognizable by the laws of the United States.

As to the first, if it is competent to this court to examine the point, the whole case of the petition is open, as the Circuit Court is said to have erred in deciding that the offense was cognizable by it. The Circuit Court of the District of Columbia has jurisdiction, such as is possessed by all other Circuit Courts of the United States; and it has also general jurisdiction of offenses committed in the District. In the legitimate exercise of this jurisdiction to decide what is an offense, it is said to have exceeded its jurisdiction. By what authority can this decision of a court of general, final, criminal jurisdiction, be re-examined here? The court below has decided that the facts of the 200*] case amount to a fraud on the *government, committed by false pretenses. It may be they have erred in their judgment; but the error cannot be revised here. They have jurisdiction to decide that the offense was committed in the District, and they have so decided.

The power of the court is: 1. To try the offender; 2. To determine what the offense is; 3. To punish after conviction. These are exclusive and final powers.

There is no power or authority in this court to re-examine a decision of a circuit court as to its jurisdiction in a criminal case. The proposition that the decisions of a court in a case beyond its jurisdiction are void, although true in the abstract, is practically false. Such decisions must stand, unless there is power in another court to reverse them. The truth of this is maintained in civil as well as criminal cases.

It must appear that there is jurisdiction in a superior court to award a writ of error, or a habeas corpus, which may bring up the question; not alone that the judgment of the court was erroneous.

If this court possesses such powers, it must be derived from one of three sources: 1. From the Act of Congress appropriating and regulating the powers of this court. No powers are given by the act to revise the proceedings of the Circuit Court in criminal cases. 2. From the powers of this court as the Supreme Court, to exercise supervision over all inferior courts. In the cases of Bollman and Swartwout, the court have said they have no such powers. 3. Can those powers be derived from the power to issue writs of habeas corpus, and by this to revise the judgments of inferior judicatures exercising criminal jurisdiction?

Congress has carefully guarded against this: it has given appellate powers in civil, admiralty and maritime cases, and has refused them in criminal cases. It cannot be supposed that when thus refused, they can be exerted under a writ of habeas corpus, which this court is authorized to issue. There are many cases for the employment of this writ, without claiming for it the rights asserted to belong to it by the counsel for the petitioner.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL* deliv- [*201
ered the opinion of the court.

This is a petition for a writ of habeas corpus to bring the body of Tobias Watkins before this court, for the purpose of inquiring into the legality of his confinement in gaol. The petition states that he is detained in prison by virtue of a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States for the County of Washington, in the District of Columbia, rendered in a criminal prosecution carried on against him in that court. A copy of the indictment and judgment is annexed to the petition, and the motion is founded on the allegation that the indictment charges no offense for which the prisoner was punishable in that court, or of which that court could take cognizance; and, consequently, that the proceedings are coram non judice, and totally void.

This application is made to a court which has no jurisdiction in criminal cases (3 Cranch, 169), which could not revise this judgment; could not reverse or affirm it, were the record brought up directly by writ of error. The power, however, to award writs of habeas corpus is conferred expressly on this court by the fourteenth section of the Judicial Act, and has been repeatedly exercised. No doubt exists respecting the power; the question is, whether this be a case in which it ought to be exercised. The cause of imprisonment is shown as fully by the petitioner as it could appear on the return of the writ; consequently the writ ought not to be awarded if the court is satisfied that the prisoner would be remanded to prison.

Peters 3.

No law of the United States prescribes the cases in which this great writ shall be issued, nor the power of the court over the party brought up by it. The term is used in the Constitution as one which was well understood; and the Judicial Act authorizes this court, and all the courts of the United States, and the judges thereof, to issue the writ "for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of commitment." This general reference to a power which we are required to exercise, without any precise definition of that power, imposes on us the necessity of making some inquiries into its use, 202*] according to that law which is in a considerable degree incorporated into our own. The writ of habeas corpus is a high prerogative writ, known to the common law, the great object of which is the liberation of those who may be imprisoned without sufficient cause. It is in the nature of a writ of error, to examine the legality of the commitment. English judges, being originally under the influence of the crown, neglected to issue this writ where the government entertained suspicions which could not be sustained by evidence; and the writ when issued was sometimes disregarded or evaded, and great individual oppression was suffered in consequence of delays in bringing prisoners to trial. To remedy this evil the celebrated Habeas Corpus Act of the 31st of Charles II. was enacted, for the purpose of securing the benefits for which the writ was given. This statute may be referred to as describing the cases in which relief is, in England, afforded by this writ to a person detained in custody. It enforces the common law. This statute excepts from those who are entitled to its benefit, persons committed for felony or treason plainly expressed in the warrant, as well as persons convicted or in execution.

The exception of persons convicted applies particularly to the application now under consideration. The petitioner is detained in prison by virtue of the judgment of a court, which court possesses general and final jurisdiction in criminal cases. Can this judgment be re-examined upon a writ of habeas corpus?

This writ is, as has been said, in the nature of a writ of error which brings up the body of the prisoner with the cause of commitment. The court can undoubtedly inquire into the sufficiency of that cause; but if it be the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, especially a judgment withdrawn by law from the revision of this court, is not that judgment in itself sufficient cause? Can the court, upon this writ, look beyond the judgment, and re-examine the charges on which it was rendered? A judgment, in its nature, concludes the subject on which it is rendered, and pronounces the law of the case. The judgment of a court of record whose jurisdiction is final, 203*] is as conclusive on all the world as the judgment of this court would be. It is as conclusive on this court as it is on other courts. It puts an end to inquiry concerning the fact by deciding it.

Peters 3.

The counsel for the prisoner admit the application of these principles to a case in which the indictment alleges a crime cognizable in the court by which the judgment was pronounced; but they deny their application to a case in which the indictment charges an offense not punishable criminally according to the law of the land. But with what propriety can this court look into the indictment? We have no power to examine the proceedings on a writ of error, and it would be strange if, under color of a writ to liberate an individual from unlawful imprisonment, we could substantially reverse a judgment which the law has placed beyond our control. An imprisonment under a judgment cannot be unlawful, unless that judgment be an absolute nullity; and it is not a nullity if the court has general jurisdiction of the subject, although it should be erroneous. The Circuit Court for the District of Columbia is a court of record, having general jurisdiction over criminal cases. An offense cognizable in any court is cognizable in that court. If the offense be punishable by law, that court is competent to inflict the punishment. The judgment of such a tribunal has all the obligation which the judgment of any tribunal can have. To determine whether the offense charged in the indictment be legally punishable or not, is among the most unquestionable of its powers and duties. The decision of this question is the exercise of jurisdiction, whether the judgment be for or against the prisoner. The judgment is equally binding in the one case and in the other; and must remain in full force unless reversed regularly by a superior court capable of reversing it.

If this judgment be obligatory, no court can look behind it. If it be a nullity, the officer who obeys it is guilty of false imprisonment. Would the counsel for the prisoner attempt to maintain this position?

Questions which we think analogous to this have been frequently decided in this court. Kemp's Lessee v. Kennedy et al., 5 (Cranch, 173), was a writ of error to a judgment in ejectment, rendered against her in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey. An inquisition taken under the Confiscating Acts of New Jersey had been found against her, on which a judgment of condemnation had been rendered by the Inferior Court of Common Pleas for the County of Hunterdon. The land had been sold under this judgment of condemnation, and this ejectment was brought against the purchaser. The title of the plaintiff being resisted under those proceedings, his counsel prayed the court to instruct the jury that they ought to find a verdict for him. The court refused the prayer, and did instruct the jury to find for the defendants. An exception was taken to this direction, and the cause brought before this court by writ of error. On the argument the counsel for the plaintiff made two points: 1. That the proceedings were erroneous. 2. That the judgment was an absolute nullity. He contended that the individual against whom the inquest was found was not comprehended within the Confiscating Acts of New Jersey. Consequently, the justice who took the inquisition had no jurisdiction as regarded her. He contended also that the inquisition was entirely insufficient to show that Grace Kemp, whose land had been condemned, was an offender under those Acts. He then insisted that the tribunal erected to execute these laws was an inferior tribunal, proceeding by force of particular statutes out of the course of the common law; it was a jurisdiction limited by the statute, both as to the nature of the offense and the description of persons over whom it should have cognizance. Everything ought to have been stated in the proceedings which was necessary to give the court jurisdiction, and to justify the judgment of forfeiture. If the jurisdiction does not appear upon the face of the proceedings, the presumption of law is, that the court had not jurisdiction, and the cause was coram non judice; in which case no valid judgment could be rendered.

The court said that, however clear it might be in favor of the plaintiff on the first point, it would avail him nothing unless he succeeded on the second.

The court admitted the law respecting the 205 proceedings of inferior courts in the sense in which that term was used in the English books, and asked, "was the court in which this judgment was rendered an inferior court in that sense of the term?"

"All courts from which an appeal lies are inferior courts in relation to the appellate courts, before which their judgment may be carried; but they are not, therefore, inferior courts in the technical sense of those words. They apply to courts of special and limited jurisdiction, which are erected on such principles that their judgments taken alone are entirely disregarded, and the proceedings must show their jurisdiction. The courts of the United States are all of limited jurisdiction, and their proceedings are erroneous if the jurisdiction be not shown upon them. Judgments rendered in such cases may certainly be reversed; but this court is not prepared to say that they are absolute nullities, which may be totally disregarded."

The court then proceeded to review the powers of the courts of common pleas in New Jersey. They were courts of record, possessing general jurisdiction in civil cases, with the exception of suits for real property. In treason, their jurisdiction was over all who could commit the offense.

After reviewing the several Acts of Confiscation, the court said that they could not be fairly construed to convert the courts of common pleas into courts of limited jurisdiction. They remained the only courts capable of trying the offenses described by the laws.

In the particular case of Grace Kemp, the court said that "the Court of Common Pleas was constituted according to law; and if an offense had been in fact committed, the accused was amenable to its jurisdiction, so far as respected her property in the State of New Jersey. The question whether this offense was or was not committed; that is, whether the inquest, which is substituted for a verdict on an indictment, did or did not show that the offense had been committed, was a question which the court was competent to decide. The judgment it gave was erroneous; but it is a judgment, and, until reversed, cannot be disregarded."

*This case has been cited at some [*206] length, because it is thought to be decisive of that now under consideration.

Had any offense against the laws of the United States been in fact committed, the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia could take cognizance of it. The question whether any offense was or was not committed; that is, whether the indictment did or did not show that an offense had been committed, was a question which that court was competent to decide. If its judgment was erroneous, a point which this court does not determine, still it is a judgment, and, until reversed, cannot be disregarded.

In Skillem's Executors v. May's Executors (6 Cranch, 267), a decree pronounced by the Circuit Court for the District of Kentucky, had been reversed, and the cause was remanded to that court that an equal partition of the land in controversy might be made between the parties. When the cause again came on before the court below, it was discovered that it was not within the jurisdiction of the court; whereupon the judges were divided in opinion whether they ought to execute the mandate, and their division was certified to this court. This court certified that the Circuit Court is bound to execute its mandate, "although the jurisdiction of the court be not alleged in the pleadings." The decree having been pronounced, although in a case in which it was erroneous for want of the averment of jurisdiction, was nevertheless obligatory as a decree.

The case of Williams et al. v. Armroyd et al. (7 Cranch, 423) was an appeal from a sentence of the Circuit Court for the District of Pennsylvania, dismissing a libel which had been filed for certain goods which had been captured and condemned under the Milan Decree. They were sold by order of the governor of the island into which the prize had been carried, and the present possessor claimed under the purchaser. It was contended that the Milan Decree was in violation of the law of nations, and that a condemnation professedly under that decree could not change the right of property. This court affirmed the sentence of the Circuit Court, restoring the property to the claimant, and said "that *the sentence, if avowedly made [*207] under a decree subversive of the law of nations, will not help the appellant's case in a court which cannot revise, correct, or even examine that sentence. If an erroneous judgment binds the property on which it acts, it will not bind that property the less because its error is apparent. Of that error, advantage can be taken only in a court which is capable of correcting it."

The court felt the less difficulty in declaring the edict under which the condemnation had been made to be "a direct and flagrant violation of national law," because the declaration had already been made by the Legislature of the Union. But the sentence of a court under it was submitted to, as being of complete obligation.

The cases are numerous which decide the judgments of a court of record having general jurisdiction of the subject, although erroneous, are binding until reversed. It is universally understood that the judgments of the courts of the United States, although their jurisdiction be not shown in the pleadings, are yet binding on all the world; and that this apparent want of jurisdiction can avail the party only on a writ of error. This acknowledged principle seems to us to settle the question now before the court. The judgment of the Circuit Court in a criminal case is of itself evidence of its own legality, and requires for its support no inspection of the indictments on which it is founded. The law trusts that court with the whole subject, and has not confided to this court the power of revising its decisions. We cannot usurp that power by the instrumentality of the writ of habeas corpus. The judgment informs us that the commitment is legal, and with that information it is our duty to be satisfied.

Peters 3.

The counsel for the petitioner contend that writs of habeas corpus have been awarded and prisoners liberated in cases similar to this.

In The United States v. Hamilton (3 Dall., 17), the prisoner was committed upon the warrant of the district judge of Pennsylvania, charging him with high treason. He was, after much deliberation, admitted to bail. This was a proceeding contemplated by the thirty-third section of the Judicial Act, which declares that in cases 208 where the punishment *may be death, bail shall not be admitted but by the Supreme or a circuit court, or by a justice of the Supreme Court, or a judge of the District Court.

In the case Ex-parte Burford (3 Cranch, 447), the prisoner was committed originally by the warrant of several justices of the peace for the County of Alexandria. He was brought by a writ of habeas corpus before the Circuit Court, by which court he was remanded to gaol, there to remain until he should enter into recognizance for his good behavior for one year. He was again brought before the Supreme Court on a writ of habeas corpus. The judges were unanimously of opinion that the warrant of commitment was illegal, for want of stating some good cause certain supported by oath. The court added that, "if the Circuit Court had proceeded, de novo, perhaps it might have made a difference; but this court is of opinion that that court has gone only on the proceedings before the justices. It has gone so far as to correct two of the errors committed, but the rest remain." The prisoner was discharged.

In the cases of Bollman and Swartout, the prisoners were committed by order of the Circuit Court, on the charge of treason. The habeas corpus was awarded in this case on the same principle on which it was awarded in the case of 3 Dall., 17. The prisoners were discharged, because the charge of treason did not appear to have been committed. In no one of these cases was the prisoner confined under the judgment of a court.

The case Ex-parte Kearney (7 Wheat., 39) was a commitment by order of the Circuit Court for the District of Columbia, for a contempt. The prisoner was remanded to prison. The court, after noticing its want of power to revise the judgment of the Circuit Court in any case where a party had been convicted of a public offense, asked, "if, then, this court cannot directly revise a judgment of the Circuit Court in a criminal case, what reason is there to suppose that it was intended to vest it with the authority to do it indirectly?" The case Ex-parte Kearney bears a near resemblance to that under consideration.

The counsel for the prisoner rely, mainly, on the case of Wise v. Withers* (3 Cranch, 330). [209 This was an action of trespass vi et armis, for entering the plaintiff's house and taking away his goods. The defendant justified as collector of the militia fines. The plaintiff replied that he was not subject to militia duty, and on demurrer this replication was held ill. This court reversed the judgment of the Circuit Court, because a court-martial had no jurisdiction over a person not belonging to the militia, and its sentence in such a case being coram non judice, furnishes no protection to the officer who executes it.

This decision proves only that a court-martial was considered as one of those inferior courts of limited jurisdiction, whose judgments may be questioned collaterally. They are not placed on the same high ground with the judgments of a court of record. The declaration that this judgment against a person to whom the jurisdiction of the court could not extend is a nullity, is no authority for inquiring into the judgments of a court of general criminal jurisdiction, and regarding them as nullities, if, in our opinion, the court has misconstrued the law, and has pronounced an offense to be punishable criminally, which, as we may think, is not so.

Without looking into the indictments under which the prosecution against the petitioner was conducted, we are unanimously of opinion that the judgment of a court of general criminal jurisdiction justifies his imprisonment, and that the writ of habeas corpus ought not to be awarded.

On consideration of the rule granted in this case, on a prior day of this term, to wit, on Tuesday, the 26th of January, of the present term of this court, and of the arguments thereupon had, it is considered, ordered and adjudged by this court, that the said rule be, and the same is hereby discharged, and that the prayer of the petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus be, and the same is hereby refused.

See S. C., 7 Pet., 568.

Cited—12 Pet., 722; 14 Pet., 600, 628; 2 How., 338-342; 5 How., 190; 9 How., 572; 18 How., 329; 2 Wall., 342; 4 Wall., 110; 7 Wall., 382; 18 Wall., 166, 185, 187, 205; 3 Otto, 23; 10 Otto, 23, 283, 375; 1 Wood. & M., 408; 1 Sawy., 319, 340; 2 Sawy., 401, 499; Hemp., 308; McAl., 73; 3 Blatchf., 5; 5 Blatchf., 310; 8 Blatchf., 91, 93; 2 Brock., 476; 2 Abb. U. S., 386; 12 Bank. Reg., 101; 2 Wall., Jr., 528; 4 Cranch, C. C., 287; 3 Cliff., 27.

*JAMES BOYCE'S EXECUTORS, [210
Appellants,
v.
FELIX GRUNDY, Appellee.

Equity jurisdiction of federal courts after proceedings at law—16th section of the Judiciary Act—fraud.

The courts of the United States have equity jurisdiction to rescind a contract on the ground of fraud, after one of the parties to it has been proceeded against on the law side of the court, and a judgment has been obtained against him for a part of the money stipulated to be paid by the contract.

This court has been often called upon to consider the sixteenth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, and as often, either expressly or by the course of its decisions, has held that it is merely declaratory, making no alteration whatever in the rules of equity on the subject of legal remedy.

It is not enough that there is a remedy at law: it must be plain and adequate, or in other words, as practical and as efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration, as the remedy in equity. [215]

It cannot be doubted that reducing an agreement to writing is in most cases an argument against fraud, but it is very far from a conclusive argument. The doctrine will not be contended for that a written agreement cannot be relieved against on the ground of false suggestions. [219]

It is not an answer to an application to a court of chancery for relief in rescinding a contract to say that the fraud alleged is partial, and might be the subject of compensation by a jury. The law which abhors fraud, does not permit it to purchase indulgence, dispensation, or absolution. [220]

APPEAL from the decree of the Circuit Court of West Tennessee.

A bill in chancery was filed in that court by the appellee, Felix Grundy, against the appellants, the executors of James Boyce, to enjoin a judgment at law which they had obtained against him for four thousand seven hundred dollars, and to rescind a contract made between James Boyce and himself on the 3d of July, 1818, by which Boyce sold and agreed to convey to the complainant, Grundy, nine hundred and fifty acres or arpents of land on the Homochito River, in the State of Mississippi, and for which Grundy agreed to pay him twenty thousand dollars; two thousand of which were to be paid in hand, and the balance in yearly installments of two thousand dollars. A deed of general warranty was, by the written agreement of the partners, to be made to the purchaser in four years.

Grundy having failed to pay the amount of 211 the installments due January, 1820 and 1821, Boyce's executors commenced suit upon the contract for the two first installments in the Circuit Court for the District of West Tennessee, and recovered judgment for the same with interest. On the 30th of August, 1823, Grundy filed his bill, praying an injunction against the judgment at law, and a rescision of the contract.

The grounds of equity stated in the bill and relied on, were the fraudulent and false representations of Boyce, in making the sale of the land.

1. In regard to an island in the river, part of the land purchased, containing two hundred and sixty-five acres, not being subject to inundation, except a very small part, easily prevented; and of the quantity of the land on said island.

2. In showing and selling a body of good and level land, as part of the tract, which is not included within its limits. And representing that a quantity of bad and hilly ground was not within the tract, which is included.

3. In representing that he had a good title to the land; having no title, and not being able to make a good right.

The answer of the defendants in the Circuit Court denies the allegations charging fraud and misrepresentation by James Boyce, and avers Grundy's information as to the true state of the title, the quantity and quality of the lands; and alleges that they have been prevented from obtaining the legal title by the failure of Grundy to pay the installments due upon the contract, and which were necessary to enable them to obtain a conveyance.

Depositions were taken on the part of the complainant and the defendants, which with other testimony were exhibited in the Circuit Court on the hearing of the cause. The testimony exhibited on the part of the complainant in that court, fully established the allegations in the bill, to the satisfaction of the court. The whole evidence is referred to, and the facts of the case are sufficiently stated in the opinion of this court.

The Circuit Court perpetuated the injunction, and rescinded the contract between Boyce and Grundy; and decreed that the [212] money paid by the complainant to Boyce should be refunded with interest. The defendants appealed to this court.

Messrs. Ogden and Wickliffe, for the appellants, contended:

1. That the charge of fraud and misrepresentation, as set forth in the bill, in reference to the title, quantity, boundary, and overflowing of the land, is not sustained by proof.

2. That the court below erred, in decreeing a rescision of the contract, upon the grounds assumed in the decree. That the court erred in refusing to continue the cause for the reasons stated in the exceptions filed by the defendants. The court erred in admitting as evidence in this cause, the papers and parts of depositions referred to in the several bills of exception.

3. The testimony in this cause, the matters of fact involved, were of a character which imperatively called upon the chancellor to direct an issue at law, to try the controverted facts.

4. The court should have referred the cause to a commissioner, with directions to report upon the title.

5. The decree should have been interlocutory, and not final. Time should have been given defendants to make the title and tender it, upon the payment or tender of purchase money.

The counsel for the appellants, after full argument on the facts, as to the law of the case, said that the bill filed in the Circuit Court was to rescind a contract on the ground of fraud. In all cases of fraud, courts of equity in England and chancery courts in the United States, have concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law. (Mad. Chan., 258; 6 Johns. Rep., 110.) It is a well-settled principle of law that fraudulent representations will vitiate any contract. (1 Comyn on Contracts, 38.) In case a contract is obtained by such representations, it will be vitiated and destroyed in its binding force. If money has been paid under such misrepresentations, it may be recovered back. If a suit be brought at law upon the contract, the fraudulent representations may be set up as an effectual defense at [213] law. If the vendee takes possession of the property, he may abandon it and consider the contract as not binding on him.

Thus, there is at law an adequate and a competent remedy, and full relief can be obtained at law from the effects of such a contract.

Has, then, a court of the United States jurisdiction in the case. By the Judiciary Act, the equity powers given to the courts of the United States are not to be exercised when there is a full and adequate relief at law.

2. Fraud cannot be alleged in most cases where the agreement has been reduced to writing. It is an argument of great force against fraud (Sugden on Vendors, 129), upon the principle that all the allegations and representations of the parties will be presumed to have been embodied in the writing. (4 Tannt., 785.)

3. They also contended that after a judgment has been obtained in a suit in which the alleged fraud might have been set up as a defense, no injunction will lie. (3 Merivale's Rep., 225, 226; Clit. on Contracts, 113; cited, also, Sugden on Vendors, 129.) To show that the case was not one for a court of equity, were cited Hepburn v. Dundas (1 Wheat., 179; 5 Cranch, 502); Morgan v. Morgan (3 Wheat., 290); Dunlop v. Dunlop (12 Wheat., 576; 10 Ves., 144; 3 Bro. Ch. Cases, 73; 16 Ves., 83; 9 Ves., 21; 1 Bro. Ch. Cases, 546; 1 Ves. & Beames, 355, 356) 1 Barn. & Cress., 623; 5 Dowling & Riland, 490).

Mr. Isaacks and Mr. White, for the appellee, contended that the evidence on the record fully established the allegations of fraud in the bill and that the decree of the Circuit Court was in harmony with the weight of that evidence. A fraud had been committed both as to the quality the quantity, the situation, and the title of the land.

They argued that the case was one which came fully within the jurisdiction of a court of chancery. The construction of the Act of Congress, which would limit the chancery powers of the courts of the United States to cases only in which there is no concurrent legal remedy, [214*] is contrary to that *which it has constantly received since the organization of the court under that law.

The case made out in the complainant's bill is one peculiarly within the jurisdiction of a court of equity; and the relief which such a court can afford is the only adequate means to protect the complainant from gross injustice and fraud; to restore him to the situation in which he was before the contract was made. Without this remedy he would be exposed to a multitude of suits, and subjected to heavy expenses, for which he could not be re-imbursed. Fraud and trusts are peculiarly within the command of the chancery courts. In support of these principles, the counsel for the appellee cited 1 Mad. Chan., 262; 3 Cranch, 280; Ves., 9, 21; 1 Jacob & Walker, 19; 5 Johns. Ch. Rep., 174; 2 Cowen, 129; 2 Johns. Ch. Rep., 596; 6 Mumford, 283; 4 Price's Rep., 131.

Mr. Justice Johnson delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the decree of the Circuit Court of West Tennessee, rendered in a case in which the appellee was complainant.

The bill was filed to obtain the rescission of an agreement entered into on the 3d of July, 1818, between James Boyce, the appellants' testator and devisor, and the complainant, for the sale of a tract of land lying on the Homochito River, in the State of Mississippi.

The grounds set forth in the bill are fraudulent misrepresentations.

Peters 3.

U. S., Book 7.

1. As to the testator's title of the land; 2. As to the locality of the land; 3. As to the liability of the land to inundation; 4. As to the general description of the character and quality of part of the land not examined by complainant.

We have weighed the allegations of fraud contained in the bill, and are well satisfied that they are material, and such as entitle the complainant to relief if substantiated.

We have also considered the evidence introduced by the complainant, and compared it with the rebutting testimony introduced by *the appellants, and are of opinion that [*215 the testimony in support of complainant's allegations is full to the purpose of sustaining his bill, and the credibility of his witnesses fully established, wherever it has been necessary; so that in those points in which it has been contradicted by the appellants' witnesses, we cannot avoid giving credit to that of the complainant.

The decree below must therefore be sustained, unless the appellants can prevail upon some legal ground which will except this case from the general rules on this subject. The first and principal ground taken is, that the court of law was competent to give relief, and that this court should refuse relief, as well on the general principle as affirmed in the Judiciary Act, as because:

1. That the complainant was not prompt in insisting upon the fraud as soon as discovered; and,

2. Because he did not avail himself of it in a plea to the action at law.

This court has been often called upon to consider the sixteenth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, and as often, either expressly or by the course of its decisions, has held that it is merely declaratory, making no alteration whatever in the rules of equity on the subject of legal remedy. It is not enough that there is a remedy at law; it must be plain and adequate, or, in other words, as practical and as efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration, as the remedy in equity.

In the case before us, although the defense of fraud might have been resorted to, and ought to have been sustained in that particular suit, and, I will add, would have greatly aided the complainant in a bill to rescind, yet it was obviously not an adequate remedy, because it was a partial one. The complainant would still have been left to renew the contest upon a series of suits; and that, probably, after the death of witnesses.

That he was bound to be prompt in communicating the fraud when discovered, and consistent in his notice to the opposite party of the use he proposed to make of the discovery, cannot be questioned. But we cannot concede to the appellants' *counsel, that the [*216 complainant was chargeable with delay or inconsistency in the particulars.

In his bill he alleges that the fraud did not come to his knowledge until 1821, and that he forthwith gave notice to James Boyce that he might resume possession of the premises and receive the rents and profits, for that he would not comply with the contract; which notice he repeated to the appellants after Boyce's death.

It has been argued that the testimony establishes an earlier notice, and even a contemporaneous notice of the facts which the complainant alleges were concealed or misrepresented.

The misrepresentations relied upon are of two classes: those which relate to the land, and those which relate to the title.

As to the title, the case furnishes no ground for imputing to the complainant contemporaneous notice of the involved state it was in. The evidence of the fact of representation on this subject, rests chiefly on the deed and the letters from Port Gibson. From these it clearly appears, that so far as relates to the two hundred acres purchased from Ellis, the complainant could not, even at the time of sale, have been put on inquiries respecting the title. For the deed expressly imports that the whole land sold was comprised within the grant to Davis. With regard to the land actually comprised within the grant to Davis, if the agreement to make a present sale of land, for which there was to be made present and successive payments to a large amount within four years, does not imply a present title or a present power to sell, it certainly amounts to a representation that at the end of four years the seller would be able to make a clear title.

But since, upon the discovery made at Port Gibson, the notice given by the complainant was not of an intention to rescind, but of a claim for a deduction pro rata, and since time is expressly given to the extent of four years to make title to the whole tract; we will not affirm that, in the absence of any proof of positive loss from want of title in the interval, if the party had been able to make title when the bill was filed, and had so answered, and 217] duly set out the title to be tendered, that it would have been a case for relief.* But the defendants in their answer go into an exposition of the only title they can offer, and that is so involved and imperfect that a court of equity would not even refer it. If, then, the appellants were now before this court, under a bill for a specific performance, it is clear that they must be turned out of court, being incompetent on their part to fulfil the contract. The rules of law relating to specific performance and those applied to the rescission of contracts, although not identically the same, have a near affinity to each other.

Again, if the object of the complainant's bill had been confined to obtaining an injunction until he could receive from defendant a good title to the land, can it be doubted that where the cause of action at law is a covenant in the same deed which stipulates for such a title, that he would be enjoined until he made a title? And if so, how long is this state of suspense to be tolerated? The title was to be made in four years; this certainly amounts to a representation that he would be able to make title at that time; but twelve years have now elapsed, and still it is not pretended that a clear legal estate has been acquired.

In excuse for this, it is urged that the complainant committed the first fault; that had he been punctual in his payments, Boyce would have been able to procure to be executed to himself a title that would have enabled him to comply with his agreement. But the state of his title is before us, and a mere tender of money was not sufficient to give him a legal estate. He must still have passed through the delays and casualties incident to a suit in equity, before he could have acquired such an estate as would have satisfied the just claims of the complainant. The case, however, furnishes a more conclusive answer to this argument. The two hundred acres not included in Davis's grant, valued at the average which complainant would have paid for all the good land actually contained within his purchase, would have satisfied every payment that fell due within the four years. This deduction, he informed Boyce, he would insist upon, and there is no evidence in the cause to make it clear that Boyce did not acquiesce in this agreement.

It is argued, that of the defects in* [*218] Boyce's title the court could not be informed; that the complainant did not ask for a specific performance, and the defendants were not therefore called upon to set out their title. But by referring to the bill it will be seen that they are expressly called upon to set out their title, and in their answer undertake to do so, and in the effort, exhibit a title which he cannot deny is defective, but instead of setting out a title free from defects, content themselves with showing that the defects are not incurable.

With regard to the misrepresentations relating to the land, the only evidence by which it is attempted to fasten on the complainant a want of promptness and consistency in availing himself of the discovery when made, is that by which a knowledge at the time of the contract is supposed to be established. Of the witnesses from whom this evidence has been obtained, it is enough to say that, with the exception of Mr. Poindexter, it is impossible to avoid putting their testimony out of the case. And Mr. Poindexter's testimony, even without his subsequent examination, may, without any forced construction, be reconciled with that of the witnesses who testify to the representations made by Boyce at the time of the sale. It relates exclusively to the subject of inundation; and when the complainant spoke to this witness of the island's overflowing, he accompanied it with the assertion that the overflowing could be prevented by a terrée at a small expense. This may well be confined to the representations received from Boyce, and does not necessarily imply a knowledge of its being subject to general inundation. Nor was the information received from Mr. Poindexter on this subject of such a full and decided character as to amount to a communication of knowledge. It is said that it ought to have put him on inquiry; but he was in possession of Mr. Boyce's positive assurances to the contrary, and had a right to rely upon that assurance without inquiry. The bill alleges the time of coming to his knowledge to have been that of the communication authorizing the party to take possession, and the evidence is not sufficient to prove notice at any previous time.

The second ground on this head of the appellants' argument has been partly an-* [*219] swered by the doctrine laid down upon the construction of the Judiciary Act, on the subject of the remedy at law. And so far as it relies on the adjudication quoted from Merivale, we think it unsustained. The position is, that an injunction to restrain proceeding on a judg- ment at law, will be refused by the Court of Equity to a party who had a defense at law and neglected to plead it. The doctrine of the case quoted, we conceive, has no bearing upon the present. The question there was upon a point of practice, whether a special injunction should issue instead of the common injunction; there was no question about the right to the latter, but the circumstances of the case were such that the common injunction did not afford full relief to the party. The rule of practice as laid down by the court is, that the special injunction goes only in those cases in which, from their nature, the defendant can make no defense; such as judgments on warrants of attorney. This was not such a case, but the party went for an exception in his favor, grounded upon a state of facts which brought him within the reason of the rule. And it was, in fact, granted.

It has been farther argued for the appellants, that reducing the agreement to writing precludes a recurrence to all representations; and to establish this doctrine, a passage from Sugden has been quoted. It cannot be doubted that, in the language of the author, reducing an agreement to writing is, in most cases, an argument against fraud. But it is very far from a conclusive argument, as is previously shown by the same author on the same page. The doctrine will not be contended for that a written agreement cannot be relieved against on the ground of false suggestions; and yet if the doctrine of this quotation were the rule, instead of an incident to it, such would be the consequence.

There is no attempt made here to vary the written agreement; the relief is sought upon the ground that, by false suggestions and immoral concealment, the party seeking relief was entrapped into an agreement in which he would not otherwise have involved himself. This is not denying that the agreement in the record was the agreement entered into, but in-220 *] sisting *that it was vitiated by fraud, which vitiates everything.

It has been farther argued, that the misrepresentation, if at all established, was but of a personal character, and susceptible of compensation or indemnity, to be assessed by a jury.

On this there may be made several remarks; and first, that if the facts made out such a case, yet the law, which abhors fraud, does not incline to permit it to purchase indulgence, dispensation, or absolution.

Second, that although, locally, a misrepresentation may be partial, yet it may be vital in its effects upon the views and interests of the party affected by it. Such was the case of Fulton v. Roosevelt.

But, lastly, the evidence makes out a case very far removed from one of merely a partial character. North, south, east, and west, we find the misrepresentations influencing the estimate of the value of these premises. Indeed, if we are to believe the testimony of Randel M'Garvick (and its clearness, fullness and fairness speaks its own eulogium), a case of more general or more vital misrepresentation can seldom occur, or a case of more absolute devotion to misplaced confidence. Not only for the qualities and incidents, but also for the lines, the representations of the seller were implicitly relied on, and certainly to the most important results as to the value of the property. M'Garvick proves that they were carried to a certain fence, which fence excluded a large knob, as it is called in that country, containing a considerable body of untillable and worthless land, and expressly told by Boyce that the fence was his line, thus explicitly declaring that that body of bad land was not included in the land sold him, whereas, in fact, it was included; and in another direction where the land was fine (as if to make up the deficit in quantity to an experienced eye), he represents the land in view as being included within his survey, when, in fact, it was not all included. And suppose the utmost effect be given to the testimony of the appellants relative to the actual extent to which the island was subject to inundation, still it leaves wide ground for the charge of misrepresentation.

*The testimony is full to establish [221 that, in several years, the whole has been overflowed. And the most favorable state of facts will leave from one hundred to one hundred and fifty acres, instead of fifteen or twenty, subject to this casualty in ordinary years. This, although partial in one sense, is total as to the diminution of the value of the whole. Compared with the representation proved, it certainly annihilates the very material consideration that it admitted of being prevented at a small expense, more especially as the chief injury was to be expected from the waters of the Mississippi.

In a purchase of nine hundred and fifty acres at twenty dollars an acre, such a discrepancy between facts and representations as would add thirty-three and a third, or perhaps fifty per cent. per acre to the cost, is not a case for mere compensation. And, if not a case for mere compensation, there was no controlling necessity to send the cause to a jury.

The decree must be affirmed with costs.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of West Tennessee, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and decreed by this court that the decree of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed with costs.

See S. C., 9 Pet., 275.

Cited—14 Pet., 628; 20 How., 256; 21 How., 591; 2 Black., 551; 5 Wall., 78; 7 Wall., 430, 618; 13 Wall., 621; 15 Wall., 228; 4 Otto, 811; Bald., 403, 408, 409, 416, 420; 1 Wood, & M., 148; 2 Wood, & M., 29, 31, 32, 221; 1 Bond, 427; 5 Blatchf., 487; McAL., 288; 2 Curt., 603; 2 Brock., 525; 4 McLean, 394; Pat. O. Gaz., 1882, p. 1446.

THE PATAPSCO INSURANCE [222
COMPANY, Plaintiffs in Error,

v.

JOHN COULTER, Defendant in Error.

Insurance on profits—diligence of captain and crew in extinguishing fire—instructions of court to jury—barratry—loss of profits.

Insurance on profits on board the ship Mary "at and from Philadelphia to Gibraltar and a port in the Mediterranean, not higher up than Marseilles, and from thence to Sonsonate in Guatemala, Pacific Ocean, with liberty of Guayaquil, the insurance to begin from the loading of the goods at Philadelphia, and to continue until the goods were safely landed at the said ports. The insurance, five thousand dollars, declared to be on profits, warranted to be American property, to be proved at Philadelphia only, valued at twenty thousand dollars." The vessel proceeded with a cargo of flour to Gibraltar, where the same was to be sold, and the proceeds invested at Marseilles in dry goods, to be sent from thence to Sonsonate or Guayaquil. While the vessel lay at Gibraltar, before the discharge of her cargo, she and her cargo were totally lost by fire. The evidence on the trial went to show that, with proper diligence on the part of the captain and crew, the fire might have been extinguished and the vessel and cargo saved. Soon after the fire commenced, the captain called upon the crew to leave the ship, under an apprehension from a small quantity of gunpowder on board; and after they left her she was boarded by other persons, who endeavored, without success, to extinguish the flames, having, as was alleged, arrived too late. Evidence was given, intended to show that the fire originated from the carelessness of the captain. The Circuit Court refused to instruct the jury that if the fire proceeded from the carelessness or negligence of the captain, the insured could not recover. That court also refused to instruct the jury that if the fire originated from accident, or without any want of due care on the part of the master and crew, and if the jury should find that by reasonable and proper exertions the vessel and cargo might have been preserved by them, which they omitted, the assured could not recover. That court also refused to instruct the jury that the assured, having offered no evidence that the sales of the flour at Gibraltar would have yielded a profit, they were not entitled to recover. Held, that there was no error in these instructions.

What is barratry? Its definition. [230]

The British courts have adopted the safe and legal rule, in deciding that where the policy covers the risk of barratry, and fire is the proximate cause of the loss, they will not sustain the defense that negligence was the remote cause, and hold the assurers liable for the loss. [236]

The rule that a loss, the proximate cause of which is a peril insured against, is a loss within the policy, although the remote cause may be negligence of the master or mariners, has been affirmed in several successive cases in the English courts. [237]

It seems difficult to perceive, if profit be a mere exercise of the principal, as some judges have said, or identified with it, as has been said by others, why the loss of the cargo should not carry with it the loss of the profits. Proof that profits would have arisen on the voyage, in order to recover on a policy on profits, is not required if the cargo has been lost. [241]

223*] *ERROR to the Circuit Court of the District of Maryland.

This action was instituted in the Circuit Court on a policy of insurance, executed by the plaintiffs in error, on profits upon goods on board the ship Nancy, "at and from Philadelphia to Gibraltar and a port in the Mediterranean, not higher up than Marseilles, and at and from thence to Sonsonate, in the province of Guatemala, Pacific Ocean, with the liberty of Guayaquil: beginning the adventure upon the said goods, from the loading thereof on board the said vessel at Philadelphia, and continuing the same until the said goods shall be safely landed at the ports aforesaid."

The insurance was in the amount of five thousand dollars, with this clause: "This insurance is declared to be on profits, warranted to be American property, to be proved at Philadelphia only, valued at twenty thousand dollars."

The vessel, with a cargo of flour, proceeded from Philadelphia to Gibraltar, at which place the cargo was destined to be sold, and the proceeds to be invested at Marseilles in the purchase of various specified dry goods. These dry goods were to be sent by the vessel from Marseilles to Sonsonate or Guayaquil. While the vessel lay at Gibraltar, before the discharge of her cargo, she and her cargo were totally lost by fire. Evidence was taken at Philadelphia as to the circumstances of the destruction of the property, and one witness (Mr. Fulford) was examined in addition as to those circumstances at the trial. The testimony of this witness went to show that, with proper diligence on the part of the captain and crew, the fire might have been extinguished and the vessel and cargo saved; and the evidence obtained at Philadelphia was not inconsistent with that conclusion. It appeared from Mr. Fulford's testimony, that soon after the fire commenced, the captain called upon the crew to leave the ship, exclaiming that there was gunpowder aboard, and that the vessel would be blown up; and the captain and crew did then leave the vessel. It was in evidence that there was a small quantity of gunpowder on board, but that that ought not to have deterred exertions to save the property; an officer and a number of men from two British frigates having, *in fact, a considerable time after [*224 the vessel was deserted by her captain and crew, boarded her and used all efforts to put out the flames, but unsuccessfully, in consequence of their reaching the scene so late. There was evidence to infer that the fire originated from the carelessness of the captain with a candle used by him for sealing letters, or from negligence of the crew.

Evidence was had at Philadelphia, of Mr. Clark, concerning the markets at Sonsonate and Guayaquil, for the specified articles at Marseilles. His testimony tended to show that these articles would have been sold with profit at Guayaquil, at the time the vessel might have reached there. It was proved that at Gibraltar the flour would have sold without loss, but without profit.

The defendants prayed the court to direct the jury,

1. That if they should believe from the evidence that the fire which occasioned the destruction of the ship and her cargo, proceeded from the carelessness or negligence of the captain of the ship or any of her crew, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

2. That if they should believe that the fire which occasioned the ship's destruction originated from accident, and without any want of due care and attention on the part of the captain or crew, and if they should further find that the captain and crew, after the discovery of the fire, might, by reasonable and proper exertions, have prevented the spreading of the same, and have preserved the said vessel and cargo from destruction, and that they omitted to use said exertions, then the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

3. That the plaintiffs had offered no evidence that the sales of the flour at Gibraltar would have yielded the plaintiff a profit, and that therefore they were not entitled to recover.

These prayers the court refused; but as to the second of them directed the jury as follows: "That the plaintiff is entitled to recover, unless they should be of opinion, from the evidence in the cause, that after the vessel was discovered to be on fire, the master and crew 225] might have extinguished *the same, and preserved the vessel and cargo. The master was bound to extinguish the fire, if practicable. If he stood aloof, without making any exertion to extinguish the fire and suffered the vessel to be destroyed, it would have afforded evidence of such gross negligence as to amount to barratry."

To the refusal of the prayers, and opinion and direction of the court, the defendants, now plaintiffs in error, excepted.

Mr. Mayer, for the plaintiffs in error, contended,

1. That they are not answerable, under the policy, for any loss by fire, if occasioned by the negligence of the captain and crew of the Nancy; that the risk of fire bears on the insurers as other risks in the policy; that the assured being bound to the exercise of reasonable skill and care in his agents to guard the property insured against the perils stated in the policy, under the implied warranty of seaworthiness, the underwriters ought not to suffer loss from a fire which the captain or crew might with ordinary care have prevented taking place.

2. That if it was the duty of the captain and crew to prevent the fire, it was equally their duty to extinguish it; and the consequences of their negligence in this particular ought not to fall upon the insurers; and that even the gross negligence of the captain and crew, in regard to a duty of this kind, is a mere nonfeasance, and is not to be considered barratry; that the remissness of the captain, in this case particularly, is not so to be considered, because, however weak his conduct may have been, he was acted upon by inordinate fears only, and by no motives of interest or any views of unauthorized discretion or willful delinquency.

3. That the profits here insured were incident to the cargo shipped at Philadelphia, and not to any property that might be substituted for it, though acquired with the proceeds of the original cargo; that the contemplated adventure from Marseilles to Guatemala was therefore foreign to the insurance. That even in a valued policy on profits, evidence must be given of some profit likely to result, and that 226] *without such evidence the insurance has no subject to operate upon; that the flour being destined to be sold at Gibraltar, and not affording there a profit, as was proved, there is in effect no insurable interest whatsoever shown in the defendant, Coulter; and that he cannot, therefore, recover under a valued policy on profits.

Underwriters are not liable for any loss arising from gross negligence or want of skill of the captain and crew. The object of insurance is to guard against extraordinary perils. They necessarily beset every mercantile adventurer, and there must be skill and diligence to meet them. It is a part of the business of the voyage that those who are on board of the vessel shall be on the alert, and if they are not, the underwriters are exonerated. (Marsh. on Ins., 156, 487, 690; 5 Mass., 1; 8 Mass., 321, 436; 13 Johns., 180, 187; Phillips on Ins., 225.) If the first cause of the accident which produces the destruction of the vessel was not within the policy, its consequences do not attach to the policy. There is nothing in the terms of the Peters 3.

policy against fire which exempts them from the operation of these principles.

If the captain and crew omitted reasonable exertions to extinguish a fire which had occurred from accident, the insurers are not liable; gross negligence in both is not barratry; and if they stood aloof without making proper and sufficient efforts to prevent the ravages of the fire, the court should have left these facts to the jury, from which they could have inferred for the assurers. (Abbot on Ship., 128, note; 8 Cranch, 49; 5 Mass., 1; 8 Mass., 531; Marsh. on Ins., 515; Phill. on Ins., 230; 8 East, 133.)

The cargo would have produced no profit, and the plaintiff offered no proof that profits would have been obtained on the cargo sent from Philadelphia; and the insurance attached only to the cargo shipped there. Some profits must be proved before the underwriters are answerable, as this cannot be left to inference. (6 East, 315; 12 East, 124; 16 East, 218.) The policy is a contract of indemnity for actual injury or loss; and the principles of the law of insurance are against wagering policies. (2 Mass., 1; 12 Wheat., 288; Phill., 69.) It is admitted that a party may cover a *series [227 of adventures, and expected profits on them; but if he has omitted to do this in explicit terms, he must sustain the loss himself. The terms of this policy are not broad enough to cover all the profits anticipated, and which are claimed from the underwriters, the plaintiffs in error. (Marsh. on Ins., 323; Phill., 166; 2 Mass., 409; 4 Camp., 294; 12 East, 283; 1 Taunt., 463; 12 Wheat., 283; 6 Mass., 197; 2 Mass., 420.)

Mr. Wirt, for the defendant in error, argued that the facts of the case made out a loss by accident or misfortune, and of innocence on the part of the master; and that from the situation of the vessel, part of the crew being absent, and the fact of there being powder under the cabin floor when the fire broke out, no other efforts than those which were made to save her would have been prudent or proper; all the skill that could be expected was employed. According to the established principles of the law of insurance, there must be ignorance so gross as to amount to unseaworthiness to excuse the insurer, but not otherwise.

It would be the introduction of a new principle in the law of insurance, if the want of more than common care and usual skill would discharge the underwriters. Every loss would be traced to such a proximate cause. A ship is left in a storm; would proof that setting another sail would have placed her beyond the peril excuse the underwriters? The seaman at the mast-head, whose duty it is to look out for land as a coast is approached, falls asleep, and the vessel is lost; this, under the principle claimed, would release the assurers. The underwriters will undertake to inquire whether the captain and crew should have resisted longer, before they submitted in battle. Human infirmities are at the risk of the insurers, as well as the perils of navigation.

The cases decided in England repudiate the doctrine asserted by the plaintiff in error, and for the reasons and on the principles now submitted to the court. (2 Barn. & Ald., 72; 5 Barn. & Ald., 171; 7 Barn. & Cress., 217; 14

Com. Law Rep., 33; 7 Barn. & Cress., 794; 14 Com. Law Rep., 129.)

228*] *Gross negligence is, upon adjudged cases, barratry; and thus, if such should have occurred in this case, the underwriters would be liable. (2 Camp., 149; 8 East, 126; 11 Petersdorf, 268; 2 Phill. on Ins., 237; 2 Camp., 620; 1 Taunt., 227; 2 New Rep., 336; 4 Taunt., 226; Peake, 212; 1 Camp., 123.)

The policy attached to the whole voyage, and was intended to cover the profits upon it. The interruption or breaking up of the voyage, preventing the earning of those profits; and in whatever part of it the occurrence took place, entitled the assured to recover the amount of the policy. An insurance on profits has been settled to be legal and proper. In the American courts it is not necessary to prove what the profits would have been, but in England the rule is otherwise.

Courts construe the policy liberally, to include all the objects and intentions of the parties, according to the nature of the voyage. In this case, the subject of insurance was the profits on the whole voyage, and the cargo which was taken on board at Philadelphia was to furnish the means of proceeding with the adventure. By its loss, the whole of the profits were lost. (Catlett v. The Columbian Insurance Company, 12 Wheat., 383; Phill. on Ins., 319, 29, 70, 46, 47.)

Mr. Justice JOHNSON delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a case of insurance on profits on a voyage from Philadelphia to Gibraltar, and a port in the Mediterranean not higher up than Marseilles, and at and from thence to Sonsonate, in the province of Guatemala, Pacific Ocean, with the liberty of Guayaquil. The risks are those usually inserted in policies, including fire, and barratry. The loss alleged is from fire alone.

The vessel reached Gibraltar in safety, and while lying there, took fire and was entirely consumed, together with her cargo.

The evidence on the part of defendants below went, first, to charge the master with having caused the fire by his own carelessness; second, with having desisted, and restrained the crew and others from efforts which might have extinguished the fire, under apprehensions 229] not very well founded *that it would communicate with powder, laden near to where the fire originated. It was also objected to the plaintiff's right of recovery, that he had given no kind of evidence of profits, or probable profits, from a sale at Gibraltar.

This difference furnishes the subject of three bills of exception, the first of which went to the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that, if they believed the fire proceeded from the negligence or carelessness of the captain, the plaintiff below was not entitled to recover.

The second, that if they believed the fire originated in accident, without any want of due care and attention in the captain and crew, yet, if after it had commenced, the captain and crew might with ordinary care and exertion have extinguished it, the plaintiff below was not entitled to recover.

The first of these instructions was refused expressly. The second was refused as prayed; and in its stead the court instructed the jury that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, unless they should be of opinion from the evidence that after the vessel was discovered to be on fire, the master and crew might have extinguished it, and preserved the vessel and cargo. That the master was bound to extinguish the fire, if practicable; and if he stood aloof without making any exertion to extinguish it, and suffered the vessel to be destroyed, it would have afforded evidence of such gross negligence as would amount to barratry.

As the plaintiff below is in possession of the verdict, it is immaterial to him if this charge was more favorable to his adversary than the law admits. We have only to do with so much of the case presented by these bills of exception as makes against the interest of the insurers.

And as to the refusal to instruct the jury that "their verdict must be for the insurers, if they believe the loss to have proceeded from the carelessness or negligence of the captain," it is obvious, since barratry is insured against, that the court must not be held to have affirmed that fire proceeding from negligence was a loss within the policy, independently of the risk of barratry, but that negligence was no defense where barratry was insured against.

*It cannot be denied that, what with [*230] adjudged cases and elementary opinions, this doctrine has got into a great deal of confusion. Many attempts have been made to define the term barratry, in its marine sense; but when compared with the ideas attached to the word, as derived from the most respectable sources, such definitions will too generally be found deficient to precision or comprehensiveness; they need commentaries to apply or explain them. And it is remarkable that the point in which all the definitions in the English or American authorities agree, to wit, that fraud must be a constituent of the act of barratry, is that in which practically all the difficulties arise. The question seems to be between dolus and culpa, which of those two words best conveys the sense of the law.

It cannot be denied that the etymology of the word favors the adoption of the former. The term barratry is known to the common law; and Cowell's Interpreter refers its origin to a Latin word, which would attach to it the idea of meanness, selfishness, and knavery. Some of our English books, following a French writer (Pasquier sur Emerigon), derive it from barat, an old French or Italian word, which they explain by tromperie, fourbe, mensonge.

I should myself derive the word from the Spanish barateria, baratero, which are rendered fraus and fraudulentus. But it is worthy of particular notice that writers on maritime law of the first respectability (I think Emerigon gives six in number), in explaining the marine sense of the word barratry, use the French word prevariquer, which can only be translated into "acting without due fidelity to their owners." The best French dictionary we have renders it by agir contre les devoirs de son charge, acting contrary to the duties of his undertaking, and trahir la cause on l'intérêt des personnes qu'on est obligé de défendre, to betray the cause or interest of those whom we are bound to protect.

Nor will it be found that the idea of the British courts of the meaning of fraud as applied to barratry varies perceptibly from this exposition. In the case of Moss v. Byron (6 T. R., 379), we find the very words adopted by one 231] of the judges: "If the captain acted contrary to his duty to his owners," it was barratry; "and if he did any act to increase the risk," it was barratry. And in the case of Burk v. The Royal Exchange Insurance Company, the court lay it down as the law, that the term barratry is used in the policies as applicable to the "willful misconduct" of the master and mariners. And even in the case of Phyn v. The Royal Insurance Company, in which Lawrence, Justice, wishes to resume or explain his definition in Moss v. Byron, he concludes with adopting the definition of Lee, C. J., in Stemmer v. Brown, in which he says, "barratry must be some breach of trust in the master ex maleficio," in which, I presume, maleficio must mean some willful and injurious act. And as this case is given by the latest English compiler (11 Petersdorf, 269, Case 6) as the authority for the unqualified doctrine "that there must be fraud to constitute barratry," and the definition of C. J. Lee, just quoted, is given in his margin as comprising the substance of this case, we are furnished with an apt opportunity of ascertaining the idea attached in Great Britain to both the terms "fraud" and maleficio, by referring to the case itself.

The defense of the underwriters there turned upon a deviation, and the question was whether it was a fraudulent deviation. If a general deviation, the underwriters were discharged; but if a fraudulent deviation then it was a barratry and a risk in the policy. The whole evidence in the cause in which the question of fraud was raised, was this: the vessel was bound from London to Jamaica, but was driven by currents out of her course. Upon recovering her reckoning, she was found to be between the Grand Canaries and the island of Teneriffe. In this situation it was admitted that her course was south-west, instead of which the captain bore up for the island of Santa Cruz, which lay north-west, and in sight about thirty miles off, and came to anchor; for the purpose, as is supposed in the argument, to get refreshments, or in some way for his own accommodation. The jury found it to be a simple deviation without fraud, and the court only decide that they cannot adjudge it a fraudulent deviation in opposition to the finding 232] of the jury. But it is *nowhere hinted that the jury might not have found it otherwise, and their verdict have been sustained upon the evidence in that cause.

On the contrary, so far as fraud or maleficio may be supposed to imply a dishonest or injurious intention towards the owner, the idea is negatived by a variety of cases. In that of Earle v. Rovercraft (8 East, 126), it was admitted that the captain unaffectedly acted with a view to promote the owner's interest, and would materially have promoted their interest had he escaped detection. But he had deviated from his instructions, and increased the risks by trading with an enemy; and it was held to be barratry. The court there say, it has been asked how is this act of the captain in going into d'Elmina, in order to purchase the cargo for his owners Peters 3.

more cheaply and expeditiously, a breach of trust as between him and them? Now, I conceive that the trust reposed in a captain of a vessel obliges him to obey the written instructions of his owners, where they give any; and where the instructions are silent, he is at all events to do nothing but what is consonant to the laws of the land, whether with or without a view to their advantage.

Here we see that an act "inconsistent with written instructions," and an act "not consonant to the laws of the land" are brought within the description of fraud upon the owners, as applied to the definition of barratry. From which it would seem to result, that it is not confined to moral fraud; or that the term is not well chosen; or that practically, in its application to this subject, culpa would better express the idea than dolus.

The commercial regulations of maritime nations, both of ancient and modern times, are very various on the subject of the liability of insurers for the acts of the master; and it is not without much appearance of reason that Emerigon observes, that the French ordinance has put it upon the just medium.

The regulations on this subject are contained in the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth articles of the fifth title.

By the twenty-sixth article, "all losses and damages happening at sea *by tempest, [233 shipwreck, running aground or aboard of other ships, changing the course of the voyage or of the ship, ejection, fire, taking, rifling, detention by prizes, declaration of war, reprisals, and generally by all maritime accidents, shall be at the risk of the insurers. By the twenty-seventh, however, if the changing of the course, voyage, or ship happens by the order of the insured, without the consent of the insurers, they shall be discharged from the risk; which shall likewise take place in all other losses and damages happening by the fault of the insured; nor shall the insurers be obliged to restore the premium, if the time of their bearing the risk be begun. Nor shall the insurers be obliged to bear the losses and damages happening to ships and goods by the fault of the master and mariners, except that by the policy they be engaged for the barratry of the master.

It is this last rule to which the observation of Emerigon is particularly directed; and although the British decisions do not adopt the negative language of the regulation without limitation, they certainly come up to the positive rule which it implies, whenever the case of the master is considered a fault with reference to his duty to his owner.

It has been remarked by a British court (Burk v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company, 2 Barn. & Ald., 82), that in France, negligence, as well as willful misconduct, is considered barratry; and they give the authority of the commentator on the ordinance of Louis XIV., Valin, for the assertion. But as the author is commenting upon the twenty-eighth article, I am inclined to consider the passage as only intimating that negligence is a fault within the words of the ordinance.

And the same court, in the same cause, have certainly affirmed the same principle, in its positive sense; that is, that where an insurance is against barratry, a loss arising from fire originating in negligence shall be borne by the underwriters.

It would be a great relief to this court if there existed such an uniformity in the decisions upon this subject as to place our decision upon adjudged cases. But it is not to be questioned that the English and American decisions 234] are in *direct hostility with each other, as to a loss by fire arising from negligence, where there is an insurance against barratry.

It must be repeated, that the general question where there is no insurance against barratry need not here be considered. The judge was not bound to give an instruction abstracted from the case. And the question whether, where the breach laid was loss by fire only, the plaintiff could maintain his action by giving in evidence a barratrous burning, did not properly occur. The point when properly stated stands thus: the plaintiff lays the breach by fire, and the defendant, to repel his liability, insists that the fire was produced by negligence of the master; the plaintiff replies that negligence is no defense where the barratry is insured against; the court maintains the doctrine of the plaintiff, and adds, that negligence itself, when gross, is evidence of barratry. And, certainly, a master of a vessel who sees another engaged in the act of scuttling or firing his ship, and will not rise from his berth to prevent it, is prima facie chargeable with barratry. Although a mere misfeasance, it is a breach of trust, a fault, an act of infidelity to his owners. So if, in the height of a storm, the captain and crew turn in without resorting to the nautical precautions of laying the vessel to and otherwise preparing her to overcome the peril, it may well be left to a jury to determine if such conduct be not barratrous.

The truth is, that in the incidents to this kind of contract, misfeasance and nonfeasance often approach so near to each other in character and consequences, that it is not surprising if courts of justice should incline to the adoption of rules which would relieve them from the difficulty of discriminating, or the inconsistencies that might result from their efforts to discriminate.

The case of Green v. The Phoenix Insurance Company, decided in New York, was certainly a very strong case to establish the doctrine that a loss by fire, proceeding from negligence of the master and mariners, was not a loss within the policy, although barratry be one of the risks. It will, however, be found, by looking 235] into the reasons which governed *the court in that case, that its conclusions were drawn partly from the too general expressions of an elementary writer, and partly from analogy with other decisions in which the expressions of the court, unless restricted to the cases before them, were justly deemed authority for the decision there rendered. The question was one of the first impression, and one on which the best-constituted minds may well have been led to contrary conclusions. It was, however, no unreasonable claim upon the profession made by Lawrence, Justice, in the case of Phyn v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company, with regard to his own doctrines in Moss v. Byron, "that what fell from him there must be taken in reference to the case then in judgment before the court." Thus, restricted doctrines will often be found correct, which in a more general sense might well be questioned. And in the case of Voss & Graves v. The Union Insurance Company, and also in that of Clereland v. the same company, relied upon in the New York decision, the act of the master, for which the underwriters were held to be discharged, was in the first instance sailing towards a blockaded port with intent to violate the blockade, and in the second, leaving his register behind him. The first of these cases did not call for the opinion of Kent, Justice, on the subject of negligence; the second is exactly one of those cases in which a nonfeasance becomes a misfeasance, and both relate to the discharge of a duty unquestionably belonging to the insured, and the master is his agent. Attempting a breach of blockade was an unwarrantable increase of risk, which might or might not be barratrous according to circumstances. And for a vessel to leave her register behind in time of war, affected her seaworthiness as much as leaving her compass or quadrant or anchors at home at any time. So, neglecting to take a pilot, neglecting to pay port duties, neglecting to obtain a clearance, neglecting to comply with the laws of any port which the vessel has leave to enter; all these, although nonfeasances, involve misfeasances, which discharge the underwriters, because they violate implied duties incident to navigating the vessel, and produce a positive and definite increase of risk.

It was not until the year 1818 that the question was settled *in the British courts, [236 on the liability of the underwriters for a loss like the present. In the case of Busk v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company, the question is finally and fully decided there, in direct hostility with the decision in New York; and this court is now for the first time called upon to establish a rule for its own government in similar cases.

Losses by fire must happen either from the act of God, from design, or from accident. If from design, and by the captain and crew, it is barratry; if by any other person, or by pure accident, it is clearly a risk by fire, but from the peculiar character of this risk, it is no easy matter to point out an accident that may not be resolved into negligence. If, by the falling of a candle, it may have been because due care was not bestowed upon securing it; and if from a spark from the caboose, it may have been from neglect is not closing or constricting it; and if from a flue or a stove, the same reason may be assigned. It has already been shown that gross negligence may be evidence of barratry, and when it is considered how difficult it is to decide where gross negligence ends and ordinary negligence begins, and to distinguish between pure accident and accident from negligence, we cannot but think that the British courts have adopted the safe and legal rule in deciding, that where the policy covers the risk of barratry, and fire be the proximate cause, they will not sustain the defense that negligence was the remote cause.

We think this rule also the most consistent with analogy and mercantile understanding. It is very justly observed in the case of Busk v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company, that it is a strong argument against the objection there raised for the first time, that in the great variety of cases that have occurred upon marine policies, no such point had ever been made. And I will add, it is not improbable from comparison of dates, that the defense maintained in the New York decision, suggested that made in the British courts.

The long acquiescence may have had its origin in a general mercantile understanding, or perhaps in the doctrine of Malynes, whose book unites the recommendations of antiquity, good sense, and practical knowledge. The 237] passage *has been misquoted as to its place; it is found in page 155, in these words: "Barratry of the master and mariners can hardly be avoided, but by a provident care to know them, or at least the master of the ship upon which the assurance is made. And if he be a careful man, the danger of fire above mentioned will be the less for the ship; boys must be looked unto every night and day. And in this case let us also consider the assurers; for it has oftentimes happened, that by a candle unadvisedly used by the boys, or otherwise, before the ships were unladen, they have been set on fire and burnt to the very keel, with all the goods in them, and the assurers have paid the sums of money by them assured. Nevertheless, herein the assurers might have been wronged, although they bear the adventure until the goods be landed; for it cometh to pass sometimes, that whole ships' ladings are sold on ship board, and never discharged," &c. In the residue of this passage the author certainly intimates that the wrong done to the assurers is in being made to pay after the transfer of the interest to a third person, and the initiation of a new voyage. And the general doctrines involved in this case are certainly sustained by analogy to other cases. It seems generally conceded that in the case of insurance against fire on land, negligence of servants or of the tenant is no defense, nor of the proprietor, unless of such a character as to sustain the imputation of fraud or design. And the rule that a loss, the proximate cause of which is a peril insured against, is a loss within the policy, although the remote cause may be negligence of the master or mariners, has been affirmed in several successive cases in the English courts. The case of Watkins v. Matland, cited in argument, is a very strong case of this description. And both in that and the case of Bishop v. Pentland, decided as late as 1827, the decision in Busk v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Company is expressly quoted by the court, and affirmed as law. So that the doubt expressed by Mr. Phillips upon the authority of that case does not seem well founded. (Phillips on Insurance, 249)

It is true that in the application of the principles to particular cases, courts of justice will sometimes find themselves *embarrassed in discriminating between that crassa negligentia which will discharge the underwriters by varying or increasing the risk, and that upon which they may be made liable on the ground of barratry; but the difficulty is only one which those engaged in the administration of justice have often to feel and lament—to wit, the difficulty of fathoming men's motives; and in this the court can only rely on the judgment and experience of juries. While the captain is not regardless of his duty to his owner, his actions cannot be barratrous; but if no act of infidelity to the owner be imputable to him from the evidence, then it is affirmed in various cases that a material increase of the risk from gross negligence may discharge the underwriters. Such was admitted to be the law in Toulmin v. Anderson (1 Taunt., 627); and Toulmin v. Inglis (1 Camp.) The case of Pipon v. Cope (1 Camp., 434) was decided on this distinction, and the defense set up in Heyman v. Parish (2 Camp., 149) went upon the same ground. It is true these are nisi prius cases, but they serve to illustrate the doctrine and course of decision.

In the case of Arcangelo v. Thompson (2 Camp., 620), it was ruled that where the loss was laid by capture, it was no defense for the underwriters to prove that the capture was barratrous; and it would indeed be singular, if where one breach is laid and proved, the party defendant could avail himself of another breach for which he was equally liable on the same contract.

The third prayer for instruction is in these words: "that the plaintiffs had offered no evidence that the sales of the flour at Gibraltar would have yielded the plaintiffs a profit, and that therefore they were not entitled to recover," This was refused, and the question is, whether the defendants were entitled to it, as prayed.

This instruction presents two propositions:

1. That it was necessary to prove loss of profits, otherwise than by the loss of the cargo; 2. That the plaintiff was limited to prove of profits on a sale at Gibraltar. With regard to the second it is clear that the instruction was properly refused, for there was nothing in the policy to prevent the assured from proceeding with the original cargo to the Pacific, although the *course of trade would have sanctioned him in selling and replacing it. But the first proposition is one of more difficulty.

Courts of justice have got over their difficulties on the question whether profits are an insurable interest, but how and where that interest must be established by proof, in case of loss, is not well settled. Here again there appears to be a conflict between the British and American decisions.

The earliest of the British decisions, that of Barclay v. Cousins (2 East, 544), certainly supports the doctrine that the profits sink with the cargo, or, at least, that the loss of one is prima facie evidence of the loss of the other, and throws the onus probandi upon the defendant. Such is the intimation of the court (p. 551), and the recovery was had in that case without proof that profit would have been made had the cargo arrived at the destined port. In the case of Henrickson v. Margetson (2 East, 549), of which a note is given in that case, the recovery was also had without proof that the profits would have been made, or any other proof than an interest in and loss of the cargo; and Lord Mansfield seems to have suggested the true ground for dispensing with such proof: to wit, the utter impracticability of making it, without the spirit of prophecy to determine the precise time when the vessel would arrive at her destined port.

The two subsequent cases which are cited in elementary books to sustain the contrary doctrine, are not full to the point. In that of Hodgson v. Glover (6 East, 316), there was another question of as great difficulty: to wit, whether in a clear case of average loss, the plaintiff could recover as for a total loss, or recover anything without evidence to determine the average. Of the four judges who sat, two decided against the plaintiff upon the one ground, and two upon the other.

In the second case, that of Eyre v. Glover (16 East, 218); although the point was touched upon in argument, yet the court neither expressly affirm nor deny it; it was not the leading question in the cause; and at last, judgment is rendered for plaintiff without requiring such proof. But the case of Mumford v. Hallet 240*] (1 Johns., 429) goes further. It *was a case of insurance on profits, in which there was no evidence given that profits would have been made upon an arrival, nor was any other loss proved than an incident to the loss of the goods. On that state of facts, Livingston, Justice, who delivers the opinion of the court, remarks, "It does not follow that a profit will be made if the cargo arrived, yet its loss would give a right to recover on such a policy." There are other questions in the case; but, after all were settled, this principle was essential to the plaintiff's right to recover.

In the case of Fosdick v. The Norwich Insurance Company, decided in the Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut, the question was moved in argument that to justify a recovery the plaintiff must show that profits would have accrued upon safe arrival of the goods; but the language of the court, in expressing their decision, is not so explicit as to enable us to determine whether it was intended to apply as well to the proof of loss as to the insurable interest. Yet the right of the plaintiff to recover being affirmed in that case without other proof than the loss of the goods, it would seem to be an authority for the doctrine that no other was necessary.

The report furnishes no other proof of loss of profits than what was implied in the loss of the cargo in which the insured had an interest. And on the question of insurable interest, which was the main question in the cause, the Chief Justice asks "if profits are anything more than an excrescence upon the value of goods beyond the prime cost."

As to the American cases, Mr. Phillips quotes that of Loomis v. Shaw (if I understand his language as he meant to use it), as going farther than the case warrants (2 Johns. Ca., 36). The court waives the question now under consideration, by suggesting that the defendant had waived it by an act of his own.

In the case of Abbot v. Sebor (3 Johns. Ca., 39), which was a motion for a new trial, the decision turned chiefly on the question whether the court had misdirected the jury in instructing them that the plaintiff must recover the whole sum insured on profits, or nothing. That 241*] is, that he could *not recover for an average loss. The question, if proof that profits would have been made had the vessel arrived in safety was necessary to his recovering, was not touched. Yet the right to recover is affirmed in that case, and it does not appear that any proof to that effect had been offered or required, beyond the loss of the goods on which the profit was expected. But the authority amounts to no more than an implication.

We must now dispose of the question upon reason and principle; and here it seems difficult to perceive why, if profit be a mere excrescence of the principle, as some judges have said, or an incident to or identified with it, as others have said, why the loss of the cargo should not carry with it the loss of the profits. This rule has convenience and certainty to recommend it: of which this case presents a striking illustration. Here was a voyage of many thousand miles to be performed, the final profits of which must have been determined by a statement of accounts passing through several changes, some of which might have resulted in loss, some in gain; and in each case the good or ill-fortune of the adventure turning on the gain or loss of a day in the voyage. What human calculation or human imagination could have furnished testimony on a fact so speculative and fortuitous? To have required testimony to it, would have been subjecting the rights of the plaintiff to mere mockery.

On this point we must support the American decisions.

Justices THOMPSON and BALDWIN, dissenting.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Maryland, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed with costs and damages, at the rate of six per centum per annum.

Cited—19 Pet., 517; 11 Pet., 224; 14 Pet., 628; 6 How., 426, 429; 2 Wood. & M., 320; 1 Sumn., 469, 474; 2 Sumn., 260; 3 Sumn., 276; 1 Blatchf., 255.

*ANN SHANKS, MARGARETTA [*242
SHANKS, SARAH P. SHANKS, GRACE
F. SHANKS, AND ELIZA SHANKS (appellants below), Plaintiffs in Error,

v.

ABRAHAM DUPONT, AND JANE, HIS WIFE, DANIEL PEPPER, AND ANN PEPPER, Defendants in Error.

Citizenship—allegiance—treaty with England of 1794, of 1783—feme covert.

Thomas Scott, a native of South Carolina, died in 1782, intestate, seized of land on James Island, having two daughters, Ann and Mary, both born in South Carolina before the Declaration of Independence. Sarah married D. P., a citizen of South Carolina, and died in 1802, entitled to one-half of the estate. The British took possession of James Island and Charleston in February and May, 1780; and in 1781 Ann Scott married Joseph Shanks, a British officer, and at the evacuation of Charleston in 1782, she went to England with her husband, where she remained until her death in 1801. She left five children born in England. They claimed the other moiety of the real estate of Thomas Scott in right of their mother, under the ninth article of the Treaty of Peace between this country and Great Britain of the 19th of November, 1794. Held, that they were entitled to recover and hold the same.

If Ann Scott was of age before December, 1782,
Peters 3.

as she remained in South Carolina until that time, her birth and residence must be deemed to constitute her by election a citizen of South Carolina, while she remained in that State. If she was not of age then, under the circumstances of this case, she might well be deemed to hold the citizenship of her father; for children born in a country, continuing while under age in the family of the father, partake of his natural character as a citizen of that country. [245]

All British-born subjects whose allegiance Great Britain has never renounced, ought, upon General principles of interpretation, to be held within the intent, as they certainly are within the words of the Treaty of 1794. [250]

The capture and possession of James Island in February, 1780, and of Charleston on the 11th of May in the same year, by the British troops, was not an absolute change of the allegiance of the captured inhabitants. They owed allegiance to the conquerors during their occupation; but it was a temporary allegiance, which did not destroy, but only suspended their former allegiance. [246]

The marriage of Ann Scott with Shanks, a British officer, did not change or destroy her allegiance to the State of South Carolina, because marriage with an alien, whether friend or enemy, produces no dissolution of the native allegiance of the wife. [246]

The general doctrine is, that no person can, by any act of their own, without the consent of the government, put off their allegiance and become aliens. [246]

The subsequent removal of Ann Shanks to England with her husband, operates as a virtual dissolution of her allegiance, and fixed her future allegiance to the British crown by the Treaty of Peace in 1783. [246]

The Treaty of 1783 acted upon the state of things as it existed at that period. It took the actual state of things as its basis. All those, whether natives or otherwise, who then adhered to the American States, were virtually absolved from all allegiance to the British crown; all those who then adhered to the British crown were deemed and held subjects [243*] of that crown. The Treaty of *Peace was a treaty operating between States and the inhabitants thereof. [247.]

The incapacities of femes covert provided by the common law, apply to their civil rights, and are for their protection and interest. But they do not reach their political rights, nor prevent their acquiring or losing a national character. These political rights do not stand upon the mere doctrines of municipal law, applicable to ordinary transactions, but stand upon the more general principles of the law of nations. [248]

THIS was a writ of error from the Supreme Court of Appeals in Law and Equity, in and for the State of South Carolina.

The suit arose out of a partition of a tract of land in the State of South Carolina; the right of the plaintiffs in error to a moiety having been denied on the ground of their alienage, and their consequent incapacity to inherit the same.

The case was argued at January Term, 1829, by Mr. Cruger and Mr. Wirt for the plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. Legare for the defendants, and was held under advisement to this term.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the opinion of the court.

The counsel for the plaintiffs in error contended that Anu Shanks, the mother of the plaintiffs in error, was a British subject, and that her title was protected by the Treaty of 1794. The decree of the court of the State of South Carolina was therefore erroneous, and should have been in favor of the plaintiffs, for a moiety of the land of which Thomas Scott died seized.

The defendants in error insisted that the decree of the State court ought to be affirmed, because Mrs. Shanks was an American citizen, capable of holding by the laws of South Carolina; so that there was no interest or title in her, Peters 3.

to which the ninth article of the Treaty of 1794, by which the titles of British subjects holding lands in this country were saved from the disabilities of alienage, could in any wise attach.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court.

This was a writ of error to the highest court of appeals in law and equity of the [*244 State of South Carolina; brought to revise the decision of that court, in a bill or petition in equity, in which the present defendants were original plaintiffs, and the present plaintiffs were original defendants. From the record of the case it appeared that the controversy before the court respected the right to the moiety of the proceeds of a certain tract of land, which had been sold under a former decree in equity, and the proceeds of which had been brought into the registry of the court. One moiety of the proceeds had been paid over to the original plaintiffs, and the other moiety was now in controversy. The original plaintiffs claimed this moiety also upon the ground that the original defendants were aliens, and incapable of taking the lands by descent from their mother, Ann Shanks (who was admitted to have taken the moiety of the land by descent from her father, Thomas Scott), they being British-born subjects.

The facts, as they were agreed by the parties, and as they appeared on the record, were as follows:

Thomas Scott, the ancestor and first purchaser, was a native of the Colony of South Carolina, and died intestate, seized of the lands in dispute, in 1782. He left surviving him two daughters, Sarah and Anu, who were also born in South Carolina, before the Declaration of Independence.

Sarah Scott intermarried with Daniel Pepper, a citizen of South Carolina, and resided with him in that State until 1802, when she died, leaving children, the present defendants in error, whose right to her share of the property is conceded.

The British took possession of James Island on the 11th of February, 1780, and Charleston surrendered to them on the 11th of May in the same year.

In 1781, Anu Scott was married to Joseph Shanks, a British officer, and at the evacuation of Charleston, in December, 1782, went with him to England, where she remained until her death, in 1801. She left five children, the present plaintiffs in error, British subjects, who claimed in right of their mother, and under the ninth article of the Treaty of Peace between this country and Great Britain of the 19th of November, 1794, a moiety of their grandfather's estate in South Carolina.

The decision of the State court was against this claim, as *not within the protection [*245 of the treaty, because Mrs. Shanks was an American citizen.

The cause was argued by Cruger & Wirt for the plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. Legare for the defendants in error.

After the elaborate opinions expressed in the case of Inglis v. The Trustees of The Sailor's Snug Harbor (ante, p. 99), upon the question of alienage, growing out of the American Revolution, it is unnecessary to do more in delivering the opinion of the court in the present case, than to state, in a brief manner, the grounds on which our decision is founded.

Thomas Scott, a native of South Carolina, died in 1782, seized of the land in dispute, leaving two daughters surviving him, Sarah, the mother of the defendants in error, and Ann, the mother of the plaintiffs in error. Without question Sarah took one moiety of the land by descent; and the defendants in error, as her heirs, are entitled to it. The only question is, whether Ann took the other moiety by descent; and if so, whether the plaintiffs in error are capable of taking the same by descent from her.

Ann Scott was born in South Carolina, before the American Revolution; and her father adhered to the American cause, and remained and was at his death a citizen of South Carolina. There is no dispute that his daughter Ann, at the time of the Revolution, and afterwards, remained in South Carolina until December, 1782. Whether she was of age during this time does not appear. If she was, then her birth and residence might be deemed to constitute her by election a citizen of South Carolina. If she was not of age, then she might well be deemed under the circumstances of this case to hold the citizenship of her father, for children born in a country, continuing while under age in the family of the father, partake of his national character, as a citizen of that country. Her citizenship, then, being prima facie established, and, indeed, this is admitted in the pleadings, has it ever been lost; or was it lost before the death of her father, so that the estate in question was, upon the descent cast, incapable of vesting in her? Upon the facts stated, it appears to us that it was not lost, and that she was capable of taking it at the time of the descent cast.

The only facts which are brought to support 246 the supposition *that she became an alien before the death of her father, are, that the British captured James Island in February, 1780, and Charleston in May, 1780; that she was then and afterwards remained under the British dominion in virtue of the capture; that in 1781 she married Joseph Shauks, a British officer, and upon the evacuation of Charleston in December, 1782, she went with her husband, a British subject, to England, and there remained until her death in 1801. Now, in the first place, the capture and possession by the British was not an absolute change of the allegiance of the captured inhabitants. They owed allegiance, indeed, to the conquerors during their occupation; but it was a temporary allegiance, which did not destroy, but only suspended their former allegiance. It did not annihilate their allegiance to the State of South Carolina, and make them de facto aliens. That could only be by a Treaty of Peace which should cede the territory, and them with it; or by a permanent conquest, not disturbed or controverted by arms, which would lead to a like result. Neither did the marriage with Shauks produce that effect; because marriage with an alien, whether a friend or an enemy, produces no dissolution of the native allegiance of the wife. It may change her civil rights, but it does not affect her political rights or privileges. The general doctrine is, that no persons can, by any act of their own, without the consent of the government, put off their allegiance and become aliens. If it were otherwise, then a feme alien would by her marriage become, ipso facto, a citizen, and would be dowable of the estate of her husband; which are clearly contrary to law.¹

Our conclusion, therefore, is, that neither of these acts warrant the court in saying that Ann Shanks had ceased to be a citizen of South Carolina at the death of her father. This is not, indeed, controverted in the allegations of the parties.

The question, then, is, whether her subsequent removal with her husband operated as a virtual dissolution of her allegiance, and fixed her future allegiance to the British crown by *the Treaty of Peace of 1783. Our [247 opinion is that it did. In the first place, she was born under the allegiance of the British crown, and no act of the government of Great Britain ever absolved her from that allegiance. Her becoming a citizen of South Carolina did not, ipso facto, work any dissolution of her original allegiance, at least so far as the rights and claims of the British crown were concerned. During the war, each party claimed the allegiance of the natives of the colonies as due exclusively to itself. The American States insisted upon the allegiance of all born within the States respectively; and Great Britain asserted an equally exclusive claim. The Treaty of Peace of 1783 acted upon the state of things as it existed at that period. It took the actual state of things as its basis. All those, whether natives or otherwise, who then adhered to the American States, were virtually absolved from all allegiance to the British crown. All those who then adhered to the British crown, were deemed and held subjects of that crown. The Treaty of Peace was a treaty operating between the States on each side, and the inhabitants thereof; in the language of the seventh article, it was a firm and perpetual peace between his Britannic majesty and the said States, "and between the subjects of the one and the citizens of the other." Who were, then, subjects or citizen, was to be decided by the state of facts. If they were originally subjects of Great Britain and then adhered to her, and were claimed by her as subjects, the treaty deemed them such. If they were originally British subjects, but then adhering to the States, the treaty deemed them citizens. Such, I think, is the natural, and indeed almost necessary meaning of the treaty; it would otherwise follow that there would continue a double allegiance of many persons; an inconvenience which must have been foreseen, and would cause the most injurious effects to both nations.

It cannot, we think, be doubted that Mrs. Shanks, being then voluntarily under British protection, and adhering to the British side, by her removal with her husband was deemed by the British government to retain her allegiance, and to be, to all intents and purposes, a British subject. It may *be said that, being [248 sub potestate viri, she had no right to make an election; nor ought she to be bound by an act of removal under his authority or persuasion.

1.—See Kelly v. Harrison, 2 Johns. Cas., 29; Co. Litt., 31, b.; Com. Dig. Alien., C. 1; Dower A., 2; Bacon's Abridg. Alien.; Dower, A.

If this were a case of a crime alleged against Mrs. Shanks, in connection with her husband, there might be force in the argument. But it must be considered, that it was at most a mere election of allegiance between two nations, each of which claimed her allegiance. The governments, and not herself, finally settled her national character. They did not treat her as capable by herself of changing or absolving her allegiance; but they virtually allowed her the benefit of her choice, by fixing her allegiance finally on the side of that party to whom she then adhered.

It does not appear to us that her situation as a feme covert disabled her from a change of allegiance. British femes covert residing here with their husbands at the time of our independence, and adhering to our side until the close of the war, have been always supposed to have become thereby American citizens, and to have been absolved from their antecedent British allegiance. The incapacities of femes covert, provided by the common law, apply to their civil rights, and are for their protection and interest. But they do not reach their political rights, nor prevent their acquiring or losing a national character. Those political rights do not stand upon the mere doctrines of municipal law applicable to ordinary transactions, but stand upon the more general principles of the law of nations. The case of Martin v. The Commonwealth (1 Mass. Rep., 347), turned upon very different considerations. There the question was, whether a feme covert should be deemed to have forfeited her estate for an offense committed with her husband, by withdrawing from the State, &c., under the Confiscation Act of 1779; and it was held that she was not within the purview of the act. The same remark disposes of the case of Sewell v. Lee (9 Mass. Rep., 363), where the court expressly refused to decide whether the wife, by her withdrawal with her husband, became an alien. But in Kelly v. Harrison (2 Johns. Cas., 29), the reasoning of the court proceeds upon the supposition that the wife might have acquired 249*] the same citizenship with her husband, by withdrawing with him from the British dominions.¹

But if Mrs. Shanks' citizenship was not virtually taken away by her adherence to the British at the peace of 1783, still it must be admitted that, in the view of the British government, she was, at that time, and ever afterwards to the time of her death, and indeed at all antecedent periods, a British subject. At most, then, she was liable to be considered as in that peculiar situation in which she owed allegiance to both governments, ad utriusque fidem regis. Under such circumstances, the question arises whether she and her heirs are not within the purview of the ninth article of the Treaty with Great Britain of 1794. It appears to us that they plainly are. The language of that article is, "that British subjects who now hold lands in the territories of the United States, and American citizens who now hold lands in the dominions of his majesty, shall continue to hold them according to the nature and tenure of their respective estates and titles therein, &c., &c.; and that neither they, nor their heirs or assigns shall, so far as respects the said lands, and the legal remedies incident thereto, be regarded as aliens."

Now, Mrs. Shanks was at the time a British subject, and she then held the lands in controversy; she is therefore within the words of the treaty. Why ought she not also to be held within the spirit and intent? It is said that the treaty meant to protect the rights of British subjects, who were not also American citizens; but that is assuming the very point in controversy. If the treaty admits of two interpretations, and one is limited, and the other liberal; one which will further, and the other exclude, private rights; why should not the most liberal exposition be adopted? The object of the British government must have been to protect all her subjects holding lands in America from the disability of alienage, in respect to descents and sales. The class of American loyalists could at least, in her eyes, have been in as much favor as any other; there is nothing in our public policy which is more [*250] unfavorable to them than to other British subjects. After the peace of 1783 we had no right or interest in future confiscation; and the effect of alienage was the same in respect to us, whether the British subject was a native of Great Britain or of the colonies. This part of the stipulation, then, being for the benefit of British subjects who became aliens by the events of the war, there is no reason why all persons should not be embraced in it who sustained the character of British subjects, although we might also have treated them as American citizens. The argument supposes that because we should treat them as citizens, therefore Great Britain had no right to insist upon their being British subjects within the protection of the treaty. Now, if they were in truth and in fact, upon principles of public and municipal law, British subjects, she has an equal right to require us to recognize them as such. It cannot be doubted that Mrs. Shanks might have inherited any lands in England, as a British subject, and her heirs might have taken such lands by descent from her. It seems to us, then, that all British-born subjects whose allegiance Great Britain has never renounced, ought, upon general principles of interpretation, to be held within the intent, as they certainly are within the words, of the Treaty of 1794.

In either view of this case, and we think both are sustained by principles of public law, as well as of the common law, and by the soundest rules of interpretation applicable to treaties between independent States, the objections taken to the right of recovery of the plaintiffs cannot prevail.

Upon the whole, the judgment of the court is, that the plaintiffs in error are entitled to the moiety of the land in controversy, which came by descent to their mother, Ann Shanks, and of course to the proceeds thereof; and that the decree of the State Court of Appeals ought to be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree in favor of the plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON, dissenting.

This cause comes up from the State Court of South Carolina.

1.—See also Bac. Abridg. Alien A.; Cro. Car., 601, 602; 4 Term Rep., 300; Brook. Abr. Denizen, 21; JACKSON v. Linn, 3 Johns. Cas., 109.

251*] *The question is whether the plaintiffs can inherit to their mother. The objection to their inheriting is, that they are aliens, not born in allegiance to the State of South Carolina, in which the land lies. From the general disability of aliens they would exempt themselves, 1. On the ground that their mother was a citizen born, and in that right, though born abroad, they can inherit under the statute of Edward III.; 2. That if not protected by that statute, then that their mother was a British subject, and that she and her heirs are protected as to this land by the Treaties of 1783 and 1794.

The material facts of their case are, that their mother and her father were natives born of the Province of South Carolina before the Declaration of Independence; that, in 1781, while Charleston and James Island, where the land lies and she and her father resided, were in possession of the British, their mother married their father, a British officer. That the descent was cast in 1782; and in December of that year, when the town was evacuated, she went to England with her husband, and resided there until her death in 1801: in which interval the appellants were born in England.

There is no question about the right of the appellees, if the right of the appellants cannot be maintained.

The first of the grounds taken below, to wit, the statute of Edward III., was not pressed in argument here, and must be regarded as abandoned. The second requires, therefore, our sole attention.

Was Mrs. Shanks to be regarded as a British subject, within the meaning of our treaties with Great Britain? If so, then the land which was acquired in 1782 has the peculiar incident attached to it of being inheritable by aliens, subjects of Great Britain.

Until the adoption of the Federal Constitution, titles to land, and the laws of allegiance, were exclusively subjects of State cognizance. Up to the time, therefore, when this descent was cast upon the mother, the State of South Carolina was supreme and uncontrollable on the subject now before us.

By the adoption of the Constitution, the power of the States in this respect was subject-252] ed to some modification. But *although restrained in some measure from determining who cannot inherit, I consider her power still supreme in determining who can inherit. On this subject her own laws and her own courts furnish the only rule for governing this or any other tribunal.

By an Act of the State passed in 1712, the common law of Great Britain was incorporated into the jurisprudence of South Carolina. In the year 1782, when this descent was cast, it was the law of the land; and it becomes imperative upon these appellants, after admitting that their parent was a native-born citizen of South Carolina, daughter of a native-born citizen of South Carolina, to show on what ground they can escape from the operation of these leading maxims of common law: Nemo potest exuere patriam, and proles sequitur sortem paternam.

The unyielding severity with which the courts of Great Britain have adhered to the first of these maxims in Dr. Storrie's case, furnished by Sir Mathew Hale, and in Æneas M'Donald's case, to be found in Foster, leaves no ground of complaint for its most ordinary application in the case of descent, and its most liberal application when perpetuating a privilege.

The Treaty of Peace can afford no ground to the appellants, nor the construction which has extended the provisions of that treaty to the case of escheat; for the question here is not between the alien and the State, but between aliens and other individual claimants. The words of the sixth article of the Treaty of 1783 are the same as those in the preliminary Treaty of 1782: "There shall be no future confiscations made, or future prosecutions commenced against any person or persons by reason of the part which he or they may have taken in the present war."

Conceding that escheat may be comprised under confiscation, a decision between individuals claiming under no act of force imputable to the State, cannot possibly be considered under that term.

Nor will her case be aided by the following words of that article, to wit: "nor shall any person on that account (the part which he or they may have taken in the present war) suffer *any future loss or damage either in 253 person, liberty, or property." The decision of the State court gives the most liberal extension possible to this provision of the treaty, since it declares that Mrs. Shanks never was precluded by any act of hers from claiming this property. It never entered into the minds of that court that the very innocent act of marrying a British officer, was to be tortured into "taking a part in the present war;" nor that following that officer to England and residing there under coverture, was to be imputed to her a cause of forfeiture.

I consider it very important to a clear view of this question, that its constituents or several members should be viewed separately.

The State court has not pretended to impugn the force of the Treaty of 1794, or denied the obligation to concede every right that can be fairly and legally asserted under it; but has only adjudged that the case of the appellants is not one which on legal grounds of construction can be brought within its provision.

The words of the treaty are: "It is agreed that British subjects who now hold lands in the territories of the United States, and American citizens who now hold lands in the dominions of his majesty," shall continue to hold and transmit to their heirs, &c.

The decision of the State court which we are now reviewing, presents two propositions:

1. That Mrs. Shanks was, in the year 1782, when the descent was cast, and continued to be in 1794, when the treaty was ratified, a citizen of South Carolina.

2. That she was not a British subject in the sense of the treaty.

As to the first of these two propositions, I consider it as altogether set at rest by the decision itself; it is established by paramount authority, and this court can no more say that it is not the law of South Carolina, than they could deny the validity of a statute of the State passed in 1780, declaring that to be her character, and those her privileges.

The only question, therefore, that this court can pass upon is, whether, being recognized under that character, and possessing those 254]*rights, she is still a British subject within the provisions of the treaty.

It is no sufficient answer to this question that it cannot be denied that Mrs. Shanks was a British subject. She was so in common with the whole American people. The argument, therefore, proves too much, if it proves anything; since it leads to the absurdity of supposing that Great Britain was stipulating for the protection of her enemies, and imposing on us an obligation in favor of our own citizens.

It also blends and confounds the national character of those, to separate and distinguish whom was the leading object of the Treaty of 1783.

It cannot be questioned that the Treaty of 1783 must have left Mrs. Shanks a British subject, or the Treaty of 1794 cannot aid her offspring. And the idea of British subject under the latter treaty, will be best explained by reference to its meaning in that of 1783. The two treaties are in pari materia.

The provisions of the third article show that persons who come within the description of "people of the United States," were distinguished from subjects of Great Britain. That article stipulates for a right in the people of the United States to resort to the Gulf of St. Lawrence for fishing; a stipulation wholly nugatory, if not distinguishable from subjects of Great Britain.

The fifth article is more explicit in the distinction. It first contains a provision in favor of real British subjects, then one in favor of persons resident in districts in possession of his majesty's arms; and then stipulates that persons of any other description shall have liberty to go to and remain twelve months in the United States to adjust their affairs. These latter must have included the loyalists who had been banished or in any way subjected to punishment, who are explicitly distinguished from real British subjects, and thus classed, in order to avoid the question to whom their allegiance was due, or rather, because, by the same treaty, the king having renounced all claim to their allegiance, could no longer distinguish them as British subjects.

Can those any longer be denominated British 255]* subjects *whose allegiance the King of Great Britain has solemnly renounced?

I know of no test more solemn or satisfactory than the liability to the charge of treason; not by reason of temporary allegiance, for that is gone with change of domicile; were those who could claim the benefit of the king's renunciation to the colonies, subject to any other than temporary allegiance, while commorant in Great Britain? I say they were not. Their right to inherit is not a sufficient test of that liability as to other nations, for that right results from a different principle, the exemption of a British subject from being disfranchised, while free from crime.

Was Mrs. Shanks an individual to whose allegiance the king had renounced his claim?

The commencement of the Revolution found us all, indeed, professing allegiance to the British crown, but distributed into separate communities, altogether independent of each other, and each exercising within its own limits its sovereign powers, legislative, executive and judicial. We were dependent, it is true, upon the crown of Great Britain, but as to all the world beside, foreign and independent. It lies, then, at the basis of our Revolution, that when we threw off our allegiance to Great Britain, every member of each body politic stood in the relation of subject to no other power than the community of which he then constituted a member. Those who owed allegiance to the king, as of his Province of South Carolina, thenceforward owed allegiance to South Carolina. The courts of this country all consider this transfer of allegiance as resulting from the Declaration of Independence; the British from its recognition by the Treaty of Peace. But as to its effect, the British courts concur in our view of it. For, in the case of Thomas v. Acklam (2 B. & C., 229), the language of the British court is this: "A declaration that a State shall be free, sovereign and independent, is a declaration that the people composing that State shall no longer be considered as the subjects of that sovereign by whom the declaration is made."

From the previous relations of the colonies and mother country, it is obvious that the Declaration of Independence *must have [256 found many persons resident in the country besides those whose allegiance was marked by the unequivocal circumstance of birth; many native-born British subjects voluntarily adhered to the Americans, and many foreigners had by settlement, pursuits or principles, devoted themselves to her cause.

Whatever questions may have arisen as to the national character or allegiance of these as to the case under review, which is that of a native-born citizen of South Carolina, there would be no doubt. And the courts of that State have put it beyond a doubt, that the Revolution transferred her allegiance to that State.

Whoever will weigh the words "real British subjects," used in the fifth article, and consider the context, can come to but one conclusion, to wit, that it must mean British subjects to whose allegiance the States make no claim. "Estates that have been confiscated belonging to real British subjects" are the words. Now, it is notorious that, although, generally speaking, the objects of those confiscations were those to whose allegiance the States laid claim, yet in many instances the estates of British subjects resident in England or this country, or elsewhere, were confiscated, because they were British subjects, on the charge of adhering to the enemy. But if the right of election had ever been contemplated, why should the term real have been inserted? The loyalists were British subjects, and had given the most signal proofs of their election to remain such. What possible meaning can be attached to the term real, unless it raised a distinction to their prejudice? And, historically, we know that Great Britain acknowledged their merits by making large provisions for their indemnification; because for them there was no provision made for restoring their property.

It has been argued that the British courts, in construing the Treaty of Peace, have recognized this right of election, and the case of Thomas v. Acklam, before cited, is supposed to establish it. But a very little attention to that case will prove the contrary. It is in fact the converse of the present case. Mrs. Thomas was the daughter of Mr. Ludlow, an American citizen born before the Revolution, and was 257 born in America long after the separation; so that her alien character was unquestionable, unless protected by the statute of Geo. II. explaining those of Anne and Edward. The decision of the Court of King's Bench is, that to bring herself within the provisions of the statute, her father must be shown at her birth to have been both a native born and a subject of Great Britain; that by the Treaty of Peace the king had renounced all claims to his allegiance, and his subsequent residence in America proved his acceptance of that renunciation.

But when did South Carolina renounce the allegiance of Mrs. Shanks? We have the evidence of the States having acquired it; when did she relinquish it? Or, if it be placed on the footing of an ordinary contract, when did South Carolina agree to the dissolution of this contract, or when did she withdraw her protection, and thus dissolve the right to claim obedience or subjection?

It is true, the Treaty of 1794 drops the word real, and stipulates generally for British subjects and American citizens; construing the two treaties as instruments in pari materia. This circumstance is of little consequence; and however we construe it, the argument holds equally good, that the treaty could have been only meant to aid those who needed its aid, not those who were entitled under our own laws to every right which the treaty meant to secure; that is, those whose alien character prevented their holding lands, unless aided by some treaty or statute. Mrs. Shanks was not of this character or description; her right at all times to inherit has been recognized by paramount authority. But it is contended that it was at her election whether to avail herself of her birthright as a citizen of the State, or her birthright as a subject of Great Britain.

To this there may be several answers given. And first, the admission of this right would make her case no better under the construction of the treaty; for, having no need of its protection, as has been authentically recognized by the State decision, it cannot be supposed that she was an object contemplated by the treaty; 258 she was not a British subject in the sense of those treaties, especially if the two treaties be construed on the principle of instruments in pari materia.

Second, if she had the right of election, at what time did she exercise it? for she cannot claim under her election, and against her election. If she exercised it prior to her father's death, then was she an alien at his death, and could not take even a right of entry by descent, as has been distinctly recognized in Hunter v. Fairfax (7 Cranch, 619), and I think in some other cases. She then had nothing for the treaty to act upon.

But if her election was not complete until subsequent to her father's death, then it is clearly settled, that taking the oath of allegiance to a foreign sovereign produces no forfeiture, and she still had no need of a treaty to secure her rights to land previously descended to her. If the facts be resorted to, and the court is called upon to fix the period of her transit, it would be obliged to confine itself to the act of her marrying against her allegiance. It is the only free act of her life stated upon the record, for from thence she continued sub potestate viri; and if she or her descendants were now interested in maintaining her original allegiance, we should hear it contended, and be compelled to admit, that no subsequent act of her life could be imputed to her because of her coverture; and even her marriage was probably during her infancy.

But, lastly, I deny this right of election altogether, as existing in South Carolina, more especially at that time.

I had this question submitted to me on my circuit some years since, and I then leaned in favor of this right of election. But more mature reflection has satisfied me that I then gave too much weight to natural law and the suggestions of reason and justice in a case which ought to be disposed of upon the principles of political and positive law, and the law of nations.

That a government cannot be too liberal in extending to individuals the right of using their talents and seeking their fortunes wherever their judgments may lead them, I readily agree. There is no limit short of its own security, to which a wise and beneficent government would restrict its liberality on this subject. But the question now to be decided is of a very different feature; it is not one of expediency, but of right. It is, to what extent may the powers of government be lawfully exercised in restraining individual volition on the subject of allegiance; and what are the rights of the individual when unaffected by positive legislation?

As the common law of Great Britain is the law of South Carolina, it would here, perhaps, be sufficient to state that the common law altogether denies the right of putting off allegiance. British subjects are permitted, when not prohibited by statute (as is the case with regard to her citizens), to seek their fortunes where they please, but always subject to their natural allegiance. And although it is not regarded as a crime to swear allegiance to a foreign state, yet their government stands uncommitted in the subject of the embarrassments in which a state of war between the governments of their natural, and that of their adopted allegiance, may involve the individual. On this subject the British government acts as circumstances may dictate to her policy. That policy is generally liberal; and as war is the calling of many of her subjects, she has not been rigorous in punishing them even when found with arms in their hands, where there has been no desertion, and no proclamation of recall. The right, however, to withdraw from their natural allegiance, is universally denied by the common law.

It is true that, without any act of her own, Mrs. Shanks found herself equally amenable to both governments under the application of this common law principle. But from this only one consequence followed, which is, that so far as related to rights to be claimed or acquired, or duties to be imposed under the laws of either government, she was liable to become the victim of the will or injustice of either.

If we were called upon to settle the claims of the two governments to her allegiance, upon the general principles applicable to allegiance even as recognized by the contending governments, we should be obliged to decide that the superior claim was in South Carolina. For, although before the Revolution a subordinate 260 State, yet it possessed every attribute of a distinct State; and upon principles of national law, the members of a State or political entity continue members of the State notwithstanding a change of government. The relations between the body politic and its members continue the same. The individual member and the national family remain the same, and every member which made up the body, continues in the eye of other nations in his original relation to that body. Thus we see that the American government is at this day claiming indemnity of France for the acts of those who had expelled the reigning family from the throne and occupied their place.

But it is obvious that, although the common law be the law of South Carolina, and its principles are hostile to the right of putting off our national allegiance, the constitution and legislative acts of South Carolina, when asserting her independence, must be looked into to determine whether she may not then have modified the rigor of the common law, and substituted principles of greater liberality.

South Carolina became virtually independent on the 4th of June, 1775. The association adopted by her Provincial Congress on that day constituted her in effect an independent body politic; and if in international affairs, the fact of exercising power be the evidence of legally possessing it, there was no want of facts to support the inference there; for officers were deposed, and at one time the most influential men in the State were banished under the powers assumed and exercised under that association. It required the indiscriminate subscription and acquiescence of all the inhabitants of the province, under pain of banishment.

Neither of the constitutions adopted in 1776 or 1778 contains any definition of allegiance, or designation of the individuals who were held bound in allegiance to the State; but the legislative acts passed under those constitutions will sufficiently show the received opinion on which the government acted in its legislation upon this subject.

Neither the ordinance for establishing an oath of abjuration and allegiance, passed February 13, 1777, nor the Act of March 28, 1778, entitled "An act to oblige every free male inhabitant of this State, above a certain age, to 261 give assurance of fidelity and allegiance to the same," holds out any idea of the right of election. The first requires the oath to be taken by anyone to whom it is tendered, and the last requires it to be taken by every male inhabitant above sixteen, under pain of perpetual banishment.

The preamble to the latter act, indeed, admits that protection and allegiance are reciprocal; but the whole course of its legislation shows that the Legislature understands the right of election to belong to the State alone, and an election to withdraw allegiance from the State as a crime in the individual. The eleventh, or penal clause, is very explicit on this subject.

Peters 3. U. S., Book 7.

It runs thus: "That if any person refusing or neglecting to take the oath prescribed by this act, and withdrawing from this State shall return to the same, then he shall be adjudged guilty of treason against this State, and shall, upon conviction thereof, suffer death as a traitor."

Now, therefore, where there is no allegiance, there can be no treason.

Since, then, the common law of England was the law of allegiance and of descents in South Carolina when this descent was cast upon the mother, and since remained unaltered by any positive act of legislation of the only power then possessing the right to legislate on the subject, it follows that the representatives of Mrs. Shanks can derive no benefit from her election, unless the right to elect is inherent and unalienable in its nature, and remains above the legislative control of society, notwithstanding the social compact.

All this doctrine I deny. I have already observed that governments cannot be too liberal in extending the right to individuals; but as to its being unalienable, or unaffected by the social compact, I consider it to be no more so than the right to hold, devise, or inherit the lands or acquisitions of an individual. The right to enjoy, transmit, and inherit the fruits of our own labor, or of that of our ancestors, stands on the same footing with the right to employ our industry wherever it can be best employed; and the obligation to obey the laws of the community on the subject of the right to emigrate, is as clearly to be inferred from the reason and nature of things, as the obligation to 262 use or exercise any other of our rights, powers, or faculties, in subordination to the public good. There is not a writer who treats upon the subject who does not qualify the exercise of the right to emigrate, much more that of putting off or changing our allegiance, with so many exceptions as to time and circumstances, as plainly to show that it cannot be considered as an unalienable or even perfect right. A state of war, want of inhabitants, indispensable talents, transfer of knowledge and wealth to a rival, and various other grounds, are assigned by writers on public law, upon which a nation may lawfully and reasonably limit and restrict the exercise of individual volition in emigrating or putting off our allegiance. All this shows, that whenever an individual proposes to remove, a question of right or obligation arises between himself and the community, which must be decided on in some mode. And what other mode is there but a reference to the positive legislation or received principles of the society itself? It is therefore a subject for municipal regulation; and the security of the individual lies in exerting his influence to obtain laws which will neither expose the community unreasonably on the one hand, nor restrain one individual unjustly on the other.

Nor have we anything to complain of in this view of the subject. It is a popular and flattering theory that the only legitimate origin of government is in compact, and the exercise of individual will. That this is not practically true, is obvious from history; for, excepting the State of Massachusetts, and the United States, there is not perhaps on record, an instance of a government purely originating in compact.

And even here, probably, not more than one-third of those subjected to the government had a voice in the contract. Women, and children under an age arbitrarily assumed, are necessarily excluded from the right of assent, and yet arbitrarily subjected. If the moral government of our Maker and our parents is to be deduced from gratuitous benefits bestowed on us, why may not the government that has shielded our infancy claim from us a debt of gratitude to be repaid after manhood? In the course of 263 nature, man has need *of protection and improvement long before he is able to reciprocate these benefits. These are purchased by the submission and services of our parents; why, then, should not those to whom we must be indebted for advantages so indispensable to the development of our powers, be permitted, to a certain extent, to bind us apprentice to the community from which they have been and are to be procured?

If it be answered that this power ought not to be extended unreasonably, or beyond the period when we are capable of acting for ourselves, the answer is obvious—by what rule is the limit to be prescribed, unless by positive municipal regulation?

It is of importance here, that it should be held in view that we are considering political, not moral obligations. The latter are universal and immutable, but the former must frequently vary according to political circumstances. It is the doctrine of the American court, that the issue of the Revolutionary War settled the point that the American States were free and independent on the 4th of July, 1776. On that day Mrs. Shanks was found under allegiance to the State of South Carolina as a natural-born citizen to a community, one of whose fundamental principles was that natural allegiance was unalienable; and this principle was at no time relaxed by that State, by any express provision, while it retained the undivided control over the rights and liabilities of its citizens.

But it is argued that this lady died long after the right of passing laws of naturalization was ceded to the United States, and the United States have in a series of laws admitted foreigners to the right of citizenship, and imposed an oath which contains an express renunciation of natural and every other kind of allegiance. And so of South Carolina; she had previously passed laws to the same effect. In 1704 she passed a law “for making aliens free of this Province,” which remained in force until 1784, when it was superseded by the Act of the 26th of March, “to confer the right of citizenship on aliens;” to which succeeded that of the 22d of March, 1786, entitled “An act to confer 264 certain *rights and privileges on aliens, and for repealing the act therein mentioned.”

In both the latter acts the oath of allegiance is required to be taken; and that oath, as prescribed by the Act of the 28th of March, 1778, contains an abjuration of allegiance to any other power, and particularly to the King of Great Britain.

These legislative acts, it cannot be denied, do seem to hold out the doctrine of the right to change our allegiance, and do furnish ground for insisting that it is absurd in a government to deny to its own citizens the right of doing that which it encourages to be done by the citizens of other States.

Most certainly it is to be regretted that Congress has not long since passed some law upon the subject, containing a liberal extension of this right to individuals, and prescribing the form and circumstances under which it is to be exercised, and by which the Act of Expatriation shall be authenticated. A want of liberality in legislating on this subject might involve the government in inconsistency; but the question here is whether, in absence of such declaration of the public will or opinion, courts of justice are at liberty to fasten upon the government, by inference, a doctrine negatived by the common law, and which is in its nature subject to so many modifications.

I think not. Great Britain exercises the same power either by the king's patent or by legislative enactment; and permanent laws exist in that country which extend the rights of naturalization to men by classes, or by general description. Yet, this implication has never been fastened upon her; nor is the doctrine of her common law less sternly adhered to, or less frequently applied, even to the utmost extent of the punishing power of her courts of justice. In practice she moderates its severities; but in this it is will and policy that guides her, not any relaxation of the restriction upon individual rights.

There is, indeed, one prominent difficulty hanging over this argument which it is impossible to remove. If it proves *anything, [265 it proves too much; since the inference, if resulting at all, must extend to put off one's allegiance, as well to adopted citizens as to natural-born citizens, and to all times and all circumstances. What, then, is that obligation, that allegiance worth, which may be changed an hundred times a day? or by passing over from one army to another, perhaps in the day of battle? The truth is, it leaves but a shadow of a tie to society, and converts that which is considered as one of the most sacred and solemn obligations that can be entered into (although confirmed by the sanctity of an oath) into nothing but an illusory ground of confidence between individuals and their governments.

The idea brings man back to a state of nature; at liberty to herd with whom he pleases, and connected with society only by the caprice of the moment.

Upon the whole, I am of opinion that Mrs. Shanks continued, as she was born, a citizen of South Carolina; and, of course, unprotected by the British treaty.

I have taken a general view of the subject, although it does not appear precisely whether or not Mrs. Shanks had attained an age sufficiently mature to make an election before marriage, or was ever discovered during her life, so as to be able to elect after marriage. I have reasoned on the hypothesis most favorable to her, admitting that she had made an election in authentic form. Nor have I confined myself to authority; since I wished, as far as I was instrumental, to have this question settled on principle. But it does appear to me that, in the case of Coze v. M'Leaine, this court has decided against the right of election most expressly; for if ever the exercise of will or choice might be inferred from evidence, it is hardly possible for a stronger case to be made out than that which is presented by the facts in that case.

With regard to State decisions upon this question, I would remark that it is one so exclusively of State cognizance, that the courts of the respective States must be held to be best acquainted with their own law upon it. Though every other State in the Union, therefore, should have decided differently from the State of South Carolina, their decisions could only determine their own respective law upon 266] this subject, and *could not weaken that of South Carolina with regard to her own law of allegiance and descents. It does appear singular, that we are here called upon to overrule a decision of the courts of South Carolina on a point on which they ought to be best informed, and to decide an individual to be a British subject, to whose allegiance the British courts have solemnly decided the king has no claim. On this point the case of Ludlow, in Thomas v. Acklam, is the case of Mrs. Shanks; it is impossible to distinguish them. The State of South Carolina acknowledges her right to all the benefits of allegiance; the King of Great Britain disavows all claim to her allegiance; and yet we are called upon to declare her a British subject.

I have not had opportunity for examining the decisions of all the States upon this subject, but I doubt not they will generally be found to concur in principle with the court of South Carolina, except so far as they depend upon local law. This is certainly the case in Massachusetts. The decision in the case Palmer v. Downer, does, it is true, admit the right of the election; but besides that that case is very imperfectly, and, I may add, unauthoritatively reported, it is most certainly overruled in the subsequent case of Martin v. Woods.

Before I quit the cause it may be proper to notice a passage in a book recently published in this country, and which has been purchased and distributed under an Act of Congress; I mean Gordon's Digest. There is no knowing what degree of authority it may be supposed to acquire by this act of patronage; but if there is any weight in the argument in favor of expatriation drawn from the Acts of Congress on that subject, I presume the argument will at some future time be applied to the doctrines contained in this book. If so, it was rather an unhappy measure to patronize it; since we find in it a multitude of nisi prius decisions, obiter dicta, and certainly some striking misapprehensions, ranged on the same shelf with Acts of Congress. On the particular subject now under consideration, art. 1649, we find the following sentence: "Citizens of the United States have a right to expatriate themselves in time of war 267] as well as in *time of peace, until restrained by Congress;" and for this doctrine the author quotes Talbot v. Jansen (3 Dall.), and the case of the Santissima Trinidad (7 Wheat., 348); in both which cases the author has obviously mistaken the argument of counsel for the opinion of the court; for the court in both cases expressly waive expressing an opinion, as not called for by the case, since, if conceded, the facts were not sufficient to sustain the defense.

The author also quotes a case from 1 Peters' Peters 3.

C. R., which directly negatives the doctrine, and a case from 4 Hall's Law Journal, 462, which must have been quoted to sustain the opposite doctrine. It is the case of The United States v. Williams, in which the Chief Justice of the United States presided, and in which the right of election is expressly negatived, and the individual who pleaded expatriation is convicted and punished.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Supreme Court of Appeals in Law and Equity in and for the State of South Carolina, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is considered and declared by this court that Ann Shanks, the mother of the original defendants, was at the time of her death a British subject, within the true intent and meaning of the ninth article of the Treaty of Amity, Commerce and Navigation made between his Britannic majesty and the United States of America on the 19th of November, 1794, and that the said original defendants, as her heirs and British subjects, are capable to take, and did take by descent from her the moiety of the land in the proceedings mentioned, and are entitled to the proceeds of the sale thereof, now in the registry of the Circuit Court of Equity, as in the said proceedings mentioned. It is therefore considered and adjudged by this court, that there is error in the decree of the said Court of Appeals in Equity of the State of South Carolina, in affirming the decree of the Circuit Court, in said proceedings mentioned, whereby it was ordered and decreed, that the money arising from the sale of the land in question, theretofore reserved *subject to the order of [268 the court, be paid over to the petitioners, as the only heirs who are capable of taking the same. And it is further ordered and adjudged by this court, that for this cause the decree of the Circuit Court aforesaid, and of the Court of Appeals aforesaid be, and each of them is hereby reversed. And it is further ordered and adjudged by this court, that the cause be remanded to the said Court of Appeals, with directions that a decree be entered therein, that the said moiety of the said proceeds of the said sale be paid over to the original defendants (the present plaintiffs in error) as their right, and that such further proceedings be had therein as to justice and equity may in the premises appertain.

Cited—3 Pct., 99; 14 Pet., 628; 19 How., 577; 20 How., 20; 16 Wall., 434; 10 Otto, 487, 490,

*JAMES D. WOLF [269

v.

GEORGE F. USHER.

Practice—jurisdiction.

Where the point on which the judges of the Circuit Court divided in opinion was not certified, but the point of difference was to be ascertained from the whole record, the court refused to take jurisdiction of the case.

THIS cause came before the court on a certificate of a division between the judges of the Circuit Court of the District of Rhode Island.

When the ease was opened by the counsel for the plaintiff, it was found on inspecting the record, that the particular point on which the judges of the Circuit Court had differed, was not certified. The whole record had been sent up, and it contained a certificate that the judges of the court had differed in opinion, without a specific statement of what the difference was.

The court refused to take jurisdiction of the cause, and remanded the same to the Circuit Court of Rhode Island, with directions to proceed therein according to law.

Mr. Cove, for plaintiff; Mr. Whipple, for defendant.

270*] *WILLIAM MCCLUNY, Plaintiff in Error,

WYLLIS SILLIMAN, Defendant in Error.

Refusal of register of land-office to enter application—Ohio statute of limitations—lex fori—construction of statutes of limitations in general.

The plaintiff sued the defendant, as register of the United States land-office in Ohio, for damages, for having refused to note on his books applications made by him for the purchase of land within his district. The declaration charged the register with this refusal, the lands had never been applied for nor sold, and were at the time of the application liable to be so applied for and sold. The statute of limitations is a good plea to the suit.

It is a well-settled principle that a statute of limitations is the law of the forum, and operates upon all who submit themselves to its jurisdiction. [276]

Under the thirty-fourth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, the Acts of Limitations of the several States, where no special provision has been made by Congress, form a rule of decision in the courts of the United States, and the same effect is given to them as is given in the State courts. [277]

Construction of the statute of limitations of the State of Ohio. [278]

Where the statute of limitations is not restricted to particular causes of action, but provides that the action, by its technical denomination, shall be barred if not brought within a limited time, every cause for which such action may be prosecuted is within the statute. [278]

In giving a construction to the statute of limitations of Ohio, the action being barred by its denomination, the court cannot look into the cause of action. They may do this in those cases where actions are barred for causes specified in the statute; for the statute only operates against such actions, when prosecuted on the grounds stated. [278]

Of late years the courts in England and in this country have considered statutes of limitations more favorably than formerly. They rest upon sound policy, and tend to the peace and welfare of society. The courts do not now, unless compelled by the force of former decisions, give a strained construction, to evade the effect of those statutes. By requiring those who complain of injuries to seek redress by action at law within a reasonable time, a salutary vigilance is imposed, and an end is put to litigation. [278]

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Ohio.

In the Circuit Court of Ohio, the plaintiff in error instituted a suit on the 15th of December, 1823, against the defendant, who was register of the United States land-office at Zanesville, to recover damages for having, as register, refused to enter an application in the books of his office, for certain lands in his district; the entry having been required to be made according to the provisions of the tenth section of the Act of Congress, passed the 18th of May, 1796, entitled "An Act providing for the [*271 sale of the lands of the United States, in the territory north-west of the River Ohio, and above the mouth of the Kentucky River." The declaration charges that the register, on the 2d of August, 1810, refused to enter the application, although the lands had never been legally applied for or sold, and were then liable to be applied for and sold.

The defendant pleaded not guilty, and not guilty within six years before the commencement of the suit. To the latter plea there was a demurrer, and joinder in demurrer. The Circuit Court overruled the demurrer, and sustained the plea of the statute of limitations. The plaintiff prosecuted this writ of error and sought to reverse the judgment on the grounds:

1. That the statute of limitations does not apply to an action upon the ease brought for an act of nonfeasance or misfeasance in office.

2. That no statute of limitations of the State of Ohio, then in force, is pleadable to an action upon the case brought by a citizen of one State against a citizen of another, in the Circuit Court of the United States for malfeasance or nonfeasance in office, in a ministerial officer of the general government; and especially where the plaintiff's rights accrued to him under a law of Congress.

Mr. Doddridge, for the plaintiff in error, argued that there are many cases within the words of the statute of 21 James I., ch. 16, for limitation of personal actions, which are not within its meaning; as debt against a sheriff for an escape; debt against a sheriff for money levied; actions ex maleficio; debt for not setting out tithes under the statute, although founded on the highest record, an act of Parliament; debt on award, although founded on contract. (1 Saund. Rep., tit. Statute; 5 Bac., 509; 2 Lev., 191; Esp. N. P., 653.)

Out of the clause limiting actions for words, are excepted, slander of title; scandalum magnatum. (Cro. Ch., 141; Esp. N. P., 519.)

The statute does not extend to trusts, to charities or to legacies. (3 Bac. Ab., 510; [*272 2 Lord Ray., 852, 935, 1204; Salk., 361, pl. 11; 5 Mod., 308; 1 Wash., 145; 4 Munf., 222.)

Statutes of limitation are leges fori; and it rests with the sovereign power of the State to say how far the interests of the society it represents require that its own courts shall be kept open to give redress in each particular case, or whether there shall be any limitation of personal actions. It peculiarly belongs to each government to say how long its ministerial officers shall be exposed to the claims of those who consider themselves aggrieved by their acts of misfeasance or nonfeasance; consequently, in such cases, the statutes of limitation of one State cannot be pleaded in bar in the courts of another State. (2 Mass., 84; 1 Caines, 402; 3 Johns., 261, 263; 2 Johns., 198; 2 Vern., 540; 13 East, 439, 450; 7 Mass., 515; 3 Johns. Ch. Rep., 217, 219; 17 Mass., 55.)

Neither in Virginia, nor in Pennsylvania, nor in New York, are cases found of a plea of the statute of limitations in an action arising ex maleficio. It is claimed, that the right to such a plea does not exist in the courts of either of those States. There are no cases in this court. In all those in which the plea of the statute of limitations has been sustained, the statutes of the State have been pleaded to suits in the federal courts. (2 Cranch., 272, 1 Condensed Rep., 411; Hopkirk v. Bell, 3 Cranch, 454, 1 Condensed Rep., 595; Mundeville et al. v. Wilson, 5 Cranch, 15; 7 Cranch, 156; 8 Cranch, 84; 3 Wheat., 541; 5 Wheat., 124; 6 Wheat., 481, 497.)

Peters 3.

The nature of the case prevents there being a State decision in affirmance of the principles claimed for the plaintiff in error. The question is no more or less than this: where a duty is created by an Act of Congress, to be performed by a ministerial officer of the general government for the benefit of a citizen of another State whose rights grow out of the same law, and the injured party, as a citizen of another State, sues the officer in a federal court for malfeasance or for nonfeasance, can that officer plead in bar a statute of the State made for the protection of its own ministerial officers?

273*] *The Circuit Court in the trial of civil actions arising under the law of a State, or cognizable by its courts, where a citizen of another State or a foreigner is plaintiff, act precisely as a State court, and is bound to interpret and enforce its laws as they are made to operate in the State courts.

If the law of Ohio can be pleaded at all, it is the Act of the 24th of January, 1810, which went into operation the 1st of June, 1810; the act which is the cause of action in this suit having been done in August, 1810. That law (4 Ohio Laws, page 62, sec. 1) provides "that all actions of trespass for assault, menace, battery, or wounding, actions of slander for words spoken or libel, or false imprisonment, shall be brought within one year next after the cause of such actions or suits; and all actions upon book accounts, and for forcible entry and detainer shall be brought within four years next after the cause of such actions and suits; and all actions of trespass upon real property, trespass, detinue, trover and conversion, and replevin, all actions on the case, or of debt for rent, shall be sued or brought within six years next after the cause of such action arose."

This act is not a copy of the statute of James I., ch. 16; and all the objections that would urge the exemption of suits, ex maleficio, from that statute, may be presented under the law of Ohio; other exceptions may also be claimed. "Actions on the case" are associated with actions arising ex contractu; and thus actions arising out of contract are only intended to be provided for—nothing is said in the law of actions ex maleficio.

If actions of this kind are embraced by the Act of 1810, they are only so by a forced construction of the words "actions on the case," associated and classed in the same statute with various actions arising ex contractu; while in a subsequent law of Ohio passed in 1824, they are described in express terms, and naturally associated in the same sentence with various other actions, arising ex delicto.

But if these actions are embraced in the Act of 1810, they must be such only as may be prosecuted against officers of the State. Actions against officers of the United States were not in the view or contemplation of the Legislature of 274*] *Ohio when the law was enacted, nor did they intend to afford protection to any officer but one of the State. Certainly, the Legislature 3, ture had not before them the protection of the registers of the United States land-office, from suits for a violation of duties by which the citizens of Ohio might be injured.

To apply the regulations of the several States to such cases would produce the absurdity and injustice of different laws, and different limitations existing in different States. If the power of State Legislatures to limit actions against officers of the United States is admitted, the power over those officers might be exercised in other and in oppressive legislative provisions.

The statute of Ohio cannot be enlarged by construction, so as to apply it to things not properly within State control, nor within the intention contemplated by those who enacted it.

Mr. Berrien, Attorney-General, for the defendant in error, contended, that the application and authority of State statutes of limitations to suits in the circuit courts of the United States, had been frequently decided in this court. What may have been the intention of the Legislature of the States in enacting limitation laws is not inquired into, and is not material; the only question is, whether the law applies to the case. (Farr v. Roberdeau, 3 Cranch, 174; 1 Condensed Rep., 483; Hopkirk v. Bell, 3 Cranch, 454; 1 Condensed Rep., 595; Marsteller v. M'Lean, 7 Cranch, 156, 158; King v. Riddle, 7 Cranch, 168; Bond v. Jay, 7 Cranch, 350; Clemenston v. Williams, 8 Cranch, 72, &c.)

It is admitted that this action was not commenced within six years, and that it is in its nature an action which would be within the operation of the law of Ohio, unless a construction shall be given to that law different from the general and usual import of its terms.

The argument that the association of the action on the case with debt for rent, proves that pecuniary actions were only to be barred, will not be found correct, as "forcible entry and book accounts" are in the same association.

*The plain and obvious construction [275 of the law is that which has been given by the Circuit Court. The different kinds of action, and causes of action upon which the limitations of the law were intended to operate, were in the view and purpose of the Legislature of Ohio; the association or classification was not because the cases were analogous, or had an affinity one to the other, but because of the intention that the action of the statute should be the same as to time on each of the members of the class.

The words of the statute of Ohio being general, unless the officers under the government of the United States are especially exempted, they may avail themselves of its provision. (Cited, 2 Stark. on Ev., 901; 1 Saund., 37; 3 Bacon, 509; Ballantine on Limitations, 88.)

Mr. Justice M'LEAN delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, as register of the United States land-office at Zanesville, in the District of Ohio. The declaration charges, that on the 2d of August, in the year 1810, the plaintiff produced to the defendant, in his office of register, the receipts of the receiver of public moneys at that office, as follows, viz.: one number three thousand two hundred and fifty-five, and another number three thousand two hundred and fifty-six, amounting together to the sum of one hundred and ninety dollars eighty-nine cents of moneys paid by the plaintiff to the receiver, for the purchase of public lands in the said district, being the one-twentieth part of the purchase money for section number six, in township number twelve, and range number thirteen, and fraction number five, in the same township and range adjoining the said section; and for section number twelve, and fraction number one, adjoining in township number thirteen, and range number fourteen of public lands within that district; and that the plaintiff then and there applied to the defendant for the purchase of the said lands, that is, each of the said sections with the fractions attached according to law, and requested that his 276] application *should be entered on the books of the defendant's office; upon which application, the defendant informed the plaintiff that the said lands had been sold at Marietta, before the establishment of the land-office at Zanesville; and if not so sold there, that they had not been offered at public sale at Zanesville; whereupon the plaintiff insisted on his applications, and requested to have them entered, according to the provisions of the tenth section of the Act of Congress, approved the 18th of May, 1796, entitled "An Act providing for the sale of the lands of the United States, in the territory north-west of the River Ohio, and above the mouth of Kentucky River." The declaration then charges, that the register refused to enter the application, although the lands had never been legally applied for nor sold, and were then liable to be applied for and sold. The damages are laid at fifty thousand dollars.

To this declaration the defendant pleaded not guilty, whereupon issue is joined; and not guilty within six years before the commencement of the suit. To the latter plea there is a general demurrer, and joinder in demurrer. The Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Ohio overruled this demurrer, and sustained the plea of the statute of limitations; and this writ of error is brought to reverse that decision.

For the plaintiff in error it is contended:

1. That the statute of limitations does not apply to an action upon the case, brought for an act of nonfeasance or malfeasance in office.

2. That no statute of limitations of the State of Ohio, then in force, is pleadable to an action upon the case brought by a citizen of one State against a citizen of another, in the Circuit Court of the United States, for malfeasance or nonfeasance in office, in a ministerial officer of the general government, and especially where the plaintiff's rights accrued to him under a law of Congress.

The decision in this cause depends upon the construction of the statute of Ohio, which prescribes the time within which certain actions must be brought. It is a well-settled principle 277] *that a statute of limitations is the law of the forum, and operates upon all who submit themselves to its jurisdiction.

In the thirty-fourth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, it is provided, "that the laws of the several States, except where the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States shall otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law, in the courts of the United States, in cases where they apply."

Under this statute, the Acts of Limitations of the several States, where no special provision has been made by Congress, form a rule of decision in the courts of the United States, and the same effect is given to them as is given in the State courts. The act in question provides, "that all actions hereinafter mentioned, shall be sued or brought within the time hereinafter limited; all actions of trespass for assault, menace, battery and wounding, actions of slander for words spoken or libel, and for false imprisonment, within one year next after the cause of such actions or suits; and all actions of book accounts, or for forcible entry and detainer, or forcible detainer, within four years after the cause of such action or suits; and all actions of trespass upon real property, trespass, detinue, trover and conversion and replevin, all actions upon the case, and of debt for rent, shall be sued or brought within six years next after the cause of such actions or suits."

It is contended, that this statute cannot be so construed as to interpose a bar to any remedy sought against an officer of the United States, for a failure in the performance of his duty; that such a case could not have been contemplated by the Legislature; that the language of the statute does not necessarily embrace it; and, consequently, the statute can only apply in cases of nonfeasance or malfeasance in office, to persons who act under the authority of the State, and are amenable to it.

It is not probable that the Legislature of Ohio, in the passage of this statute, had any reference to the misconduct of an officer of the United States. Nor does it seem to have been their intention to restrict the provision of the statute *to any particular causes for [278 which the action on the case will lie. In the actions of trespass, debt, and covenant specified, the particular causes of action barred by the statute are stated; but this is not done in the action on the case, nor is it done in the action of detinue, trover and conversion, and replevin.

Where the statute is not restricted to particular causes of action, but provides that the action, by its technical denomination, shall be barred if not brought within a limited time, every cause for which the action may be prosecuted is within the statute.

If the statute required the action of debt for rent to be brought within six years from the time the cause of action arose, the bar could extend to no other action of debt. But, if the statute provided that all actions of debt should be prosecuted within six years, then it would operate against the action, for whatever cause it was brought.

The action on the case must be brought within six years from the time the cause of action arose, and it is immaterial what that cause may be; the statute bars the remedy, by this form of action, if it be not prosecuted within the time.

In giving a construction to this statute, where the action is barred by its denomination, the court cannot look into the cause of action. They may do this in those cases where actions are barred when brought for causes specified in the statute, for the statute only operates against such actions when prosecuted on the grounds stated.

By bringing his action on the case, the plaintiff has selected the appropriate remedy for the injury complained of. This remedy the statute bars. Can the court, then, by referring to the ground of the action, take the case out of the statute.

The demurrer admits the plea of the statute; and as it declares, in express terms, that the action is barred, the court can give no other effect to it by construction.

Of late years the courts in England, and in this country, have considered statutes of limitations more favorably than formerly. They rest upon sound policy, and tend to the peace and welfare of society. The courts do not now, 279 unless *compelled by the force of former decisions, give a strained construction, to evade the effect of those statutes. By requiring those who complain of injuries to seek redress by action at law within a reasonable time, a salutary vigilance is imposed, and an end is put to litigation.

The judgment in this case must be affirmed.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Ohio, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed with costs.

See S. C., 2 Wheat., 369; 6 Wheat., 598.

Cited—9 How., 414; 2 Black., 603; 1 Wall., 210; 13 Wall., 249; 20 Wall., 150; 1 Dill., 377; 7 Blatchf. 231, 433; 9 Blatchf., 127; 2 Biss., 15; 6 Bank. Reg., 318; 12 Bank. Reg., 426, 540; 1 Cliff., 290, 439.

280* JAMES JACKSON, on the Demise of HARMAN V. HART, Plaintiff in Error,

v.

ELIAS LAMPHIRE, Defendant in Error.

State laws and State constitutions—violation of contract—power of State Legislature.

This court has no authority, on a writ of error from a State court, to declare a State law void on account of its collision with a State constitution; it not being a case embraced in the Judiciary Act, which gives the power of a writ of error to the highest judicial tribunal of the State. [288]

The plaintiff in error claimed to recover the land in controversy, having derived his title under a patent granted by the State of New York to John Cornelius. He insisted that the patent created a contract between the State and the patentee, his heirs and assigns, that they should enjoy the land free from any legislative regulations to be made in violation of the constitution of the State, and that an Act passed by the Legislature of New York, subsequent to the patent, did violate that contract. Under that act commissioners were appointed to investigate the contending titles to all the lands held under such patents as that granted to John Cornelius, and by their proceedings, without the aid of a jury, the title of the defendants in error was established against, and defeating the title under a deed made by John Cornelius, the patentee, and which deed was executed under the patent.

This is not a case within the clause of the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits a State from passing laws which shall impair the obligation of contracts. The only contract made by the State is a grant to John Cornelius, his heirs and assigns of the land. The patent contains no covenant to do or not to do any further act in relation to the land; and the court are not inclined to create a contract by implication. The Act of the Legislature of New York does not attempt to take the land from the patentee, the grant remains in full effect; and the proceedings of the commissioners under the law, operated upon titles derived under, and not adversely to the patent. [289]

It is within the undoubted powers of State Legislatures to pass recording acts by which the elder grantee shall be postponed to a younger, if the prior deed is not recorded within a limited time; and the power is the same, whether the deed is dated before or after the recording act. Though the effect of such a deed is to render the prior deed fraudulent and void against a subsequent purchaser, it is not a law violating the obligation of contracts. So, too, is the power to pass limitation laws. Reasons of sound policy have led to the general adoption of laws of this description, and their validity cannot be questioned. The time and manner of their operation, the exceptions to them, and the acts from which the time limited shall begin to run, will generally depend on the sound discretion of the Legislature, according to the nature of the titles, the situation of the country, and the emergency which leads to their enactment. Cases may occur where the provisions of a law on these subjects may be so unreasonable as to amount to a denial of a right, and to call for the interposition of this court. [290]

THIS was a writ of error to the Court for the Trial of Impeachments and Correction of Errors for the State of New York.

*An action of ejectment was commenced in the Supreme Court of New York, to May Term, 1825, for a tract of land, part of lot number thirty-six, in Dryden, Tompkins County, part of the military tract, and formerly part of Onondaga County. The cause was tried in June, 1826, and a verdict and judgment were rendered for the defendant. On the trial of the cause, a bill of exceptions was tendered by the plaintiff, and a NOTE.—Jurisdiction of U. S. Supreme Court to declare a State law void as in conflict with a State constitution.

The Supreme Court has no authority on a writ of error from a State court to declare a State law void on account of its collision with a State constitution. Withers v. Buckley, 20 How., 84; Medberry v. Ohio, 24 How., 413; Porter v. Foley, 24 How., 14; Jackson v. Lamphire, supra; Satterlee v. Mathewson, 2 Pet., 380; Solomon v. Graham, 15 Wall., 208; W. Tennessee Bank v. Citizens' Bank, 13 Wall., 432, 14 Wall., 9; Palmer v. Marston, 13 Wall., 10; Seirer v. Haskell, 13 Wall., 12.

The Supreme Court of the United States has no power, under the 25th sec. of the Judiciary Act of 1789, to revise the decree of a State court, where no question was raised or decided in the State court upon the validity or construction of an Act of Congress, nor upon the authority exercised under it, but on a State law only. McBride v. Hoey, 11 Pet., Peters 3.

167; Grand Gulf R. R. Co. v. Marshall, 12 How., 165; Watts v. Territory of Washington, 91 U. S., 1 Otto, 580.

It is the peculiar province and privilege of the State courts to construe their own statutes; and it is no part of the functions of the Supreme Court to review their decisions, except when specially authorized by statute. Commercial Bank v. Buckingham, 5 How., 317; Adams v. Preston, 22 How., 473; Congdon Mining Co. v. Goodman, 2 Black, 574; Scott v. Jones, 5 How., 243; Smith v. Adsit, 16 Wall., 185; Klinger v. Missouri, 13 Wall., 257; Murray v. Gibson, 15 How., 421; Nichols v. Levy, 5 Wall., 433.

When the Supreme Court of the United States have jurisdiction to review decrees or judgments of State courts, see note to Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat., 304; note to Matthews v. Zane, 4 Cranch, 382; and note, to Gibbons v. Ogden, 6 Wheat., 448; also Houston v. Moore, 3 Wheat., 433; also note to Williams v. Norris, 12 Wheat., 117.

writ of error was prosecuted by him to the Supreme Court of Errors of the State of New York, where the judgment of the court below was affirmed; and the plaintiff brought up the case to this court by writ of error. The title of the plaintiff, as stated in the bill of exceptions, was derived under letters patent, for the whole lot number thirty-six, issued to John Cornelius, and his heirs and assigns, under the great seal of the State of New York, dated the 17th of July, 1790; and a conveyance in fee of the lot from the patentee to Henry Hart, dated the 17th of January, 1784, duly proved and deposited for record, according to the provisions of a statute of the State, on the 25th of April, 1795. Evidence was also given to prove that Henry Hart died some time in the summer of 1788, leaving the lessor of the plaintiff his heir-at-law, he being then a minor, aged about five years. That about the year 1791, he was taken to Canada by his paternal uncle, and afterwards entered into the employ of the North-west Company, and continued in the same for upwards of sixteen years, and then returned to New York; and has since resided in Albany in that State.

The title of the defendant was derived from the same patent to John Cornelius, and under a deed executed by him, dated June 23, 1784, duly proved October 31, 1791, and deposited, according to the statute, April 3, 1795. By this deed, the premises in dispute were conveyed to Samuel Brown. On the 25th of January, 1793, Brown conveyed to William J. Vredenburg and John Patterson; on the 9th of June, 1800, Vredenburg, for himself and as attorney for Patterson, regularly constituted, conveyed to Gerret H. Van Wagoner; who on the 9th of June, 1800, conveyed to William J. Vredenburg; and by deed duly executed by Vredenburg, July 5, 1800, 282 acknowledged and recorded, *the premises were vested in Elias Lamphire, the defendant in error.

On the 24th of March, 1797, the Legislature of New York passed "An Act to settle disputes concerning the titles to lands in the County of Onondaga."

The preamble of that law recites:

"Whereas, a convention of delegates from a number of towns in the County of Onondaga have, by their petition presented to the Legislature, prayed that a law may be passed authorizing a speedy and equitable mode of settling disputes relative to the titles of land in that county: therefore, be it enacted," &c.

The first section appoints commissioners, with full power to hear, examine, award and determine, according to law and equity, all disputes and controversies respecting the titles, and all claims whatsoever to any lands in the County of Onondaga, and to examine any party or parties submitting to their examination and witnesses on oath, and to commit any witness refusing to be sworn or to answer any question or questions touching the premises, to the gaol of the county in which they may then sit, there to remain until he or she shall submit to be sworn, and to answer such question or questions: provided always, that no person shall be obliged to answer any question which may tend to charge himself or herself with any crime, nor shall any witness be compelled to answer any question or questions wherein he or she shall be interested.

The second section directs that the commissioners shall proceed to execute their trusts, and shall meet for the purpose at times most convenient, in the County of Onondaga, and shall cause their award or determination upon every claim or controversy respecting any lands in the said County of Onondaga, to be entered in a book or books to be by them provided for that purpose; which award or determination shall, after the expiration of two years after the making thereof, become binding and conclusive to all persons, except such as, conceiving themselves aggrieved by any such award or determination, shall within the said two years dissent from the same, and give notice thereof to the said commissioners *or file the same in the office of the [*283] clerk of the County of Onondaga; and shall also, if not in the actual possession of such land, within three years after such award or determination, commence a suit or suits, either at law or in equity, to recover the land or to establish his or her right to the same, and shall prosecute such suit or suits to effect; in which case, such award or determination shall not operate as a bar to such suit or suits, but if no such suit or suits are brought within the times aforesaid and prosecuted to effect, then the said award or determination of the commissioners shall be final and conclusive; and in case any such suit commenced within the time aforesaid shall abate by the death of the defendant, then the party dissenting, or if by his death, then his heirs or devisees, may at any time within one year revive such suit, or if necessary, commence a new suit for the purpose aforesaid, and prosecute the same with like effect as such first suit might have been prosecuted, if it had not abated as aforesaid; and the said commissioners are hereby directed to enter in the said book or books a note of the time of receiving every such dissent; and when they shall have executed the trusts and duties by this act committed to them, they shall deposit the said book or books in the office of the clerk of the said County of Onondaga, there to remain as records of their proceedings: provided always, that if the parties in any case will enter into an agreement before the said commissioners, to abide by their determination, then and in every such case the award or determination of the said commissioners shall be final and conclusive as to such parties and their heirs forever.

The third section directs notice of their appointment and of the time and place of their meeting to be given by the commissioners, and that the notice shall require all persons having any dispute or controversy respecting any title or claim to any land in the said County of Onondaga to appear in person, or by their agents or attorneys, before the said commissioners, at the time and place therein mentioned, to exhibit their claims, that the said commissioners may proceed in the execution of the trusts committed to them.

*By the sixth section it is declared, [*284] that as to all lands in the county to which no adverse claim shall be made, an entry to that effect shall be made in the books of the commissioners, but in cases of interfering claims they shall examine and determine the same; and in all cases where there are filed or recorded in the said office two or more deeds from one and the same person, or in the same right to different persons, if any persons interested under either of them shall neglect to make his claim, and in all cases where several persons appear to have claims to one and the same piece of land, and any of them do not appear before the said commissioners, they shall cause a notice to be published in the newspapers aforesaid, and continued for six weeks, requiring all persons interested in such lands to appear at a certain time and place therein mentioned, not less than six months from the date of such notice, and exhibit their claims to the same land; and after the expiration of the time therein mentioned, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to proceed to the examination and determination of all matters concerning the said land, and the title of the same, whether all or any of the parties interested therein appear and exhibit their claims or not; saving to all persons aggrieved by any such award or determination the right of dissenting and prosecuting in the manner aforesaid.

The seventh provides, that if the party dissenting from the award of the commissioners shall be in the actual possession of the premises, then the award of the commissioners shall be as to such person of no effect; and unless the party in whose favor the award of the commissioners shall be made, shall within three years commence a suit to establish his title to the land, and shall prosecute the same to effect, then he shall be forever barred of all right or claim to the land.

The eighth section declares, that neither the act nor anything therein contained shall be construed to the prejudice of any person under the age of twenty one years, or feme covert, or person not of sound mind, or in prison; if such infant, feme covert, person not sound of mind, or prisoner, shall within three years after coming 285 to the age of twenty-one years, becoming discoverd, of sound mind, and at liberty, make their dissent, and bring their suit and prosecute the same to effect.

The twelfth section prohibits the exercise of any powers under the act after the 1st day of June, 1800.

On the 17th of December, 1799, two of the commissioners made an award in the following terms:

"Having heard the proofs and allegations, and examined the title of such of the parties interested in lot number thirty-six, in the township of Dryden, in the County of Cayuga, as have appeared and exhibited claims to the said lot, and having also inspected the records and files remaining in the office of the clerk of the county aforesaid, relative thereto, and due deliberation being had thereon, we, the commissioners, appointed by and in pursuance of the act entitled "An act to settle disputes concerning titles of lands in the County of Onondaga," do, in pursuance of the authority given us in and by the said act, award and determine, that William J. Vredenburg and John Patterson are entitled to and stand seized in their demesne of an absolute estate of inheritance, in and to the same lot, subject to the Peters 3.

reservations, provisions, and conditions contained in the original grant."

Mr. Storrs, for the plaintiff in error, contended that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Error for the State of New York was erroneous, and should be reversed, for these reasons:

1. The letters patent, granting the lot to John Cornelius, created a contract with the grantee, his heirs and assigns, that they should enjoy the same free from any legislative regulations, to be made in violation of the constitution of the State.

2. The Act of the Legislature of the State of New York violated the constitution of the State and the United States; and the determination or award of the commissioners under it was a nullity.

3. It violated that provision of the constitution of the State which ordains that "The Legislature of this State shall, at no time [286 hereafter, institute any new court or courts, but such as shall proceed according to the course of the common law."

4. It violated that article of the State constitution which ordained that "trial by jury, in all cases in which it hath heretofore been used in the Colony of New York, shall be established and remain inviolate forever."

5. It was, therefore, as well for these violations of the State constitution as on general principles, a statute which impaired the obligation of contracts.

6. The Onondaga commission was a court, within the meaning of the constitution of the State, which did not proceed according to the course of the common law.

7. It was without precedent; and was an arbitrary, ex-parte, and summary tribunal, proceeding in violation of all the securities of property, which the citizens of that State had confided by their constitution to the protection of their common law courts.

Mr. Hoffman, for the defendant in error, made the following points:

1. On a writ of error, to the court of last resort, in a State, under the circumstances of this case, the only error which can be alleged or regarded is, that the Act of the Legislature, in pursuance of which the award was made, is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States.

2. The Act of the Legislature of New York, entitled "An act to settle disputes concerning the title of lands in the County of Onondaga," passed the 24th of March, 1797, is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, nor is the award under it.

3. The plaintiff in error contends that the patent of the State of New York implies a contract on the part of the State with the grantee, his heirs and assigns, forever; that the Legislature of the State should not pass any law affecting the estate, contrary to the State constitution: that the law constituted a court which did not proceed by jury, according to the course of the common law, and thus the act impairs the obligation of an implied contract, and violates the Constitution of the United States.

*For the defendant, it is denied that [287 any such contract] can be inferred or implied from the grant, nor any other than such as could have been fairly implied from it, if it had been made by the late Colony of New York, or by any citizen of the State, or of lands lying without the State; and the law will not imply a covenant not to do an act which the State constitution had made impossible.

The Act of March 24, 1797, is not contrary to the constitution of the State; but has been uniformly declared by the courts of the State, and lately by its highest court of judicature, to be constitutional; and their decision is final on this question.

5. The Onondaga commissioners were not a court; and could not make any judicial sentence respecting these lands: by the proviso to the third section of the act, where the parties would agree before them to abide by their determination, this award is declared to be final; in all other cases they acted as commissioners to ascertain and report the state of the title to these lands.

6. Their award, as such, had no effect or force to divest or impair the estate; and if a party is concluded by it, it is because he has consented and agreed thereto, by his neglect to file his dissent, and bring his suit within the period prescribed by law.

The act is a beneficial statute of limitations, which did not begin to run until after the award was made, and does not impair the obligations of any contract.

Mr. Justice BALDWIN delivered the opinion of the court:

Both parties claim the premises in question, under John Cornelius, to whom the State of New York granted them by patent, dated the 7th of July, 1790, in consideration of his military services in the Revolutionary War.

Six years before the date of the patent, and while the title of Cornelius was imperfect, he conveyed the premises to Henry Hart, the father of the plaintiff's lessor, by deed dated January the 17th, 1784, proved and deposited in the office of the clerk of the county of Albany, according to law, on the 25th of April, 1795.

288* Henry Hart died in 1788, leaving the plaintiff, his only child, and heir-at-law, who was born the 21st of September, 1784, removed to Canada in 1791, and remained there till 1807 or 1808, when he returned to Albany, where he resided till the commencement of this suit of May Term, 1825. He claims as heir-at-law to his father.

On the 23d of June, 1784, John Cornelius conveyed the same premises to Samuel Broom by deed, duly proved and deposited as aforesaid on the 3d of April, 1795. The title of Broom, by sundry mesne conveyances, became vested in William J. Vredenburg, who conveyed to the defendant. The premises were vacant till 1808, when possession was taken under Vredenburg, who then held the title of Broom.

The defendant did not question the original validity of the deed to Henry Hart, but rested his defense on an Act of Assembly of the State of New York, passed the 24th of March, 1797, to settle disputes concerning titles to lands in the County of Onondaga, the provisions of which are set forth in the case.

The defendant offered in evidence an award made by two of the commissioners appointed by this act, awarding the land in controversy to William J. Vredenburg and John Patterson (to whom Broom had conveyed); the award was dated December 17th, 1799, and no dissent was entered by the plaintiff. The court admitted the award to be read in evidence; and gave in charge to the jury, that it was competent and conclusive to defeat the title of the plaintiff. Judgment was rendered for the defendant in the Supreme Court and affirmed in the Court of Errors; and the case comes before us by writ of error, under the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act.

The plaintiff contends that the Act of the 24th of March, 1797, and all proceedings under it, are void; being a violation both of that part of the Constitution of the United States which declares that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, and of the constitution of the State of New York, which declares that the Legislature shall at no time institute any new court but such as shall proceed according to the course of the common law; and that trial by *jury in all cases [289 in which it hath heretofore been used, shall be established, and remain inviolate forever.

This court has no authority, on a writ of error from a State court, to declare a State law void on account of its collision with a State constitution; it not being a case embraced in the Judiciary Act, which alone gives power to issue a writ of error in this case; and will, therefore, refrain from expressing any opinion on the points made by the plaintiff's counsel, in relation to the constitution of New York.

The plaintiff insists that the patent to John Cornelius creates a contract with the grantee, his heirs and assigns, that they should enjoy the land therein granted, free from any Legislative regulations to be made in violation of the constitution of the State; that the act in question does violate some of its provisions; and therefore impairs the obligation of a contract.

The court are not inclined to adopt this reasoning, or to consider this as a case coming fairly within the clause of the Constitution of the United States relied on by the plaintiff. The only contract made by the State is a grant to John Cornelius, his heirs and assigns, of the land in question; the patent contains no covenant to do or not to do any further act in relation to the land; and we do not, in this case, feel at liberty to create one by implication. The State has not by this act impaired the force of the grant; it does not profess or attempt to take the land from assigns of Cornelius and give it to one not claiming under him; neither does the award produce that effect; the grant remains in full force, the property conveyed is held by his grantee, and the State asserts no claims to it. The question between the parties is, which of the deeds from Cornelius carries the title. Presuming that the laws of New York authorized a soldier to convey his bounty land before receiving a patent, and that at the date of the deeds there was no law compelling the grantees to record them, they would take priority from their date. This is the legal result of the deeds, but there is no contract on the part of the State that the priority of title shall depend solely on the principles of the common law, or that the State shall pass no 290 law imposing on a grantee the *performance of acts which were not necessary to the legal operation of his deed at the time it was delivered. It is within the undoubted power of State Legislatures to pass recording acts, by which the elder grantee shall be postponed to a younger, if the prior deed is not recorded within the limited time; and the power is the same whether the deed is dated before or after the passage of the Recording Act. Though the effect of such a law is to render the prior deed fraudulent and void against a subsequent purchaser, it is not a law impairing the obligation of contracts; such, too, is the power to pass acts of limitations, and their effect. Reasons of sound policy have led to the general adoption of laws of both descriptions, and their validity cannot be questioned. The time and manner of their operation, the exceptions to them, and the acts from which the time limited shall begin to run, will generally depend on the sound discretion of the Legislature, according to the nature of the titles, the situation of the country, and the emergency which leads to their enactment. Cases may occur where the provisions of a law on those subjects may be so unreasonable as to amount to a denial of a right, and call for the interposition of the court; but the present is not one.

The State of New York, in 1794, had felt the necessity of legislating on these military lands. The preamble to the Recording Act of January, 1794, shows very strongly the policy of compelling the deeds for these lands to be recorded; and the known condition of that part of the State, covered by military grants, presented equally cogent reasons, in our opinion, for the passage of the act in question.

As this court is confined to the consideration of only one question growing out of this law, we do not think it necessary to examine its provisions in detail; it is sufficient to say that we can see nothing in them inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the principles of sound legislation. Whether it is considered as an act of limitations, or one in the nature of a recording act, or as a law sui generis, called for by the peculiar situation of that part of the State on which it operates, we are unanimously of opinion that it is not a law which 291 impairs the obligation *of a contract; and that in receiving the award in evidence, and declaring it to be competent and conclusive on the right of the plaintiff, there was no error in the judgment of the court below. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Court for the Trial of Impeachments and Correction of Errors for the State of New York, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said Court for the Trial of Impeachments and Correction of Errors for the State of New York in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed with costs.

Cited—11 Pet., 546, 640, 646; 12 Pet., 448; 14 Pet., 594, 628; 2 How., 613; 6 How., 319, 331, 332, 542, 549; 7 How., 782; 10 How., 539; 20 How., 89; 13 Wall., 71; 5 Otto, 638; 14 Otto, 675; 1 Biss., 186.

Peters 3.

*SAMUEL D. HARRIS, Plaintiff in [292
Error,
v.

JAMES DENNIE.

Claim of United States on imported goods for duties—attachment—jurisdiction—lien for duties—who entitled to enter goods or give bonds—custom-house store-keeper—rights of government.

Twenty-three cases of silk were imported from Canton in the ship Rob Roy into the port of Boston, consigned to George D'Wolf and John Smith. After the arrival of the vessel with the merchandise on board, the collector caused an inspector of the customs to be placed on board. Soon afterwards, and prior to the entry of the merchandise, and prior to the payment or any security for the payment of the duties thereon, the merchandise was attached by the deputy-sheriff of the county, in due form of law, as the property of G. D'Wolf and J. Smith, by virtue of several writs of attachment issued from the Court of Common Pleas for the County of Suffolk, at the suit of creditors of G. D'Wolf and Smith. These attachments were so made prior to the inspector's being sent on board the vessel. At the time of the attachment, the sheriff offered to give security for the payment of the duties on the merchandise, which the collector declined accepting. The merchandise was sent to the custom-house stores by the inspector, and several days after, the custom-house store-keeper gave to the deputy-sheriff an agreement signed by him, reciting the receipt of the merchandise from the inspector; and stating, "I hold the said merchandise to the order of James Dennie, deputy-sheriff." The marshal of the United States afterwards attached, took, and sold the merchandise under writs and process, in favor of the United States, against George D'Wolf; which writs were founded on duty bonds, due and unpaid, for a larger amount than the value of the merchandise, given before by D'Wolf and Smith, who, before the importation of the merchandise, were indebted to the United States on various bonds for duties, besides those on which the suits were instituted. Held, that the attachments issued out of the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Suffolk did not affect the right of the United States to hold the merchandise until the payment of the duties upon them; and that the merchandise was not liable to any attachment by an officer of the State of Massachusetts for debts due to other creditors of George D'Wolf and John Smith.

It has often been decided in this court that it is not necessary that it shall appear, in terms, upon the record, that the question was presented in the State court, whether the case was within the purview of the twenty-fifth section of the Judicial Act of 1789, to give jurisdiction to this court in a case removed from a State court. It is sufficient, if, from the facts stated, such a question must have arisen, and the judgment of the State court would not have been what it is, if there had not been a misconstruction of some Act of Congress, &c., &c., or a decision against the validity of the right, title privilege or exemption set up under it. [301]

The United States have no general lien on merchandise, the property of the importer, for duties due by him upon other importations. The only effect of the first provision in the sixty-second section of the Act of 1799, ch. 128, is that the delinquent debtor is denied at the custom-house any further credit for duties until his unsatisfied bonds are paid. He is compellable to pay the duties in cash, and upon such payment he is entitled to the delivery of the goods imported. *The mari- [293

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, depending on federal question in State courts, see note to Matthews v. Zane, 4 Cranch, 382; and note to Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat., 304; also Houston v. Moore, 3 Wheat., 433; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat., 264; also note to Jackson v. Lamphire, ante, 280, and note to Williams v. Norris, 12 Wheat., 117.

As to what is a final judgment or decree of State court, as affecting the right of appeal, see note to Gibbons v. Ogden, 6 Wheat., 264.

As to lien of United States for duties, see note to United States v. 350 Chests of Tea, 12 Wheat., 486.

fest intention of the remaining clause in the section is to compel the original consignee to enter the goods imported by him. [302]

No person but the owner or original consignee, or in his absence or sickness, his agent or factor, is entitled to enter the goods at the custom-house or give bond for the duties, or to pay the duties (sec. 36 and 62.) Upon the entry, the original invoices are to be produced and sworn to; and the whole objects of the act would be defeated by allowing a mere stranger to make the entry, or to take the oath prescribed on the entry. [304]

The United States having a lien on goods imported for the payment of the duties accruing on them, and which have not been secured by bond, and being entitled to the custody of them from the time of their arrival in port until the duties are paid or secured, any attachment by a State officer is an interference with such lien and right to custody; and, being repugnant to the laws of the United States, is void. [305]

The acknowledgment by the custom-house store-keeper that he holds goods upon which the duties have not been secured or paid, subject to an attachment issued out of a State court at the suit of a creditor of the importer, was a plain departure from his duty, and is not authorized by the law of the United States, and cannot be admitted to vary the rights of the parties. [305]

WRIT of error to the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts for the Counties of Suffolk and Nantucket.

In the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Suffolk, Massachusetts, James Dennie, the defendant in error, a deputy-sheriff of that county, under a precept issued by the authority of the State, attached twenty-three cases of silks imported in the brig Rob Roy, from Canton, for a debt due by the importers and owners of the goods, George D'Wolf and James Smith. Soon after the arrival of the vessel, the collector of the port caused an inspector of the customs to be placed on board. The attachment was made before the entry of the merchandise, and payment made or security given for the payment of the duties thereon, and before an inspector was put on board the vessel. At the time of the attachment, the plaintiff offered to give the collector security for the payment of the duties to the United States, which he declined to accept. About seventeen days after the attachment, the merchandise being in the custom-house stores, under the following agreement, to wit: "District of Boston and Charleston, port of Boston, August 29th, 1826. I certify that there has been received into store, from on board the brig Rob Roy, whereof — is master, from Canton, the following merchandise, to wit, twenty-three cases silks, A. O. 1 to 23, lodged by D. Rhodes, Jr., in-294*] spector, under whose care the *vessel was unladen. B. H. Scott, public store-keeper: I hold the above-described twenty-three cases silks subject to the order of James Dennie, Esq., deputy-sheriff. B. H. Scott." The defendant, being the Marshal of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, attached and took the same merchandise, by virtue of several writs in favor of the United States against D'Wolf, duly issued from the District Court of the United States. These writs were founded upon bonds for duties given by D'Wolf and Smith, amounting to a sum much larger than the value of the merchandise, which duties were due and unpaid when the merchandise arrived.

The deputy-sheriff, James Dennie, brought an action of trover against the marshal for the goods; and the judgment of the Supreme Judicial Court of the State, to which the case was removed by writ of error from the inferior court, was in favor of the original plaintiff; and the defendant prosecuted this writ of error.

The following errors were assigned in the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. That, according to the true construction of the several Acts of the Congress of the United States, imposing duties on certain goods, wares and merchandise imported into the United States from foreign ports, and also of the Act of said Congress made and passed on the 2d day of March, 1799, entitled, "An act to regulate the collection of duties on imposts and tonnage," it is contended,

1. That upon the arrival of the said merchandise in question at the port of Boston and Charleston, and prior to the supposed attachment thereof by the said Dennie, a debt immediately accrued to the United States for the amount of the duties thereon; and the collector for said port had therefore a legal lien on the said merchandise for the debt aforesaid; and, consequently, they were not then subject to the said Dennie's attachment aforesaid.

2. That the offer of the said Dennie, at the time of making his said attachment, to give to the said collector security for the payment of the duties on said merchandise, did not in point of law give validity to the said attachment; inasmuch as the said collector was not at that time, it being prior to any entry of the merchandise at the custom-house, authorized by law *to receive security from the said Den- [*295 nie, or any other person or persons whomsoever, for payment of the duties aforesaid.

3. That after the said merchandise was placed in the custom-house store, as is found by the special verdict, and from that period to the time when they are stated to have been attached in behalf of the United States by the said Harris, as marshal of said district, the legal lien of the United States constantly remained with them; and that the certificate of B. H. Scott, the store-keeper, which appears in the said verdict, can have had no effect to discharge, or in any degree to impair, the force of the said lien.

4. That by the provisions contained in the sixty-second section of the aforesaid Act of March 2, 1799, the goods in question, the same having been imported by and consigned to George D'Wolf and John Smith, as by said verdict is found, are in point of law to be considered as their property, so far as to be holden liable for the payment of all the debts then due from them to the United States for duties on merchandise heretofore imported by them into the said port of Boston and Charleston.

It was also in this court contended that the defendant in error had no property, either absolute or special, nor possession, nor the right of possession in the goods, which were the object of the supposed trover and conversion in the declaration mentioned.

The case was argued by Mr. Berrien, Attorney-General, and Mr. Dunlap, District Attorney of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Webster for the defendant.

For the plaintiff in error, Mr. Dunlap stated that the position contended for in the State court was, that under the revenue law the government of the United States has a lien on goods imported, not only for the duties accruing on that importation, but also for the payment of all debts due from the consignees arising from antecedent importations. This question, he admitted, had since been disposed of against the United States. (Conard v. The Atlantic Insurance Company, 1 Peters. *386.) It is supposed that the great question in the cause now before the court is, whether goods imported can, before entry at the custom-house, and while under the lien of the government, in possession of the custom-house officers, be legally attached by virtue of process from a State court. Such an attachment, it is claimed, is not only void by the laws of the United States, but also by the laws of the State of Massachusetts; and, therefore, the defendant in error did not by the process obtain any property or right of possession in the goods, which could enable him to maintain an action of trover.

The laws of the United States provide that goods imported shall, until entered at the custom-house, be taken into the possession of the officers of the government, and after a certain time be deposited in the custom-house stores; and afterwards, a further time having expired, if they have not been entered by or for the importer, they are to be sold according to the thirty-sixth and fifty-sixth sections of the Act of March 3, 1799.

An attachment, at the suit of any creditor of the importer, upon goods thus situated, would interfere with and destroy the possession and lien of the government, thus secured by law. Such an attachment, thus interfering with rights thus given, is the exercise of "an authority under a State" which "is repugnant to the laws of the United States." The exercise of such an authority is in opposition to the exemption claimed to exist in favor of those goods from such process, and is a defense for the Marshal of the United States to this action of trover by the deputy-sheriff. This case is therefore one properly within the action of the ninety-fifth section of the judiciary law; and is well brought before this court to reverse the judgment of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts.

The attachment from the State court is void, as well by the laws and adjudged cases of Massachusetts, as by the laws of the United States. A statute of the State, if it interfered with a law of the general government in reference to subjects within its legitimate operation, would be void; but no such law, in reference to the proceedings and claims of the defendant in error, is to be found. To constitute a legal *attachment of goods, they must be taken within the actual or constructive possession of the officer; and when this cannot be done, on account of the existence of prior liens, or from any other cause, no attachment can be valid. The decisions in the State of Massachusetts fully sustain this position. (Phillips v. Badger, 11 Mass., 247; Bedlam v. Tucker et al., 1 Pick., 389; Watson v. Todd et al., 5 Mass. Rep., 271.)

In Pierce v. Jackson (6 Mass. Rep., 242), the court say that when goods are attached, they must be seized under execution within thirty days, or the lien of the judgment is gone. The goods in the custom-house stores could not have been sold under any process. Cited, Peters 3.

Vinton v. Bradford (15 Mass., 114); Lane v. Jackson, (5 Mass., 157), decides that the officer must have the actual possession and custody of the goods. Cited also, Odiorne v. Polley, (2 New Hamp. Rep., 66; also 2 New Hamp. Rep., 317); Holbrook v. Blake (5 Greenleaf's Rep., 371; 6 Conn. Rep., 356; 1 Shower, 169; Vin. Ab. Distress, E. 2; H. 42; H. 52).

The effect of the acknowledgment of the store-keeper could not be to vest a property in the goods in the deputy-sheriff. It was unauthorized; and the store-keeper had nothing to dispose of. He was the agent of the United States, to protect and preserve the property while in the public stores; and he could not divest himself of these relations, and become the bailee of the sheriff.

If the sheriff had no right to make the attachment, he acquired by it either a general or a special property, which is necessary in order to maintain trover; and, in fact, he never had the actual possession of the goods. The only title he asserts is, as an officer by virtue of the attachment; and if that is adjudged illegal and void, the foundation of his action fails. (2 Saunders' Rep., 47; 7 T. R., 9.)

Mr. Webster, for the defendant, contended that this court had no jurisdiction of the case, according to the provisions of the judiciary law.

It is not required that it should appear, in form, that an Act of Congress has been misconstrued; if it has been substantially the fact, *it is sufficient to give the writ of error [*298 to the highest State tribunal. But it does not appear in any part of this record that such was the proceeding in the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts.

The question originally raised in this case was, whether the United States had a general lien on goods imported for debts due to them by the importer; and that question has, since this action was brought, been decided in the negative in Conard v. The Atlantic Insurance Company. The only question remaining in this case was, whether the goods were liable to attachment, and this was a question properly for the decision of the State courts. The United States claimed to attach and hold the goods for the debts due to them by D'Wolf and Smith, and the other creditors of those persons denied this claim, and proceeded by an attachment. The United States stood in no other relations and with no other rights before the State court than the other creditors. In the State court, and upon the State decisions, the attachment for the creditors was considered valid. This is an answer to the argument that such is not the law of Massachusetts. This decision does not, therefore, bring into question the construction of any Act of Congress.

Mr. Berrien, Attorney-General, in reply, argued that there was enough in the record to show that a question of the application of a statute of the United States was decided by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts; and this would sustain the jurisdiction, although it may not have been the only question in the case. (2 Wheat., 363; 1 Wheat., 304.)

This is an action of trover against an officer of the United States, the marshal, for taking goods out of the hands of an alleged bailee, for a debt due to the United States; and the question is, was there then an existing lien in favor of the United States under the sixty-second section of the Duty Act?

The construction of this statute was thus brought into question by the inquiry whether there was a conversion by the marshal. He says, that his proceedings were under the authority of the law, and it was therefore essential that the State court should decide upon the law, and construe the law.

299*] *2 In an action of trover and conversion, the plaintiff must show property, and a right to retain it.

The goods were in the possession of the custom-house, and subject to duties which were unpaid. It was necessary that the court should decide that goods, before the payment of the duties, can be taken out of the possession of the custom-house by the process of State courts. This question is to be decided by a reference to the laws of the United States.

Such an exercise of power would be inconsistent with the provisions of the laws of the United States.

The position which is asserted by the plaintiff in error, is that goods so situated are exempt from such process.

The plaintiff in the State court contended that they could be taken under the authority of the State of Massachusetts; and this was the assertion of a claim of authority under a State, against the laws of the United States.

Upon these grounds it is manifest that the construction of the laws of the United States immediately entered into the question before the State court. It must appear to this court, 1. That the goods were liable to be attached; 2. That there is nothing in the laws of the United States which prevents this; 3. That the United States had no lien on the goods. All these points must be decided in favor of the plaintiff below, before it can be held that the marshal was guilty of a conversion.

Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the judgment of the Supreme Judicial Court of the State of Massachusetts.

The original action was trover, brought by the defendant in error, against the plaintiff in error, for twenty-three cases of silk, which had been attached by Dennie, as deputy-sheriff of the County of Suffolk, and afterwards attached by Harris, as marshal of the District of Massachusetts. The cause was tried upon the general issue, and a special verdict found, upon which the State court rendered judgment in favor of the original plaintiff.

The special verdict was as follows: The jury 300] find that *the merchandise described in the declaration was brought in a vessel of the United States into the port of Boston, in the collection district of Boston and Charleston in Massachusetts, from a foreign port, prior to the commencement of this action. That the said merchandise came consigned to George D'Wolf and John Smith, as was evidenced by the manifest of the cargo of the said vessel at the time of the importation. That soon after the arrival of the said vessel with the merchandise on board, as aforesaid, the collector of the said port caused an inspector of the custom-house to be placed on board thereof, in conformity with the requirements of law in such cases. That soon after the arrival of the said vessel, and prior to the entry of the said merchandise with the collector, and prior to the payment or any security for the payment of the duties thereupon, the same were attached in due form of law as the property of the said George D'Wolf and John Smith, by virtue of several writs of attachment issued from the Court of Common Pleas for the said County of Suffolk, in favor of Andrew Blanchard and others; the said attachment having been made by the plaintiff in his capacity of a deputy of the sheriff of the aforesaid County of Suffolk, prior to the inspector's being put on board, as aforesaid. That at the time of the said attachment, the said sheriff offered to give to said collector security for the payment of the duties upon the said merchandise, which the said collector declined to accept. That about seventeen days subsequently to the time of the attachment, the said merchandise being in the custom-house stores, under the following agreement, viz.: "District of Boston and Charleston, port of Boston, August 29th, 1826. I certify that there has been received in store, from on board the brig Rob Roy, whereof ——— is master, from Canton, the following merchandise, viz.: twenty-three cases of silk, A. O. 1 to 23, lodged by D. Rhodes, Jun., inspector, and under whose care the vessel was unladen (Signed) B. H. Scott, public store-keeper. I hold the above twenty-three cases of silks subject to order of James Dennie, deputy sheriff. (Signed) B. H. Scott." The defendant (Harris) being marshal, &c., attached the said merchandise, and took the same, by virtue of several writs to him *directed, in favor of the United States, [301 against the said D'Wolf; which writs were duly issued from the District Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts; which writs were founded on bonds for duties theretofore given by the said D'Wolf and Smith, and which bonds were then due and unpaid, being for a large sum of money. That the said D'Wolf and Smith, at the time of the said importation of the merchandise aforesaid, were jointly and severally indebted to the United States on various other bonds for duties, besides those on which the writs aforesaid were instituted, which said first-mentioned bonds were also then due and unsatisfied; and that the bonds for duties above referred to, and upon which the attachment by the said marshal was made, amounted to a much larger sum than the value of the merchandise thus attached. But whether or not, &c., &c., in the common form of special verdicts.

As this case comes from a State court, under the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, ch. 20, it is necessary to consider whether this court can entertain any jurisdiction thereof, consistently with the terms of that enactment. That section, among other things, enacts that a final judgment of the highest State court may be revised, where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under, any State on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where is drawn in question the construction of any clause of the Constitution, or of a treaty, or statute of, or commission held under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege or exemption specially set up, or claimed by either party, under such clause of the said Constitution, treaty, statute or commission.

The objection is, that this court has not jurisdiction of this case, because it does not appear upon the record that any question within the purview of the twenty-fifth section arose in the State court upon the decision on the special verdict. But it has been often decided in this court that it is not necessary that it should appear, in terms, upon the record, that any such question was made. It is sufficient, if from the 302 facts stated such a question must have arisen, and the judgment of the State court would not have been what it is, if there had not been a misconstruction of some Act of Congress, &c., &c., or a decision against the validity of the right, title, privilege or exemption set up under it. (4 Wheat., 311; 12 Wheat., 117; 2 Peters' Rep., 245, 380, 409.)

In the present case it is contended that the United States, by virtue of the sixty-second section of the Revenue Collection Act of 1799, ch. 128, had a lien on the present merchandise for all debts antecedently due on custom-house bonds by D'Wolf and Smith, and that consequently the attachment of the marshal overreached that of the private creditors, and that the State court have decided against such lien. If there be no such lien, still it is contended that under the provisions of the Revenue Collection Act of 1799, ch. 128, the merchandise was not liable to attachment at the suit of any private creditors under the circumstances; and that the State court in giving judgment for the plaintiff, must have overruled that defense, and misconstrued the act.

The question as to the lien of the United States for duties antecedently due, was certainly presented by the special verdict. But we are all of opinion, that the decision of the State court, disallowing such a lien, was certainly correct.

The sixty-second section of the Act of 1799, ch. 128, after providing for the manner of paying duties, and of giving bonds for duties, and the terms of credit to be allowed therefor, goes on to provide, "that no person whose bond has been received, either as principal or surety, for the payment of duties, or for whom any bond has been given by an agent, factor or other person in pursuance of the provisions herein contained, and which bond may be due and unsatisfied, shall be allowed a future credit for duties, until such bond be fully paid or discharged." The only effect of this provision is, that the delinquent debtor is denied at the custom-house any future credit for duties, until his unsatisfied bonds are paid. He is compellable to pay the duties in cash; and upon such payment he is entitled to the delivery of the goods imported. There is not the slightest suggestion in the clause that the United States shall have any lien on such goods 303 for any duties due on any other goods for which the importer has given bonds, and for which he is a delinquent. It was at once perceived by Congress that the salutary effect of this provision, denying credit upon duties, would be defeated by artifices and evasions, Peters 3.

and the substitution of new owners or consignees after the arrival of the goods in port, and before the entry thereof at the custom-house. To repress such contrivances, the next succeeding clause of the act provides, "that to prevent frauds arising from collusive transfers, it is hereby declared that all goods, &c., imported into the United States, shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed and held to be the property of the persons to whom the said goods, &c., may be consigned, any sale, transfer or assignment prior to the entry and payment, or securing the payment, of the duties on the said goods, &c., and the payment of all bonds then due and unsatisfied by the said consignee, to the contrary notwithstanding." The manifest intent of this clause was to compel the original consignee to enter the goods; and if he was a delinquent, to compel him to pay his prior bonds, or to relinquish all credit for the duties accruing upon the goods so imported and consigned to him. It does not purport to create any lien upon such goods for any duties due upon other goods; but merely ascertains who shall be deemed the owner, for the purpose of entering the goods and securing the duties. The State court, therefore, did not, so far as this question is concerned, misconstrue the Act of Congress, or deny any right of the United States existing under it.

The other point is one of far more importance; and, in our opinion, deserves a serious consideration. If, consistently with the laws of the United States, goods in the predicament of the present were not liable to any attachment by a State officer, it is very clear that the present suit could not be sustained, and that judgment ought to have been given upon the special verdict in favor of the original defendant. And in our opinion these goods were not liable to such an attachment. In examining the Revenue Collection Act of 1799, ch. 128, it will be found that numerous provisions have been solicitously introduced in order to prevent any un- [304] livery, or removal of any goods imported from any foreign port in any vessel arriving in the United States, until after a permit shall have been obtained from the proper officer of the customs for that purpose. These provisions not only apply to vessels which have already arrived in port, but to those which are within four leagues of the coast of the United States. The sections of the act, from the twenty-seventh to the fifty-eighth, are in a great measure addressed to this subject. From the moment of their arrival in port, the goods are, in legal contemplation, in the custody of the United States; and every proceeding which interferes with, or obstructs or controls that custody, is a virtual violation of the provisions of the act. Now, an attachment of such goods by a State officer, presupposes a right to take the possession and custody of those goods, and to make such possession and custody exclusive. If the officer attaches upon mesne process, he has a right to hold the possession to answer the exigency of that process. If he attaches upon an execution, he is bound to sell or may sell the goods within a limited period, and thus virtually displace the custody of the United States. The Act of Congress recognizes no such authority, and admits of no such exercise of right.

No person but the owner or consignee, or, in his absence or sickness, his agent or factor in his name, is entitled to enter the goods at the custom-house or give bond for the duties or pay the duties. (Sec. 36, 62.) Upon the entry the original invoices are to be produced and sworn to, and the whole objects of the act would be defeated by allowing a mere stranger to make the entry, or take the oath prescribed on the entry. The sheriff is in no just or legal sense the owner or consignee (and he must, to have the benefit of the act, be the original consignee), or the agent or factor of the owner or consignee. He is a mere stranger, acting in invitum. He cannot then enter the goods, or claim a right to pay the duties, or procure a permit to unlade them; for such permit is allowed in favor only of the party making the entry, and paying or giving bond for the duties. (Sec. 49, 50.) If within the number of days allowed by law for unlading the cargo the du-305*] ties are not paid or secured, the *goods are required to be placed in the government stores, under the custody and possession of the government officers. And at the expiration of nine months, the goods so stored are to be sold if the duties thereon have not been previously paid or secured. (Sec. 56.)

It is plain that these proceedings are at war with the notion that any State officer can, in the interval, have any possession or right to control the disposition of these goods; and the United States have nowhere recognized or provided for a concurrent possession or custody by any such officer. In short, the United States having a lien on the goods for the payment of the duties accruing thereon, and being entitled to a virtual custody of them from the time of their arrival in port until the duties are paid or secured, any attachment by a State officer is an interference with such lien and right of custody; and being repugnant to the laws of the United States, is void.

It has been suggested that the certificate of the store-keeper, declaring that he held the silks subject to the order of the attaching officer, might vary the application of this doctrine. But such an agreement was a plain departure from the duty of the store-keeper, and was unauthorized by the laws of the United States. It cannot, then, be admitted to vary the rights of the parties. See fifty-sixth section of the Act of 1799, ch. 128.

This view of the subject renders it wholly unnecessary to consider the point, so elaborately argued at the bar, whether by the laws of Massachusetts an attachment would lie in such a case. If it would, the present attachment would not be helped thereby; because it involves an interference with the regulations prescribed by Congress on the subject of imported goods.

Upon the whole, it is the unanimous opinion of the court, that the judgment of the State court ought to be reversed; and that a mandate issue to that court, with directions to enter judgment upon the special verdict, in favor of the original defendant.

306*] *This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Supreme Judicial Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is the opinion of this court that the goods in the special verdict mentioned, were not, by the laws of the United States, under the circumstances mentioned in the said verdict, liable to be attached by the said Dennie upon the process in the said verdict mentioned; but that the said attachment so made by him as aforesaid, was repugnant to the laws of the United States, and therefore utterly void. It is therefore considered and adjudged by this court that the judgment of the said Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts rendered upon the said verdict be, and the same is hereby reversed, and that a mandate issue to that court with directions to enter a judgment upon the said verdict in favor of the original defendant, Samuel D. Harris; and that such further proceedings be had in said cause as to law and justice may appertain.
 688

See 8 Pet., 271.

Cited—4 Pet., 151, 429; 5 Pet., 255, 256; 6 Pet., 48, 281; 10 Pet., 396, 397; 12 How., 124; 20 How., 596, 598; Bald., 140; 2 Sawy., 432; 2 Curt., 415; 3 Ware, 143.

*RACHEL CANTER, Administra- [*307
 trix of DAVID CANTER, Deceased, Claimant,

v.

THE AMERICAN INSURANCE COM-PANY AND OCEAN INSURANCE COM-PANY OF NEW YORK, Appellants.

Practice—damages and costs—counsel fees.

The libelants, in their original libel in the District Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina, prayed that certain bales of cotton might be decreed to them with damages and costs. Canter, who also claimed the cotton, prayed the court for restitution, with damages and costs. The District Court decreed restitution of part of the cotton to the libelants, and dismissed the libel, without any award of damages on either side. Both parties appealed from this decree to the Circuit Court, where the decree of the District Court was reversed, and restitution of all the cotton was decreed to Canter, with costs; without any award of damages, or any express reservation of that question in the decree. From this decree the libelants in the District Court appealed to this court. No appeal was entered by Canter. Held, that the question of a claim of damages by Canter is not open before this court. The decree of restitution, without any allowance of damages, was a virtual denial of them, and a final decree upon Canter's claim of damages. It was his duty, at that time, to have filed a cross appeal, if he meant to rely on a claim to damages; and not having done so, it was a submission to the decree of restitution and costs only.

The counsel fees allowed as expenses attending the prosecution of an appeal to the Circuit Court and to the Supreme Court, in an admiralty case.

This is not a proper case for the award of damages. The proceedings of the libelants were in the ordinary course to vindicate a supposed legal title. There is no pretense to say that the suit was instituted without probable cause, or was conducted in a malicious or oppressive manner. The libelants had a right to submit their title to the decision of a judicial tribunal, in any legal mode which promised them an effectual and speedy redress. Where parties litigate in the admiralty, and there was a probable ground for the suit or defense, the court considers the only compensation which the successful party is entitled to, is a compensation in costs and expenses. If the party has suffered any loss beyond these, it is damnum absque injuria. [318]

It is of great importance to the due administration of justice, and in furtherance of the manifest intention of the Legislature, in giving appellate jurisdiction to this court upon final decrees only, that causes should not come up here in fragments or successive appeals. It would occasion very great delays and oppressive expenses. [318]

Peters 3.

The settled practice of this court is, that whenever damages are claimed by the libellant or the claimant in the original proceedings, if a decree of restitution and costs only passes, it is a virtual denial of damages; and the party will be deemed to have waived the claim for damages, unless he then interposes an appeal or cross appeal to sustain that claim. [318]

Costs and expenses are not matters positively limited by law, but are allowed in the exercise of a sound discretion of the court; and no appeal lies from a mere decree respecting costs and expenses. [319]

308*] THIS case was heard at January Term, 1828, upon questions submitted to the court, on an appeal from the Circuit Court of the District of South Carolina. (1 Peters, 511.) The court then decided in favor of the claimant, and directed restitution of the cotton, which was the subject of the controversy between the parties; having affirmed the decree of the Circuit Court of South Carolina. By the mandate to the Circuit Court it was ordered, "that such execution and proceedings be had as, according to right and justice, according to the laws of the United States, ought to be had." Upon the filing of the mandate the Circuit Court ordered, "that the case be put on the docket, and it be referred to the officer of this court to examine into the damages sustained by the claimant, David Canter, in consequence of the proceedings of the libellants, and report thereon at as early a day as possible to this court."

The appellant, David Canter, thereupon filed in the Circuit Court "a statement of damages sustained by him, by the illegal seizure of three hundred and fifty-six bales of cotton, by order of the underwriters."

The statement set forth losses on the sales of the cotton, and expenses and payments connected with the same, amounting to $3,639.87. Losses and probable gain on sales of rice purchased by the appellants, and which was sold instead of being shipped, in consequence of the proceedings of the appellees; the cost of protest and damages on a bill of exchange drawn by him, and dishonored in consequence of the seizure of the cotton; law expenses at Charleston and Columbia, in South Carolina, and in Washington, and traveling expenses to and in Washington; papers from Key West, relative to judicial proceedings there; postages and protests, costs of the Supreme Court of the United States, and briefs; loss in the value of the cotton during the pendency of the proceedings, $2,860.

The counsel for the appellees filed with the register of the court a protest against the order of reference made by the Circuit Court to ascertain the damages alleged to have been sustained by the appellant, on the grounds, 1. That the mandate of the Supreme Court of the 309*] United States gives no *authority or instructions to the Circuit Court to inquire into damages; 2. That the decrees of the District, Circuit and Supreme Court, do not award damages to the appellant; 3. That the appellees were not in any manner liable for damages; 4. That at all events, the inquiry into damages cannot extend beyond the amount of the stipulations entered into by the appellees in the original proceedings, by which alone they are before the court.

The clerk of the Circuit Court refused all Peters 3.

U. S., Book 7.

the claims preferred by the appellant, with the exception of the following:

| | |
|--|--|
| Papers from Key West, to establish legality of proceedings there | |
| $51, postages and protest | $71.00 |
| Costs of the Supreme Court and briefs | $72.02, protest and damages on bill drawn by claimant |
| $222 | 294.02 |

This grew out of the cotton speculation, the bill was dishonored in consequence of the seizure, the claimant not being in funds to take up the draft.

| | | |
|---|---------|------------------|
| Counsel fees at Charleston and Washington | - - - - | 1,150.00 |
| | | <hr/> $1,515.02 |

Also the loss on the sale of the cotton, which was made before the proceedings were instituted against the cotton, and which sale was not completed by reason of the same, with interest on the balance of the sale after deducting the actual proceeds of the cotton, when sold by order of the District Court $3,991.77; and also the actual loss on the rice purchased, to be paid for out of the proceeds of the cotton, rejecting the claim of probable profits, the sum actually allowed being $2,820.67.

These allowances were all excepted to by the appellees, and the appellant also excepted to the refusal of the clerk of the Circuit Court to admit all of the claims preferred in "the statement."

The Circuit Court refused to allow to the appellant any of the items reported by the clerk, with the exception of some of those comprehended in the "incidental expenses." As to *those items, the clerk rejected the sum [310 of $222 for protests and damages on a bill of exchange, and ordered the counsel fees of the appellant to be paid under the mandate, upon the authority of The Apollon (9 Wheat., 362), as the costs awarded him by the Supreme Court $1,372.82.

The appellant appealed to this court.

At the last term Mr. Cruger moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the mandate from this court gave no authority to the Circuit Court of South Carolina to assess damages to the appellant. This motion was opposed by Mr. Cox, for the appellant; and the court ordered the cause to be argued upon all the questions it involved, when it should be regularly called.

At this term, Mr. Cox, for the appellant, contended that the decree of the Circuit Court from which the former appeal was taken, left the question of damages open. That appeal was taken by the claimants in the Circuit Court, now the appellees, and it was from a decree, in its nature interlocutory, and not final; and if this was not so, it was the act of those who are now appellees, and cannot prejudice the rights of the appellant.

In the case now before the court, the appeal has been taken by Canter only, and not by those who claimed the cotton. The only question, therefore, in this court is, whether sufficient damages have been awarded, as no cross appeal was entered, and there can be no inquiry whether damages may be assessed at all; this having been decided in the Circuit Court. The appellee cannot here impugn the decree below upon this point.

Is this, then, a case for damages, or rather for full compensation?

The entire record is now before this court; the pleading, and the evidence which were under consideration during the last term, still constitute a part of the case upon which the decision must be based.

It will be recollected that the claimant became the proprietor of the cotton at Key West, where it was found in the possession of certain salvors. The libelants were present, by their 311 agent, who was cognizant in the proceedings, acquiesced in them, and received the portion of the proceeds of sale to which they were entitled. The captain of the wrecked vessel was also present, and all participated in what was done there.

No proceedings were ever instituted by the libelants against the authors or abettors of the acts of which they complained. No attempt was ever made to arrest them in the progress of the business, to punish them afterwards, or to pursue the money in their hands. All was reserved for this innocent purchaser. Innocent he was, for this court has decreed the sale to be valid, and his title to be incontrovertible; innocent as regards them, for he did no one act in which they had not concurred.

They avowed their object to be to break up these proceedings at Key West, and this was to be effected by the ruin of this claimant.

This court has definitively settled the question of right between these parties; the libelants had no interest in the cotton, the subject-matter of the suit. It was the property of the claimant.

In the prosecution of this suit against him, however, he has been deprived of this property; he has incurred heavy expenses and losses, and he asks not vindictive damages; he asks nothing nomine pœnæ; he merely asks to be placed in the situation he would have occupied had these proceedings never been instituted against him. He claims, in fact, nothing which may not properly be awarded under the name of restitution. This is emphatically the case in regard to the first item. The property has long since been disposed of, it probably has no longer an existence; restitution in specie must be had; the mandate of this court cannot be literally executed.

This has been rendered impracticable by the acts of libelants. They seized upon the article; they withdrew it from the control of the claimant. While thus retained by them, it is so disposed of that the owner can never be restored to the actual enjoyment of it. What, then, are his rights, and what will satisfy the order of this court that the property shall be restored?

312* He had entered into an actual contract to sell it for $17,425; that amount of money was in fact and in substance the object of the suit. The claimant had no right to the cotton which he had sold. He had a right to this amount of purchase money, and that was what the libelant sought to obtain from him. That was substituted in lieu of the cotton. To that sum, then, which was the real value of the cotton to him, the amount for which it had been sold, he is now entitled under the decree for restitution. This would have been the measure of damages had Canter brought trover for these goods. (Kennedy v. Strong, 14 Johns., 128.) In replevin the same result would have happened; and it is stated by the court to be no more than an indemnification. (Rowley v. Gibbs, 14 Johns., 385.)

But this seizure has been decided to be illegal and groundless. It was made upon a claim of right which has been disaffirmed. It is essentially a seizure without probable cause.

In the case of Gelston v. Hoyt (13 Johns., 30, and 3 Wheat., 46), it was held in the State courts as well as here, that a decree of restitution was conclusive, that the seizure was illegal, and that where such seizure was made without legal process, such decree entitled the party to recover in an action of trespass to the amount of the damage actually sustained by the seizure. Here the seizure was made through the intervention of the process of the court, but the only difference which is thereby produced is, that the claimant is not compelled to resort to an action of trespass to recover his damages; they may be awarded in the principal suit.

The general rule established in the case of The Apollon (9 Wheat., 373), is that the party who seizes, seizes at his peril. The rule for estimating damages in that case was the actual value of the property with interest. (9 Wheat., 377.)

But the professed object is admitted to be indemnification. (12 Wheat., 17.) How is that indemnification to be afforded? By placing the party where he would have been, if no such proceedings had been instituted.

The doctrines of the civil law may furnish the proper rule. *(2 Bro. Civ. & Adm. [313 Law, 407; Venius, Com., 889; Digest, B. 4, T. 4, s. 33, p. 166; Inst., B. 4, T. 16, s. 2.)

The amount of the stipulation entered into in the District Court furnishes no rule for damages, excepting so far as it operates in favor of the sureties. Had no stipulation been required by the court, they still might have gone on to assess damages. It is not by the stipulation that the party subjects himself to the jurisdiction and judgment of the court, but by the very fact of filing his libel and proceeding in his suit. (10 Wheat., 446.)

Mr. Ogden, for the appellees, argued that this was a claim for damages in a case where one judge had decided in favor of the claimants or appellees; and the appellees were now called upon to respond in damages to an extent which, were the appellees private persons, would produce their ruin. The claim, he contended, was against every principle of law. In case of a seizure by a revenue officer, a certificate from the judge of probable cause will excuse damages. In case of capture, probable ground for making the capture is not a case for damages. There has been no case in which mere civil proceedings in a court to establish a supposed right has exposed the party to such liability, unless the proceedings have been malicious. The penalty is costs and expenses, in cases of the former description.

In the case of Gelston v. Hoyt, the vessel was acquitted, and a certificate of probable cause was refused by the district judge. Had the District Court condemned the vessel in that case, would it have been said there was no probable cause? The Apollon (9 Wheat., 373), was a case of capture without probable ground of proceeding.

1. Inasmuch as there was a decree of a competent court that the seizure made by the appellees was one they had a right to make, this is not a case for damages.

2. It was also a case of first impression. It was a new case, and the party had a right to bring it before a court of the United States for examination. This also prevents its being a case for damages. (The Lewis, 2 Dodson Ad. Rep., 210.)

314*] *Suppose the appellant entitled to damages. The decree of the Circuit Court of South Carolina was a final decree, or this court had no jurisdiction on the first appeal. If the party was entitled to damages, he should have presented his claim to the Circuit Court; not having done so, he could not prefer such a claim when the case went back on the mandate of this court. The matter in dispute was the cotton. It was sold by order of the court, and the proceeds paid into court. Those proceeds were all the court would look to, in any view of those proceedings. All cases of sale by a marshal would bring up claims to damages. The test of the value of the goods, and the sum in controversy between parties, is properly ascertained by sales, under the order or authority of a court by a regular officer.

It is said that if the cotton had not been taken out of the hands of Canter by the proceeding of the appellees, it would have sold for more. He had at all times the right to take it out of the possession of the marshal by an appraisement and security.

As to probable cause exempting parties from damages. (Cited, 1 Wheat., 21; 2 Rob. Ad. Rep., 132; Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch, 41.)

There is no difference between actions for marine trespass, and civil proceedings, in the law of damages. (Mariana Flora, Wheat., 58; The Palmyra, 12 Wheat., 17; 2 Bro. Civ. & Adm. Law, 100, 105, 398; The Appollo, 1 Hag. Adm. Rep., 306.)

As to the costs of the appeal to this court. The counsel fees are a reasonable, but it may be doubted if they are a legal claim. (3 Dall., 301; 9 Wheat., 309.) It is said in the latter case, that the allowance of counsel fees is in the discretion of the court. The case is not then a case for damages. If it is such a case, the appellant has waived them.

Mr. Webster, in reply: A view of this case may be taken, differing entirely from that which is entertained by the counsel for the appellees.

The vessel on board of which the cotton was originally shipped was wrecked. Salvage was decreed by the court at Key West, to be paid 315*] out of the proceeds of the cargo, *and Canter purchased the cotton at the sale made under the order of the court, and shipped it to Charleston. The right of the court at Key West to proceed against the property saved, for salvage, was denied; and at Charleston, the underwriters seized the property. Canter was in possession of the property under the decree of a court, and his right to the property was afterwards confirmed in the Circuit Court and in this court.

This is the case of an action for a marine Peters 3.

tort or trespass, not a question of prize. Jurisdiction of the case was taken on the ground of the case being of this character. It is an action in the admiralty to try the right of property between parties thus situated. What are the principles which apply to such a case? Not those which operate in revenue cases. In those cases certificates of probable cause are allowed, because it is the duty of the officer to act, and if he proceeds on reasonable grounds he is protected. Cases of prize rest on similar principles; those of policy.

This case is not of such a character. The courts of common law and admiralty had concurrent jurisdiction of the case, and the insurance offices might have brought trespass at common law. They have chosen a proceeding in the admiralty, in rem, and they have taken the goods out of the possession of the owner. Goods cannot be taken without the taker being responsible in damages. In a suit at common law, bail would have been given, and the owner would have been left in the use of his property. The proceeding was like replevin for goods, where security is given to respond in damages.

Had Canter a right to anything beyond what he received? To ascertain his loss, the value of the property at the time it was taken out of his possession must be ascertained. The property was taken out of his possession by the libellants; they elected this as their remedy, and one ordinarily leading to loss, and it is not for them to complain when they are called upon to make recompense for the loss. Cases of this kind arising on land are frequently tried. In all cases where property is seized unlawfully, the actor must respond in damages. It is no answer in such cases to say the party was proceeding in the course of regular litigation. He proceeds at his peril.

*Every man may litigate at the charge [316 of costs; but if in his proceedings he will change the possession of the property he claims, then he must indemnify the real owner when the claim is decided against him. In case of marine trespass, it is always in the equitable powers of the court to give damages, and the Circuit Court should have given them instead of putting the appellant to a separate action.

It is said that Canter should have made a claim to damages in the Circuit Court. The case was brought before the court by the appellees, on its former appearance here, and was sent back for further proceedings. It was in the power of the Circuit Court, when the case was again before them, to do all that the appellant could properly claim. Restitution, which the appellant was entitled to, was not to be made by restoring the thing itself; restitution could only be made by placing the appellant in the situation in which he was before the seizure.

Mr. Justice Story delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was formerly before this court, upon an appeal taken by the original libellants, the American and Ocean Insurance Companies, to the decree of the Circuit Court, awarding restitution of the property to the claimant, Canter, with costs. That decree was affirmed by this court, and a mandate issued to the Circuit Court, commanding "that such execution and proceedings be had in said cause, as according to right and justice, and the laws of the United States, ought to be had, the appeal notwithstanding." The case is reported at large in 1 Peters' Rep., 547.

When the case came before the Circuit Court upon the mandate, Canter made an application to the court to refer the same to the proper officer to examine into the damages sustained by him in consequence of the proceedings of the libelants, and to report thereon. A reference was accordingly made to the register to ascertain the damages; and when the case came on before him, the libelants entered a protest against any such proceedings, upon the grounds that the mandate gave no authority to inquire into damages; that none had been in fact 317 awarded, either by the District,* Circuit, or Supreme Court, and that the libelants were not in any manner liable for damages. The register, notwithstanding the protest, proceeded to inquire into the damages, and made his report thereon to the Circuit Court, where the same grounds of objection were again taken by the libelants. The court, upon the hearing, asserted the right to inquire into the damages, as a matter undisposed of in the former decree; but denied any allowance of them upon the merits, and decreed costs and expenses only to the claimant. From this last decree both parties have appealed to this court; and the case now stands before us for judgment upon these cross appeals.

It is proper to add that the libelants in their original libel prayed that the three hundred and fifty-six bales of cotton might be decreed to them, with damages and costs; and that the claimant, Canter, in his claim, also prayed for restitution of the cotton, with damages and costs. The District Court decreed restitution to the libelants of part of the cotton, and dismissed the libel as to the residue, without any award of damages on either side. Both parties appealed from this decree to the Circuit Court; where, upon the hearing, the decree of the District Court was reversed and restitution of all the cotton was decreed to Canter, with costs (as has been before mentioned), but without any award of damages, or any express reservation of that question in the decree.

Two questions have been made and argued at the bar. The first is, whether, under the circumstances, the inquiry into damages could be entertained by the court below, after the cause was remanded for execution by the mandate of this court. The second is, whether, if such proceedings could be had, the present is a fit case for damages.

In respect to the last question, if we felt at liberty to entertain it, we should have no difficulty in concurring in the opinion of the Circuit Court, that this case was not a fit one for an award of damages. The proceedings of the libelants were, in the ordinary course, to vindicate a supposed legal title to the property. There 318 is no pretense to say that the *suit was instituted without probable cause, or was conducted in a malicious or oppressive manner. The libelants had a right to submit their title to the decision of a judicial tribunal, in any legal mode which promised them an effectual and speedy redress. They have failed; not so much from any infirmity in their original title, as from the sentence of a court of competent jurisdiction (whose very jurisdiction was the matter in question), having been adjudged to be conclusive upon that title. Where parties litigate in the admiralty, and there was a probable ground for the suit or defense, the court consider the only compensation which the successful party is entitled to is a compensation in costs and expenses. If the party has suffered any loss beyond these, it is, as was justly observed in the opinion of the Circuit Court, damnum absque injuria.

But we are of opinion that the question of damages is not now open before this court. The original decree of restitution with costs, without any allowance of damages, or any express reservation of that question, was a virtual denial of damages, and a final decree as to the demand of damages set up by Canter in his original claim. It was his duty at that time to have filed a cross appeal, if he meant to rely upon his claim for damages; and not having then done so, it was a waiver of the claim, and a submission to the decree of restitution and costs only. It is of great importance to the due administration of justice, and is in furtherance of the manifest intention of the Legislature, in giving appellate jurisdiction to this court upon final decrees only, that causes should not come up here in fragments upon successive appeals. It would occasion very great delays and oppressive expenses. We have already had occasion to advert to this subject in the cases of The Santa Maria (10 Wheat. Rep., 431); The Palmyra (10 Wheat. Rep., 502); Chace v. Vasquez (11 Wheat. Rep., 429). We wish it now to be understood by the bar, as the settled practice of this court, that wherever damages are claimed by the libelant or the claimant in the original proceedings, if a decree for restitution and costs only passes, it is a virtual *denial of [319 damages; and the party will be deemed to have waived the claim for damages, unless he then interposes an appeal, or cross appeal, to sustain that claim.

As to the costs and expenses, we perceive no error in the allowance of them in the Circuit Court. They are not matters positively limited by law, but are allowed in the exercise of a sound discretion of the court. And, besides, it may be added that no appeal lies from a mere decree respecting costs and expenses.

The decree of the Circuit Court is therefore affirmed with costs.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and decreed by this court, that the decree of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed, without costs, for the libelants.

Cited—17 How., 585; 5 Wall., 412; 12 Wall., 135; 4 Otto, 599; 10 Otto, 113; 14 Otto, 774, 792; 2 Wood. & M., 70; Abb. Adm., 390; 2 Cliff., 551; Olcott, 378; 2 Curt., 12, 27, 148; McAl., 93; 2 Biss., 292.

320*] *DANIEL STRINGER, PHILIP M. LINGER, NICHOLAS, MARGARET AND JOSEPH LINGER, Plaintiffs in Error.

v.

THE LESSEE OF JOHN YOUNG, ARCHIBALD M'CALL, MARY CADWALLADER, WILLIAM REED AND ANNE, HIS WIFE, AND HARRIET M'CALL.

Ejectment—evidence—Virginia land law—record—deputy-surveyor—issue of patent—fraud—division of county between entry and survey—misnomer of county.

On a trial in ejectment, the plaintiffs offered in evidence a number of entries of recent date, made by the defendants, within the bounds of the tract of land in dispute, designated as "Young's four thousand acres;" and attempted to prove by a witness that Young, when he made the entries, had heard of the plaintiffs' claim to the land. The defendants then offered to introduce as evidence official copies of entries made by other and third persons since the date of the plaintiffs' grant; for the purpose of proving a general opinion, that the land contained in the plaintiffs' survey, made under the order of the court, after the commencement of the suit, were vacant at the date of such entries; and to disprove notice to him of the identity of plaintiffs' claim, when he made the entries under which he claimed. This evidence was unquestionably irrelevant. [337]

Entries made subsequent to the plaintiffs' claim, whatever might have been the impression under which they were made, could not possibly affect the title held under a prior entry. [337]

The admission of evidence which was irrelevant, but which was not objected to, will not authorize the admission of other irrelevant evidence offered to rebut the same, when the same is objected to. [337]

The land law of Virginia directs that, within three months after a survey is made, the surveyor shall enter the plat and certificate thereof in a book, well bound, to be provided by the court of his county, at the county charge. After prescribing this, among other duties, the law proceeds to enact that any surveyor failing in the duties aforesaid shall be liable to be indicted. The law, however, does not declare that the validity of such survey shall depend in any degree on its being recorded. [338]

The chief surveyor appoints deputies at his will; and no mode of appointment is prescribed. The survey made by his deputy is examined and adopted by himself, and is certified by himself, to the register of the land-office. He recognizes the actual surveyor as his deputy in that particular transaction, and this, if it be unusual or irregular, cannot affect the grant. [340]

Objections which are properly overruled, when urged against a legal title in support of an equity dependent entirely on a survey of land for which a patent has been issued, can have no weight when urged against a patent regularly issued in all the forms of law. [340]

In Virginia, the patent is the completion of the title, and establishes the performance of every prerequisite. No inquiry into the regularity of those preliminary measures, which ought to precede it, is made in a trial at law. No case has shown that it may be impeached at law, unless it be for fraud. Not legal and technical, but actual and positive fraud, in fact, committed by the person who obtained it; and even this is questioned. [340]

321*] *It is admitted to have been indispensably necessary to the plaintiffs' action to show a valid title to the land in controversy, and that the defendants were at liberty to resist the testimony by any evidence tending in any degree to disprove this identity. But the defendants were not at liberty to offer evidence having no such tendency, but which might either effect a different purpose, or be wholly irrelevant. The question of its relevancy must be decided by the court; and any error in its judgment would be corrected by an appellate tribunal. The court cannot perceive that the omission of the surveyor to record the survey, or the fact that the survey was made by a person not a regular deputy, had any tendency to prove that the land described in the patent was not the land for which the suit was instituted. [342]

The warrant for the land in controversy was entered with the surveyor of Monongalia County on the 7th of April, 1784. At the May session of that year, the General Assembly of Virginia divided the County of Monongalia, and erected a new county, to take effect in July, by the name of Harrison. The land on which the plaintiffs' warrant was entered laid in the new county. The certificate of survey is dated in December, 1784, and in accordance with the entry, states the land to be in Monongalia.

The land law of Virginia enacts that warrants shall be lodged with the surveyor of the county in which the lands lie, and that the party shall direct the location specially and precisely. It also directs despatch in the survey of all lands entered in the office. No provision is made for the division of a county between the entry and the survey. The act establishing the County of Harrison, does not direct that the surveyor of Monongalia County shall furnish the surveyor of Harrison with copies of the entries of lands which lay in the new county, and with the warrants on which they were made. In this state of things, the survey of the land in controversy was made by the surveyor of Monongalia; the plat and certificate on which the patent was afterwards issued were transmitted to the land-office, and the patent described the land as in Monongalia County. No change was made in the law until 1788. This will not annul the patent, or deprive the unoffending patentee of his property. [343]

The misnomer of a county, in a patent for land, will not vacate the patent. It will admit of explanation, and if explanation can be received, the patent on which the misnomer is found is not absolutely void. [344]

ERROR to the District Court of the Western District of Virginia.

This was an ejectment brought by the defendants, against the plaintiffs in error, in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia, exercising circuit court powers, for the recovery of a tract of four thousand acres of land in the said district, being a tract lying in the north-east corner of a large connection of surveys made together, owned by Reed and Ford, the said Youngs, Thomas Lardley, and others; some in one name and some in others, as appearing by the surveyor's diagram. There was a verdict [*322] dict and judgment for the plaintiffs, which this writ of error is brought to reverse.

During the trial the counsel of the defendants tendered three bills of exceptions to opinions of the court, which are signed, sealed, and made part of the record, and which are substantially as follows:

The first bill of exceptions states that the plaintiffs below, on the trial of the case before the District Court, introduced a grant for the lands claimed, which grant is described in the third bill of exceptions, and the plat and report of the surveyor made in the cause.

That the plaintiffs also offered in evidence a number of entries of recent date, made by the defendant, Stringer, within the bounds of the said land, as designated on said report, as John Young's four thousand acres, being the land claimed by the plaintiffs, and attempted to prove by a witness that Stringer, when he made those entries, had heard of the plaintiffs' claim to the land in controversy. The defendants thereupon offered as evidence official copies of entries made by others and third persons, since the date of the plaintiffs' grant, for the purpose of proving a general opinion that the lands claimed were vacant at the date of the said entries, and to disprove notice to Stringer of the identity of the plaintiffs' claim when he made the entries under which the defendants claim to hold. The court decided this evidence to be inadmissible, to which the defendants excepted.

The second bill of exceptions, after setting out the plaintiffs' grant, states that the defendants then offered in evidence the surveyor's book of Monongalia County, to prove no such survey had ever been returned to the office of said surveyor, and recorded in the books of the said surveyor; and further offered to introduce evidence to prove that Henry Fink, the deputy upon whose survey the grant purports to have issued, resided at the date of the said survey in Harrison County, and was not then a deputy surveyor of Monongalia County. The defendants offered the said evidence to prove that no survey had ever been made, and that the register issued the grant without proper authority; on which *account the same was void. The plaintiffs objected to this evidence as inadmissible for the purpose stated; and the court rejected it as such. The defendants' counsel then offered the same evidence to disprove the identity of the land contained in the plaintiffs' grant with that now claimed by the plaintiffs, and represented by the surveyor's report, as contained by the blue lines thereon, and thereon designated by the Roman numeral V. The court also rejected the said evidence for the last-mentioned purpose, and the defendants excepted.

The third bill of exceptions states that the plaintiffs, on the trial of the cause, introduced a grant in the words and figures following, setting it forth at large. The grant is issued to John Young, the lessor, and dated the 10th of June, 1786, for four thousand acres, the premises in question; bounded as follows, to wit: describing it by metes and bounds.

The defendants thereupon offered in evidence a certified copy of an Act of Assembly of Virginia, establishing the County of Harrison, and a copy of the certificate of the survey on which the plaintiffs' said grant issued, dated December 13th, 1824, after the act for creating the County of Harrison was in operation; and proved that the land purporting to be granted, and the land claimed as having been surveyed, lay in the bounds of the County of Harrison; and, upon this evidence, the counsel moved the court to instruct the jury that, if they were satisfied from the testimony that the lands lay in a different county from that in which the survey imports to have been made, then the grant was void at law; and that it was not competent for the plaintiffs to contradict the call for the county in the grant. But the court delivered its opinion that the foregoing facts, if true, should not avail the defendants in the present action, as the grant was not void; to which opinion the third bill of exceptions is taken.

The case was argued by Mr. Smyth, for the plaintiffs in error, and by Mr. Doddridge, for the defendants.

For the plaintiffs, on the first bill of exceptions [324] it was contended *that the court admitted illegal evidence offered by the plaintiffs below and stated in the bill, to go to the jury. That the court rejected evidence offered by the defendants below, which was proper to counteract the said evidence offered by the plaintiffs.

On the second bill of exceptions, it was argued that the evidence offered was legal, and should have been admitted to the jury.

On the third bill of exceptions, the counsel for the plaintiffs contended that the court should have instructed the jury that the plaintiffs' grant was not evidence to support their claim to the land in controversy. That the court should have instructed the jury that if they were satisfied, from the testimony, that the lands lay in a different county from that in which the survey purports to have been made, that the grant was void. That the court should have instructed the jury that the plaintiffs could not, by parol evidence, contradict the call for the county in their grant. That the court erred in giving no instruction on that point, although required so to do by the defendants; and on the whole record, the plaintiffs in error contended that this court should have decided that the grant under which the plaintiffs claimed was void. That the instruction of the judge to the jury that it is no objection to the plaintiffs' grant that the survey was made by a surveyor of Monongalia, in the County of Harrison, is erroneous. That the court erred in admitting hearsay evidence to identify corners and establish boundaries of the lands claimed by the plaintiffs; and that the verdict is contrary to evidence; and, therefore, the court should have ordered a new trial.

Smyth, for the plaintiffs in error, argued that the court admitted the plaintiff below to introduce illegal evidence, as stated in the first bill of exceptions.

They produced copies of a number of entries of recent date, made by Stringer, one of the defendants below, within the bounds described in the surveyor's report; and attempted to prove by a witness that when those entries were made, the said Stringer had heard of the claim of the plaintiffs. This *was an attempt [325] to deprive an individual of the right to enter vacant land, because he has heard that another has a claim to it. Has there not been an attempt, sanctioned by the court, to lead the jury to believe that having heard that another had a claim to the land, the defendants had no right to locate it, although it might be vacant? Has there not been an attempt to lead the jury to believe that the law of purchaser with, or without notice, had some bearing on the cause? The doctrine of notice has no application to purchasers from the government. If the plaintiffs' grant gave no title, notice to Stringer would not make it good against him. Suppose that Stringer and some other person had made entries on the same day, Stringer having heard of Young's claim, the other not having heard of it; will it be contended that the one could, and the other could not, obtain a right? What had the plaintiff to do with these entries of the defendants? They could not stand in the way of the claim of the plaintiffs, if they had a grant for the land. The tendency of this evidence, if not the object of producing it, was to perplex and mislead the jury, and excite a prejudice against the defendant Stringer. And the law is that "illegal or improper evidence, however unimportant it may be to the case, ought never to be confided to the jury; for if it should have an influence upon their minds, it will mislead them; and if it should have none, it is useless, and may at least produce perplexity." (2 Wash., 281.)

The court erred in rejecting evidence offered by the defendants, which was proper to rebut the said evidence offered by the plaintiffs.

The illegality of Young's evidence we admit; but as the court received it, thereupon it became necessary and proper to counteract it. Copies of entries, if evidence for the one party, were evidence for the other; and a general reputation that the land was vacant, was persuasive evidence that Stringer had no notice of Young's claim, and believed the land to be vacant. This evidence was important to remove prejudice; and refusing to receive it secured the effect of the plaintiffs' illegal evidence.

326*] *The evidence stated in the second bill of exceptions should have been left to the jury.

The evidence offered was the book of the surveyor of Monongalia, and testimony that Henry Fink, who made the survey, was not a deputy of the surveyor of Monongalia in December, 1784, when the plaintiffs' survey was made. You cannot, in a court of law, go into the consideration of a deed; but you may avoid it by proving fraud in the execution. If there was no survey, or only a survey by Henry Fink, as deputy-surveyor of Monongalia, when in fact he was not so, the signature of the governor was obtained by fraud. There is fraud in the execution of the deed, which may be shown in a court of law; so this evidence should, for that purpose, have been permitted to go to the jury.

The plaintiffs below were to identify their land; their grant called for land in Monongalia, and their survey was made by Henry Fink, as deputy-surveyor of Monongalia; the surveyor's book was offered to disprove the identity of the land; the judge refused to receive the book as evidence, no matter what it proved. It never was heard before that the survey was not evidence on the question of identity. And if the survey is evidence, the surveyor's book is evidence. The grant calls for a corner to the lands entered by George Jackson. The book might show where those lie. The book might prove that the survey began on the head of the Gladly Fork, of Stone Coal Creek, and extended down it. The land claimed includes the right-hand fork of Stone Coal, below the mouth of the Gladly Fork, and does not include the mouth of the Gladly Fork which is a branch of the right-hand fork. The grant does not say, as the survey does, "beginning at the head of the Gladly Fork of Stone Coal Creek." Hence the necessity of exhibiting the survey; because it contains evidence of the locality not in the grant. If the surveyor's book was legal evidence, it should have been left to the jury whether offered for one purpose or another; but it was rejected by the court.

On the question of identity, the copy of an entry is evidence. (5 Wheat., 359, 362.)

327*] *The court should have instructed the jury that the plaintiffs' grant was not evidence to support their claim.

The defendants produced the Act of Assembly which established Harrison County on the 20th of July, 1784; a copy of the plaintiffs' survey, dated December 13th, 1784, signed Henry Fink, assistant to S. Hanway, S. M. C.; and proved that the lands in controversy lay in Harrison at the date of the survey. The court instructed the jury that if the facts were so, it could not avail the defendants in this action; and that the grant was not void. If we admit, for the sake of argument, that the grant is not void, it can take no lands elsewhere than in Monongalia. And however land in another county may seem to suit the description, they cannot be the granted lands. The grant is no evidence of title to lands in Lewis, a county formed from Harrison. The jury should have been instructed that the grant was no evidence of title to land which lay in Harrison at the date of the survey. The commonwealth has granted lands in Monongalia. If you cannot find them there, you can find them nowhere else. Can a grant for lands in the County of Brooke pass lands lying in the County of Princess Anne? A party must identify the land according to the call of his grant. If he calls for crossing James River, he must cross James River. Is not the call for the county the most important of all calls?

Should it be contended that the surveyor of Monongalia might survey, in Harrison, lands entered in Monongalia before Harrison County was formed, it is answered, this was never authorized; and in this act the sheriff of Monongalia is specially authorized to complete his business in Harrison; but no such authority is given to the surveyor.

The court should have instructed the jury that the plaintiffs could not, by parol evidence, contradict the call for the county in the grant under which they claim.

There is no latent ambiguity. (In Dowlie's case, 3 Coke's Rep., 9, 10), the grant was held void because the parish was wrong named. But if parol evidence could have been offered to contradict the call for the name of the parish, the grant would have been made good. A grant in the county of S. will not pass what lies in the county of D. (3 Bac. *Abr., [*328 389.) But if parol evidence could have been received to contradict the call for the county, the grant would have been made good. A grant to one, as a knight, when he is an esquire, has been held void. But this would have been remedied, had parol evidence been admissible.

Parol evidence is admissible to vary or contradict the grant. (2 Cranch, 29.) The name Hosmer in a grant, cannot be proved by parol to be Houseman. (12 Johns., 77.) In the appendix to Potlier on Obligations, the law is thus laid down (Vol. II., p. 210): "But where there is an existing subject, to which a description may be properly applied, parol evidence cannot be allowed that a different subject was intended." Here there is an existing subject, the County of Monongalia, to which the description, lying in the County of Monongalia, may be applied.

The court was asked to instruct the jury "that it is not competent to the plaintiffs to contradict by parol the call for the county in his grant," and gave no instruction on that point. The court, when asked for an instruction, are bound to give the instruction asked for, or another on the same point. (2 Wash., 272, 273.)

The court should have decided that the grant under which the plaintiffs claimed was void.

It is contended that a grant is void if there is an insufficient or false description; or if it has been obtained on a false suggestion; or if it has been obtained by fraud; or if it has been obtained against the rules of the land-office. And that in all these cases, if the objection appears on the face of the grant, or if it judicially appears, the grant is void in a court of law.

As to an insufficient or false description. If lands are described as lying in a wrong parish, the grant is void. (Cited, 3 Bac. Abr., 388; 2 Co. Rep., 10; 2 Mod., 3, 4; Anderson, 148; 4 Cruise Dig., 225.)

It is, therefore, contended that this grant is void, for an insufficient and false description. And it always was within the jurisdiction of a court of law to declare that for such a defect, a grant or any other deed of conveyance was void. (See 14 Vin. Abr., 100; 2 Co. Rep., 33; Hobart, 171.)

329* It has been decided that to omit the name of the county will not vitiate the grant, if there is otherwise a sufficient description of the land. But to give the name of the county, and give it falsely, is a defect that never was excused. (5 Mumf., 520.) Let us consider the consequences to which the false description in the grant in question would lead. One searches the records of Harrison and the books of the commissioners of the revenue; he finds no notice of any such grant; he searches the office of the surveyor of Harrison and Monongalia; he finds no survey recorded.

Recording a deed in a wrong county is a fatal objection, when urged by a purchaser without notice. So, after the district of Zanesville was formed from that of Marietta, the lands in Zanesville district could not be purchased at the office of Marietta. If lands ought to be conveyed by a deed recorded in the proper county, so they ought to be granted in the proper county. (4 Wheat., 478, 479; 5 Cranch, 92; 1 Wash. C. C. Rep., 322.)

Of the false suggestion. The commonwealth's grant issues on the suggestion of the grantee, and on evidence offered by him, true or false, that he has complied with the law. A grant on a false suggestion is void. The king being deceived, his grant is void. He should be truly informed. If the suggestion is false of the parties' knowledge, the grant is void. (5 Bac. Ab., 602; 10 Co. Rep., 112; 1 Co. Rep., 46, 52; Skinn., 656; 5 Co., 94, 113; Yelv., 48.) "Lying in Monongalia," is the suggestion of the grantee, and it is false. The grant is notice to all men that the grantee does not claim lands in Harrison. The commonwealth is deceived, and every citizen is deceived who may see this grant, and locate the lands claimed in Harrison.

The king's grant can do no wrong; rather than do wrong, it is void; where it would do wrong, it is void. (1 Co. Rep., 44; Shep. Abr., 91.) Here fees are due to the surveyor of Harrison County and the college. The grant is issued on a survey made by a man falsely pretending to be a deputy-surveyor of Monongalia; the surveyor of Harrison is certainly defrauded.

The grant has been obtained by fraud. The register had *no authority to issue a [330 grant for lands in Harrison. In this way all the vacant land in Harrison might have been surveyed as in Monongalia, and granted as in Monongalia, and thus the surveyor of Harrison be defrauded of his fees. They are a part of the consideration; a portion of them is appropriated to the college. The governor supposed that the surveyor's fees were paid. The commonwealth is interested that her officers shall receive their dues, and that the college shall receive the fund appropriated for the support of education. (5 Wheat., 293, 303; 5 Mumf., 522.)

A grant fraudulently obtained is void. In the case of Huidekōoper's Lessee v. Burrus, Judge Washington decided that a patent for land is only prima facie evidence of title; but if the previous steps for vesting a title be not performed, proof of such omission will defeat the same. (5 Harris & Johns., 223; 1 Wash. C. C. Rep., 109; 1 Harris & Johns., 370; 2 Harris & Johns., 456, 458; 1 Hen. & Mumf., 306, 307.)

Perhaps it will be said that, although the grant might have been repealed by petition in chancery, yet it is good in a court of law. It is contended that the statutory provision of Virginia for repealing grants does not affect the authority of the common law courts to declare grants void. It is a new remedy in some cases; in others it is conclusive; in others it does not apply; and this is one of those latter cases. There is no law by which this grant may be repealed: for he who would repeal a grant, must have a prior equitable claim. We are taught that for every wrong there is a remedy; but there is no remedy for this wrong, unless a court of law may adjudge this grant void. Might one have taken all the good lands in the County of Cabel by plats fabricated, purporting to have been made by the surveyor of Henrico, had them granted as lands lying in Henrico, sold them as lands lying in Henrico; and have the title adjudged good because there was no prior equitable claimant to ask for a repeal of the grant?

The providing of a remedy by the repeal of patents, obtained regularly and without fraud, in favor of a prior equitable claimant, did not take away the power of courts of law to adjudge grants void for insufficiency or fraud. The *English courts of law declare [331 grants and other deeds void on trials of writs of right and ejectments. Virginia has adopted the common law of England. Where is the Act of Assembly that takes this power from her common law courts?

The law which avoids a grant, is the same in Virginia as in England. Judge Blackstone says a patent is void in a court of law if the cause appears on its face. (2 Black., 348.) Judge Roane says the same thing. (1 Mumf., 141.) Is it required that the falsehood and the truth shall both appear on the face of the grant? Certainly no. The falsehood appears on the face of the grant; the truth appears by the evidence in the cause; and then the grant is adjudged void. In this case the truth appears by the record, and that which avoids the grant, appears on its face. It calls for lands in Monongalia. If the land claimed is identified in Harrison, that circumstance renders the grant void; for on its face, it appears that the land was surveyed after Harrison became a county.

When it appears judicially that the king is deceived, his grant is void. (Skin., 659; 6 Mumf., 120.)

It is not necessary to repeal a grant, unless that grant, unrepealed, confers a title: but this grant confers no title to land in Harrison, therefore it is unnecessary to repeal it.

With regard to deeds, a distinction has been taken that you cannot, in a court of law, invalidate them by proving a fraud in the consideration; but that you may prove a fraud in the execution. Here we say the execution was obtained by fraud. The governor was, by falsehood, induced to execute the grant. Would he have signed it had he been truly informed? Certainly not.

It has been decided in Virginia, in a similar case, that a grant might be declared void in a court of law; and that decision has never been declared not to be law. (Hambledon v. Wells.)

Mr. Doddridge, for the defendant in error. The matters alleged in the first bill of exceptions are wholly unimportant. The testimony offered and rejected, was not receivable for any purpose. The plaintiffs stood on the oldest grant, or the only grant appearing in the cause; 332 and in such a case, besides *the formalities affirmed by the common rule, the only question between the parties was that of identity, and neither for this nor for any other purpose were they permitted to look behind the grant. This will hereafter be proved, when considering the questions raised by the second and third bills of exceptions. The evidence offered and given by the plaintiffs, except the grant and surveyor's report, was unnecessary; as he had nothing to do with the conscience of Stringer. Perhaps it might be admitted that this testimony was improper, yet it was not objected to. But the testimony offered by the defendants and rejected, was improper in every view. It was offered to prove a general belief that the bond was vacant; a fact which, if admitted, could avail them nothing.

The questions raised by the second bill of exceptions are:

1. Whether a defendant, when a legal grant for the land claimed, and the official survey on which it is founded, are given in evidence against him, can avoid the grant by showing by the book of surveys that the survey was not recorded; and by parol proof that the deputy was not the deputy of the surveyor certifying the plat, but of another surveyor.

2. Whether the defendant can offer the same evidence to disprove the identity of the land.

The question raised by the third bill of exceptions was this: The official plot and certificate of survey is dated the 13th of December, 1784; and the plaintiffs' grant thereon the 10th June, 1786. The County of Harrison was created the 3d of May, 1784. The law commenced in force the 20th of July, 1784. So that, when the survey bears date, the County of Harrison was in being, and the land in fact was in that county; and the question is, ought the court to have instructed the jury that, if they found these facts, the grant was void at law, and the plaintiffs could not disprove the descriptive call, "Monongalia County," in the survey and the grant?

Peters 3.

The questions raised by the second and third bills of exceptions may be considered together.

1. The first position is, that the parties can go behind the grant for nothing in an action at law, because evidence before the grant would take the party by surprise; and because, the grant is, ipso facto, an appropriation, and the *question to be determined is the identity of the thing granted. Again, in the case of a land office warrant, in Virginia, the entry is, and the survey is not, an inceptive appropriation. The title is transferred by the grant, towards obtaining which the survey is but a progressive step. Even the entry cannot be brought before the court. (Wilson v. Mason, 1 Cranch, 45, 101; Johnston v. Brown, 3 Call, 359, 268; McArthur v. Browder, 4 Wheat., 488, 491; Finley v. Williams, 9 Cranch, 164, 167.)

In the case of a military warrant under the colonial government it was otherwise. There was no entry, and, of course, the survey was an inceptive act of appropriation. (Taylor v. Brown, 5 Cranch, 234, 241.)

It follows that the warrant in the latter case, without any other act, conferred on the surveyor an authority to survey; whereas, under the land law of Virginia, of May Session, 1779, ch. 13, the warrant must be lodged with the surveyor, and the party must make an entry on the land he selects. This entry, alone, confers on the surveyor the authority to survey; and his certificate of survey proves as well that the possession of the warrants were necessary, as the entry under which he surveys; as under the military warrant it proved the possession of the warrant. That is, it proves the existence of the authority by which it was made. (Taylor v. Brown, 5 Cranch, 234, 241.)

1. The whole duty of a surveyor, in relation to a survey and recording it, is prescribed by the Act of 1779, ch. 13., 10 Hen., S. L., page 57.

These duties are again prescribed in 1784, by an act reducing into one the several acts concerning surveyors (10 Hen., S. L., page 352); but by the latter act these duties are not varied. These laws require the surveyor to run, and plainly mark and bound the survey, except where the same is bounded by water-courses, the lines of surveys before made. They require him, in his certificate, to note the boundaries, courses, and distances, variation from the true meridian, and to set down the names of adjoining owners, and of the hundreds, where any are established; and to observe a due proportion between length and breadth. The *law does not expressly 334 require the county to be named, but it is admitted that it does so impliedly.

Yet, as a survey is a progressive step, and those duties merely directory, it has been holden that the name of the owner of the survey itself may be mistaken in the certificate and grant, and both contradicted by parol testimony; as where the survey imported to be made for one Vineyard, it was allowed to be proved that, in fact, it was made for one Unrod. (Johnston v. Buffington, 1 Wash., 116.)

That the duties imposed on the surveyor are directory, and the omission to perform them does not affect the right of the party, is settled by this court in Craig v. Rudford (3 Wheat., 594), and several other cases.

3. The name of the county is matter of general description, and although a surveyor ought to state it truly, yet if he does not, the name of the county may as well be corrected by evidence as the name of the owner. If he misstate it, he fails in his duty; but this shall not injure the party.

In a grant, a description that will identify the land is all that is necessary. (M'Arthur v. Browder, before quoted.) If even a location have certain material calls sufficient to support it, and to describe the lands, other calls less material and incompatible with the essential calls may be disregarded. (Taylor v. Brown, 5 Cranch, 234, 241.) Now, water-courses are natural, material, permanent and essential calls; while the lines of a county are immaterial and artificial ones.

4. The omission of the name of the county does not vitiate a grant, which proves this description immaterial. (M'Lean v. Tomlinson, 5 Mumf., 220, 223.)

The patent in that case, on its face, purports to have issued on a certificate of survey bearing date the 14th of July, 1773; on warrants of a subsequent date in that and the next year, and the name of the county is left blank. The court decided the omission to be immaterial, the patent containing other sufficient descriptions, as "at the round bottom" "on the Ohio," &c., &c.

The history of that title is as follows: General Washington procured a deputy-surveyor of 335] West Augusta to make a private survey for him in 1773. He possessed the field notes, and afterwards purchased warrants to cover it of a date subsequent to his private survey. In October, 1776, the counties of Monongalia, Ohio and Yohogania, were formed out of West Augusta. (See Hen., S. L., Vol. IX., 262, 269.) The law creating these counties took effect the 8th of November, 1777; 263. After this period, the surveyor of West Augusta ceased to be surveyor of either of those counties; yet, on these private field notes, and of the acquired warrants, he returned a plat and certificate of survey; but not knowing into which of those new counties the land fell, he left the name blank.

Here the survey was made without any authority whatever; the special verdict having found the true date of the survey and warrants, and all this appearing on the face of the grant, and yet it was sustained as valid at law.

5. But if it were granted that the surveyor's book of surveys could be produced for any purpose, it would follow, of course, and, a fortiori, that the book of entries could also be produced; which would be contrary to the decisions of this court and of the courts of Kentucky. If parties in another county were supposed to be ready to do this, then the real fact would appear that the entries were made in Monongalia, while Harrison was part of that county, and remained unsurveyed at the time of the separation.

The date of the entry does not appear from the patent, and the true date of the survey does not appear in the case otherwise than by the certificate. This date should be controlled by the certificate that the lands are in Monongalia County, which they could not be at the date of the certificate. Or if the court would not sustain the position, then this court have already decided that the official certificate of a survey proves the authority by which the same was made, and therefore proves a good and valid entry made in Monongalia before the separation of the counties, and at that time remaining unsurveyed.

If it is contended that this entry ought to have been certified to the surveyor of the new county, the law on the subject is misunderstood. Prior to the act of October Session, *17th, ch. 51, there was no provision [336 for so certifying an entry. (See 12 Hen., S. L., 709.) The preamble puts the matter beyond dispute.

An unsurveyed entry remains subject to forfeiture if not surveyed in time, and all the duties and responsibilities attached to that surveyor with whom the entry was made. Should he have stated the lands to have been in Harrison County at the time of survey? If so, he has made a mistake. Ought he to have recorded the survey, and did he fail to do so? Then he has, in both cases, failed in the discharge of a directory duty, merely; by which the right of the party is not impaired.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an ejectment brought in the Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs, on which the judgment of the court was rendered, which judgment has been brought to this court by writ of error. At the trial, three bills of exception were taken to opinions given by the court to the jury, and the cause depends on the correctness of these opinions. The first bill of exceptions is in substance; the plaintiffs at the trial of this cause produced a grant (setting it forth in words and figures therein). This grant is issued to John Young, dated the 10th of June, 1786, for four thousand acres, bounded as follows: Beginning at a black oak corner to land entered by George Jackson, and running thence N. 3° W. 1,001 poles, crossing waters of Stone Coal Creek to a beech, thence N. 80° E. 641 poles, crossing a branch of said creek to a white oak S. 3° E. 1,001 poles, by lands surveyed for Thomas Laidley, to a white oak, and thence S. 80° W. 660 poles, crossing waters by lands of said waters to the beginning. Also the plat and report of the surveyor, Thomas Haymond, made in this cause, in pursuance of an order, &c. The plaintiff also offered in evidence a number of entries of recent date, made by the defendant, Stringer, within the bounds of the tract of land designated on said report as John Young's four thousand acres, being the land claimed by the plaintiffs; and attempted to prove by a witness that Young, when he made said en- [337 tries, had heard of the plaintiffs' claim to the land in controversy. The defendants thereupon offered to introduce as evidence official copies of entries made by other and third persons, since the date of the plaintiffs' grant, for the purpose of proving a general opinion that the lands contained in the report and diagram of the surveyor, made in this cause, were vacant at the date of such entries, and to disprove notice to Stringer of the identity of the plaintiffs' claim when he made the entries under which the defendants claim; but the court declared its opinion to be that the said evidence was inadmissible, and rejected the same.

The testimony offered by the defendants was unquestionably irrelevant. Entries made subsequent to the plaintiffs' grant, whatever might be the impression under which they were made, could not possibly effect the title, and were, therefore, clearly inadmissible. This principle has never been controverted; but the plaintiffs in error insist that they had a right to introduce this testimony, in order to rebut other equally irrelevant testimony which had been offered by the plaintiffs in ejectment. This testimony was the recent entries made by Stringer, and the witness who proved that at the time of making them, he had no notice of the plaintiffs claim. This testimony was undoubtedly irrelevant, and had it been opposed, could not have been properly admitted. Had the defendant moved the court to instruct the jury that it must be utterly disregarded, that it must not be considered by them as testimony, and this instruction had been refused, the refusal to give it would have been error. The defendant, however, has not taken this course; but has chosen to repel the testimony by other evidence, which was clearly inadmissible. Whether a case may exist in which improper testimony may be calculated to make such an impression on the jury that no instruction given by the judge can efface it, and whether in such a case testimony not otherwise admissible may be introduced, which is strictly and directly calculated to disprove it, are questions on which this court does not mean to indicate any opinion. It is unnecessary, because the testimony rejected by the court is not of this character. Entries 338 made subsequent to the plaintiffs' grant by others, can have no tendency to disprove the evidence of notice by the defendant when its entries were made.

The second bill of exceptions is in these words: Upon the trial of this cause, the plaintiffs, in support of the issue on their part, introduced a grant to the lessor of the plaintiffs in the words and figures following: "Patrick Henry, &c." The defendants thereupon offered to introduce the surveyor's book of Monongalia County, to prove no such survey had ever been returned to the office of said surveyor, and recorded in the book of said office; and further, offered to introduce evidence that Henry Fink, the deputy upon whose survey said grant purports to have issued, resided at the date of the said survey in Harrison County, and was not a deputy-surveyor of Monongalia County. The defendants offered said evidence to prove the said grant issued without any survey having been made, and that the register of the land-office issued said grant without proper authority, and that the same was therefore void. To the giving of which evidence the plaintiffs, by their counsel, objected, and the court declared its opinion to be that such evidence could not be given for the purposes aforesaid, and rejected the same. Whereupon the defendants, by their counsel, offered the same evidence to disprove the identity of the land contained in the plaintiffs' grant with that now claimed by the plaintiffs, and represented by the figure in the said surveyor's report. But the court declared its opinion to be that the said evidence ought not to be received for the last-mentioned purpose.

port. But the court declared its opinion to be that the said evidence ought not to be received for the last-mentioned purpose.

In rejecting this testimony, the court decided that the nonappearance of the survey on which the grant of the plaintiffs had been issued on the book of the surveyor of Monongalia County, where it ought to have been recorded, and the fact that the person who made the survey was not at the time a deputy-surveyor of Monongalia County, could not avoid the patent; and that the evidence of those facts was consequently inadmissible.

The land law of Virginia directs that within three months after a survey is made, the surveyor shall enter the plat and certifi- [339] cate thereof in a book, well bound, to be provided by the court of his county, at the county charge. After prescribing this among other duties, the law proceeds to enact that any surveyor failing in any of the duties aforesaid, shall be liable to be indicted, &c. The law, however, does not declare that the validity of such survey shall depend in any degree on its being recorded.

The act also directs that the surveyor "shall, as soon as it can conveniently be done, and within three months at the farthest after making the survey, deliver to his employer or his order, a fair and true plat and certificate of such survey," &c. This plat and certificate is to be returned into the land-office within twelve months at farthest. It may be returned immediately, and consequently may be returned to the land-office before the expiration of the three months allowed to the surveyor for recording it in his book. This plat and certificate of survey is an authority to the register to issue a patent.

The surveyor undoubtedly neglects his duty if he fails to record the plat and certificate of survey, and is punishable for this neglect; but the act furnishes no foundation for the opinion that the validity of the survey or of the patent is in any degree affected by it.

This point occurred in the case of Taylor v. Brown (2 Cranch, 234). That was a suit in chancery, brought by a junior patentee to establish an elder equitable title against the elder patent. Both claimed under old military surveys, made in virtue of military warrants, granted for service under the regal government, an entry of which with the surveyor was not required by law; consequently the survey was the foundation of a title to be asserted in a court of equity, against a title which was valid at law. The omission of any circumstance affecting his title was not, as in this case, cured by the patent.

In answer to the objection that the survey was not recorded within the time prescribed by the Act of 1748, which contains a similar provision to that which is found in the present land law, the court said: "This section is merely directory to the surveyor. It does not make the validity of the survey de- [340] pendent on its being recorded, nor does it give the proprietor any right to control the conduct of the surveyor in this respect. His title, where it can commence without an entry, begins with the survey; and it would be unreasonable to deprive him of that title, by the subsequent neglect of an officer not appointed by himself, in not performing an act which the law does not pronounce necessary to his title, the performance of which he has not the means of coercing." We adhere to this opinion.

The circumstance that Fink, who is stated not to have resided at the time in Monongalia nor to have been a deputy-surveyor of that county, has also been considered as vitiating the patent.

The chief surveyor appoints deputies at his will, and no mode of appointment is prescribed. The survey made by his deputy is examined and adopted by himself, and is certified by himself to the register of the land-office. He recognizes the actual surveyor as his deputy, in that particular transaction; and this, if it be unusual or irregular, cannot effect the grant. This point also appears to have been substantially decided in the case of Taylor v. Brown. In that case Taylor's survey was made by Hancock Taylor, who was killed by Indians, so that he never returned the plat and certificate of survey to William Preston, the principal surveyor, as was required by law. His field notes, however, were brought to the principal surveyor, who made out a plat and certificate of survey from them. To the objection that the plat and certificate not having been returned to the office, the survey was not completed, the court answered, "this survey, then, is in law language made by William Preston. It is confirmed as a survey made by him. The law recognizes it as his survey. Assuredly, then, his certificate may authenticate it."

It cannot escape observation that if these objections were properly overruled when urged in support of the legal title, against an equity dependent entirely on the survey, they can have no weight when urged against the validity of a patent which has been regularly issued in all the forms of law.

In Virginia, the patent is the completion of 341] title, and establishes *the performance of every prerequisite. No inquiry into the regularity of those preliminary measures which ought to precede it, is made in a trial at law. No case has shown that it may be impeached at law, unless it be for fraud; not legal and technical, but actual and positive, fraud in fact, committed by the person who obtained it; and even this is questioned.

In Hambledon et al. v. Wells, reported in a note in 1 Hen. & Mun., 307, the defendants in ejectment in the District Court offered evidence to prove that the grant under which the lessor claimed, was defective in several prerequisites to a patent. The Court of Appeals overruled these objections; but determined "that the District Court erred in not permitting the appellants to give evidence that the appellee procured the plat on which the patent was obtained to be returned to the office, knowing that an actual survey had not been made." In this case the objectionable act was a fraud, knowingly committed by the patentee himself. Even this case has been questioned; though not, as far as is known, expressly overruled.

In Witherington v. McDonald (1 Hen. & Mun., 306), the defendant in ejectment offered evidence to show that the survey upon which the plaintiff's patent was founded was illegal; and also that the patent was obtained upon a certificate signed by Charles Lewis, as clerk of the land-office, instead of being signed by the register or his deputy, as is required by law. The defendant excepted to the opinion of the court rejecting this testimony, and appealed to the Court of Appeals. The judgment was unanimously affirmed in that court. In the course of the trial, the case of Hambledon v. Wells was mentioned by several of the judges with disapprobation; and it was said that a single case decided by three judges against two, was not considered as conclusively settling the law.

The case of Hoofnagle v. Anderson (7 Wheat., 212) was a suit in chancery, brought to obtain a conveyance for a tract of land in the Virginia military reserve, in the State of Ohio, for which Anderson had obtained a patent. After its emanation, the plaintiff had located a military land warrant *on the same land, issued [342 for services performed by an officer in the Virginia line, on continental establishment. The services performed by the officer on whose warrant Anderson's patent had been issued, were in the State line; though the warrant was expressed by mistake, to be for services in the continental line. This court said: "It is not doubted that a patent appropriates the land. Any defects in the preliminary steps which are required by law, are cured by the patent. It is a title from its date, and has always been held conclusive against all whose rights did not commence previous to its emanation."

After the rejection of this testimony, when offered to defeat the patent, it was offered for the purpose of disproving that the land contained in the patent was the same land claimed in the suit. The court rejected it when offered for this purpose also.

It is admitted to have been indispensably necessary to the plaintiffs' action to show a valid title to the land in controversy; and that the defendants were at liberty to meet this testimony by any evidence tending in any degree to disprove this identity. But the defendants were not at liberty to offer evidence having no such tendency, but which might either effect a different purpose, or be wholly irrelevant. The question of its relevancy must be decided by the court; and any error in its judgment would be corrected by an appellate tribunal.

Now, this court cannot perceive that the omission of the surveyor to record the survey, or the fact that the survey was made by a person not a regular deputy, had any tendency to prove that the land described in the patent was not the land for which the suit was instituted.

The third exception stated that the plaintiffs had offered in evidence a grant as set forth in the second bill of exceptions, &c. The defendants thereupon offered in evidence a certified copy of an Act of the Assembly of Virginia, establishing the County of Harrison in the words and figures following: "An act for dividing," &c., and a copy of the certificate of survey on which said grant issued, in the words and figures following: "December 13th, 1784," &c., and proved *that the land pur- [343 ported to be granted, and the land claimed as having been surveyed, lay in the bounds of the County of Harrison, established as aforesaid; and, therefore, the defendants moved to instruct the jury that if they are satisfied, from the testimony, that the land lay in a different county from that in which the survey purports to have been made, that the grant was void; and that it was not competent for the plaintiffs to contradict the call for the county in the patent and survey; but the court then and there declared its opinion to the jury, that if even the facts aforesaid were true, they could not avail the defendants in the present action, and that the grant under these circumstances would not be void.

The warrant was entered for the land in controversy with the surveyor of Monongalia County, on the 7th of April, 1784. At the May Session of that year the General Assembly divided the County of Monongalia, and created a new county, to take effect in July, by the name of Harrison. The land on which Young's warrant was entered lay in the new county. The certificate of survey is dated in December, 1784, and, in accordance with the entry, states the land to lay in Monongalia. The grant conforms with the certificate.

The land law of Virginia enacts that warrants shall be lodged with the surveyor of the county in which the lands lie, and that the party shall direct the location thereof specially and precisely. It also enacts that "every chief surveyor shall proceed with all practicable dispatch to survey all lands entered for in his office." No provision is made for the division of a county between the entry and survey. The act establishing the County of Harrison does not direct that the surveyor of the County of Monongalia shall furnish the surveyor of the new county with copies of the entries of lands lying in Harrison, and with the warrants on which they were made. In this state of things the survey was made under the authority of the surveyor of Monongalia, and the plat and certificate on which the patent afterwards issued were transmitted to the land-office. It was not till the year 1788 that the Legislature passed an act on this subject, which directs that when any county shall be thereafter divided, the *surveyor of the new county shall be furnished with copies of the entries of all the surveyed lands lying in his county.

If, in this uncertain state of the law, the surveyor of Monongalia County has surveyed an entry properly made in his office for land which, by a subsequent division of the county, falls into Harrison, and has made his certificate as if the county still remained undivided; ought this error, if it be an error of the officer, to annul the patent, and deprive the unoffending patentee of his property?

The counsel for the plaintiffs in error has produced several cases to show that a mistake of this character in a royal grant, or any misinformation to the officers of the crown, will vitiate the instrument. We are not sure that grants which may be supposed to proceed from royal munificence are to be placed precisely on the same footing with grants which are the completion of a contract of sale, every preliminary step in which is taken by officers appointed for the purpose by government, who act without the control of the purchaser. After making his location, he may show the land located, but has nothing to do with the authority of the surveyor, or the language in which he may make out his plat and certificate of survey. In this case there could have been no imposition attempted on the government by the purchaser. The mistake is accounted for, and there can be no imputation on the intrinsic fairness of the transaction. The misnomer of the county might take place, as has been suggested at the bar, in a case in which all the proceedings were perfectly regular. Had the survey been made the day before the law dividing the County of Monongalia took effect, the plat and certificate of the surveyor must have stated the land to be in Monongalia. The patent could not have issued until six months afterwards, and must have stated the lands to lie in Monongalia; although at the time of its emanation, they would, in fact, lie in Harrison. To say, in such a case, that the misnomer of the county could avoid the patent, would shock every sense of justice and of law too much to be maintained. This misnomer of the county, then, must admit of explanation; and if explanation can be received, the patent is not absolutely void.

*The circumstances on which the [*345 motion to reject the grant was made, might be very proper for the consideration of the jury, on the question whether it comprehended the land in controversy; but do not, we think, destroy its validity.

A vast deal of testimony, of which the court can take no notice, is crowded into this record.

The bills of exceptions taken to the opinions of the district judge present the only points which we are at liberty to consider. In those opinions there is, we think, no error. The judgment is affirmed with costs.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the District Court of the United States for the District of West Virginia, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said District Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed with costs.

Cited—6 Pet., 344-346.

*ALEXANDER FINLAY AND JOHN [*346 MITCHELL, Plaintiffs in Error,
v.
WILLIAM KING'S LESSEE.

Construction of a will—condition subsequent—trust.

The testator was seized of a very large real and personal estate in the States of Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio and Tennessee. After making, by his will, in addition to her dower, a very liberal provision for his wife, for her life, out of part of his real estate, and devising, in case of his having a child or children, the whole of his estate to such child or children, with the exception of the provision for his wife and certain other bequests; his will declares: "In case of having no children, I then leave and bequeath all my real estate at the death of my wife, to William King, son of brother James King, on condition of his marrying a daughter of William Trigg's, and my niece Rachel, his wife, lately Rachel NOTE.—Conditions in Wills, precedent and subsequent.

See note to Taylor v. Mason, 9 Wheat., 325.

Finlay, in trust for the eldest son or issue of said marriage; and in case such marriage should not take place, I leave and bequeath said estate to any child, giving preference to age, of said William and Rachel Trigg, that will marry a child of my brother James King's, or of sister Elizabeth's, wife to John Mitchell, and to their issue."

The testator died without issue. He survived his father, and had brothers and sisters of the whole and half blood, who survived him, and also a sister of the whole blood, Elizabeth, the wife of John Mitchell, who died before him. William and Rachel Trigg never had a daughter, but had four sons. James King, the father of William King, the devisee, had only one daughter, who intermarried with Alexander McCall. Elizabeth, the wife of John Mitchell, had two daughters, both of whom are married, one to William Heiskill, the other to Abraham B. Trigg.

BY THE COURT. We have found no case in which a general devise in words, importing a present interest in a will making no other disposition of the property, on a condition which may be performed at any time, have been construed, from the mere circumstance that the estate is given on condition, to require that the condition must be performed before the estate can vest. There are many cases in which the contrary principle has been decided. The condition on which the devise to William King depended, is a condition subsequent. [377]

It is certainly well settled that there are no technical appropriate words which always determine whether a devise be on a condition precedent or subsequent. The same words have been determined differently, and the question is always a question of intention. If the language of the particular clause, or of the whole will, shows that the act upon which the estate depends must be performed before the estate can vest, the condition of course is precedent: and unless it is performed, the devisee can take nothing. If, on the contrary, the act does not necessarily precede the vesting of the estate, but may accompany or follow it, if this is to be collected from the whole will, the condition is subsequent. [374]

It is a general rule that a devise in words of the present time, as, "I give to A my lands in B," imports, if no contrary intent appears, an immediate interest, which vests in the devisee on the death of [347*] the testator. It is also a general rule that if an estate be given on a condition for the performance of which no time is limited, the devisee has his life for performance. The result of these two principles seems to be, that a devise to A, on condition that he shall marry B, if uncontrolled by other words, takes effect immediately, and the devisee performs the condition if he marry B at any time during his life. The condition is subsequent. [376]

The intent of the testator is the cardinal rule in the construction of wills; and if that intent can be clearly perceived, and is not contrary to some positive rule of law, it must prevail; although in giving effect to it, some words should be rejected or so restrained in their application as to change their literal meaning in the particular instance. [377]

As the devise in the will to William King was on a condition subsequent, it may be construed so far as respects the time of taking possession, as if it had been unconditional. The condition opposes no obstacle to his immediate possession, if the intent of the testator shall require that construction. [378]

The introductory clause in the will states: "I, William King, have thought proper to make and ordain this to be my last will and testament, leaving and bequeathing my wordly estate in the manner following." These words are entitled to considerable influence in a question of doubtful intent, in a case where the whole property is given, and the question arises between the heir and devisee respecting the interest devised. The words of the particular clause also carry the whole estate from the heir, but they fix the death of the testator's wife as the time when the devisee shall be entitled to possession. They are "in case of having no children, I then leave and bequeath all my real estate, at the death of my wife, to William King, son of brother James King." The whole estate is devised to William King, but the possession of that part of it which is given to the wife or others for life, is postponed until her death. [379]

Quere. Did William King take an estate which, in the events that have happened, enures to his own benefit; or is he, in the existing state of things, to be considered a trustee for the heirs of the testator? This question cannot be decided in this cause; it belongs to a Court of Chancery, and will be determined when the heir shall bring a bill to enforce the execution of the trust. [383]

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia.

This was an ejectment brought in the District Court of the Western District of Virginia, and the question involved in the suit was the construction to be given to the will of William King, deceased, formerly of Washington County, in Virginia.

The cause was argued in the court below on the following case agreed; and the judgment of that court being in favor of the defendant in error, the plaintiffs brought the case into this court.

The following is the case agreed:

We agree that William King departed this life on the 8th *day of October, 1808, [*348] having first duly made and published his last will and testament, which was afterwards admitted to record in the County Court of Washington County in Virginia, where he had resided, and is in the words and figures following:

"Meditating on the uncertainty of human life, I, William King, have thought proper to make and ordain this to be my last will and testament, leaving and bequeathing my wordly estate in the manner following, to wit:

"To my beloved wife Mary, in addition to her legal dower of all my estate, the dwelling-house and other buildings on lot number ten in Abingdon, where I now reside, together with the garden, orchard, and that part of my fruit hill plantation south of the great road and lands adjacent to Abingdon, now rented to C. Finlay & Co., and at my father's decease, including those in his occupancy on the north side of the great road, for her natural life.

"I also will and declare that in case my beloved wife Mary hath hereafter a child or children by me, that the said child or children is and are to be sole heirs of my whole estate, real and personal; excepting one-third part of specified legacies and appropriations hereinafter mentioned; which, in case of my having children, will reduce each legacy hereinafter mentioned to one-third part of the amount hereafter specified, and the disposition of the real estate, as hereafter mentioned in that case wholly void.

"In case of having no children, I then leave and bequeath all my real estate at the death of my wife to William King, son of brother James King, on condition of his marrying a daughter of William Trigg's and my niece Rachel his wife, lately Rachel Finlay, in trust for the eldest son or issue of said marriage; and in case such marriage should not take place, I leave and bequeath said estate to any child, giving preference to age, of said William and Rachel Trigg that will marry a child of my brother James King's or of sister Elizabeth's, wife to John Mitchell, and to their issue—and during the lifetime of my wife, it is my intention and request, that William Trigg, James King and her, do carry on my business in copartnership, both salt-works and merchandising, each equal *shares, and that in consideration of [*349] the use of my capital they pay out of the same the following legacies:

"To John Mitchell, on condition of his assisting and carrying on business with them at the usual salary as formerly, viz., $1,000 per year, for from two to five years, as they may wish his assistance. An additional sum of $10,000, payable five years after my decease, and to each of his children upon coming of age $1,000 more than the general legacy hereafter mentioned.

Peters 3.

"To Connally Finlay a like sum of $10,000, payable in five years.

"To my nieces, Elizabeth Finlay and Elizabeth Mitchell (being called for my grandmother with whom I was brought up), $10,000 in twelve months after marriage, provided they are then eighteen years of age; if not, at the age of eighteen; to each of my other nephews and nieces at the age of eighteen, that is, children of my brother James, sisters Nancy and Elizabeth, $1,000 each—to each of the children of my half-brother Samuel and half-sister Hannah, $300 each, as aforesaid; to my said sister Hannah, in two years after my decease, $1,000; and to my said half-brother Samuel, in case of personal application to the manager at Saltville or to my executors in Abingdon, on the 1st day of January annually during his life $150; if not called for on said day to be void for that year, and receipt to be personally given.

"It is my wish and request that my wife, William Trigg, and James King, or any two of them that shall concur in carrying on the business, should either join all the young men that may reside with me and be assisting me in my decease, that are worthy; or furnish them with four or five thousand dollars' worth of goods at a reasonable advance, on a credit of from three to five years, taking bonds with interest from one year after supply.

"In case my brother James should prefer continuing partnership with Charles S. Carson (in place of closing the business of King, Carson & King, as soon as legal and convenient), then my will is that William Trigg and my wife carry on the business, one-third of each 350]* for their own *account, and the remaining third to be equally divided between the children of my brother James and sisters Nancy and Elizabeth.

"To my father, Thomas King, I leave during his life the houses he now resides in and occupies at Fruit Hill, together with that part of my land in said tract north of the great road that he chooses to farm, with what fruit he may want from the orchard; the spring-house being intended for a wash-house with the appurtenances, subject to the direction of my beloved wife Mary, as also the orchard, except as aforesaid. I also leave and bequeath to my father the sum of two hundred dollars per annum during his life, and if, accidentally, fire should destroy his Fincastle house and buildings, a further sum of two hundred dollars per annum while his income from there would cease.

"I also leave and bequeath to the Abingdon Academy the sum of $10,000, payable to the trustees in the year 1816, or lands to that amount, to be vested in said academy with the interest or rents thereon forever.

"Abingdon, Virginia, 3d of March, 1806.

WILLIAM KING.

Test. WM. D. NEELSON,
JNO. DOHERTY.

Peters 3.

"I hereby appoint William Trigg of Abingdon and James King of Nashville executors of my last will and testament inclosed, written by my own hand and signed this 3d day of March, 1806.

WILLIAM KING.

"The other wills of previous dates to said 3d of March, 1806, being void.

WILLIAM KING.

We agree that William King, at the time of his death, was seized and possessed of seventy-six tracts of land in the said County of Washington, containing in the whole 19,473 acres of land, on one of which tracts is the salt-works, which have, since his death, been leased for years, at the annual rent of thirty thousand dollars; also of nineteen lots in the town of Abingdon in Washington County, nine of which produced *an annual rent of six [351 hundred and sixty dollars; also of fourteen tracts of land in the County of Wythe, containing 3,494½; also of eighteen tracts of land in the State of Tennessee, containing in the whole 10,880; also of shares in town lots in several of the towns in the said State of Tennessee. We also agree that the said William King survived his father in the will mentioned; that the said William King had brothers and sisters, to wit: James King, a brother of the whole blood; Nancy, a sister of the whole blood, the wife of Connally Finlay in the will mentioned; Samuel King, a brother of the half blood; Hannah, a sister of the half blood, the wife of John Allen; all of which brothers and sisters before named, survived the said William King; that another sister of the said William King, of the whole blood, died before him, and was named Elizabeth, the wife of John Mitchell, who is mentioned in the will.

We agree that William King, the lessor of the plaintiff, is the same William King, the son of James King, brother of the testator, mentioned by him in the will.

We further agree that William Trigg, in the will mentioned, departed this life on the 4th of August, 1813, leaving Rachel Trigg, in the will mentioned, his widow, and four sons, the said Rachel having borne them to the said William Trigg, and not having borne any daughter to him the said William Trigg, at any time, which said sons are now living; that Mary, who was the wife of the said William King, is still living, aged forty-three years, and is now the wife of Francis Smith.

We further agree that William King, the lessor of the plaintiff, is married to Sarah Bekem; that James King had only one daughter, named Rachel Mary Eliza, who is now the wife of Alexander M'Call; and that Elizabeth, the wife of John Mitchell, had only two daughters, to wit: Elizabeth, who is now the wife of William Heiskill, and Polly, who is now the wife of Abraham B. Trigg.

We agree that William King, the testator, died seized and possessed of the house and lot in the declaration mentioned. We agree the lease, entry, and ouster in the declaration supposed; *and that the defendants are in [352 possession of the house and lot in the declaration mentioned.

If upon this state of facts the lessor of the plaintiff ought to recover at this time, we agree that judgment shall be entered for him; and that if the court shall be of opinion that he ought not to recover until after the death of Mary, the wife of Francis Smith, or that he ought not at any time to recover, judgment shall be entered in favor of the defendants. We also agree that the property in controversy is worth more than two thousand dollars.

The case was argued for the plaintiff in error by Mr. Sheffy, and by Mr. Smyth and Mr. Webster for the defendant, at the last term; and was held under advisement by the court.

Mr. Sheffy proposed to consider the case under two general aspects:

1. Has the defendant in error any title to the estate in question, regarding the devise as personal to himself?

2. Has he any title, should the devise be considered as a trust?

It is contended that he has no title. That no interest whatever vested in him, because the condition presented by the testator has not been performed. He has not married a daughter of William Trigg and Rachel, his wife.

This has a condition precedent, without the performance of which no right could vest in the devisee.

If the will is construed literally, the words employed by the testator are as strong as they can be. He gives the estate "on condition" that the devisee shall marry a person not in being, but expected to come into existence, the offspring of his wife's brother and his own niece. He anticipates that such a marriage may not take place. In this event he directs that his whole real estate shall go to such other persons, among certain collateral relations, as shall give effect to the object he had in view.

But it is admitted that the question whether the condition is precedent or subsequent, does not depend on any form of expression. It depends on the testator's intention. *He has a right to bestow his estate on whom, and on what condition he pleases, so that he violates no established rule of law. To ascertain that intention, we must be governed by those rules of construction which have been established by a series of judicial decisions.

The decisions enable us to determine the general principles which give a character to conditions in contracts, and devises and bequests; either as conditions precedent or subsequent. So far as the present question is concerned, they establish that where the testator requires the devisee to do an act which he regards as important to be accomplished, or where he prescribes a qualification which the devisee is to acquire, the performance of the act, and the attainment of the qualification, will be regarded as conditions precedent, unless a manifest intention to the contrary is apparent.

In the case before the court, the testator had no children. He had a strong desire to effect a union between the family of his wife and his own. In the disposition of his real estate, he contemplated the attainment of that object as paramount to all personal considerations. There is no reason to believe that his nephew, William King, was the object of his peculiar attachment. So far from it, he withholds from him (though he bore his own name) even the smallest bounty, unless he should become instrumental in the accomplishment of his primary purpose. Looking to his marriage with a daughter of William Trigg and Rachel, his wife, as an event which might never happen, he endeavored to stimulate others, standing in the same relation to him, to effect the desired union of the two families. He did not dedicate his estate to gratify a particular personal attachment, or to promote individual interests; but to bring about an event which he strongly desired.

The case of Bertie v. Falkland (2 Vernon, 333) strongly supports the construction contended for by the plaintiff in error. There the testator devised an estate to Elizabeth Willoughby, an infant of ten years old "in case she married Lord Guilford within three years from his death." The marriage did not take place, though there was no fault on the part of the devisee. The marriage was held to be a condition precedent. Lord Chief Justice Treby, in delivering the opinion of the court, says "that the defendant Elizabeth's being willing and consenting, or endeavoring to bring about the marriage, could not be of any avail or moment in this case; for that the will was formed not on the endeavors or agreement of the parties to marry, but on the event." In Acherley v. Vernon (P. W. Rep., 783), the case in Vernon is referred to by Lord Chief Justice Wills, and considered by him as settling the law. The case before him involved the same principle. The question was whether the performance of an act required by the testator from his sister, was a condition precedent on which her title to a legacy depended, or whether the legacy vested at her brother's death. It was decided that the act being an object with the testator, and desired by him, was the consideration of the legacy, and therefore a condition precedent.

A great variety of authorities might be cited, all tending to establishing the same principle. It is sufficient to refer the court to the following: Creagh v. Wilson (2 Vernon, 572); Elton v. Elton (1 Ves., Sen., 4); Gillet v. Wray (1 P. Williams, 284); Graydon v. Graydon (2 Atkins, 16); Reynish v. Martin (3 Atkins, 333); Grascott v. Warren (12 Modern, 128); Harvey & Wife v. Aston (1 Atkins, 361); Randal v. Payne (1 Bron. Ch. Rep., 55, and 2 Atkins, 151, 2 Powell on Devises, 252; 2 Cruise, 20.)

The intention of the testator, that nothing should vest until the condition should be performed, is further manifest, as the will postpones all right of the devisee of the real estate until the death of his wife. She was at the date of the will not more than twenty-five years of age, and he reasonably supposed that a marriage such as he wished to effect would take place before her death. In the meantime, the legal estate descended to the heirs-at-law, who could hold it until the event contemplated by the testator should happen. (Ferne on Remainder, 513, 516; 2 Fonb. Eq., 93.)

It will probably be said that though the intent of the devisee is postponed in terms until the death of the testator's wife, yet that it ought to be construed into an immediate interest by implication. Such was the opinion of the court below. Courts have sometimes allowed implications when they are very apparent, in order to give effect to the intention of the testator. But they must be necessary, not probable implications; for the title of the heir-at-law being plain and obvious, no words in a will ought to be construed to defeat it, if they can have any other signification. (Cruise, title Devise, 205.)

But the devise over shows in the strongest light that the testator did not intend to part with the estate, unless the event which he sought to bring about should happen. He directs that "in case such marriage should not take place, then I leave and bequeath the said estate to any child of the said William and Rachel Trigg, that will marry a child of brother James King or of sister Elizabeth." It is immaterial whether the devise could take effect according to law or not; the testator thought it could, and intended that the estate should pass to others in the event mentioned in his will. According to the pretensions of the defendant, it never could pass, though the event mentioned in the clause referred to should happen, and though it should be decided that the devise was within the legal limitation. For the ground on which he rests his claim (as is understood) is, that on the death of the testator he took a vested contingent fee, which would become absolute on the marriage with a daughter of William Trigg and Rachel, his wife; that as there never was any such person, he could not perform the condition, and is therefore absolved from it, and holds the estate absolutely. If, then, a son of William Trigg and Rachel, his wife, had intermarried with a daughter of James King or Elizabeth Mitchell, the defendant would have kept the estate against the express intention of the testator. This cannot be law, because it is contrary to all reason. It would be sporting with the right which the law guarantees to the citizen to dispose of his property to whom and on what condition he pleases, so that he violates no established rule of public policy.

But it is contended that if the estate vested in the defendant at the death of the testator, that all right in him became extinguished on the death of William Trigg. That event placed it beyond all doubt that such a marriage as the 356 testator wished to promote could not take place. As to the defendant, therefore, his title ceased with the possibility of his becoming instrumental in uniting the two families.

But it will be contended that if the marriage of William King with a daughter of William and Rachel Trigg, is a condition subsequent, then the estate is discharged from the condition, it being impossible to perform it; the correctness of the conclusion is not admitted.

If the testator's primary legal object was the union of the two families, and if he devised the estate to the defendant on condition that he should become instrumental in effecting that object, it is immaterial whether the condition is precedent or subsequent, or whether the failure to accomplish the purpose desired is owing to one cause or another. The question still recurs, did the testator intend that his nephew should have his whole estate, whether the marriage prescribed should take place or not, provided the failure was not attributable to him? Suppose the testator had declared that on his death his nephew should have his whole estate, in fee, on condition that he married the daughter of William and Rachel Trigg; but that whenever it was ascertained that such marriage could not take place, from any cause whatever, that all his right should cease, and that the estate should go to such person as is actually designated in the will. Could it be seriously argued that the impossibility of such a marriage, on the part of the defendant, would render the estate absolute in him, against the express intention of the testator? It is believed it could not; and yet this is the very case before the court, if the defendant had a vested interest at the death of the testator.

The argument that the defendant acquired an absolute estate, whenever it became impossible to perform the condition of the devise on his part, has no other support except the idea that the devise over was intended as a penalty on him for not doing what the testator desired, and that there can be no penalty when there is no fault. This is a perversion of the obvious meaning of the will. The testator was fully acquainted with all the circumstances; he knew that William and Rachel Trigg had no daughter, and consequently foresaw that it was *possible that such a marriage could [357 not take place. In this state of things, if he had intended that his nephew should have the estate, unless he was guilty of a fault in disobeying his wishes, would he not have restricted the devise even to the occurrence of such fault? Would he not have indicated that it was resistance or indifference to his views, that should take the estate from the party in fault and place it at the disposal of others? The testator never thought of any such thing. He wished to effect an object dear to his heart. If that object was not effected, he cared not for the cause. Individual personal attachment had no share in the purpose. The act which united the two families was the meritorious and only consideration with him.

In this view of the subject, it is not material whether the condition was, at the date of the will, or afterwards became impossible. But if it was, it could be easily shown that this condition falls within neither of the classes mentioned in the books where performance is excused. It was not a condition impossible at the date of the will; on the contrary, it was quite probable that William Trigg and Rachel, his wife, who were both very young, would have a daughter to whom the defendant could be united in matrimony. An impossible condition, which is considered as void, is of this character; that at the time it is required to be performed, nothing short of a miracle could accomplish its performance. It is laid down in 5 Viner's Abridgment, 111, that if the condition be that a person shall go to Rome in a day, it is impossible; but if the condition be that the Pope shall be at Westminster to-morrow, this is not an impossible condition, though the event is highly improbable. If a person should be required by a testator to qualify himself for and take holy orders by the time he should arrive at the age of twenty-five years, on the condition and consideration of a legacy, and that the interest should be paid to him in the meantime (which would make it a vested legacy), would it be an excuse for the legatee to allege that his intellect was unequal to the attainment of the necessary learning and the performance of the ecclesiastical functions, and that therefore it was an impossible condition? Most assuredly 358*] not. *This is not a condition which became impossible after the death of the testator, the nonperformance of which will be excused. Those conditions belong to cases where all the means to accomplish the testator's purpose are in his view and in being; but when subsequent events change the existing state of things so essentially as to render the performance impossible; for instance, if a devise be made on condition that the devisee consent to marry a particular person, and that person dies, the performance is rendered impossible by the happening of an event subsequently, which the testator never contemplated; and where the estate had previously vested, it will become absolute by the death of such person.

The leading case for the defendant, and which will be doubtless relied upon, is the case of Thomas v. Howell (4 Mod. Rep., 66). But that case is essentially different from the one before this court. There the testator devised to his daughter Jane an estate called Lawhorn, on condition that she, at or before the age of twenty-one years, "do consent" to marry Theophilus Thomas, who was the testator's nephew. Then he devised other estates to his two remaining daughters, and then follows this proviso: "And my will is, that in case my daughter Jane shall refuse to consent to marry my nephew Theophilus Thomas, at or before she shall be of the age of twenty-one years, or in the meantime shall marry another person, the devise shall be void." He proceeds to devise Lawhorn to his other daughters in succession, on the same condition; and then adds, "but in case neither of my said daughters marry my said nephew, then the estate given them in Lawhorn shall be void;" and devises the estate over to trustees.

Theophilus Thomas died at the age of twelve years; Jane never refused to marry him, and after his death, at the age of seventeen, married another person. She had entered on Lawhorn on the death of her father, and the question was, whether the estate was divested, the contemplated marriage never having taken effect.

Three judges to one were of opinion that under the first proviso to divest the estate, Jane 359] must have "refused to consent." *to marry Theophilus Thomas; that what followed in the subsequent clause had reference to the same proviso, and ought not to be taken in a larger sense than the proviso itself; and upon this ground decided that the estate of Jane was absolute.

This case, instead of being an authority for the defendant, bears strongly against his pretensions. It shows that the court decided the case on the proviso, which made the refusal of Jane to "consent to marry" Theophilus Thomas the basis on which the devise over should take effect. And then arises an irresistible implication from the opinion of the court, that if the case had rested on the last clause, the estate would have gone to the trustees.

To establish that, in the case now before the court, the defendant acquired a title which can be defeated only by his voluntary default, would overthrow the principle well established in many cases of conditional devises and limitations. For example: A testator devises to A an estate for the term of thirty years, and if at the end of the term he has a child living, to A in fee, but if he should have no child living, then to B. It might not be the fault of A that he had no child living at the end of the term, and yet it has never been questioned that B would take the estate.

Again, suppose a case which is very common. A testator devises an estate to A and his heirs; but if A shall die without issue living at his death, then to B and his heirs; would the heir-at-law of A be permitted to keep the estate on the ground that his ancestor had committed no fault, and that therefore the estate became absolute? Such a defense has never been offered.

It is contended, in the second place, that the defendant has no title if we regard the devise as a trust.

There is nothing in this case which authorizes the belief that the testator had any personal predilection for the defendant. He mentions him as the son of his brother, James King; but there is nothing peculiar in that, as he likewise refers, and with the same view, to all the other children of James King, and those of his sister Elizabeth. If we confine ourselves to the words employed, all idea of any beneficial interest *being intended for William King, is [360 excluded. He is to take the estate on condition that a certain marriage shall take effect; but it is "in trust for the eldest son or issue of the said marriage." If we regard the union of the two families as the great object which the testator sought to bring about, then those in whom should be united the blood of both, must have been the objects of his peculiar favor.

The testator probably thought that a person not in being could not take the estate, unless it was through the instrumentality of a trustee. He regarded his nephew merely as a conduit, through whom his bounty should flow to those whom he considered as pre-eminent, because they would inherit the blood of both families.

If the devise is to be considered as a trust, then the question arises whether any trust interest vested on the death of the testator, or whether it was to arise when the marriage took effect. No immediate interest is expressly devised; on the contrary, the words used are, "at the death of my wife." There is no reason to support an immediate interest by implication, because there was no necessity for it; as the beneficial interest could not vest, until those who were to enjoy it would come into existence. Besides, the statute of uses makes a devise to A to the use of B the same as a devise to B, so that this devise is in point of law to "the eldest son or issue of the marriage." The doctrine is well established that in such a case the legal title descends to the heir-at-law, and remains until the birth of the issue, when it vests in him. In this case, there being no possibility of any such issue, the title in the heirs-at-law is no longer in trust for the purposes of the will, but is absolute in themselves.

But admitting, for argument sake, that the trust vested on the death of the testator, it is urged that whenever the possibility of a marriage between the testator's nephew and a daughter of William and Rachel Trigg became extinct, the trust terminated.

The purpose of such a trust is, that the trustee holds the estate for the sole and exclusive benefit of those who are to be beneficially interested; but if no such person shall be brought into existence, then the testator has not disposed 361 of the estate; because he has never contemplated such a state of facts. No person ever doubted that if the testator had given the estate to the eldest son of William King, when he should be born, and William King should never have a son, that the estate would go to the heirs-at-law of the testator. Whatever manifestations might appear to show that the testator did not intend to die intestate, such manifestations never have any other effect than to aid a court where the donation of an estate is in question, or when it is doubtful what property a general description includes. But to give to a naked trustee the absolute title to an estate, merely because the person for whom the beneficial interest was intended has not been born, and because the testator did not intend to die intestate, is not supported by reason or authority; on the contrary, it is considered that the title of the heir-at-law will always be supported, unless the devisee can show a clear intention against him.

The doctrine of resulting trusts is peculiarly applicable to this part of the case. It is well-settled that wherever the purposes of a trust have been satisfied, or cannot be executed, that the estate reverts to the heir-at-law. (3 P. Williams, 20, 252; 1 Saunders on Uses and Trusts, 164; 1 Brown's Ch. Cases, 508, 60, note; 4 Brown's Ch. Cases, 409.)

Mr. Smyth and Mr. Webster, for the defendant in error.

In this case three questions are presented for consideration:

1. Whether the condition on which the real estate is given to William King, is precedent or subsequent.

2. Supposing it to be subsequent, when does the estate vest in possession in William King?

3. What is the nature of the estate when vested?

We admit that if a condition precedent becomes impossible, the estate will never arise; and equity will not relieve. But we contend that if a condition subsequent becomes impossible, the estate will not be defeated, or forfeited. (2 Bl. Com., 156, 157; 7 Co. Litt., 206, a, b; 2 Vern., 339; Powell on Contracts, 266; 2 Atk., 18; 2 P. Williams, 626, 627; Powell on Devises, 262.)

362 *The same words make a condition precedent or subsequent, according to the intent of the person who creates it. (Willes, 156; 2 Bos. & Pull., 295; 1 Durnf. and East, 645; 2 Caines, 352; Powel on Devises, 183; Cases T. T., 166.)

Whether the condition is precedent or subsequent, depends on the order of time in which the intent of the testator requires the performance. (Willes, 157; 2 Bos. & Pull., 297.) Justice Heath said: "The question always is, whether the thing is to happen before or after the estate is to vest. If before, the condition is precedent; if after, it is subsequent."

In the case before the court, the intention of the testator is clear that William King should have the whole estate on the death of Mrs. King. Mrs. King might have died within a year after the death of the testator; yet the daughter of William Trigg and Rachel, his wife, whom William King was required to marry, might have been born twenty years afterwards, and the marriage might have taken place at the end of forty years more. It could not have happened in less than thirteen years, and might have happened more than sixty years after the death of the testator. Clearly, the testator intended that under those circumstances, the marriage might be subsequent to the vesting of the estate.

Unless the intent of the testator required that the devisee should, before the death of Mrs. King, marry a female who was unborn at the time he made his will, and at the time of his death, this cannot be a condition precedent. Why should it have made any difference to the testator whether the marriage happened before or after the death of Mrs. King?

A condition is precedent or subsequent, as the act is to be done before or after the estate vests. This act, the marriage, was not necessarily to be done before the whole estate should vest in possession. A condition which might be complied with sixty years after the time prescribed for vesting the whole estate in possession, must be a subsequent condition. If the act may as well be done after as before the vesting of the estate, the condition is subsequent. All conditions in wills are either precedent or subsequent. A condition which may be performed either before or after, is not a precedent condition, and, therefore, is a condition subsequent.

*The testator says: "I then leave all 363 my real estate, at the death of my wife, to William King, son of brother James King, on condition of his marrying," &c. The whole estate must vest in possession at the death of Mrs. King. But William King, who was three years old when the will was made, had his whole life to perform the condition. A marriage after the death of Mrs. King would be a fulfillment of the condition, as well as a marriage before her death. Therefore, it is a condition subsequent; and being impossible, the estate will not be defeated or forfeited. (2 Atk., 18; Cases T. T., 164, 166; 2 P. Wms., 626; Pow. Dev., 257, 258; 1 Salk., 170; 4 Mod., 68; Rice v. Aislatic, 3 Madd., 256, 260.)

There are some cases reported which, at first view, may seem adverse to us; but which, on examination, will be found to differ essentially from our case. In the case of Bertie v. Falkland,¹ the condition was adjudged to be precedent. There was a devise to trustees for three years, and if there was a marriage in three years the estate was to vest. There the marriage was obviously a condition precedent; for it was to take effect in three years, and the estate, being in trustees, was not to vest until the termination of the three years. So where there was a settlement in trust, that if A marries B after the age of sixteen, and they have issue male, the estate shall be to A and B for themselves; the condition is precedent; for the estate is expressly given to trustees, until the marriage and the birth of issue. (2 Vern., 333; Com. Dig., Condition, B. 1, pl. 10.)

2. When does the estate vest in possession of William King, the lessor of the defendant in error?

1.—A note in a late edition of Freeman's Reports, p. 36, says this decision was reversed in the House of Lords.

We contend that all the estate of William King, the testator, is devised by the will. If all is devised by the will, the right of possession of the real estate, from the death of the testator to the death of Mrs. King, is devised. It is not devised to Mrs. King by implication. The real estate is devised to William King; therefore he takes the right of possession during 364] ing *the life of Mrs. King, unless it is devised to some other person.

We contend that, as to all the lands of William King, the testator, except the dower of Mrs. King, the salt-works, and those lands devised to Mrs. King, to Thomas King, and to the academy; the estate passed to William King, the devisee, immediately on the testator's death.

Did the testator intend his hundred tracts of land, and thirty or forty town lots, should descend to his heir until the death of his wife? We insist that the testator did not intend that his lands should descend to his heir for a moment. The heir shall not take, where, from the will, the intention of the testator that he shall not take appears. The limitation over, although supposed not to be a good one, shows the determination of the testator to defeat the claim of his heir. (1 Dall., 227.)

If the estate does not pass immediately to William King, there must be either a life estate by implication, or a descent to the heir, during the lifetime of Mrs. King. As Mrs. King has dower devised to her in the whole of the lands, and a life estate in a part of them, she cannot also take a life estate in the residue by implication. She cannot claim a life estate in parts, and also in the whole. Had William King, the devisee, been the heir, and had there been no devise to Mrs. King, this devise to him, "at the death of my wife," would have given to her an estate for life, by implication. (4 Bac. Abr., 288; 2 Vern., 572, 723.)

The father of the testator was, at the time of making his will, his heir presumptive. To him is devised, for life, the use of a cottage, and perhaps twenty acres of land, as many apples from the orchard as he could eat, and an annuity of $200. After his death, this piece of land was to go to Mrs. King for her life. This devise shows that the defendant did not intend that his presumptive heir should take one hundred plantations, during the life of Mrs. King. The testator manifestly expected his wife to outlive his father, and has spoken as if that was beyond a doubt.

The testator intended to dispose of the whole 365] of his real *estate. He speaks of "the disposition of the real estate," and uses the expressions, "my worldly estate," "all my estate," "my whole estate," "all my real estate." Did the testator intend to die intestate as to his one hundred plantations and thirty or forty lots, during the life of Mrs. King? He did not intend to die intestate as to any part of his estate. He makes his will, "leaving and bequeathing my worldly estate, in the manner following." If after the use of such words, a part of the testator's property was clearly omitted, it is admitted that such part would not pass by the will; but if property is given by the will, these words will signify that all the testator's interest therein is given. (Ca. T. T., 157, 160, 161; 3 P. Wms., 295, 297, 298; 1 Wils., 333; 1 Vesey, 226; 1 Wash., 97, 107; 2 Binney, 17, 33; 1 Call., 132; 1 Munf., 543, 545.)

In the case of Ibbetson v. Beckwith, Lord Chancery Talbot said: "I am of opinion that these words (worldly estate) prove him (the testator) to have had his whole estate in his view, at that time. Indeed, he might have made but a partial disposition; but if the will be general, and that taking his words in one sense will make the will to be a complete disposition of the whole, whereas the taking them in another will create a chasm, they shall be taken in that sense which is most likely to be agreeable to his intent of disposing of his whole estate."

"All my real estate," is descriptive of the duration as well as of the extent of the estate; therefore, it includes the right to possession, before the death of Mrs. King, as well as after, in those lands not devised to her, or to others during her life. (Salk., 236; 2 P. Wms., 524; 1 Vesey, 228.)

"Leaving and bequeathing my worldly estate," means the same thing as if the testator had said, "I intend to give by this will everything I have in the world." (3 Wils., 143.) The testator having said this, devised the most valuable portion of his estate to his wife, and to others, for her life. Then he devised all his real estate to his nephew, at the death of his wife. To make this agree with his declaration that he intended to give by the will all he had in the world, this devise must be so construed that the devisee will take immediately, on the testator's decease, that part of the estate *which has not been devised to another, [366 and that he shall take, on the death of Mrs. King, that portion of the estate which had been devised to her, and to others, for her life. He shall take it all then, because he cannot take it all sooner.

Taken in connection with the introductory words, "all my estate at the death of my wife," it is a devise of the whole duration of the estate after the death of the testator; but it may by implication give it to Mrs. King, during her life. Now, if it has been shown that the estate is not devised to Mrs. King by implication, as it is devised, it must go to William King, the specific devisee.

"All my estate, at the death of my wife," carries the whole, as well before as after her death; but if there was no devise to the wife, those words would divide the duration, the wife taking during her life and the specific devisee afterwards. When the wife cannot take, these words must be otherwise satisfied. And if the specific devisee can take only a part immediately, and the residue at the death of the wife, so that then he will take all, they are satisfied.

The intention of the testator is the polar star in construing wills. (4 Mod., 68; 1 Wash., 102; 1 Munf., 537, 547; 2 S. C. Rep., 32.) The court will execute the intention of the testator, as far as they can. They will transpose the words of a will to effectuate the intent of the testator. Let the word "all" be transposed, and the clause made to read, "I then leave and bequeath my real estate, all, at the death of my wife, to William King." (1 Call, 132.)

Nothing could be further from the intention of the testator than the distribution of his estate, either to his brothers and sisters, or to his nephews and nieces. He intended that all his real estate should vest in one man, his eldest nephew, of his own name, the son of his only brother, of the full blood, and in the eldest son or issue of that nephew. The distribution would include Samuel King, or his children, to which half-brother the testator grudgingly gave an annuity of $150.

Peters 3.

The question, when shall the estate vest in possession? is to be decided from the intention 367 of the testator, as gathered *from the whole will. (1 Doug., 342.) The testator intended that his heir or heirs should not have his plantations. To take the estate from the heir, during the life of Mrs. King, requires a necessary implication; and such an implication is here. (4 Bac. Abr., 282; 2 Vent., 571; 1 Dall., 227.) The devise to Thomas King, the presumptive heir at the time of making the will, of a house and a few acres of land for life, remainder to Mrs. King during her life, is inconsistent with his taking the large real estate of William King, and a necessary implication that he is not to take it, during Mrs. King's life.

The counsel on the other side has said in argument, that Thomas King, the father of the testator, was an alien. That is going out of the record, by which it appears that the testator considered his father capable to take a freehold, and that he was in fact a proprietor of real estate. It has never been shown that Thomas King was an alien; and, from information, it is probable that he never was an alien in the United States.

Either the heir or the devisee must take; for the testator cannot put the freehold in abeyance. (1 Doug., 231.)

If the condition of marriage is subsequent, which we deem proven, there is no reason for postponing the commencement of the estate of William King, the devisee, in possession, of the real estate not devised for the life of Mrs. King. If the estate is given on a condition subsequent, why may not the estate, except what is devised to Mrs. King and others, vest in possession immediately on the testator's death? To what end suspend it, when it is not to wait for the performance of the condition?

These words, "at the death of my wife," were inserted in consideration of the devise of the use of the salt-works during her life, the devise of dower, and the devise of certain portions of the real estate, during her life. These words have their effect; because a large part of the estate, far the most valuable, cannot, consistently with other clauses in the will, come to the possession of the devisee, William King, until Mrs. King's death.

Suppose that a testator had made his will 368 thus: to A, my *father, who is seventy years old, during his life, one three-hundredth part of my real estate; to B, my wife, who is twenty years old, during her life, one-half of my real estate, including the part devised to my father, after his death; to C, my nephew, the whole of my real estate at the death of my wife; the testator dies, the father, who is heir, surviving. Would a court give to A, the father, and his heirs, half the real estate during the life of B, the widow, when the testator clearly intended and expressed that A should have only one three-hundredth part for his own life? Certainly they would not. In such a case the words, "at the death of my wife," would be applicable to the moiety devised to her for life. The death of the father before the testator, in this case, cannot change the meaning of the will.

All the real estate could not vest in possession of William King, the devisee, at the death of the testator, but all is devised to him; therefore, the words, "at the death of my wife," are used; as then, and not till then, all might vest in possession.

Should the testator be regarded as having died intestate, as to his lands not devised to Mrs. King, until her decease, they would have descended to his brothers and sisters, his father having died before him; and it is apparent that he did not intend that those brothers and sisters should take his real estate, during the life of Mrs. King.

To James King he gives the use of one-third part of the salt-works during the life of Mrs. King, say $10,000 annually; to Samuel King, an annuity of $150; and to Hannah Allen, a legacy of $1,000; thus to James King sixty-six times as much as to Samuel King, and more than two hundred times as much as to Hannah Allen; but if his plantations are distributed during the life of Mrs. King, then Samuel King and Hannah Allen will have a part equal to that of James King, although they stood so unequally in the affections of the testator as objects of his bounty. It seems manifest that he did not intend that his great estate in lands should pass to, and be distributed among his brothers and sisters, during the life of Mrs. King.

Unless the will is construed to give to William King, *immediately, the lands, other [369 than those devised during Mrs. King's life, the marriage intended might have taken place within fifteen years from the testator's death, and the issue of the favorite nephew, the desired family of Kings, might have been without a maintenance for the period of forty years; as Mrs. King, who was twenty-four years old at the death of the testator, might have so long lived; while one hundred plantations and thirty or forty town lots would be in the possession of the heirs. This cannot have been the intention of the testator. (2 P. Williams, 627.)

It may be proper to notice the very imperfect manner in which the testator expressed himself in this will, for want of legal knowledge. He devises the use of his capital; that has been construed to be a bequest of his capital. He requests that his executors and his wife will carry on his salt-works business in copartnership; that has been construed a devise of the salt-works. He devises $10,000 to two of his nieces; that has been construed a devise of $10,000 to each of them. To give effect to the intention of this testator, requires the liberal aid of the courts.

3. What is the nature of the estate of William King, the devisee, when vested?

If the condition is subsequent, the devisee has his lifetime to perform it, before he forfeits; even where performance is impossible. And if it becomes impossible, without his default, or never becomes possible, we contend that he will never forfeit. Had Mrs. King died within a year after the death of the testator, the whole real estate would have vested in William King, in possession, although the daughter of William Trigg was unborn. The devisee would have his lifetime to perform the condition, even if William Trigg had ten daughters. Even if William King had stood by and seen those ten daughters all married, he would have time to perform; for he might marry one of them when a widow. Should he even marry another woman, he would still have time to perform; for he might, when a widower, perform the condition.

An impossible condition is the same as none. It is void, and there can be no breach. It is 370impossible that there should* be such a marriage as the testator desired, therefore the devisee takes and holds as if there was marriage, or rather, as if there was no condition, for the condition is void. The counsel on the other side contended that this was not an impossible condition; for that it was probable the marriage might be had. The law says nothing of probable conditions. And it is asked, what is more impossible than to marry a person who never came, and never can come into existence?

If it is impossible to do a thing, no one can be under any obligation to do it. The condition was not possible when made, and never became possible; and being subsequent, the estate is absolute. If the condition had been possible when the will was made, and afterwards became impossible by the act of God, without the default of the devisee, the estate would also be absolute. (2 P. Wms., 628; Com. Dig., Condition, D. 1, pl. 4; Pow. Con., 265.)

Had a daughter been born to William Trigg, and had the marriage taken place, William King would have taken the profits, without having issue. There is no devise over, in the event of not having issue. The application of the profits to the use of such issue, would have been another impossible condition; therefore, he would keep the profits, and hold the legal estate discharged from the trust, the performance of which was impossible.

If the condition is subsequent and impossible, and the application of the profits, as directed, also impossible, then the estate must be held discharged of the condition, and exonerated from a trust which cannot be performed. When the impossible condition is stricken out of the will, the trust to arise thereon goes out with it. The devise is to William King, subject to an impossible condition, an impossible executory trust, and a void limitation; yet the legal estate remains in him. He is devisee in fee, on a void condition. The whole condition being void, every part of it is void.

We contend that William King, the devisee, takes beneficially, and keeps the profits. The devise is unquestionably a beneficial one; for, in one event, that of marriage and having no issue, the estate is not devised over, and the 371profits would* belong to the devisee. Why should the profits be taken from the devisee? There are none who seem better entitled under the will. This is the only devise made by the testator to his favorite nephew, the eldest son of his only brother of the full blood, and the heir of his name. The testator was obviously attached to the principle of primogeniture, and paid great regard to names. To two of his nieces he gave $10,000 each, because they were named after his grandmother. Did he mean to give nothing to the nephew who bore his own name? He cannot have intended that his favorite nephew should be a mere trustee for his, the testator's heirs, in any event, entitled only to commissions on his receipts. Did he mean to devise to his favorite nephew trouble, and nothing more, on condition that he would marry the daughter of his favorite brother-in-law and niece?

A consideration was required of him: marriage. He is therefore entitled to the estate on the condition imposed, if performance shall be possible, and on no other condition; to take the profits for his children if such there be; and, if not, for his own use. This consideration shows that, had the marriage taken effect, the devisee could not have been regarded as a mere trustee. Here is also the consideration of nearness of blood, which is often decisive of the question whether a devisee takes beneficially, or as a mere trustee. (See Loyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk., 150, and Hobart v. The Countess of Suffolk, 2 Vern., 645.)

Will the estate determine on the death of William King, the devisee, in consequence of his not performing the condition?

The words of the devise convey a fee-simple, and he takes a fee-simple, if he takes at all. What would be the construction of the will, should the void clause be stricken out? That it conveys an absolute estate in fee-simple. Strike out the void clause, and the devise will read, "In case of having no children, I then leave and bequeath all my real estate, at the death of my wife, to William King, son of brother James King."

The failure of issue is not made a condition on which the estate* shall pass over. [372 Consequently, the devisee would take the estate and profits, after marriage, without issue. And we contend that as soon as the estate vests in possession, he will take the profits without marriage, the condition being subsequent and impossible. It is a devise to him in fee-simple; and there are none to whom the profits are directed to be paid. A beneficial devise to him was intended, and there is no implication in favor of the heirs.

The important question is, "does the legal estate pass by the devise?" If so, there is no trust for the heirs. The heir is entitled to the real estate not given to another; but here all the real estate is given from the heir. The estate is devised over, on failure to perform the condition. A question may yet arise whether that devise over is good. Whether that devise is good or not, we contend that we have a right to recover. The heir cannot prevail, unless it is decided that the devise to William King, and the devise over, are both void.

There is a class of cases which have some analogy to that before the court, although they are essentially different from it. The cases referred to are those wherein a question has arisen between the heir and executor, the heir and next of kin, or the heir and devisee; whether there is, or is not a resulting trust for the heir.

Where lands are devised to be sold for payment of debts and legacies, or in trust for the payment of debts and legacies, and the devisee or executor is a stranger, or has a legacy, and there is a residue; there is a resulting trust for the heir, especially if there is nothing given to him by the will. In this case the devisee is no stranger, he has no legacy, and there is no residue. (1 P. Wms., 309; 2 Atk., 150; 2 Vern., 644; 1 Meriv., 301.)

But if it appears from the will that a benefit was designed for the executor or devisee, being a relation, and especially where the heir has some other benefit from the will, there will be no resulting trust for the heir, although there is a residue. In this case the devisee is a relation; a benefit is intended him, and the heirs are provided for by the will. (See Rodgers v. Rodgers, 373*] 3 P. Wms., 193; *North v. Crompton, 1 Ch. Ca., 196; Coningham v. Melish, 1 Eq. Ca. Abr., 273, or Prec. Ch., 31; Malabar v. Malabar, Ca. T. T., 78, in which case the devise was in trust, yet there was no resulting trust for the heir; Hill v. The Bishop of London, 1 Atk., 618, 619, 620; Smith v. King, 16 East, 282; Kennell v. Abbot, 4 Ves., 6.)

The rule that an heir, taking a benefit by the will, cannot have a resulting trust, would exclude the heirs of William King, the testator; as not only the presumptive heir at the time of making the will, but also those who were heirs at the time of his decease; every one of them take benefits by the will.

Wherever there is a consideration, there can be no resulting trust. (7 Bac. Abr., 143.) Here marriage was required, and the devisee might have waited twenty years to perform the condition. Had a daughter been born to William Trigg, when William King was twenty-five years of age, and had he waited for her fifteen years, and she had died, surely his claim would have been strong; yet it would have been no better than it now is, because the words and meaning of the will would have been the same. If in that case the claim of the devisee would have been good, it is good in this case.

This case is not like that of a devise upon trust to pay debts and legacies (1 Meriv., 301), for in such a case there may be a residue; but here the whole estate is devised away upon condition, and, upon failure of that condition, devised over. Thus, no residue is left for the heir to claim. The trust is of equal extent in point of duration with the legal estate. No part of the trust remains undisposed of. It would be difficult to express more clearly an intention that the heir shall not take. The estate is devised in fee on condition, and, on failure to perform that condition, devised over.

But if the plaintiff is a mere trustee, he has a right to recover in ejectment. (2 Doug., 722; 5 East, 138; 1 Schoales & Lefroy, 67.)

A mere trustee may recover against him who 374*] claims the *benefit of the trust, where the right is not clear. (4 Bos. & Pull., 171.)

It is hoped that the opinion of the court will elucidate and ascertain the rights of all parties claiming the real estate of the testator, as they know not certainly to what they are entitled.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error brought to a judgment rendered in an ejectment by the Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia. The judgment was pronounced on a case agreed. Three questions have been made at the bar:

1. Is the condition on which the testator has devised his real estate in trust to William King, a condition precedent or subsequent?

2. If subsequent, at what time does the estate vest in possession?

3. What is the nature of the estate, when vested?

1. Is the condition precedent or subsequent? The words of the will are, "In case of having no children, I then leave and bequeath all my real estate at the death of my wife to William King, son of brother James King, on condition of his marrying a daughter of William Trigg and my niece Rachel, his wife, lately Rachel Finlay, in trust for the eldest son or issue of said marriage, and in case such marriage should not take place, I leave and bequeath said estate to any child, giving preference to age, of William and Rachel Trigg that will marry a child of my brother James King's, or of sister Elizabeth's, wife of John Mitchel, and to their issue.

It was admitted in argument, and is certainly well settled,¹ that there are no technical appropriate words which always determine whether a devise be on a condition precedent or subsequent. The same words have been determined differently, and the question is always a question of intention. If the language of the particular clause, or of the whole will, *shows [*375 that the act on which the estate depends must be performed before the estate can vest, the condition is of course precedent; and unless it be performed, the devisee can take nothing. If, on the contrary, the act does not necessarily precede the vesting of the estate, but may accompany or follow it, if this is to be collected from the whole will, the condition is subsequent.

In the case under consideration, the testator does not in terms give his real estate to William King on his marrying the daughter of William and Rachel Trigg, but at the death of his (the testator's) wife, on condition of his marrying a daughter of William and Rachel Trigg. Whatever doubt may be entertained respecting the lands not given to the wife for life, the testator has expressed clearly his intention that the lands incumbered with his wife's life estate should come to the possession of William King at her death. He gives the estate at that time, without requiring that the condition annexed to it should be previously performed. The estate then vests in possession, whether the condition on which it was to depend be or be not performed. It cannot be supposed to have been his intention that the devisee should take possession under this devise, before the interest vested in him. The interest, therefore, must have vested previously, or at the time. The language of the testator does not indicate the intention that the marriage must take place during the life of his wife; nor do the circumstances of the parties justify us in imputing such an intention to him. The time of her death was uncertain, and it might follow close upon his own. The contemplated marriage could not possibly take place until the lapse of many years, because one of the parties had not come into existence. William and Rachel Trigg had not at the time, and never have had, a daughter. The testator, therefore, has fixed a time when the estate is to vest, which might probably precede the happening of the event on which its continuance is to depend. This is clearly a condition subsequent, as to those lands in which an estate for life is given to the wife of the testator.

1.—Willis, 156; 2 Bos. & Pull., 295; 1 D. & E., 645.

Does any reason exist which will authorize a distinction between those lands in which the 376 wife took a life estate, and *those of which no other present disposition is made in the will?

The testator makes no distinction. In one clause he gives "his whole real estate at the death of his wife to William King, son of his brother James King, on condition," &c. If, as the language would seem to indicate, the devisee was entitled to possession of the whole property, at the same time, that is, at the death of the testator's wife, it would follow that the condition on which the whole depends is a condition subsequent. If the devise should be construed, as the defendant in error contends, to give William King a right to the immediate possession of that part of the estate of which no other disposition is made, does this circumstance furnish any reason for the opinion that this part of the estate depends on a condition precedent? We think not. The will might then be construed as if it were expressed thus: "in case of having no children, I then leave and bequeath all my real estate, subject to the devise to my wife for life, to William King, son of my brother James King, on condition of his marrying," &c. This is the most unfavorable manner for the defendant in error in which the question can be presented. It waives the benefit derived from fixing a time for the possession of a considerable part of the estate, which might very probably precede the event on which its continuance is made to depend. Had even this been the language of the will, the estate in the lands would, we think, depend on a condition subsequent.

It is a general rule that a devise in words of the present time, as I give to A my lands in B, imports, if no contrary intent appears, an immediate interest which vests in the devisee on the death of the testator. It is also a general rule that if an estate be given on a condition, for the performance of which no time is limited, the devisee has his life for performance. The result of those two principles seems to be, that a devise to A, on condition that he shall marry B, if uncontrolled by other words, takes effect immediately; and the devisee performs the condition, if he marry B at any time during his life. The condition is subsequent. We have found no case in which a general devise 377 in words, importing a present interest in a will making no other disposition of the property on a condition which may be performed at any time, has been construed from the mere circumstance that the estate is given on condition, to require that the condition must be performed before the estate can vest. There are many cases in which the contrary principle has been decided.¹ We think, then, that the condition on which the devise to William King depended was a condition subsequent.

2. The second point is one of more difficulty. Does that part of the real estate which is not otherwise expressly disposed of, vest in William King immediately, or at the death of the testator's wife?

The words are, "in case of having no children, I then leave and bequeath all my real estate, at the death of my wife, to William King, son of brother James King, on condition," &c.

These words certainly import that the whole estate should vest in possession at the same time, and mark with precision when that time shall be. This express provision can be controlled only by a strong and manifest intent, to be collected from the whole will. But the intent of the testator is the cardinal rule in the construction of wills; and if that intent can be clearly perceived, and is not contrary to some positive rule of law, it must prevail; although in giving effect to it some words should be rejected, or so restrained in their application as materially to change the literal meaning of the particular sentence.

The counsel for the defendant in error insists that the intent to give the real estate not otherwise disposed of immediately to William King, is apparent on the face of the will, and must control the construction of the clause under consideration. This proposition has been so fully discussed at the bar, that the court need only restate the principles which have been already advanced in the argument.

*Of the immense estate left by the [*378] testator, about one-half, including her dower, was given to his wife and others for her life. The residue was given to William King immediately, on the trust mentioned in the will, or given by implication to the testator's wife, or was permitted to descend to his heir-at-law.

As the devise to William King was on a condition subsequent, it may be construed, so far as respects the time of taking possession, as if it had been conditional. The condition opposes no obstacle to his immediate possession, if the intent of the testator shall require that construction.

We will first consider the supposed implied devise to the wife.

As William King was not the heir of the testator, a devise to him at her death does not necessarily imply an estate in her during life; and the will itself furnishes strong reason for rejecting this construction. His wife, as might well be supposed, was first in his mind, and was kept in mind throughout the will. He notices her legal right to dower, so as to avoid a possible implication that what he gave her was in lieu of dower, and to secure her from the necessity of relinquishing all interest in the estate bequeathed to her as preliminary to claiming her dower. She claims her dower under the will, as she does the other large estate bequeathed to her. It is not probable that a person who was careful to notice even that to which she would have been entitled under the law, would have omitted totally a very large property which she could claim only under the will. He even notices the remainder of small property in the occupancy of his father, his will in a manner to add to the improbability of his having totally omitted her name when a very large benefit was intended. It seems to us to be contrary to reason and to the ordinary rules of construction to intend that a large estate is given by an unnecessary implication to a wife who takes her dower in the whole, and also a large part by express words. We think it very clear that there is no implicative devise to the wife.

1.—2 Atk., 18; Cases T. T., 164, 166; 2 P. Wms., 626; 2 Pow. on Dev., 257; 1 Salk., 170; 4 Mod., 68; 2 Salk., 570.

Does the property in question descend to the 379 heir-at-law *during the life of the wife? Was it the purpose of the testator to die intestate with respect to it until her death?

We cannot think that such was his purpose, or that his will authorizes the court to say so.

The introductory clause indicates an intention to dispose of all his estate. He says: "I, William King, have thought proper to make and ordain this to be my last will and testament, leaving and bequeathing my worldly estate in the manner following." These words are entitled to considerable influence in a question of doubtful intent, in a case where the property is given, and the question arises between the heir and devisee respecting the interest devised. The words of the particular clause also carry the whole estate from the heir, but they fix the death of the testator's wife as the time when the devisee shall be entitled to possession. They are: "In case of having no children, I then leave and bequeath all my real estate, at the death of my wife, to William King, son of brother James King," &c.

It is admitted that if this clause stood alone, unexplained by other parts of the will, the real estate, not otherwise disposed of, would descend to the heir. The law gives to him whatever is not given to others. But if other provisions in the will show an intent that the legal title of the heir should not prevail, those other provisions must be respected in construing the instrument.¹

When the will was made the testator's father was alive, and was consequently to be considered as his heir. He was an old man; and the provision made for him seems to have contemplated only a comfortable supply for the wants of one who had grown up and lived in simple unexpensive habits. The testator gives him for life the houses in which he then resided, with so much land as he might choose to farm, what fruit he might want, and the spring-house, subject to the direction of his wife; also the sum of $200 per annum during his life; and, if fire should destroy his Fincastle house, a farther 380 *sum of $220 per annum while his income from that source should be suspended. This property is given to his wife for life on the death of his father. These moderate provisions for the heir, contemplating only the ease and comfortable supply of the wants of an old man, comport very little with the idea of leaving an immense estate, consisting among other articles of numerous tracts of land, remote from each other, most probably of very difficult management, to descend to him. It is not probable that this estate would be left to descend to him for the life of Mrs. King. Her surviving him was probable, and the testator expected she would survive him. The lands devised to him are given to her for life.

The father, who was the presumptive heir when the will was made, died during the life of the testator. This event is not supposed to affect the construction of the will. But were it otherwise—were it supposed that he might look forward to that event and contemplate his brothers and sisters as his probable heirs—the will furnishes arguments of great weight in support of the opinion that he did not intend them to take anything not expressly devised to them. The heirs of the testator at the time of his death were James King, a brother of the whole blood; Nancy Finlay, a sister of the whole blood; Elizabeth and Polly, the daughters of Elizabeth Mitcheil, a sister of the whole blood; Samuel King, a brother of the half blood, and Hannah Allen, a sister of the half blood. Each of these persons is noticed in the will. For some of them an ample provision is made. To others, less favor is shown. The legacies to his brother and sister of the half blood are inconsiderable, while his bequests to those of the whole blood are large. No one of them is omitted. The circumstances that his mind was clearly directed to each, and that he has carefully measured out his bounty to each, discriminating between them so as to show great inequality of affection, operate powerfully against the opinion that he intended to leave a very large property to descend upon them by the silent operation of law.

The whole will proves the primary intention of the testator *to have been to keep his [*381 immense real estate together, and to bestow this splendid gift on some individual who should proceed from the union of his own family with that of his wife. In case of having no children, he gives all his real estate at the death of his wife to William, the son of his brother James, on condition of his marrying a daughter of William Trigg and Rachel, his wife, in trust for the eldest son or issue of said marriage. If such marriage should not take place, he gives said estate to any child, giving preference to age, of William and Rachel Trigg, who should marry a child of his brother James, or of his sister Elizabeth. William Trigg was the brother of his wife. His primary object, then, is the issue of a marriage between his nephew, William King, and a daughter of William Trigg, by his then wife, the niece of the testator. His second object was the issue of any marriage which might take place between any child of William and Rachel Trigg, and any child of his brother James or of his sister Elizabeth. That both these objects have been defeated by the course of subsequent events, does not change the construction of the will. The testator undoubtedly expected the one or the other of them to take place; and his intention respecting the immediate interest of the devisee or the descent to the heir, is the same as if a daughter had afterwards been born to William and Rachel Trigg, who had intermarried with William King. The will, therefore, is to be construed in that respect, as if the contemplated marriage had been actually consummated. It was not very probable, at the date of the will, that the devisee of this immense fortune might come into existence in less than twenty years, nor that the wife might live fifty years. In the meantime no provision whatever is made for him. To what purpose should the profits of the estate intended for him be withheld during the lifetime of the testator's wife, since those profits were not to be received by her? Why should her death be the event on which lands in which no interest was given to her, should be enjoyed by the devisee? We perceive at once the reason why the devise of those lands in which she had a life estate should take effect at her death, but there is no reason for postponing the possession of lands from 382] which she could derive no *benefit, and which were not given to others to the same period.

1.—Cases T. T., 157; 1 Coke, 1; 3 P. Wms., 295; 1 Wils. 333; 1 Ves., 225; 1 Wash., 97, 107; 1 Call., 132; 1 Munf., 143, 145.

The devise over, too, has considerable influence in this question. It may be on a contingency too remote to be supported by law, but the testator's intention is not the less manifested on that account. He did not suppose it too remote, and, in fact, it might have happened in a few years. Had William King, the devisee, died young, or had William or Rachel Trigg died without leaving a daughter, a fact which has actually happened, and any child of William and Rachel Trigg had married a child of James King or of Elizabeth Mitchel, then the whole estate is given to such child, and to the issue of the marriage. Had either of these events taken place, the estate is given from the heirs. It consists very well with the general intention of the testator and his mode of thinking, as manifested in his will, to suppose an intention that the profits should accumulate for the benefit of those for whom the estate was designed; we can perceive nothing in the will to countenance the idea that he contemplated the descent of these lands to his heirs. Nothing could be more contrary to his general purpose than the distribution which the law would make of his real estate among his heirs. This may be the result of a total failure of all the provisions in the will, but cannot be considered as the immediate effect, if a contrary intention is perceived, and if the words can be so construed as to support that intention.

The words used by the testator show that nothing was farther from his mind than a partial intestacy. He says he has thought proper to make his will, "leaving and bequeathing his worldly estate in manner following:" after making a considerable provision for his wife, and devising to others during her life, he gives "all his real estate at her death" to his nephew, on condition, and on failure to perform the condition, gives "the said estate" over. Being about to devise all his estate to his nephew, and knowing that his wife and others would hold a large part of it for her life, it was obvious that his nephew could not take all till her death. But if he devised the whole estate, that which could not be taken by the wife or by others for her life, would pass to the nephew, 383] ew, *if a clear intention appears in the whole will to intercept the descent to the heir; although the clause, taken literally, would postpone the possession, even of that part in which the wife has no interest, till her death. To effect this intention the court will vary the strict meaning of words, and sometimes transpose them. (1 Call, 132.) The word "all" may be transposed so that the clause may read "in case of having no children, I then leave my real estate, all, at the death of my wife, to William King," &c. Let the clause be thus read and no one could hesitate on its construction. The whole estate is devised to William King; but the possession of that part of it which is given to the wife or others for her life, is postponed till her death. The whole will bears marks of being written by a man whose language was far from being accurate, and whose words, if taken literally, would in some instances defeat his intention. That intention, we think, was to devise his whole real estate to William King, in trust, on a condition subsequent, postponing the possession of that part of it which was given to the wife and others for her life, till her death.

3. The third point is one of great interest to the parties. Did William King take an estate which, in the events that have happened, ensures to his own benefit, or is he, in the existing state of things, to be considered as a trustee for the heirs of the testator?

This question cannot properly be decided in this cause. It belongs to a court of chancery, and will be determined when the heirs shall bring a bill to enforce the execution of the trust. We do not mean to indicate any opinion upon it. The legal title is, we think, in William King, whoever may claim the beneficial interest, and the judgment is therefore affirmed with costs.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON, dissenting.

The defendant here was plaintiff in ejectment in the court below, in a suit to recover certain lands, part of the estate of William King the elder.

The cause comes up on a case stated according to the *practice of Virginia, and [384] upon which judgment was rendered for the plaintiff.

The right to recover depends upon the will of William King the elder, and the events that have occurred to defeat or give effect to the provisions of that will.

The operative words of the will are these: "In case of my having no children, I then leave and bequeath all my real estate, at the death of my wife, to William King, son of brother James King, on condition of his marrying a daughter of William Trigg and my niece Rachel, his wife, in trust for the eldest son or issue of such marriage; and in case such marriage should not take place, I leave and bequeath said estate to any child, giving preference to age, of said William and Rachel Trigg, that will marry a child of my brother James or of my sister Elizabeth, wife to John Mitchell."

The testator died without issue, and none of the devisees intended to be provided for came within the description of heir-at-law.

As Mrs. Trigg died without having had issue female, the marriage contemplated for William, the defendant, never became possible; neither has any one of the marriages contemplated in the alternative taken place between the issue of the Triggs and the issue of testator's brother or sister; but from the case stated it appears that, although remote and improbable, the event of one of the contemplated marriages is not impossible.

These, however, appear to be immaterial facts in the present case, since it has not been contended in argument that the limitation over depending upon the failure of William's marriage with the daughter of the Triggs, is limited by the will to take effect within the term prescribed by the law of executory devises. Unless it could be confined to the life of Mrs. King on the failure of William's marriage, it is obvious that the object of that devise over might not come in esse until after every life in being had terminated, and might not marry for more than twenty-one years afterwards.

Peters 3.

Without committing myself, however, on this point, I shall pass it over; considering it 385] only as assumed for the purpose *of the present argument. After the most diligent attention to the questions in this cause, I cannot help coming to the conclusion that its difficulties are rather artificial or factitious, and that the true legal view of it is that which is most simple and most consistent with the truth of the case, to wit: that as to the mass of his estate comprised in this clause, the testator's views had been wholly baffled by events; that the devise in favor of the offspring of certain marriages in his own family having altogether failed, the law must dispose of his property, he having made no ulterior disposition of it; and this, at last, will probably come the nearest to a correct view of the testator's intentions; for we are at liberty to conclude, in the absence of such ulterior disposition, that unless the estate should vest in the manner in which he had proposed to vest it, he was indifferent as to what became of it, or could do no better than leave it to the law. If he had felt that strong predilection for his supposed favorite nephew, the present defendant, which was so much insisted upon in argument, it may be presumed that the interests of that nephew would not have been forgotten.

Much use has been made of this assumed predilection, in order to establish an inference of intention in William's favor.

To my mind the will seems calculated to induce a contrary conclusion, for there is not a provision in the will made in his favor, individually. He takes, if at all, in trust for his own issue, and even that issue is only conditionally an object of favor; unless mingled with the blood of the Triggs it is rejected, and the blood of the Triggs is followed up into other connections, to William's entire exclusion. Nor is the offspring of his brother and sister admitted to higher favor, unless they be connected with the offspring of the Triggs.

I think it clear, then, that the primary objects of testator's bounty were the children of the Triggs, or their offspring; and not William or his offspring.

At the close of the argument at the last term, I intimated to counsel my impression that the cause had not been argued on its true grounds. I considered it a case of conditional 386] *limitation, whereas it was argued exclusively with reference to the law of conditions; the one party maintaining that the marriage of William was a condition precedent, and therefore, as it never took place, nothing ever vested in him; the other, that the marriage was a condition subsequent, and having become, without default in him, impossible, he took the estate discharged of the condition; but both conceding that the cause must be disposed of on the law of conditions.

Peters 3.

It is clearly a case of conditional limitation; but if it is to be decided on the law of conditions, instead of the law of contingencies, I think there is abundant reason for maintaining that it is a case of condition precedent, not subsequent. Were this a common law conveyance, I should think differently, for reasons well known to the profession; but in a will there is not one case in a thousand in which it would ever enter the mind of a testator, when he gives upon condition generally, that any interest vests until performance. I feel no hesitation in laying it down as the ordinary import of words of condition in a will, that they impose a condition precedent, unless accompanying words or the general purpose for imposing the condition suggest the contrary. In the present instance, there cannot be a reason consigned, why any interest should vest in William, prior to that marriage which was to give birth to the issue that was the sole object of the testator's bounty. It was not William for whom any beneficial interest was intended, but the issue of a particular marriage, in which the will distinctly shows that the blood of the Triggs was the favored object. We must force the words of the testator from their simple and natural meaning, before William can in any event become more than a mere trustee in interest. And why create him trustee? at his tender age, too, for an event so remote and uncertain, for persons whose coming in esse depended upon so many contingencies, must necessarily be so long deferred, and whose interests would by operation of law be committed into hands so much more competent. Why make him a trustee, who would need himself a guardian?

It has been urged that the testator has declared he did not mean to die intestate as to any part of his property, *and that [387 marriage being a valuable consideration, William must be considered a purchaser.

As to the first of these arguments, it is clear that the testator never lost sight of his avowed intention, and actually did dispose of all his property, though not of all his estate in it; and with so many alternatives and precautions, as might well have satisfied an ignorant man, if not any man, that he could not die intestate as to any part of it. And as to William's being a purchaser, although it might well be denied before the event of his marriage, yet if it be admitted, the consideration in view was not his own advancement, but that of his issue. That was to him a legal and adequate consideration, either for marrying or waiting for the marriage. A purchase made for a child, is a case excepted from that class of resulting trusts which arise when one individual pays the consideration and another takes the title. The natural feelings imputed to the parent are held sufficient to take the case out of the general rule. (2 Mad. Ch., 116, et passim).

If this will is to be adjudged to vest a present interest in William, subject to be defeated by breach of the condition, or rather waiting to be rendered absolute by the performance of the condition; in other words, if it is to be construed to create a condition subsequent, it must be for the purpose of carrying into effect this will, or some purpose of the testator expressed in it. But if it can be shown that it would be nugatory as to William and unnecessary as to all other interests, the argument falls.

I can conceive of no interests that can be involved in this question, unless it be, 1. The interests of the devisees over; 2. Those of the heir-at-law; or, 3. Those of William himself.

Now, as to the first, it would be contrary to the most express terms of the will to give William a continuing interest, or any present interest. On a question of intention, it is immaterial whether the devise over be too remote or not too remote. The argument is the same, and as to them, the devise creates a legal interest: they are not to take under the trust to William; but in the event of his marriage failing, the devise over is of a legal interest, so that the trust is expressly restricted to the object of its creation, which object arises only upon the marriage of William. The words are, "and in case such marriage should not take effect, I leave and bequeath such estate to any child," &c. So that upon the failure of the marriage, the trust was intended to be, as to the devise over, as though it never had been mentioned.

This is expressly limiting William's interest to the purposes of its creation, and rendering it idle and useless, except in the event of the marriage.

And why should the heir-at-law ask to invest William with an existing interest? He has no need of a legal estate in William to maintain his right. His claim, as of an undisposed residue, is better than of a resulting trust under the devise to William.

Or why should the court adjudge this a condition subsequent in behalf even of William himself? The law is clear that he can take no beneficial interest under this will; his case is one of the strongest possible against the arising of any implication in favor of a devisee. In the case of Wheeler v. Shervel (Mosely 301, case 165), in which the executors claimed a beneficial interest in the residue of property given them in trust, the court declares it to be the strongest case possible against them, that they take expressly in trust.

And in the case of Milnes v. Slater (8 Ves., 308), where a similar claim was preferred, it was held to be conclusive against it, that one of their number was created trustee. The heir is not to be precluded or postponed, except upon express words, or strong, if not unavoidable implication. Here the implications are all against him who would preclude the heir-at-law.

If, then, the purpose and the words of the will point to the marriage of William for the initiation of the testator's bounty, and no interest or object whatever will be subserved by vesting in William a present interest; it follows that the marriage, which is the condition, should be held a condition precedent.

Nor can I feel the force of that argument in favor of a present or beneficial devise to William which is deduced from the circumstance that no provision is made by the will for the application of the income during the interval that must ensue between the marriage of William and birth of issue; an interval which, by possibility, might last many years.

If this were an application for a maintenance out of that income, such an implication might have weight; but it certainly goes no further; and even to that point the inference is not unavoidable, since it is perfectly consistent with the character and duties of a trustee to receive and invest the rents and profits of the trust estate in expectancy of the event which is to appropriate them. And where no specific instructions are given him, a prudent man will claim and receive the directions and protection of a court of equity in applying such income; it is every day's practice.

If, then, neither does the will give nor the law imply any beneficial interest to William, there can be no reason for vesting anything in him before the marriage.

Believing, as I do, that if the case must be disposed of upon the question whether the condition, if a case of condition, be precedent or subsequent, it ought to be adjudged a condition precedent, I should here conclude. But as the case has been laid over, and there is no knowing on what point it may go off, I must proceed to examine it in other points of view.

I will, then, next examine the rights of William upon the hypothesis that it is a condition subsequent.

If a condition subsequent, he can only, in the most favorable view of his interests, be placed in the same relations and acquire the same rights by its becoming impossible, that would have resulted from the performance of the condition.

Suppose, then, the condition performed, and what would have been the character and extent of his rights? On what principle could he be discharged from the trust on which everything is given to him that the will gives? Would he have held to his own use or to that of his issue? He would not have acquired an estate tail under the rule in Shelley's case*, [*390 because he was a mere trustee; his legal estate could not unite with the use to his issue so as to make one estate. And if he would have held in trust for his issue by that marriage, what would have been the consequence of his dying without issue? The question is easily answered.

The reversion of the use in the event supposed, never passed from the testator. The disposition of the law was this: upon the death of testator, the whole descended upon the heir to await the event of William's marriage. Upon his marriage he would have become entitled to take and hold in trust for the issue of that marriage. But what is the rule of the law when a trust is created for an object that never comes into existence, or a purpose that fails? It cannot be questioned that the trustee then holds to the use of the heir-at-law. I will not say it is absurd, but it does appear to me irreconcilable with any principles that I am acquainted with, that a trust should be converted into a beneficial interest by the occurrence of an event which makes the trust idle and without an object; and it is not easily reconcilable with reason or with the views of the testator, that an interest which the heir-at-law would unquestionably have retained even after the marriage, should be devested by the impossibility that the marriage should ever take place.

There is not wanting legal authority for maintaining, on the contrary, that had the marriage taken place and the wife died without issue, so as to render it impossible that the object of the trust should ever come in esse, the estate would immediately have returned to the heir-at-law. I allude to the case of Mansfield v. Dugard (1 Eq. Ca. Abr., 195; 1 Fearn, 372), in which the devise was to the wife until the son attained his age of twenty-one years. The son died at thirteen, and it was ruled that the wife's estate determined on the son's decease.

But it is with reluctance* I bestow time upon examining these questions, so thoroughly am I satisfied that this case does not turn on the doctrine of conditions. It is a case of conditional limitation, and, therefore, to be disposed of upon very different principles. Cases of conditional limitation*partake of the nature of conditions; but they are cases of contingency, and to be adjudged upon the principles applicable to contingent estates. Their distinguishing characteristics are, that they contain a condition either to divest an estate vested, or to prevent the vesting of an estate contemplated, and to carry over the interest to another party, or to some other purpose, not to the heir. Whereas, it is indispensable to the legal idea of a condition that it should enure to the benefit of the heir, that he should enter, and that the effect of entry should be the restoration of the original estate, not the creation of a new estate. A conditional limitation is comprised among executory devises, and, therefore, can be created by will alone; but estates on condition may be created by deed or will. As to the estate to be created or carried over, as well as in those instances in which it anticipates or prevents an estate from vesting, it is obvious that conditional limitations must be assimilated to conditions precedent. But as the contingency may also operate to divest an estate taken presently, it is equally obvious that it then approximates to a condition subsequent in one of its effects. In either case, however, it is regarded as a contingency, and the law of conditions is not applied to it to any purpose that would defeat the estate of the second taker. It is, on the contrary, so moulded and applied as may give effect to the devise over.

The question whether this is a case of condition or of conditional limitation, is easily decided by subjecting it to a very simple and obvious test.

Let us assume, for argument, that the devise over on failure of William's marriage is not too remote, that he took under a condition subsequent, and committed a clear breach of the condition. In that event, if this is a case subject to the law of conditions, the heir alone could enter, and his entry would restore the original estate, not carry over an estate to another; for it is a canon of the law of conditions that although entry for condition broken may defeat one estate, it cannot create a new one, or carry over another estate; it may restore the estate of him who imposed the condition, but does no more.

392* What, then, would become of the devise over? of the will? and of testator's intention? They would be defeated; and hence Peters 3.

words of condition in such cases are construed words of limitation, and the condition converted into a contingency, upon the happening or failure of which the estate devised in the alternative goes over and vests without entry. There is no other mode of carrying into effect the intention of the testator but by giving to his language a meaning that will comport with that intention. The only difficulty in this cause, and that which probably preoccupied the attention of counsel with the law of conditions, has resulted from mere casualty. By a series of unanticipated events, the heir-at-law is at this time actually thrown into the same relation, with regard to the defendant here, in which he would have stood had the case been one purely of condition. That is, if the devise over be put out of the will, as too remote in its creation, then, in effect, the entry of the heir, if he has a right to enter, would enure to his own benefit.

But this can make no change in the law of the case. Whatever was the legal character of the right of the parties, it was the effect of the testator's intention as deduced from the will. His intention remains the same, although the arbitrary rules of law may prevent that intention from being carried into effect. The rule of law which converts words of condition into words of limitation in certain cases, proceeds upon intention, and cannot be affected by the occurrence of incidents which defeat the execution of that intention. The present is one of the most frequent and familiar occurrence in the books, of those instances in which that rule of construction prevails. Neither the first taker nor the devisee ever was heir-at-law, and in that case Lord Hale has said (Fry's case in Venetris) "that it is a rule which has received as many resolutions as ever point did, that although the word condition is used, limiting the estate over to a stranger makes it a limitation."

For these reasons I am clearly of opinion that the rule of law applicable to conditions subsequent, when become impossible, is not to govern this case. That it must be disposed of on the law of conditional limitations, and William's *marriage is to be regarded as a [393 contingency, not a condition.

I have already given my reasons for holding this to be a condition precedent, or rather a contingency which is to vest, not to divest an interest; and this is always a question of intention to be deduced from the views of the testator in imposing conditions. If a condition precedent, then it is one of those instances in which the first estate is anticipated, and never vests; the case becomes a very plain and simple one, and the will must operate as if it read thus: "if W. K. shall marry a daughter of the Triggs, then I give the residue to him in trust, &c.; if such marriage shall not take place, then I give it over." And thus construed, there can be little doubt that the will comes nearest to the good sense of the case and the views of the testator. Nor can there be any ambiguity in the law of the case, if so construed. William would take nothing, because he never married; and the devise over being too remote, there is no first taker to carry the estate. It is, then, an undisposed residue, and to be distributed according to the lex loci. Under this view of the case, the judgment must certainly be against William King.

But if he took a present interest, defeasible upon the condition or contingency of refusing to marry a daughter of the Triggs, then the inquiry is, what effect has it upon the state of right in a case of conditional limitation, that without his fault such condition or contingency becomes impossible? On this point, which is very much of an authority question, it must be acknowledged there is a great dearth of adjudged cases, as well as of learning in elementary writers.

If it may be decided with analogy to trusts, the objects of which have failed or never come in esse, then they are considered as determined in favor of the heir-at-law, as in The Bishop of Durham's case. If it may be determined by analogy to the case of estates to endure until the happening of an event that has become impossible, then I have shown that it determined presently in favor of the devise over; the court declaring in the case of Mansfield v. Dugard that he may wait forever if his right is to be suspended on an impossible event.

394*] *And if in the absence of any other established rule we may be guided by the pole star of devises—the testator's intention—certainly nothing could comport less with his views than to permit an event which he looked forward to as the certain cause of divesting William of even his fiduciary interest, to have the effect of vesting in him an absolute beneficial interest, or any other interest which could stand in the way of the claim of his own legal representatives.

If we submit the question to the plainest test of reason as applied to the law of limitation and contingencies, then it seems incontrovertible that when a limitation over is made to depend upon the failure of a certain event, the limitation ought to take effect whenever it is ascertained that the event must fail, as when it has become impossible; and equally so, that when a previous interest, although passing presently into possession, awaits its confirmation from the happening of a certain event, that there is no reason for continuing that estate when it is definitively established that the event on which it depends for confirmation can never happen. These were the principles recognized in the case of Mansfield v. Dugard, and, I think, the reasonable result of all the doctrine of conditional limitations considered under the three heads into which the cases are usually distributed. There was a case cited in argument to sustain the judgment below, on which so much reliance was placed that I shall not pass it over unnoticed. It is the case of Thomas v. Howel, reported in Salkeld and Modern (1 Salk., 170; 4 Mod., 66), and very defectively reported in both. The report in Salkeld does not give the half of the case, and that in 4 Mod. gives a very unsatisfactory account of the reasons which governed the court. An attentive examination of the facts, however, will enable us to understand the case, and to explain it in perfect conformity with the principles which governed my opinion.

It was a curiously mixed case, in which the law of conditions and conditional limitations were so blended as to have been scarcely severable. It was the case of a father, tenant in fee, and his three daughters, constituting his heirs-at-law. The father devises to one of the daughters a messuage called *Lawhorn, [395 “upon condition that she marry T. T., and if she refuse to marry him, then over to trustees in trust to be divided among the three co-heiresses, equally or otherwise as they please.” The marriage became impossible by the death of T. T. under twelve, and the question was which to apply to it—the law of conditions or the law of limitations. The majority of the court (three out of four) decided that it came within the law of conditions. One held it to be a conditional limitation. On this case I would remark—

1. That it was well disposed of upon the law of conditions, for the devise over was in effect to the heir-at-law; so that the entry for condition broken would not have defeated the will, but have carried it into effect; the reason, therefore, for construing words of condition into words of limitation did not exist, especially as it is presumable that there was nothing to prevent the operation of the statute of uses in favor of the devise over under the trust in the will, but.

2. There was room for a doubt on the question arising from the effect of interposing the trust, especially if the power of making an unequal distribution was well given to the trustees; for then the entry of the heirs would have defeated the testator's views; and it ought to have been held a limitation, according to the opinion of the dissenting judge.

3. I think it very clear that the case alluded to was argued and decided under a general admission of bench and bar, that if held to be a case of condition, the effect of the condition's becoming impossible would be in favor of the first taker; but if held to be a case of conditional limitation, that it would be in favor of the party claiming under the devise over. If the effect had been held to be the same in both cases, it would have been utterly idle to raise a question upon the will.

And, lastly. That when the judges in that case come to the conclusion that it was a case of condition, and not of limitation, they proceed to examine the question, whether a condition precedent or subsequent, with a view to the leading motive of the testator, little regarding any particular phraseology. And, certainly, with a view to induce T. T. to address the *daughter, the more beneficially the will [396 operated in her behalf, the greater would be the inducement held out; and, accordingly, they make it a condition subsequent. But a contrary reason operates here, for the leading motive is not the establishment of William King, but the formation and advancement of a particular family connection. It would then have comported best with this testator's views to superadd the inducement of necessity, in order to incline William King to the proposed matrimonial connection.

There could have been no reason for giving it to him until the marriage took effect; it would have been better to let it accumulate in the hands of the executors, especially considering his tender age at the date of the will.

Upon the whole, I am satisfied that if this case is to be disposed of on the law of conditions, there is nothing in the will or the views of the testator that should make it a condition precedent, and nothing certainly has occurred since to make it necessary to give it that character; for had he married, there would have been a resulting trust in favor of the heirs if the marriage failed to produce issue, and that would only have left the heir-at-law where he is now, without owing anything to the aid of a trust. Whence, it results, that it would have been useless and idle to have vested any interest in William at any time.

But I am perfectly satisfied that the case is one to which the law of limitations and contingencies alone is applicable, and that according to the principles that govern that class of cases, the impossibility of the contingency does not confirm the estate in the first taker, but defeats it.

I am therefore of opinion that the judgment below should be reversed.

See S. C., 8 Pet., 326.

Cited—8 Pet., 348, 349; 14 How., 501; 6 Wall., 475, 478; 3 Wood. & M., 493; 1 Cliff., 577; 3 Cliff., 21; 17 Bank. Reg., 526.

397*] *ANONYMOUS.

Practice.

Certified copies of the opinions of the court, delivered in cases decided by the court, are to be given by the reporter, and not by the clerk of the court.

MR. WIRT moved the court to order copies of the opinion of the court delivered at this term in the case of Shanks et al. v. Dupont et al. (ante, 242), to be certified with the judgment of the court under the seal of the court. He stated that he made the application on behalf of a gentleman who was interested in a case depending in England upon similar principles with those decided in the case referred to, and the object was to lay the proceedings of this court, in an authenticated form, before the court in Great Britain which was to decide the case depending there.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL said that the reporter of the court is the proper person to give copies of the opinions delivered by the court. The opinions were delivered to him after they were read, and not to the clerk, and they were not therefore in his office to be copied. Not being filed in the clerk's office, he could not certify copies of the opinions under the seal of the court.

If an authenticated copy of the opinion of the court is desired, the reporter only could furnish it, certified; and the clerk of the court may certify, under the seal of the court, that he is the reporter, if this should also be required.

398*] *WILLIAM FOWLE, Surviving Partner, Plaintiff in Error,

v.

THE COMMON COUNCIL OF ALEXANDRIA.

Insolvency of auctioneer—liability of a municipal corporation for granting license to auctioneer without taking a bond—Act of Congress amending charter of Alexandria.

Peters 3.

The plaintiff placed goods in the hands of an auctioneer in the city of Alexandria, who sold the same and became insolvent, having neglected to pay over the proceeds of the sales to the plaintiff. The auctioneer was licensed by the corporation of Alexandria, and the corporation had omitted to take from him a bond with surety for the faithful performance of his duties as auctioneer. This suit was instituted to recover from the corporation of Alexandria the amount of the sales of the plaintiff's goods, lost by the insolvency of the auctioneer, on an alleged liability, in consequence of the corporation having omitted to take a bond from the auctioneer.

The power to license auctioneers, and to take bond for their good behavior not being one of the incidents to a corporation, must be conferred by an Act of the Legislature; and, in executing it, the corporate body must conform to the act. The Legislature of Virginia conferred this power on the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the several corporate towns within that Commonwealth, of which Alexandria was then one: "provided that no such license should be granted until the person or persons requesting the same should enter into bond with one or more sufficient sureties, payable to the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of such corporation." This was a limitation of the power. [407]

Though the corporate name of Alexandria was "the mayor and commonalty," it is not doubted that a bond taken in pursuance of the act would have been valid. [407]

The Act of Congress of 1804, "An Act to amend the charter of Alexandria," does not transfer generally to the common council the powers of the mayor and commonalty, but the powers given to them are specially enumerated. There is no enumeration of the power to grant licenses to auctioneers. The act amending the charter changed the corporate body so entirely as to require a new provision to enable it to execute the powers conferred by the law of Virginia. An enabling clause, empowering the common council to act in the particular case, or some general clause which might embrace the particular case, is necessary under the new organization of the corporate body. [408]

The common council granted a license to carry on the trade of an auctioneer which the law did not empower that body to grant. Is the town responsible for the losses sustained by individuals from the fraudulent conduct of the auctioneer? He is not the officer or agent of the corporation, but is understood to act for himself as entirely as a tavern-keeper, or any other person who may carry on any business under a license from the corporate body. [409]

Is a municipal corporation, established for the general purposes of government, with limited legislative powers, liable for losses consequent on its having misconstrued the extent of its powers, in granting a license which it had no authority to grant, without taking that security for the conduct of the person obtaining the license which its own ordinances had been supposed to require, and which might protect those who transact business with the persons acting under the clause? [*399] The court find no case in which this principle has been affirmed. [409]

That corporations are bound by their contracts is admitted. That money corporations, or those carrying on business for themselves are liable for torts is well settled. But that a legislative corporation, established as a part of the government of the country, is liable for losses sustained by a non-feasance, by an omission of the corporate body to observe a law of its own in which no penalty is provided, is a principle for which we can find no precedent. [409]

The Act of Virginia, passed in 1792, authorizes a defendant to plead and demur in the same case. [409]

ERROR to the Circuit Court for the County of Alexandria in the District of Columbia.

This was an action on the case brought by the plaintiff in error against the defendants in the Circuit Court for damages charged to have been sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the neglect of the defendants to take due bonds and security from one Philip G. Marsteller, licensed by them as an auctioneer, for the years 1815, 1816, 1817, and 1818, according to the alleged provisions of the statute in that behalf enacted.

The declaration and pleadings are fully stated in the opinion of the court. The defendants filed a general demurrer, and pleaded the general issue.

The counsel for the plaintiff objected to the defendants' demurring and pleading at the same time to the declaration, but the court overruled the objection, conceiving that they had a right to permit such a course of proceeding under the statute of Virginia, which is in these words: "The plaintiff in replevin, and the defendant in all other actions, may plead as many several matters, whether of law or fact, as he shall think necessary for his defense."

The court then proceeded to consider the matters of law arising upon the demurrer, and decided that the declaration and the matters therein contained, were not sufficient in law to maintain the plaintiff's action; and the plaintiff prosecuted this writ of error.

The case was argued by Mr. Swann for the plaintiff, and by Mr. Jones and Mr. Taylor for the defendants.

For the plaintiff, it was contended that the Circuit Court erred:

400* 1. In deciding that the action was not sustainable on the declaration.

2. In permitting the demurrer and plea to be both filed at the same time to the declaration.

Mr. Swann, for the plaintiff in error, stated that this case had been before the court in 1826, and was sent back, the court having determined that a new trial should be awarded. (11 Wheat., 320.) On the argument on the former hearing, the plaintiff in error, as he does now, contended that the corporation of Alexandria were liable for the neglect of their duties, and for the damages sustained by individuals in consequence of the same. On that argument, and in support of the principles then asserted, there were cited, Yarborough v. The Bank of England (16 East's Rep., 6); Riddle v. The Proprietors, &c., (7 Mass. Rep., 169). The principles on which the whole claim of the plaintiff rested having been thus fully stated and discussed, and the authorities for them having been vouched, the plaintiff had a right to believe that when the case was remanded upon technical rules, and without a disaffirmance of the principles on which the claim was then placed, they had the sanction of this court. The court will now say whether the question of responsibility is still open.

If it is to be discussed, a reference to the authorities formerly cited will dispose of it in favor of the plaintiff in error. The liability charged to the corporation is fully within the rules to be found in adjudged cases. Those which were cited sustain the principle. Banks are liable for negligence, and the law of corporation, as it is now understood, places such bodies under the same obligations, and gives the same remedies against them as are given in the cases of individuals. They have been held answerable to this extent by this court. (Clark v. The Corporation of Washington, 12 Wheat., 40; The Bank of Columbia v. Patterson's Administrators, 7 Cranch, 209.)

As to the second point. There cannot be a plea and a demurrer to the same declaration. It is competent for a defendant to plead as many matters of fact as he desires, or he may do so as to matters of law; but upon the rules of *pleading, both cannot be done. A [*401 demurrer admits the facts and raises questions of law upon them; a plea puts them in issue. There is, therefore, a direct contradiction between them.

This practice does no good to the party adopting it. Nothing is decided by either course until all is decided, and the opposite party is exposed to great trouble. By pleading alone, the whole questions of law and fact which arose in the case would have been fully presented for decision. It is denied that the law of Virginia sanctions this practice. The Act of Virginia of 1784 prohibited pleading and demurring to the same declaration.

Mr. Taylor and Mr. Jones, for the defendants.

The plaintiff in error intended to present this question of the liability of the defendants, but this has not been done in the declaration. It is asserted by him that the defendants, a municipal corporation, are liable to him for damages for not carrying their own laws into effect.

The suit is against the common council of Alexandria for appointing an auctioneer without taking a bond with sureties for the performance of his duties. The second count alleges the liability of the defendants for suffering the auctioneer to act without having given security. It should appear what the damages sustained by the plaintiff were, and the declaration should have shown the power of the corporation, and their obligation to exercise those powers for the protection of the plaintiff from those damages.

What damages has the plaintiff sustained? It is assumed that had the bond been taken, he would have been indemnified by its provisions, and that it would have covered the defalcations of the auctioneer. The duties of the defendants should have been specified by a reference to the laws enjoining them; the suit is in the nature of a penal action, and nothing should have been left to inference.

It has not been shown that the common council of Alexandria has the power to grant licenses to auctioneers. The law of Virginia of 1796 gave that authority to "the mayor, aldermen and commonalty;" but does this extend to authorize "the common council?" The [*402 next law gives the authority to "the mayor and commonalty." There is no averment that the common council is the same body with the corporations mentioned in these acts.

The counsel then went into an examination of the laws of Virginia incorporating the city of Alexandria, and of the Act of Congress on the same subject, to show that the power to take a bond from an auctioneer did not exist, or had not been continued or transferred from the corporation as originally established to that now existing, and against which the suit was instituted.

They also contended that the claim of the plaintiff presented a case in which a corporation was asserted to be liable for having omitted to legislate for the protection of those who dealt with an officer acting under an authority derived from the corporation. Such a claim could not be maintained. It was also urged that had a bond been taken from the auctioneer, it would not have enured to the benefit of individuals transacting business with him. Its operation would have been to govern his public duties, and not to operate on his private transactions. Between the corporation taking such a bond, and those who dealt with the auctioneer, there was no such affinity as would permit them in case of default to claim the benefit of the bond. Such a provision might have been by law made, but this not having been done, its omission gave no ground of action.

As to the second point; a reference to the Act of the Legislature of Virginia, passed in 1792, would fully satisfy the court that a defendant has a right to plead and demur in the same case. This has been decided in the courts of Virginia. (4 Hen. & Mun., 276, 277; 2 Mun., 100.)

Mr. Swann, in reply, contended that the acts incorporating the city of Alexandria, and particularly the Acts of Congress, were public acts, and it was not, therefore, necessary to introduce them into the pleadings. The court would take notice of those laws as public laws.

Until 1804, the corporate name of the defendants was "the mayor and the commonalty;" since that year it has been "the common council of Alexandria." The law of 403*] Virginia *in 1796 was a general public law relating to all corporations, and became necessarily a law of this district. Without that law, the corporation had no right to license the auctioneer. The Act of 1800 was passed under the authority of the law of 1796, and that act authorizes a suit on the bond of an auctioneer by the party injured.

By the law of 1804 the corporation may pass all laws not inconsistent with the laws of the United States; and the plaintiff claims the benefit of the obligation imposed by the laws. The corporation was bound to take a bond with security on granting a license to an auctioneer.

By the appointment of the auctioneer the defendants held out to the community that they had taken a bond. They gave the auctioneer the credit upon which the plaintiff trusted him with his goods. They authorized him to carry on the business out of which the loss arose; a business he could not have entered upon without the license he received from the corporation.

On a demurrer, everything is to be inferred against the party demurring. The facts are admitted, and whatever conclusion they warrant may be drawn by the court. The facts show the omission to take the bond, and the inference is authorized that this was gross negligence, for which the defendants are answerable.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

In December, 1796, the General Assembly of Virginia passed an act entitled "An Act concerning corporations," declaring, "that from and after the passing thereof, the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the corporate towns within the said commonwealth, and their successors should, upon request of any person desirous thereof, grant licenses to exercise, in such town, the trade or business of an auctioneer; provided, that no such license should be granted until the person or persons requesting the same should enter into bond with one or more sufficient sureties, payable to the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of such corporate town and their successors, in such penalty and with such *condition as by the laws [*404 and ordinances of the town shall be required.

In the year 1779 the town of Alexandria was incorporated by the name of "the mayor and commonalty of the town of Alexandria." The corporation consisted of the mayor, recorder, aldermen, and common councilmen.

The mayor, recorder, and aldermen, and their successors, were constituted justices of the peace, with power to appoint constables, surveyors of the streets and highways, and to hold a court of hustings once in every month; and to appoint clerks, a sergeant, and other proper officers.

In the year 1800 the mayor and commonalty passed an ordinance "for licensing auctioneers agreeably to an Act of the General Assembly, passed on the 22d of December, 1796," by which it was enacted that the mayor and commonalty shall grant to any person or persons during the same, a license to exercise the trade or business of an auctioneer within the town. Provided that no such license shall be granted until the person or persons applying shall enter into bond, with one or more good securities, in the sum of twenty thousand dollars, payable to the mayor and commonalty, and conditioned for the payment of the annual rent of five hundred dollars to the mayor and commonalty, in quarterly payments, for the said office; and for the due and faithful performance of all the duties of the same; which bond shall not become void on the first recovery, but may be put in suit and prosecuted from time to time, by, and at the costs of any person injured by a breach thereof, until the whole penalty shall be recovered.

In 1804 Congress passed an Act "To amend the charter of Alexandria," in which provision was made for the election of a common council. The judicial duties of the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, having been transferred to the Circuit Court of the United States for the County of Alexandria, it was enacted that the common councils elected "and their successors shall be, and hereby are made a body politic and corporate, by the name of the common council of Alexandria." The estate, &c., vested in the mayor and commonalty was transferred to the common council, and the usual corporate *powers to sue and be sued, [*405 &c., to erect work-houses, &c., to provide for the police of the town, &c., were conferred on that body. They were authorized "to appoint a superintendent of police, commissioners and surveyors of the streets, constables, collectors of the taxes, and all other officers who may be deemed necessary for the execution of their laws, who shall be paid for their services a reasonable compensation, and whose duties and powers shall be prescribed in such manner as the common council shall deem fit for carrying into execution the powers hereby granted."

The twelfth section enacts "That so much of any act or acts of the General Assembly of Virginia as comes within the purview of this act shall be, and the same is hereby repealed. Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or destroy any right or remedy which the mayor and commonalty of Alexandria now possess or enjoy, to or concerning any debts, claims or demands against any person or persons whatsoever, or to repeal any of the laws and ordinances of the mayor and commonalty of the said town, now in force, which are not inconsistent with the act."

In June, 1817, the common council of Alexandria passed "An Act to amend the act for licensing auctioneers, and for other purposes," in the following words: "Be it enacted by the Common Council of Alexandria, that every person or persons obtaining a license to exercise the business of an auctioneer within the town of Alexandria, shall annually apply for and obtain a renewal of his or their licence, and shall also annually renew his or their bonds for the same in the manner provided by law; and every person failing to renew such license, and give bond annually, shall cease to exercise the business of an auctioneer, and shall be proceeded against accordingly."

The declaration, after reciting the Act of 1796 and the several ordinances of the corporate body of the town of Alexandria, charges that the common council of Alexandria, on the — day of —, in the year 1815, in the town of Alexandria, did grant a license to one Philip G. Marsteller, to exercise the trade and business of an auctioneer within the said town for the term of one year; and at the expiration *of the said year, did renew the said license to the said Philip G. Marsteller for one other year, and did continue to renew the said license from the end of the said last-mentioned year, from year to year, until the — day of —, in the year 1819, during all which time, that is to say, from the — day of — in the year 1815, to the — day of —, in the year 1819, he, the said Philip G. Marsteller, did exercise the trade and business of an auctioneer in the said town of Alexandria, under the said license and authority of the said common council, and that, during the period aforesaid, the said plaintiff delivered to him, the said Philip G. Marsteller, sundry goods, wares and merchandise, to be sold by him at auction in the said town of Alexandria, and that the said Philip did, from time to time, during the period he so carried on the trade of an auctioneer under the license aforesaid, sell at auction the said goods, &c., so delivered to him by the plaintiff, to the amount of $1,583.09, which said sum the said Philip, though often requested, failed to pay to the said plaintiff.

The declaration then states that a judgment was obtained against the said Philip for the said sum, which he was totally unable to pay; by means of which premises the plaintiff became entitled to the benefit of the bond and security, which ought to have been taken by the common council previous to granting the said license to exercise the trade of auctioneer as aforesaid. Yet, the defendants, not regarding their duty in that behalf, but contriving to deceive and injure the plaintiff, did not, and would not take any bond and security as aforesaid, from the said Philip G. Marsteller, during the time when the transactions aforesaid took place; but on the contrary, so carelessly, negligently, and improperly conducted themselves in the premises, that by and through the negligence, carelessness, and default of the defendants, no bond and security was taken from the said Philip, and that the money due from the said Philip was wholly lost to him, the said plaintiff, to his damage $3,000.

To this declaration the defendants filed a general demurrer, and at the same time pleaded the general issue.

The counsel for the plaintiff objected to receiving at the *same time a demurrer [*407 and a plea to the whole declaration; but the court overruled the objection, under the Act of Assembly, which is in these words: "The plaintiff in replevin, and the defendant in all other actions, may plead as many several matters, whether of law or facts, as he shall think necessary for his defense."

The court, having sustained the demurrer and entered judgment for the defendants, the plaintiff has brought the cause by writ of error in this court.

The power to license auctioneers, and to take bonds for their good behavior in office not being one of the incidents to a corporation, must be conferred by an Act of the Legislature; and in executing it, the corporate body must conform to the act. The Legislature of Virginia conferred this power on the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the several corporate towns within that commonwealth, of which Alexandria was one; "provided that no such license should be granted until the person or persons requesting the same should enter into bond, with one or more sufficient securities, payable to the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of such corporation." This was a limitation on the power.

Though the corporate name of Alexandria was "the mayor and commonalty," it is not doubted that a bond taken in pursuance of the act would have been valid. (Jones, 261.)

In the year 1800, when the corporation of Alexandria determined to act upon this law, an ordinance was passed authorizing "the mayor and commonalty" to grant licenses to auctioneers, provided that no such license should be granted until bond with sufficient sureties should be given, payable to "the mayor and commonalty." It may well be doubted whether this ordinance is sustained by the legislative act, in pursuance of which it was made. That act authorized "the mayor, aldermen and commonalty" to grant licenses to auctioneers, first taking bonds payable to the "mayor, aldermen and commonalty." The ordinance omits the "aldermen," both in the clause which empowers the body to grant licenses, and in that which names the obligees in the bond.

But supposing this difficulty to be entirely removed, we are next to inquire [*408 whether the powers to grant licenses to auctioneers, and to take bonds for the performance of their duty, which were given by the Act of 1796 to the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty, and by the ordinance of 1800 to the mayor and commonalty, have been transferred to, and vested in the common council of Alexandria.

This depends on the Act of Congress passed in 1804, "To amend the charter of Alexandria." Under this instrument, the corporate body consists of the common council alone. The mayor is separated from them, and the aldermen are discontinued. The power of the mayor and commonalty are not transferred generally to the common council, but the powers given them are specially enumerated. We do not find, in the enumeration, the power to grant licenses to auctioneers. If it could be maintained that the repealing clause does not comprehend the Act of 1796, still the act amending the charter changes the corporate body so entirely as to require new provisions to enable it to execute the powers conferred by that act. The corporate body is organized anew, and does not retain those parts which are required for the execution of the Act of 1796. An enabling clause, empowering the common council to act in the particular case, or some general clause which might embrace the particular case, is necessary under the new organization of the corporate body. It has been already said that we find no particular provision, and the general powers granted are so limited by the language of the grant, that they cannot be fairly construed to comprehend the subject of licenses to auctioneers.

It may be admitted that the ordinance of 1800 is not repealed by the act amending the charter. But that ordinance is not adapted to the new corporate body, and could not be carried into execution by the common council, till modified by some act of legislation.

The common council took up this subject in 1817, and passed the act recited in the declaration. We are relieved from inquiring whether this act removed or could remove the difficulties which have been stated, by the circumstance that the declaration changes the non-409[feasance, which is the *foundation of the action, as commencing in the year 1815. We do not think any law then existed which empowered the common council of Alexandria to license auctioneers, or to take bonds for the faithful performance of their duty. The injury alleged in the declaration, as the foundation of the action, is the omission to take the bond required by law. Now, if the common council was not required or enabled by law to take a bond, the action cannot be sustained.

If the declaration is to be considered as stating the cause of action to be the granting a license without previously requiring a bond, it will not, we think, help the case. The common council has granted a license to carry on the trade of an auctioneer, which the law did not empower that body to grant. Is the town responsible for the losses sustained by individuals from the fraudulent conduct of the auctioneer? He is not the officer or agent of the corporation, but is understood to act for himself as entirely as a tavern-keeper, or any other person who may carry on any business under a license from the corporate body.

Is a municipal corporation, established for the general purposes of government with limited legislative powers, liable for losses consequent on its having misconstrued the extent of its powers in granting a license which it had not authority to grant without taking that security for the conduct of the person obtaining the license which its own ordinances had been supposed to require, and which might protect those who transacted business with the person acting under the license? We find no case in which this principle has been affirmed.

That corporations are bound by their contracts is admitted; that money corporations, or those carrying on business for themselves, are liable for torts, is well settled; but that a legislative corporation, established as a part of the government of the country is liable for losses sustained by a nonfeasance, by an omission of the corporate body to observe a law of its own in which no penalty is provided, is a principle for which we can find no precedent. We are not prepared to make one in this case.

In permitting the defendant below to demur and plead to the whole declaration, [410 the Circuit Court has construed the act on that subject as it has been construed by the courts of Virginia.

There is no error, and the judgment is affirmed with costs.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Columbia held in and for the County of Alexandria, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed with costs.

Aff'g 3 Cranch, C. C., 77; See S. C., 11 Wheat., 320. Cited—20 How., 436; 5 Mason, 436, 437.

*JOHN CLAY, Plaintiff in Error, [411 v.

ABRAHAM SMITH.

Receipt of dividend under Louisiana bankrupt law by resident of Kentucky—practice.

The plaintiff below, a citizen of the State of Kentucky, instituted a suit against the defendant, a citizen of Louisiana, for the recovery of a debt incurred in 1808, and the defendant pleaded his discharge by the bankrupt law of Louisiana in 1811; under which, according to the provisions of the law, "as well his person as his future effects" were forever discharged "from all the claims of his creditors." Under this law the plaintiff, whose debt was specified in the list of the defendant's creditors, received a dividend of ten per cent. on his debt, declared by the assignees of the defendant. Held, that the plaintiff, by voluntarily making himself a party to those proceedings, abandoned his extraterritorial immunity from the operation of the bankrupt law of Louisiana; and was bound by that law to the same extent to which the citizens of Louisiana were bound.

The plaintiff in error having died while the cause was held under advisement, the judgment was entered nunc pro tunc, as on the first day of this term.

ERROR to the District Court of the Eastern District of Louisiana.

This case was argued at January Term, 1828, by Mr. Livingston, and was held under advisement until this term; on the suggestion of counsel, and for information upon the law of the State of Louisiana, referred to in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes up from the Louisiana District, by writ of error, to reverse a judgment obtained there by Smith v. Clay.

Smith is a citizen of Kentucky, and Clay of Louisiana; and the action was brought to recover a debt incurred in the year 1808.

Clay's defense rests upon the validity of a discharge obtained in a court of the State, under a law of the State, in the year 1811. The plea sets out his petition to the court; his surrender of his effects; the schedule of his debts, in which Smith's debt is specified, as also the payment to him of ten per cent., the dividend 412 declared by the assignees of *the bankrupt; and the judgment of the court, rendered in pursuance of the consent of more than a majority of his creditors in number and amount, that he be discharged, "as well his person as his future effects, from all the claims of his creditors." The language of the plea is, "upon which said petition, the usual proceedings being had thereon, the said plaintiff and other creditors and said defendant being parties thereto, the said Supreme Court by their final decree pronounced in the premises, on the 15th of June, 1811, declared the said defendant, as well his person as his subsequently acquired property and effects, forever released from all claims, debts, and demands," &c., previously due.

This plea is demurred to, and thus the question is raised whether Smith, by voluntarily making himself party to such proceedings, has not abandoned his extraterritorial immunity from the operation of the bankrupt laws of Louisiana.

We are of opinion that he did; and was bound by the decision of the State court to the same extent to which the citizens of that State were bound.

Judgment reversed.

Case remanded, with instructions to enter judgment for defendant there. And in consequence of the death of Clay, while the cause was held under advisement, that it be entered, nunc pro tunc, as on the first day of this term.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the District Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said District Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby reversed, and that the cause be, and the same is remanded to the said District Court, with instructions to the said court to enter judgment for John Clay, the defendant in said court. And it is further ordered by the court that in consequence of the death of the said Clay, while this cause was held under advisement, that judgment be entered, nunc pro tunc, as on the first day of this term.

Cited—13 Otto, 66; 1 Wood. & M., 127; Bald., 301; 1 Biss., 318; 5 Biss., 62; 5 Cranch, C. C., 492.

413* WILLIAM PARSONS, Plaintiff in Error,*

v.

JAMES ARMOR AND T. W. OAKLEY, Syndics of the Creditors of JAMES ARMOR.

Practice—principal and agent—when principal bound by acts of agent—bills of exchange—protest.

Error from the District Court of Louisiana. The record consisted of the petition, the answer, the whole testimony, as well depositions as documents, introduced by either party, and the fiat of the judge, that Armor the plaintiff below, recover the debt as demanded. The difficulty is to decide under what character we shall consider this reference to the revising power of this court. If treated strictly as a writ of error, it is certainly not an attribute of that writ, according to the common law doctrine, to submit the testimony as well as the law of the case to the revision of this court; and then there is no mode in which the court can treat this case but in the nature of a bill of exceptions. The court is not at liberty to treat this case as an appeal in a court of equity jurisdiction, under the Act of 1803; because the party has not brought up his cause by appeal, but by writ of error. [425]

F. at New Orleans, was the correspondent of P. at Boston, received goods from him on consignment, and was from time to time directed to purchase produce, and ship the same to P., and was instructed to draw on P. for the funds to pay for the same. When he made purchases, "the bills of parcels were made out in the name of F., and the accounts assured in the books of the different merchants in his name." The general course of the business was, that P. sent out, in his own vessels, merchandise to F. which was sold by F., and F., at the request of P., purchased from merchants in New Orleans produce, and shipped the same as ordered by P.; and to put himself in funds for the same when necessary, drew bills of exchange on P., who had always, until the presentation of the bills on which this suit was brought, accepted and paid the same; but he did not in his purchase, act under the idea that he was restricted in his purchases to the drawing of bills for the payment of the articles purchased for P. F. purchased a quantity of tobacco to be shipped to P., and payment for the same in bills on P. made a particular part of the contract for the purchase. At the time of the purchase, F. showed to the vendor of the tobacco the letters from P., ordering the purchase and shipment of the same. Some of the bills drawn by F. on P., and which were delivered to the vendor of the tobacco in payment for the same, were refused acceptance and payment, and this suit was instituted for the recovery of the amount of the bills from P. Held, that P. was not liable to pay the bills. [426]

The general rule is that a principal is bound by the act of his agent no further than he authorizes that agent to bind him; but the extent of the power given to an agent is decided as well from facts as from express delegation. In the estimate or application of such facts, the law has regard to public security, and often applies the rule "that he who trusts must pay." So also, collusion with an agent to get a debt paid through the intervention of one in failing circumstances, has been held to make the principal liable on the ground of immoral dealing. [426]

A bill of exchange is the substitute for the actual transmission of money by sea or land. Power, therefore, to draw on a house in good credit, and to throw the bills upon the market, is equivalent to a deposit of cash in the vaults of the agent. There is not the least tittle of evidence in this cause to show that P. meant to use the credit of the drawer of the bills on which the suit is brought, or to authorize him to pledge his credit in anything but the negotiation of the bills. This depended on the confidence which merchants of New Orleans who wished to remit would place in the solvency and integrity of the drawer and drawee; and had no connection whatever with the application of the money thus raised to the purchases ordered by the principal. As to those purchases, the agent was authorized to go no further than to apply the funds deposited with him. [428]

Of the general power to protest the bills of one who has overdrawn there can be no question, for it is the only security which one who gives a power to draw bills and throw them on the market has against the bad faith of his correspondent. He takes the risk of paying the damages, if in fault, or of throwing them on the other if he has actually abused his trust. It is a question between him and his correspondent. [429]

The currency which a merchant may give to bills drawn on him by a correspondent, by payment of such bills, does not deprive him of the security he has a right to by refusing his acceptance of other bills so drawn. [430]

It does not affect the merits of this cause that the original contract was made for a payment in bills. Such was not the negotiation to which P. had limited F.; it was no more between P. and the vendor of the tobacco than a purchase of bills with the cash received for the tobacco. [430]

Peters 3.

THIS was a writ of error to the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

James Armor, a merchant of New Orleans, sued William Parsons, a merchant of Boston, in the Parish Court of New Orleans, by petition, setting forth that in June, 1825, he sold to one Eben Fiske, acting as the agent of Parsons, tobacco to the amount of $17,311.99, in consideration whereof Fiske drew sundry bills of exchange on Parsons, all which were honored and paid, except two, one for $1,443.29, and the other for $4,123.71, which were not accepted or paid, and charging that Parsons owes him the amount of the two bills, viz., $5,567.00. Certain merchants of New Orleans were sued as garnishees of Parsons. The cause was duly removed into the Circuit Court of the United States; and James Armor having failed, he himself and Oakley were appointed syndics of his creditors.

Some objection to the jurisdiction was taken and overruled, and a general answer put in by Parsons denying his liability.

The bills of exchange were dated July 2, 415*] 1825; one was *for $1,443.29, at 60 days; the other, for $4,123.71. The drawing, presentment, and protest of these bills were proved.

When the cause came to be heard, both parties waived the trial by jury, and agreed that the court should decide whether the defendant was responsible to the plaintiffs, upon the facts as they appear disclosed in writing and filed in the case.

The papers filed in the case and brought up with the record contained admissions that, by the laws of Massachusetts, the rate of interest is six per centum per annum, and ten per cent. damages on protested bills of exchange; and that, by the laws of Louisiana, the interest is five per cent. per annum on bills protested from the date of protest, and the like damages of ten per centum.

The depositions and the evidence in the cause were also in the record set out at large. The depositions proved the course and nature of the business carried on by Eben Fiske at New Orleans, and also the particulars of some of the transactions between Mr. Parsons and Mr. Fiske. The deposition of Mr. Fiske states these transactions and their character more fully. The deposition is as follows:

Eben Fiske, a commission merchant in New Orleans in 1825, a witness for plaintiffs, states that in the fall of the year 1821 he commenced transacting business for the defendant, Mr. Parsons, of Boston, in the city of New Orleans, and so continued up to the latter end of the summer of 1825. That during this period, between 1821 up to 1825, witness was the only person transacting business for said William Parsons in the city of New Orleans. That the general course of the transaction between them was, that the said Parsons sent out to New Orleans iron, steel, nails, brads, &c., consigned to witness, which he, witness, would sell as occasion offered, most frequently on credit. That the vessels of said Parsons visited New Orleans every year, when witness, on account

NOTE.—Agency—agents' authority—how far principal bound.

See note to Jones v. Le Tombe, 3 Dall., 385; and note to Bell v. Cunningham, 3 Pet., 69; and note to Clark v. Russell, 3 Dall., 415; and note to Leeds v. Marine Ins. Co., 2 Wheat., 380; and note to Mechanics' Bank of Alexandria v. Bank of Columbia, 5 Wheat., 326.

Instructions from a principal to his agent, which operate as private restrictions upon a general agency, do not affect persons dealing with the agent in ignorance of them. Joanson v. Jones, 4 Barb., 369; Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me., 84; Davenport v. Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co., 17 Iowa, 276; Cross v. Haskins, 13 Vt., 533; Hatch v. Taylor, 10 N. H., 538; Cruzau v. Smith, 41 Ind., 288; Cosgrove v. Ogden, 49 N. Y., 255; S. C. 10 Am. Rep., 361; Bradford v. Bush, 10 Ala., 385; Ezell v. Franklin, 2 Sneed, 236; Hunter v. Jameson, 6 Ired., 252.

Where a written authority is known to exist, it is the duty of a person dealing with an agent to ascertain the extent of the authority; but no such duty exists as to private instructions. Wittington v. Herring, 5 Bing., 442; Munn v. Commission Co., 15 John., 44.

If the written authority apparently authorizes the act, it is no answer to principal's liability that the agent has exceeded his real authority. Bridenbecker v. Lowell, 32 Barb., 9.

But whether the authority conferred upon the agent be verbal or written, the principal will be bound by acts within the apparent authority; and, if the authority is inferred from acts done by the agent, the principal will be bound by such acts as he permits to be done with his knowledge, and without objection on his part, so far as they affect the rights of innocent third persons. Louis & Memphis Packet Co. v. Parker, 59 Ills., 23; Fatman v. Leet, 41 Ind., 133; Kerslake v. Schoonmaker, 3 Thomp. & C. N. Y., 524; 1 Hun., 436; Tucker v. Woolsey, 64 Barb., 142; 6 Laus., 482; Philadelphia R. R. Co. v. Weaver, 34 Md., 431; Bronson & Chapell, 12 Wall., 681; Golding v. Merchant, 43 Ala., 705.

It is a universal rule, based on principles of policy, Peters 3.

propriety and justice, that if a principal puts his agent in a condition to impose on innocent third persons, by apparently pursuing his authority, he shall be bound by his acts. Dunning v. Roberts, 35 Barb., 463, 467; Dodge v. McDonnell, 14 Wis., 553; Garrard v. Haddan, 67 Penn. St., 82; S. C. 5 Am. Rep., 412; VanDuzer v. Howe, 21 N. Y., 531; 31 Barb., 100.

When an agency arises by implication and presumption from the facts and circumstances of the case, the nature and extent of the authority of the agent will be ascertained and limited in the same manner and governed by the same considerations which control in the construction of an express authority which is conferred in general terms. If the agency arises by implication from several previous acts done by the agent, with the tacit consent, or acquiescence, of the principal, such agency will be limited to acts of a like nature. Cox v. Hoffman, 4 Dev. & Bat. (N. C.), 180; Childsey v. Porter, 21 Penn. St., 390; Stringham v. St. Nicholas Ins. Co., 4 Abb. Ct. App., N. Y., 315; 3 Keyes., 240; 1 Trans. App., 334; 5 Abb. N. S., 80; 37 How. Pr., N. Y., 365; Gilbraith v. Linenberger, 69 N. C., 145; Philadelphia R. R. Co. v. Weaver, 34 Md., 431; Commercial Bank of Lake Erie v. Norton, 1 Hill, 501.

If the agency arises from the employment of the agent, in a particular business, it will, in like manner, be limited to that particular business. Salem Bank v. Gloucester Bank, 17 Mass., 1; Kern v. Piper, 4 Warts., 222; Terry v. Fargo, 10 John., 114; Cooley v. Willard, 34 Ill., 69; Hardayne v. Bourne, 7 Mees. & W., 595; Burnmaster v. Norris, 6 Exch., 796.

An implied agency is never construed to extend beyond the obvious purposes for which it is apparently created. Aultman v. Jones, 1 Woolv., 99; Graham v. U. S. Savings Institution, 46 Mo., 186.

There may arise such new and unexpected emergencies and necessities as will justify the agent in assuming extraordinary powers, which, if done in good faith, and with sound discretion, will bind the principal. Lawlor v. Keaquick, 1 Johns. Cas., 175, 179; Judson v. Sturges, 5 Day., 556, 560; Forrester v. Boardman, 1 Story, 43; Loitard v. Graves, of said Parsons, purchased from the merchants of New Orleans tobacco, cotton, logwood, and such articles as Mr. Parsons would request, which were put on board the vessels of said Parsons, and on his account transported to different ports in Europe and America. To put 416 himself in *funds for these purchases so made, witness drew his bills of exchange on said Parsons, of Boston, which had always been duly accepted, and paid up to the month of August, 1825, when the first bill, so drawn by witness on said Parsons, was protested. The purchases so made by witness each year in the business season for the articles required by Mr. Parsons were to a large amount, from fifty thousand to one hundred thousand dollars annually; that accounts current were kept between them, witness and said Parsons; that witness would charge said Parsons with purchases made for him, as well as for the disbursements of his vessels and other expenses and charges, and would credit said Parsons with bills drawn on him from time to time, and the proceeds of nails, iron, steel, &c., as sold. The nature of transactions between witness and said Parsons will appear from the accounts.

In June, 1825, witness purchased on account of said Parsons from James Armor, a merchant of New Orleans, one hundred and eighty hogsheads of tobacco, the net amount of which (after deducting, as customary, one-half of the expenses of cooperage) was $17,311.92, for which witness drew bills of exchange at sixty days' sight on William Parsons at Boston, all of which were paid except two, to wit: one bill for $1,443.29, and the other for $4,13.71, which said two last bills were protested for nonacceptance and nonpayment by the said Parsons. At the time witness went to said Armor to purchase said tobacco, he stated to said Armor that he was about to purchase the same on account of William Parsons, and that he would give bills on the said Parsons. Witness then showed said Armor the letters of said Parsons which refer to the order for purchasing tobacco for loading the Mary and Betsey; witness, on some occasions, would show letters of said Parsons to merchants in New Orleans from whom he was about making purchases, but did not show all said letters.

From the course of business between witness and said Parsons for the several years that he had been transacting business for said Parsons in New Orleans, their business had become generally known in said city; and from the great *number of bills which witness [417] had annually drawn on said Parsons, these bills had gained currency in the market of New Orleans, and he has no doubt that they were received by the several merchants who took them, under the firm conviction that Parsons would accept. At the time the purchase was made from Mr. Armor in 1825, two vessels, the Mary and Betsey, belonging to said Parsons, were lying in the port of New Orleans waiting for cargoes of tobacco which witness had been instructed by said Parsons to purchase for him; witness purchased, in 1824, tobacco from James Armor to William Parsons, and which was paid for by drawing bills on said Parsons by witness, all of which were duly paid by William Parsons. The one hundred and eighty

3 Caines; 226; Williams v. Shackelford, 16 Ala., 318; Gould v. Rich, 7 Met. Mass., 556; Greenleaf v. Moody, 13 Allen, 362.

Principal liable, who ratifies act of agent, with a full knowledge of the facts and circumstances. Kelsay v. National Bank of Crawford, 69 Penn. St., 426; Gulick v. Grover, 33 N. J. L. (4 Vr.), 463; Drakeley v. Gregg, 8 Wall., 242; Vincent v. Rather, 31 Tex., 77; Hawley v. Keeler, 53 N. Y., 114; Pittsburgh R. R. Co. v. Gazzam, 32 Penn. St., 340; Combs v. Scott, 12 Allen, 493; Manning v. Gasbaric, 27 Ind., 399; Humphreys v. Havens, 12 Minn., 298; Miller v. Board of Education, 44 Cal., 166; Smith v. Tracey, 36 N. Y., 79; Lester v. Kinne, 37 Conn., 9.

A principal, who is informed of an unauthorized act of his agent, must give notice of his dissent within a reasonable time, or his assent and ratification will be presumed. Cairnes v. Bleeker, 12 Johns., 300; Jervis v. Hoyt, 2 Hun., 367; S. C., 5 Thomp. & C., 199; Johnson v. Wingate, 29 Me., 404; Clay v. Pratt, 7 Bush. Ky., 334; Farwell v. Howard, 26 Iowa, 381; Law v. Cross, 1 Black, 533; Williams v. Merritt, 23 Ill., 623; Gold Mining Co. v. National Bank, 96 U. S., 6 Otto, 640.

If the principal puts it in the power of his agent to make contracts, or to do acts, apparently within his authority, which will result in injury to innocent third persons or to the principal, the law imposes the loss upon the latter. VanDuzer v. Howe, 21 N. Y., 531; Redick v. Doll, 54 N. Y., 234; Garrard v. Hadden, 67 Penn. St., 82; Hatch v. Taylor, 10 N. H., 538; Carmichael v. Buck, 10 Rich., 332.

Principal liable for torts or offenses of agent committed by or within the scope of the authority of the principal. Del Col v. Arnold, 3 Dail., 333; Am. Fur Co. v. United States, 2 Pet., 358; Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall., 114; Hewett v. Smith, 3 Allen, 420; Herring v. Hoppock, 15 N. Y., 409; U. S. v. Voss, 1 Cranch, C. C., 101; U. S. v. Conner, 1 Cranch, C. C., 102; Hynes v. Jungren, 8 Kans., 391; Jackson v. Second Av. R. R. Co., 47 N. Y., 274.

Principal liable for agent's carelessness or negligence in the performance of his duties and for an abuse of authority. Peck v. N. Y. C. & E. R. Co., 6 Thomp. & C., 436; Garretzen v. Duencel, 50 Mo., 104; Southwick v. Estes, 7 Cush., 385; Philadelphia, &c., R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How., 468; Phila. R. R. Co. v. Phila. S. T. Co., 23 How., 209; Chapman v. N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 33 N. Y., 369; Maudeville v. Cockendofor, 3 Cranch, C. C., 397; Lowe v. Stockton, 4 Cranch, C. C., 537; 31 Barb., 399; May v. Bliss, 22 Vt., 477; Luttrell v. Hazen, 3 Sneed (Tenn.), 20; Brenuan v. Fairhaven, &c., R. R. Co., 45 Ct., 284.

Also for injuries arising from torts of the agent done by principal's directions, or adopted or ratified by him. Morehouse v. Northrop, 33 Conn., 389; Fitzsimmons v. Joslyn, 21 Vt., 129; Byram v. McGuire, 3 Head, 530; Hewett v. Swift, 3 Allen, 420; Herring v. Hoppock, 15 N. Y., 409; Moir v. Hopkins, 16 Ill., 313; Hynes v. Jungren, 8 Kans., 391; Jackson v. Second Avenue R. R. Co., 47 N. Y., 274; 7 Am. Rep., 448; Wallace v. Morgan, 23 Ind., 599; Maddux v. Bevan, 39 Md., 485.

Also, for frauds of agent, committed in the course of his employment. Hunter v. Hudson River Iron Co., 20 Barb., 493, 507; Udell v. Atherton, 7 Exch., 172; Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 13 Wend., 518; Durst v. Burton, 47 N. Y., 167; 7 Am. Rep., 428; Locke v. Stearns, 1 Met. Mass., 560; Madison R. R. v. Norwich, 24 Ind., 457; Tome v. Parkersburg R. R. Co., 39 Md., 36; Veazie v. Williams, 8 How., 134.

But not for willful tort of agent, not authorized or ratified by principal. VanDabitt v. Richmond Turnpike Co., 2 N. Y., 2 Comst., 479; 1 Hill, 480; Tuller v. Voght, 13 Ill., 277; Cantrell v. Colwell, 3 Head, 471.

But the fact that the agent acts illegally, or with force, does not exonerate the principal, where the authority is implied, or is incident to his position. Hoffman v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y., 25.

In the absence of a finding or proof that the authority was exercised as a mere cover for accomplishing an independent and wrongful purpose of his own, the principal is liable, although the act was reckless and illegal, and a breach of duty. Hoffman v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y., 25; Higgins v. Watervliet Turnpike Co., 46 N. Y., 23; Rounds v. Del. L. & W. R. R. Co., 64 N. Y., 129; Cohen v. Dry-Dock, &c., Co., 69 N. Y., 170; Limpus v. General Omnibus Co., 1 Hurl. & C., 528; Shea v. Sixth Av. R. Co., 62 N. Y., 180.

hogsheads of tobacco referred to were, after they were so purchased from James Armor, shipped on William Parsons' account on board his vessels aforesaid to Europe. At the time, in August, 1825, when William Parsons began to protest the bills of witness, he, witness, had on hand a quantity of steel belonging to said Parsons unsold, and had also sold iron, nails, &c., to a considerable amount, which was not then due, and which could not be applied to the purchases.

In the balance of $11,631.23 against witness, as per account current in November, 1824, were included some of witness's exchange on Mr. Parsons, as witness had overdrawn the amount of purchases, having sustained a very heavy loss by the failure of A. Fiske in 1822.

In the season of 1825, the purchases of witness for Mr. Parsons, and the disbursements of his vessels, and the amount of drafts drawn after the rendition of accounts in November, 1824, up to the close of operations in purchasing and drawing in 1825, will appear from correspondence and accounts. The amount of bills drawn in 1825, and which were protested by Mr. Parsons, was about $39,137.79; witness, from his declarations and the course of his business, must have been known as acting for Mr. Parsons in these purchases of the merchants of New Orleans. The vessels of Mr. Parsons had left the port of Orleans previous to any *intelligence having been received at New Orleans of his protesting witness's bills.

Witness states that when he made purchases, the bills of parcels were made out in witness's own name, and the accounts assured in the books of the different merchants in his name; that this is the usual manner in which bills of parcels are made out, and accounts kept in New Orleans, although it may be well known between the parties that the merchant who sells is selling the property of others on commission, and that he who buys is buying as the agent of another.

Witness had been instructed, as appears by the letters of Mr. Parsons, to resell any tobacco not suited to the market to which Mr. P. was shipping, when, in purchasing a lot, he, witness, should be obliged to take some of such quality; witness did accordingly resell a few hogsheads, which had been principally purchased from Bedford, Bredlove & Robeson. Captain Mayo was then here with the Mary. Witness, by his letters of the 1st of July, 1825, informed Mr. Parsons that he had purchased one hundred and forty hogsheads which were stowed on the 7th of the same month, previous to which the tobacco had been weighed, and found to be only one hundred and thirty-two hogsheads. No reference was made to that of the 1st of July, as witness wrote in haste, being about dispatching the Betsey and Mary. The information of Captain Mayo, as given to Mr. Parsons, as appears from Mr. Parsons' letters, that he, witness, was selling tobacco to the extent it was construed by Mr. Parsons, as he states in his letters, was incorrect, as witness had only resold as before stated.

Cross-examined: Fiske was a commission merchant in New Orleans, and was the correspondent of Parsons, from whom he received goods on consignment for sale, and transacted Peters 3.

his business exclusively in New Orleans, from the year 1821, to the month of July, 1825; and in all purchases made by Fiske for Parsons, he, Fiske, received the accounts and transacted the business in his own name, and never signed his name as agent for Parsons. EBEN FISKE.

*The whole correspondence between [*419 Mr. Parsons and Eben Fiske was set forth at large in the record, commencing on the 19th of October, 1821, and terminating on the 19th of November, 1825.

The first letter from the plaintiff in error to Eben Fiske was dated October 1, 1821; and the letter under the authority in which their transactions commenced, was dated October 19, 1821. Those letters were as follows:

BOSTON, October 1st, 1821.

MR. EBEN FISKE,

Sir: I am sorry at any time, especially at the commencement of a correspondence with you, to request a favor which you may think unpleasant, but hope you may be induced to comply with. My request is that you would call on Messrs. William and Nathaniel Wyer, for advice respecting a balance I have in their hands, but at my risk. - You have above a copy of part of their letter to me, dated 27th February, 1819; from that to the present day, I have not been able to get any reply from them to my letters on that subject. I wish you to call on them for an explanation; if they have received the money, please to receive it from them; if they have not, presuming you must know the person who purchased the steel, you can determine if it can ever be collected. I wish you to pursue such measures to have the debt collected as if it was your own.

I inclose you a letter for Messrs. Wyer: after reading, please to seal and hand it to them.

I am, very respectfully, your humble servant,
WILLIAM PARSONS.

BOSTON, October 19th, 1821.

MR. EBEN FISKE,

Sir: I am sorry I had not the pleasure of a personal interview with you when you were in Boston. I received your letter. I have concluded to send the brig Betsey, John Virgin, master, for New Orleans. She will probably sail next week; if you can purchase one hundred and fifty hogsheads of very good old tobacco, should there be any at market, one hundred *bales of clean white Tennessee or Ala- [*420 bama cotton, and to fill up with good Campeachy logwood; the tobacco not to cost more than 4 or 4½ dollars, the logwood from $18 to $22; if higher than that, take only as much as will stow in breakage, and fill up with tobacco and cotton, one-half each. If these articles can be procured, I wish it done at once; if the tobacco cannot be procured by the brig, I will give Captain Virgin instructions to communicate to you what to load the vessel with. You will please draw on me for the funds to pay for the cargo.

I am, &c.,

WILLIAM PARSONS.

October 20th. You will please to supply Captain Virgin with his adventure, and take his draft on me for the amount, say ten or twelve hundred dollars, which shall be duly honored, or charge me with the amount in account; also furnish Captain Virgin with the adventures for some others, and charge to account as above.

I am, respectfully, your humble servant,
WILLIAM PARSONS.

On the 9th of June and on the 8th of August, 1825, the plaintiff in error wrote to Eben Fiske, as follows:

BOSTON, June 9, 1825.

MR. EBEN FISKE,

Dear Sir: I have your favors of the 30th of April and 5th of May. I wish that your opinion may prove correct, and that tobacco may be at such a price that you may be able to load the Mary and Betsey. The Mary, from my letters to Captain Mayo and yourself, I think you will load, but fear the market in Gibraltar will not rise in proportion. From my last accounts, Mr. Spragne was selling at $7.50 per cwt. The article in Gottenburg, late in April, was very dull, and had risen but a very trifle. If the Betsey cannot be loaded for Gottenburg, get a freight for her for New York or Boston, or any northern port. Apply all the funds you have, and which you say will be convenient 421] for you to *invest, to load the Mary. It will not answer to purchase for the Gibraltar and Gottenburg markets for another voyage, to stand at a higher rate than my limits. You may possibly be able to purchase two hundred hogsheads of very fine, not to go higher than 6½ cents. By purchasing late, you will be able to apply the proceeds of nails sold, which will then be done. As you have given me assurances that you will apply all my funds in your hands at that period, I cannot have any doubt on the subject.

The Betsey is insured in this city. The papers must be clear and regular, to recover from the underwriters. I inclose a letter for Captain Wallis, should he be with you, in conformity with what I write you. Your draft of the 6th of April to John Clark, sixty days, for $372.18, without advice, has been paid.

I am, respectfully, your humble servant,
WILLIAM PARSONS.

BOSTON, August 8, 1825.

MR. EBEN FISKE,

Dear Sir: I wrote you on the 26th of July and 4th instant. I now inclose you an abstract of my account with you. From my letters to you the past season, you will readily perceive my determination to have my account settled with you this season. The payment for the one hundred and thirty-two hogsheads of tobacco you purchased to ship to Boston I shall not accept for until I receive it myself, or by my agents. If, from any cause, it should not be shipped before you receive this, I request you to deliver it to Messrs. Howard & Merry; also any nails or steel you may have unsold, or the notes received for any nails or steel which are not paid for; also, Mrs. Richards' note, a bad debt, for $673.23. Their receipt shall be evidence for me to pay any balance that may be done on settlement of the account. Your drafts not come to hand to a larger amount than the last of the one hundred and thirty-two hogsheads of tobacco, will give you time to comply with the foregoing requisition from me.

I am, respectfully, your humble servant,
WILLIAM PARSONS.

*The letter advising of the drafts, [422 which were the subject of the suit, was this following:

NEW ORLEANS, 2d of July, 1825.

WILLIAM PARSONS, Esq.,

Sir: I have drawn on you this date for three drafts, as follows, favor John Clark:

No. 42, for $4,123.71, 60 days, three per cent. discount, net $4,000.

No. 43, for $1,443.29, 60 days, three per cent. discount, net $1,400.

No. 44, for $1,631.75, 60 days, three per cent. discount, net $1,583.

The above are in place of exchange, advised under dates of yesterday, of the same numbers, and which, by mistake, were drawn for the net amount, instead of the gross. The same are destroyed.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

EBEN FISKE.

Judgment was given for the plaintiffs in the Circuit Court, whereupon the defendant brought this writ of error.

Such of the facts and correspondence as were considered important, and which have been omitted in this statement, are referred to in the opinion of the court.

The errors assigned were:

1. Fiske was not the agent of Parsons, nor was he authorized to purchase on Parsons' account.

2. The merchandise was not, in fact, sold on the credit of Parsons, but on the credit of Fiske, or on the belief that Parsons would accept his bills.

3. The facts and correspondence do not show that Parsons was bound to accept the bills.

Mr. Livingston and Mr. Webster, for the plaintiff in error, after an examination of the facts of the case, contended that the principle upon which the court below had proceeded, would make Parsons liable for all the bills drawn by Fiske in the course of his business in New Orleans. The *real nature of the [423 transactions between Fiske and the plaintiff were fully shown by the testimony of Fiske. It was a dealing between a factor and his principal, the principal being abroad and not known. In such a case the factor alone is liable. (Paley on Agency, 257; 1 Bos. & Pnll., 363; 3 Bos. & Pnll., 489; Buller's Nisi Prius, 130; 4 Tannt. Rep., 574.)

It is agreed that Armor can only make Parsons liable as a purchaser of the property. (2 Livermore, 199.) If Fiske was the purchaser, Parsons was not liable.

Parsons could only be liable on one of two grounds: either that the original credit was given to him, or that Fiske was authorized to draw on him for the purchases specifically. These are not supported by the evidence.

An authority to draw gives a right to the holder of the bill as holder, not to the vendor of the goods as vendor, in payment of which the bill was given. Suppose Fiske had drawn two bills, one for the payment of the goods, the other for his own use. The refusal of Parsons to accept the bills would have made him liable to Fiske only.

The case of Coolidge v. Payson (2 Wheat., 66), decides that the drawer is liable to pay a bill after a particular promise to accept it. (Cited also, Shimmelpennich v. Bayard, 1 Peters, 264).

Peters 3.

The doctrine contended for, on the part of the plaintiff below, would render Parsons liable both to the vendor and to Fiske. To Fiske, by non-acceptance of the bill; to the vendor, for the goods. If both can recover there would be two concurrent creditors for the same debt, which is impossible, according to the cases cited. (15 East, 64.)

The case is, then, one of factor and principal abroad; and the case in Taunton shows that the situation of the foreign principal is not altered, whether or not the goods came to his hands.

There is nothing in the correspondence which will authorize the assertion that there was a general direction to buy the particular property on bills. It is said Fiske was the general agent; we say he was the factor.

Mr. Jones, for the defendant, argued that 424 there was evidence *in the case sufficient to show that Fiske was the agent and Parsons the principal in the transactions out of which the claims arose, and that Fiske had power to draw the bills.

A commission merchant may not be an agent, but their characters are perfectly consistent; and in the case before the court, the articles were not purchased on account of the agent, but for Parsons. If one is in the habit of purchasing for another, as Fiske was in this case, and so acting for four years, this is evidence of agency in the absence of proof to show that it had ceased. Though the agent should exceed his private instructions, it would not affect those who deal with him as agent, or impair their claims on the principal.

In this case there is no complaint that the instructions were exceeded; the reason for not paying the bills was not this, but that a balance was due from the agent to the principal, and that he should have paid for the purchases out of funds in his own hands.

He had authorized Fiske to draw, without regard to the balance due to him.

Mr. Justice JOHNSON delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause is brought up by writ of error from the District Court of Louisiana District, exercising Circuit Court jurisdiction, in a suit in which the cause of action was in the nature of a quantum valebat, for a quantity of tobacco sold; but according to the practice of that court, the suit was prosecuted in the forms of the civil law, and the judgment rendered by the court, the parties having waived the trial by jury. The record consists of the petition, the answer, the whole testimony, as well depositions as documents, introduced by either party, and the fiat of the judge that Armor, the plaintiff below, recover the debt as demanded.

In the argument, counsel considered the cause as in nature of a case stated, that is, a substitute for a special verdict; but this court could not avoid noticing that the precedent might involve it in the necessity of exercising jurisdiction over cases of a very different character. This writ of error does not bring up a 425 mere statement of facts, but a *mass of testimony, and however consistent and reconcilable the testimony may be in this case, it may be very different in future causes coming up from the same quarter, and by means of the same process.

Peters 3.

The difficulty is to decide under what character we shall consider the present reference to the revising power of this court. If treated strictly as a writ of error, it is certainly not an attribute of that writ, according to common law doctrine, to submit the testimony as well as the law of the case to the revision of this court; and then there is no mode in which we could treat the case but in the nature of a bill of exceptions; that is, to confine ourselves entirely to the question, whether, giving the utmost force to the testimony in favor of the party in possession of the judgment below, he was legally entitled to a judgment. But this would often lead this court to decide upon a case widely different from that acted upon in the court below. There may be conflicting testimony and questions of credibility in the cause which this court would be compelled to pass by. This would be increasing appellate jurisdiction on principles very different from the received opinions and judicial habits of that state; and, it has been argued, equally inconsistent with the rights extended to them by Congress.

We feel no difficulty from the bearing of the seventh amendment of the Constitution in this case, because if this be a suit at common law in the sense of the amendment, the object was to secure a right to the individual, and that right has been tendered to him and declined. The words of the amendment are, "the right to the trial by jury shall be preserved." Nor are we at liberty to treat this as an appeal in a cause of equity jurisdiction under the Act of 1803, because the party has not brought up his cause by appeal, but by a writ of error.

The present case is one which may be treated as a bill of exceptions, or a case submitted; since, giving the utmost force to the testimony in favor of Armor, we are of opinion that the judgment must be reversed. We shall proceed, therefore, to examine the merits upon that principle, without *committing ourselves [426 either upon the extent of the appellate power of this court over that of Louisiana, or the appropriate means of exercising it.

The merits of this case may be comprised within the following state of facts:

Parsons was a merchant and considerable ship owner, established in Boston, and in the habit of trading to New Orleans. Eben Fiske was a commission merchant, established in New Orleans, with whom Parsons opened a correspondence on the 1st of October, 1821, with a commission to call upon his previous correspondents, W. & N. Wyer, for a balance supposed to be in their hands. The transactions in the course of which the purchase was made which constitutes the present cause of action, commenced with the letter of the 19th of October, 1821, the tenor of which furnishes the true exposition of the nature and extent of the mandatory power under which Fiske acted for Parsons. The material passages are these:

"I have concluded to send the brig Betsey, John Virgin, master, for New Orleans. She will probably sail next week. If you can purchase one hundred and fifty hogsheds of very good tobacco, should there be any at market, &c. If these articles can be procured, I wish it done at once, &c. You will please draw on me for the funds to pay for the cargo."

The examination of Fiske furnishes these further explanations of the relation in which he acted with regard to Parsons. In the latter part of his deposition he says, "he was the correspondent of Parsons, from whom he received goods on consignment, and transacted his business exclusively in New Orleans from the year 1821 to July, 1825; and in all purchases by him for Parsons, received the accounts and transacted the business in his own name, and never signed his name as agent for Parsons;" and, further, "that when he made purchases, the bills of parcels were made out in his (Fiske's) name, and the accounts assured in the books of the different merchants in his name." And in the commencement of his deposition, he says "that the general course of the transactions between them was, that the said Parsons sent out to New Orleans, iron, steel, &c., consigned 427*] *to witness, which he would sell as occasion offered, most frequently on credit. That the vessels of the said Parsons visited New Orleans every year; when witness, on account of said Parsons, purchased from the merchants of New Orleans, tobacco, cotton, &c., and such articles as Parsons would request, which were put on board of Parsons' vessels, and on his account transported to different ports of Europe and America. To put himself in funds for these purchases so made, witness drew his bills of exchange on said Parsons, which had always been duly accepted and paid until August, 1825. That witness would charge said Parsons with purchases made for him, as well as for the disbursements of his vessels and other expenses and charges, and would credit said Parsons with bills drawn on him from time to time, and the proceeds of nails, iron, steel, &c., as sold," and then refers generally to the accounts annexed to the deposition for further explanations on the nature of their dealings.

By reference to these accounts, it appears that the bills were disposed of generally at market as opportunity offered; and that he never acted under the idea of being restricted to the drawing of bills to pay the vendor in that mode, specifically for each purchase.

With regard to the particular purchase under consideration, Fiske swears that the payment in bills made a part of the contract, and that the bills drawn were all paid except two, making up the balance here sued for. And it has been thought to have some influence upon the merits of plaintiff's demand, that at the time of this purchase, Fiske stated to Armor that he was about to purchase on account of Parsons, and showed him the letters of Parsons which refer to the order to purchase tobacco for loading the Mary and Betsey, for which object this purchase was made. How far the case of the plaintiffs below can be aided by those letters will presently be seen.

The simple question under this state of facts is, was Parsons chargeable to Armor as vendor of this parcel of tobacco? This must be decided either upon the general *powers vested in Fiske, or the particular circumstances of this purchase.

The general rule is, that a principal is bound by the act of his agent no farther than he authorizes that agent to bind him; but the extent of the power given to an agent is deducible as well from facts as from express delegation. In the estimate or application of such facts, the law has regard to public security, and often applies the rule, that "he who trusts must pay." So, also, collusion with an agent to get a debt paid through the intervention of one in failing circumstances, has been held to make the principal chargeable on the ground of immoral dealing. To one or other of these heads all the cases are reducible; and into one or other of these classes it is necessary to bring the present case, or Parsons is not chargeable.

It has been argued that Fiske was the general agent of Parsons, for the purchase of cargoes to load his vessels, and as such had power to bind him as original vendee to this plaintiff. That he possessed a general power to draw bills in payment for such cargoes, and was either bound to accept such bills, or become bound by colluding to create a credit to Fiske, which exposed the community to imposition.

But all this argument turns upon a misapprehension of the nature of the transactions between Parsons and Fiske.

Everyone knows that a bill of exchange is the substitute for the actual transmission of money by sea or land. Power, therefore, to draw upon a house in good credit, and to throw those bills upon the market, is equivalent to a deposit of cash in the vaults of the agent. There is not the least tittle of evidence in the cause to show that Parsons meant to use the credit of Fiske, or to authorize him to pledge the credit of Parsons in anything but the negotiation of bills. This depended on the confidence which merchants who wished to remit from New Orleans would place in the solvency and integrity of the drawer and drawee, and had no connection whatever with the application of the money thus raised to the purchases ordered by the principal. As to those purchases, the agent was authorized to go no farther than to *apply the funds deposited with him. [429 And the case is reduced to the plain and simple rule to be found everywhere, from the time of Shower and Lord Holt down, "that if I give my servant money to purchase for me, and he use it, and purchase on credit, I am not bound, though the article come in fact to my use."

There are few, if any cases, to be found in modern English books on this subject; for the plain reason that the nature and effects of such a commission or employment are too well understood in that country to have admitted of litigation. All the cases which have arisen there of a recent date, except where the ground of collusion has been resorted to, are cases of purchases on credit. Such are those of Addison and Gandasequi, and some others that have been quoted. The case of Wilson v. Hart (7 Taunt., 295) was a case of collusion.

If, in the present case, Parsons were chargeable with any unfair dealing, or the practice of uncandid or collusive means of saving the balance for which it appears Fiske had overdrawn, it cannot be questioned that he is chargeable. But on this part of the case two considerations are important, the first of which relates to the amount of the bills which Parsons refused to accept, and the second, the particular notice communicated to Armor of the object and limits of Fiske's power to draw.

Of the general power to protest the bills of one who has overdrawn there can be no question, for it is the only security which one who gives a power to draw bills and throw them on the market, or perhaps to draw at all, has against the bad faith of his correspondent. On this subject he takes the risk of paying the damages, if in fault, or of throwing them on the other, if he has actually abused his trust. It is a question between him and his correspondent.

It is true that in this case the amount protested appears to have gone far beyond the balance acknowledged by Fiske. But then Fiske held a large quantity of tobacco in store, which Parsons might very well suppose would not be given up to his order after protest of the bills, and in refusing payment to such an amount may have had in view an indemnity 430 against this further loss—a loss which actually was incurred, so that in this he is not chargeable with mala fides.

The second consideration is equally important in its bearing upon this part of the case.

Parsons, in his correspondence, alleges as his justification for refusing acceptance, that he had limited Fiske in his purchases for the Mary and Betsey; to the application of the funds in his hands. The balance due on general account by a correspondent is, in mercantile language, a fund in his hands; and so the correspondence shows that it was understood to be in this instance. Fiske swears that, at the time of the purchase from Armor, he showed Armor the letters from Parsons, on the subject of the purchase of the cargo for the Mary and Betsey, and by referring to the letters of the 9th of June and 5th of July, 1825, which must be here meant, we find both expressly referring to the application of "funds in hand," and the latter intimating that the whole purchase will scarcely absorb "all the funds in hand."

So direct an intimation that the purchase of these cargoes was to balance the accounts between them, removes all ground for imputing collusion to parties.

As to the currency given to these bills by the regular acceptance and payment of them up to the date of the bills: if this is to deprive a merchant of the only check he has for his security, by preventing him from ever refusing his acceptance, credit would become a misfortune.

Nor does it affect the merits of this cause that the original contract was made for a payment in bills. Such was not the negotiation to which Parsons had limited Fiske; it was no more, as between Parsons and Armor, than a purchase of bills with the cash received for the tobacco; and a purchase against which Armor was not without a warning, furnished by the letters which Fiske, his own witness, swears he submitted to Armor, prior to the negotiation. It was creating new funds for a purchase, not purchasing with the funds already created, or in the hands of Fiske.

Judgment reversed.

Cited—7 Pet., 423, 451; 16 Pet., 176; 5 How., 290; 7 How., 866; 12 Wall., 281; Gilp., 270; 1 Biss., 197; 2 McLean, 464.
Peters 3.

*THE BANK OF THE COMMON-WEALTH OF KENTUCKY,

v.

WISTAR, PRICE, AND WISTAR.

Interest on judgment—clerical error—practice.

Where the clerk of the court had omitted to enter the judgment of this court, allowing to the defendant in error, on the affirmance of the judgment of the Circuit Court, interest at the rate of six per centum per annum as damages, and the mandate of this court, although issued, had not been presented to the Circuit Court; the court ordered the judgment to be reformed, allowing interest at the rate of six per cent. The omission is a mere clerical error.

It is a rule of this court that where there are no special circumstances, six per cent. interest is allowed upon the amount of the judgment, in the court below. Under special circumstances, damages to the amount of ten per cent. are allowed. [432]

MR. VINTON moved to amend the judgment of this court rendered in this cause at the January Term of 1829 (2 Peters, 318); by giving to the defendants in error damages on the judgment at the rate of six per centum per annum, and that the judgment of the court be so reformed.

Mr. Vinton stated that the mandate, though issued, had never been presented to the Circuit Court, and it was now in this court. Under these circumstances, and as the omission was a mere clerical error, he hoped the motion would prevail.

Mr. Bibb, for the plaintiffs in error, objected to the amendment being made, as the whole subject was res adjudicata at the last term, and was not now to be opened. The mandate is a solemn act of the court; it passes under the view of the court, and is the proceeding of the court. The omission it is asked to correct was not a clerical misprision. If, in the course of adjudication in this court, an act of Congress should not have been adverted to, would the court, at a subsequent term, open their judgment to correct the error which existed from their disregard of the act? The rules of court are not of higher sanction, and if in the issuing of the mandate that rule which allows interest has not been applied, the court will not go back to reform what has passed into [*432] judgment. Such a proceeding would expose the court and suitors to great inconvenience, and be productive of frequent injustice.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

In the case of the motion to amend the mandate, the court directs the amendment to be made, and the judgment of the court to be reformed, allowing interest at the rate of six per cent. The reason is, that by a rule of this court, when there are no special circumstances, six per cent. interest is allowed upon the amount of the judgment in the court below; under special circumstances, damages to the amount of ten per cent. are awarded by the court. The omission is deemed by this court a mere clerical error.

On consideration of the motion made by Mr. Vinton, of counsel for the defendants in error, in this cause, on a prior day of this term, to amend the judgment of this court rendered in this cause at the January Term of this court in the year of our Lord 1829, to wit: on the 14th day of February of the said last-mentioned year, by giving to the defendants in error in said cause on said judgment damages at the rate of six per centum per annum, it is ordered and adjudged by this court that the said judgment of this court of February 14, A. D. 1829, be reformed by the amendment of damages at the rate of six per centum per annum, so that the judgment read thus: "It is adjudged and ordered by this court that the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this case be, and the same is hereby affirmed, with costs and damages at the rate of six per centum per annum.

See S. C., 2 Pet., 318.

433*] *WILLIAM PARSONS, Plaintiff in Error,
v.

BEDFORD, BREEDLOVE & ROBESON, Defendants.

Practice in Louisiana courts—how far adopted in federal courts in that State—trial by jury—Constitution of United States—Act of Congress of 1824.

This action was instituted in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana, according to the forms of proceedings adopted and practiced in the courts of that State. The cause was tried by a special jury, and a verdict was rendered for the plaintiff. On the trial, the counsel for the defendant moved the court to direct the clerk of the court to take down in writing the testimony of the witnesses examined in the cause, that the same might appear on record: such being the practice of the State courts of Louisiana; and which practice the counsel for the defendant insisted was to prevail in the courts of the United States, according to the Act of Congress of the 26th of May, 1824; which provides that the mode of proceeding in civil causes, in the courts of the United States established in Louisiana, shall be conformable to the laws directing the practice in the District Court of the State, subject to such alterations as the judges of the courts of the United States should establish by rules. The court refused to make the order, or to permit the testimony to be put down in writing; the judge expressing the opinion that the courts of the United States are not governed by the practice of the courts of the State of Louisiana. The defendant moved for a new trial, and the motion being overruled and judgment entered for the plaintiff on the verdict, the defendant brought a writ of error to this court.

Under the laws of Louisiana, on the trial of a cause before a jury, if either party desires it, the verbal evidence is to be taken down in writing by the clerk, to be sent to the Supreme Court, to serve as a statement of facts in case of appeal; and the written evidence produced on the trial is to be filed with the proceedings. This is done to enable the appellate court to exercise the power of granting a new trial, and of revising the judgment of the inferior court. Held, that the refusal of the judge of the District Court of the United States to permit the evidence to be put in writing, could not be assigned for error in this court, the cause having been tried in the court below and a verdict given on the facts by a jury; if the same had been put in writing, and been sent up to this court with the record, this court, proceeding under the Constitution of the United States and of the amendment thereto which declares, "no fact once tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examinable in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law," is not competent to redress any error by granting a new trial.

The proviso in the Act of Congress of the 26th of May, 1824, ch. 181, demonstrates that it was not the intention of Congress to give an absolute and imperative force to the State modes of proceeding in civil causes in Louisiana in the courts of the United States; for it authorizes the judge to modify them so as to adapt them to the organization of his own courts; and it further demonstrates that no absolute repeal was intended of the antecedent modes of proceeding authorized in the United States courts under former Acts of Congress; for it leaves the judge at liberty to make rules, by [*434] which discrepancy between the State laws and the laws of the United States may be avoided. [444]

The Act of Congress having made the practice of the State courts the rule for the courts of the United States in Louisiana, the District Court of the United States in that district is bound to follow the practice of the State, unless that court had adopted a rule superseding the practice. [445]

Generally speaking, matters of practice in inferior courts do not constitute subjects upon which error can be assigned in the appellate court. [445]

The trial by jury is justly dear to the American people. It has always been an object of deep interest and solicitude, and every encroachment upon it has been watched with great jealousy. The right to such a trial is, it is believed, incorporated into, and secured in every State constitution in the Union. [446]

By "common law," the framers of the Constitution of the United States meant what the Constitution denominated in the third article, "law;" not merely suits which the common law recognized among its old and settled proceedings, but suits in which legal rights were to be ascertained and determined, in contradistinction to those where equitable rights alone were regarded, and equitable remedies were administered; or where, as in the admiralty, a mixture of public law and of maritime law and equity was often found in the same suit. [447]

The amendment to the Constitution of the United States, by which the trial by jury was secured, may, in a just sense, be well construed to embrace all suits which are not of equity or admiralty jurisdiction, whatever may be the peculiar form which they may assume to settle legal rights. [447]

It was not the intention of Congress, by the general language of the Act of 1824, to alter the appellate jurisdiction of this court, and to confer on it the power of granting a new trial by a re-examination of the facts tried by a jury; and to enable it, after trial by jury, to do that in respect to the courts of the United States sitting in Louisiana which is denied to such courts sitting in all the other States of the Union. [447]

No court ought, unless the terms of an Act of Congress render it unavoidable, to give a construction to the act which should, however unintentional, involve a violation of the Constitution. The terms of the Act of 1824 may well be satisfied by limiting its operation to modes of practice and proceeding in the courts below, without changing the effect or conclusiveness of the verdict of a jury upon the facts litigated on the trial. The party may bring the facts into review before the appellate court, so far as they bear upon questions of law, by a bill of exceptions. If there be any mistake of the facts, the court below is competent to redress it by granting a new trial. [447]

ERROR to the Eastern District of Louisiana.

This suit was originally brought in the Parish Court of New Orleans by the defendants in error, by a petition for an attachment against the property of the defendant in the suit; and was removed into the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana, the defendant being a citizen of the State of Massachusetts.

The object of the suit was the recovery of the amount of certain sales of tobacco made by the plaintiffs to a certain *Eben Fiske [*435] represented in the petition to be the agent and factor of the defendant; and for which he drew bills of exchange on the defendant, and which bills were refused acceptance and payment. After an answer had been filed, the case was submitted to a special jury, and a verdict was rendered for the plaintiffs for $6,414.

Peters 3.

The proceedings in the case were instituted and conducted according to the laws of Louisiana, which conform in a great degree to the principles and practice of the civil law.

On the trial the plaintiffs produced the bills of exchange mentioned in the petition, and many letters written by the defendant to Fiske. The defendant introduced, as testimony, other letters written as above; and also the record of a suit brought by the plaintiffs against Fiske, on the same bills, in which they charge, on oath, that the sale was made to Fiske, and that he was their debtor; all which written testimony was, according to the practice of the State courts, filed in court, and forms part of the record.

The plaintiffs also produced Fiske as a witness, to prove that he acted only as agent for the defendant, and to make him a witness, gave a full release of all claims on him. He was objected to; but the court overruled the objection and a bill of exceptions was tendered and signed.

By the twelfth section of an Act of the General Assembly of Louisiana, passed the 20th of July, 1817, entitled, "An Act to amend the several acts passed to organize the Court of the State, and for other purposes," it is among other things enacted, "that when any cause shall be submitted to a jury to be tried, the verbal evidence shall, in all cases where an appeal lies to the Supreme Court, if either party require it, and at the time when the witnesses shall be examined, be taken down in writing by the clerk of the court, in order to be sent up to the Supreme Court, to serve as a statement of facts in case of appeal, and the written evidence produced by both parties shall be filed with the proceedings."

By a law of the United States, passed the 26th of May, 1824, the mode of practice pursued in the State courts is directed to be followed in the courts of the United States in Louisiana.

436*] Under the provisions of these laws, the defendant applied to the court to direct the clerk to take down the verbal proof offered in the cause, or to suffer his counsel, the counsel of the plaintiffs, or the witnesses, to take it down, which the judge refused to do; whereupon a bill of exceptions was tendered and signed.

A motion was made for a new trial, which was overruled, and a judgment was entered for the amount of the verdict. This writ of error was then prosecuted.

The plaintiff in error contended:

1. That from the facts apparent on the record, the plaintiffs had no right of action against the defendant, and that, therefore, this court will decree a judgment to be entered in favor of the defendant.

2. The court will, at least, reverse this judgment, and award a new trial, for one or all of the following reasons:

1. Because the court refused the evidence to be put upon the record.

2. Because the whole question was a question of law, and the decision was against law.

3. It is not, strictly, a common law proceeding, but a proceeding under the peculiar system of Louisiana; and, according to that system, the court has power to reverse the judgment.

ment, under circumstances which would not give it that power when the trial had been according to the common law.

The case was argued by Mr. Livingston and Mr. Webster for the plaintiff in error, and by Mr. Jones for the defendants.

Mr. Livingston and Mr. Webster, for the plaintiff in error:

The law of Louisiana of July, 1817, directs that in all jury trials the verbal evidence shall be reduced to writing and put on record. The law of Congress of the 6th of May, 1824, directs that the practice in the courts of the United States in the State of Louisiana shall be according to the rules of practice in the State courts. Before the law of the United States of 1803, all causes came up to this court by writ of error. Under the authority of this law, cases of admiralty and of equity jurisdiction came up by appeal, and *all cases not embraced by the provisions of the law are yet brought up by writ of error.

The Constitution of the United States says, "all controversies" between citizens of different States may come to this court; and by the provisions of the law of 1789, the removal of such cases is to take place when the matter in dispute amounts to two thousand dollars. That law requires a statement of the evidence in appeals and in matters of admiralty jurisdiction. It cannot be supposed that there was any intention to exclude cases such as the present from the jurisdiction of this court. It has been the practice for twenty years, ever since the organization of the courts of the United States in the State of Louisiana, to bring cases up from that district.

The proceedings in the courts of Louisiana, are by petition and answer. To introduce the practice of the common law into any of the courts established in that State, would be against the feelings and wishes of the whole people of the State. The judges of the courts of the United States have adopted the practice of the courts of the State. The position of anyone who should come from a State where the common law is not known, as from Louisiana, and who should be required to argue a cause on the common law alone, in this court, would be extraordinary.

The twenty-second section of the judiciary law of 1789 says the Supreme Court shall not reverse a judgment for error in fact. But it is claimed that the seventh amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that "no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law," was not intended to take away a remedy which was secured by a law of the State of Louisiana, and which law is in force in the courts of the United States, under the provisions of the Act of Congress of 1824.

This case cannot come within the amendment. It is a case not comprehended by it, nor can it have any application to it. The amendment was adopted when all the proceedings in the courts of the United States and in the courts of the different States, were under *the common law; and the plaintiff in this case has a complete remedy, independent of the amendment. It was intended to guard the rights of citizens, proceeding according to the common law, and it only provides that the decisions of juries shall not be set aside except according to the common law. How did it apply or operate in a State where there is no common law, where the forms of proceeding under the common law are not known or permitted? Where terms are used which embrace the case, and justice requires it, the law must be construed to embrace it. A constitutional law of the United States gives the relief the plaintiff asks in this case: the amendment of the Constitution referred to does not take it away.

There is a rule of the common law, the effect of which gives the same remedy as to parties as that which is required here; and in this case the equivalent remedy would have been furnished, had the court directed the clerk to take down in writing the testimony given in this cause. By the common law practice, all evidence may be stated under a bill of exceptions, or the judge may be called upon to charge on the law and facts; the facts being stated from which the law is supposed to arise. The proceedings in the courts of Louisiana are substituted for these common law proceedings. They should have the same estimate, and be treated in the higher court in the same manner as a bill of exceptions. It is admitted that in the court below the case must proceed according to the State laws: those laws say the evidence shall be put in writing by the clerk. The refusal to permit the clerk to do this was certainly error.

If the laws of the State are not to be the guide, we had better have no right of appeal from the courts of Louisiana to this court. If those laws do not furnish rules of proceeding, we have no appeals in cases where appeals may come from other States. Because, in the courts of Louisiana there is no distinction between common law and equity, and there cannot be one rule in a State court, and another in a federal court. The principle that no relief shall be given in equity where there is a plain remedy 439 at law, would interfere materially with proceedings in the courts of Louisiana. In every possible case relief is given by a court of law in Louisiana; and the distinction between law and equity is not there known. To insist on the establishment of the distinction in the courts of the United States there, would be productive of grievous injury. It would give a foreigner one rule of practice and a citizen another. If the forms of the common law must be pursued to secure writs of error and appeals from the courts of the United States in Louisiana to this court, all the system of practice now prevailing in those courts, under the authority of the law of 1824, must be changed. The forms of the common law, the distinction between proceedings at law and in equity, must be established there. This will be productive of great inconvenience, and will have other injurious effects.

Putting the evidence in writing was very important to the defendant below, as he could have demurred; and then this court would have had the whole of the evidence before them.

Mr. Jones, for the defendant in error.

Where a local practice, such as that of Louisiana, is adapted only to State courts, and not to the courts of the United States, it will not extend to the latter courts. The Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana may know and examine the facts which have been reduced to writing on the trial of causes in the inferior courts, and decide whether a new trial should not have been granted. But no such power exists in this court. It has no power to look into the facts of the case tried by a jury only for the purpose of deciding on the law arising on the evidence, and this, when they are properly before the court, but not for the purpose of drawing a conclusion from the facts different from that of the jury. The judiciary law excludes matters of fact from this court, unless in equity and admiralty causes. This court will never decide on questions of fact; never on a question of new trial, or not; and the only possible use of putting the evidence in writing, in this case, would have been to present the question of a new trial. This court takes no cognizance of any fact, sitting as a court of common law. A compliance or non-compliance of the court below with the defendant's prayer, could neither affect the judgment of the court below or of this court; the judgment here must be the same, whether the evidence was recorded or not. There was, therefore, no error of which this court can take notice in the proceedings below. The proceedings are said not to be according to the common law, but to the law of Louisiana, which is said to differ from the common law; and yet we find the trial by jury established, which is the great foundation and first principle and essence of a common law trial, be the forms of the process what they may. Trial by jury carries with it all the incidents of a common law trial. The verdict of the jury upon the facts is conclusive in every court, unless set aside by the court before which the cause was tried.

This court will not reverse all its functions, because the courts of the United States in Louisiana adopt the State practice. The Judiciary Act says all trials in issues of fact shall be by jury; this court will not say, as a rule of practice, there shall be no trial by jury according to the principles of the common law in the courts of the United States, of Louisiana. As Louisiana has adopted the trial by jury, it must have all its attributes in that State.

The purpose and meaning of the twenty-second section of the Judiciary Act, was to exclude this court in all cases from deciding on a question of fact. Error in fact means an error in deciding on a question of fact. The difference between a writ of error and an appeal is very familiar. Appeals, ex vi termini, mean the bringing up of every matter pending in the court below. A writ of error only reaches errors of law, and has nothing to do with questions of fact.

If the law of 1824 imposed on the court the duty of recording the parol evidence, is it assignable for error? Could it by any possibility have varied the judgment of the court below, or of this court? If it could not, there can be no cause of reversal, as no injury has been done to the plaintiff in error. This court will not visit the party with a reversal of the judgment of the District Court when in the judgment there is no error, although they may compel the court below to record the evidence.

Peters 3.

441*] *Mr. Justice STORY delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a writ of error to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

The facts disclosed on the record are substantially as follows:

The suit was originally commenced by an attachment, brought in the Parish Court of New Orleans, and removed, on the petition of defendant, into the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana, the plaintiffs being citizens of Louisiana, and the defendant a citizen of Massachusetts.

The petition of the plaintiffs set out the ground of their action to be certain sales of tobacco, made by them to one Eben Fiske, as the factor and agent of the defendant, and for his account, at New Orleans, in June and July, 1825; and certain bills of exchange drawn in their favor by Fiske at New Orleans, on the defendant at Boston, at several dates from the 2d to the 20th of July, 1825, for the amounts of such sales. The defendant's answer (filed in the District Court after the removal of the cause from the Parish Court) contains a general traverse of the allegations of the plaintiffs' petition, and tenders an issue, tantamount to the general issue of nil debet. The answer concludes with a petition of reconvention for ten thousand dollars damages. Upon this issue the cause was tried in the District Court, by consent of parties, before a special jury, in March, 1826, and a verdict passed against the defendant, who moved the court for a new trial; which motion was overruled by the court and final judgment rendered on the verdict against the defendant, who thereupon sued out this writ of error. The record presents two bills of exceptions on the part of the defendant, now plaintiff in error.

First bill of exceptions. Fiske, having first received from the plaintiffs a full and absolute release (which recites that the plaintiffs had dealt with him as the factor and agent of the defendant, and upon the credit and responsibility of the latter alone) from all liability to them on the contract of sale and as drawer of the bills, was produced as a witness on the part of the plaintiffs to prove that he had purchased 442*] the tobacco as agent for the defendant. An objection on the part of the defendant to the competency of Fiske, on the ground of interest, was overruled by the court.

Second bill of exceptions. The defendant moved the court to direct the clerk of the court to take down in writing the testimony of the several witnesses examined by the respective parties, in order that the same might appear of record; such being the practice of the several courts of the State of Louisiana, according to the constitution and laws thereof, and such being the rule of practice, in the opinion of the counsel for defendant, to be pursued in this court, according to the Act of Congress of the 26th of May, 1824. But the clerk refused, &c., and the court refused to order the clerk to write down the same, or to permit the witnesses themselves, the counsel for either of the parties, or any other person, to write down such testimony; the court expressing the opinion that the Court of the United States is not governed by the practice of the courts of the State of Louisiana.

Peters 3.

No charge or advice whatever was given or asked from the court to the jury on any matter of law or fact in the case, nor was any question whatever raised of the competency or admissibility of such evidence, other than the specific exception before taken to the competency of Fiske, on the sole objection of interest, the substance of the facts proved by him being in no manner drawn in question before the court.

The record sets out all the documentary evidence, all of which appears to have been admitted by both parties. This consists of the protested bills above mentioned, with an admission upon the record by the defendant that they had been regularly returned under protest to the plaintiffs, and that plaintiffs were, at the time the suit was commenced, the holders and owners of the same; and of a series of defendant's letters to his agent, Fiske, from the 26th of March, 1823, to the 10th of August, 1825, containing evidence that Fiske, during all that time, was settled at New Orleans, and was the factor and agent of the defendant, there to receive shipments of cargoes from Boston for the New Orleans market, and to purchase and ship from the latter place to the defendant at Boston, cargoes of cotton and tobacco, for which he was authorized to draw bills on Parsons at Boston.

Upon the argument in this court the first bill of exceptions has been abandoned as untenable, and in our judgment upon sound reasons.

The second bill of exceptions is that upon which the court is now called upon to deliver its opinion.

By the Act of Louisiana of the 28th of January, 1817, sec. 10, it is provided, that in every case to be tried by a jury, if one of the parties demands that the facts set forth in the petition and answer should be submitted to the jury to have a special verdict thereon, both parties shall proceed, before the swearing of the jury, to make a written statement of the facts so alleged and denied, the pertinency of which statement shall be judged of by the court, and signed by the judge; and the jury shall be sworn to decide the question of fact or facts so alleged and denied, and their verdict or opinion thereof shall be unanimously given in open court, &c., and be conclusive between the parties as to the facts in said cause, as well in the court where the said cause is tried as on the appeal, and the court shall render judgment; provided, that the jury so sworn shall be prohibited to give any general verdict in the case, but only a special one on the facts submitted to them. This section points out the mode of obtaining a special verdict, in the sense of the common law. The twelfth section then provides that when any cause shall be submitted to the court or to a jury without statements of facts, as is provided in the tenth section of the act, the verbal evidence shall in all cases where an appeal lies to the Supreme Court of the State, if either party requires it, and at the time when the witnesses shall be examined, be taken down in writing by the clerk of the court, in order to be sent up to the Supreme Court, to serve as a statement of facts in case of appeal; and the written evidence produced on the trial shall be filed with the proceedings, &c. &c. The object of this section is asserted to be to enable the appellate court in cases of general verdicts, as well as of submissions to the court, to exercise the power of granting a new trial, and revising the judgment of the inferior 444]* court. *It seems to be a substitute for the report of the judge who sat at the trial, in the ordinary course of proceedings at the common law.

Of itself, the course of proceeding under the State law of Louisiana could not have any intrinsic force or obligation in the courts of the United States organized in that State; but by the Act of Congress of the 26th of May, 1824, ch. 181, it is provided that the mode of proceeding in civil causes in the courts of the United States that now are or hereafter may be established in the State of Louisiana, shall be conformable to the laws directing the mode of practice in the district courts of the said States; provided, that the judge of any such court of the United States may alter the times limited or allowed for different proceedings in the State courts, and make by rule such other provisions as may be necessary to adapt the laws of procedure to the organization of such court of the United States, and to avoid any discrepancy, if any such should exist, between such State laws and the laws of the United States.

This proviso demonstrates that it was not the intention of Congress to give an absolute and imperative force to the modes of proceeding in civil causes in Louisiana in the Court of the United States; for it authorizes the judge to modify them, so as to adapt them to the organization of his own court. It further demonstrates that no absolute repeal was intended of the antecedent modes of proceeding authorized in the courts under the former Acts of Congress, for it leaves the judge at liberty to make rules by which to avoid any discrepancy between the State laws and the laws of the United States; and what is material to be observed, there is no clause in the act pointing in the slightest manner to any intentional change of the mode in which the Supreme Court of the United States is to exercise its appellate power in causes tried by jury, and coming from the courts of the United States in Louisiana; or giving it authority to revise the judgments thereof in any matters of fact, beyond what the existing laws of the United States authorized.

Whether the District Court in Louisiana had adopted any rules on this subject, so as to modify 445]* ify or suspend the operation *of the Louisiana State practice, in relation to the taking down the verbal testimony of witnesses, does not appear upon this record. The court expressed an opinion "that the Court of the United States is not governed by the practice of the courts of the State of Louisiana;" and this would be correct, if, in the particular complained of, the court had adopted any rule superseding that practice. If no such rule had been adopted, the act of Congress made the practice of the State the rule for the Court of the United States. Unless, then, such a special rule existed, the court was bound to follow the general enactment of Congress on the subject, and pursue the State practice.

But, admitting that the decision of the court below was wrong, and that the party was entitled to have his testimony taken down in the manner prayed for; still it is important to consider whether this is such an error as can be redressed by this court upon a writ of error.

Generally speaking, matters of practice in inferior courts do not constitute subjects upon which error can be assigned in the appellate court. And unless it shall appear that this court, if the omitted evidence had been before it on the record, would have been entitled to review that evidence, and might, if upon such review it had deemed the conclusion of the jury erroneous, have reversed the judgment and directed a new trial in the court below, there is no ground upon which the present writ of error can be sustained.

It was competent for the original defendant to have raised any points of law growing out of the evidence at the trial by a proper application to the court, and to have brought any error of the court in its instruction or refusal, by a bill of exceptions, before this court for revision. Nothing of this kind was done or proposed. No bill of exceptions was tendered to the court, and no points of law are brought under review. The whole object, therefore, of the application to record the evidence, so far at least as this court can take cognizance of it, was to present the evidence here in order to establish the error of the verdict in matters of fact. Could such matters be properly cognizable in this court upon the present writ of error? It is very certain that they could not *upon any suit and proceedings in any [446 court of the United States, sitting in any other State in the Union than Louisiana.

The trial by jury is justly dear to the American people. It has always been an object of deep interest and solicitude, and every encroachment upon it has been watched with great jealousy. The right to such a trial is, it is believed, incorporated into and secured in every State constitution in the Union; and it is found in the constitution of Louisiana. One of the strongest objections originally taken against the Constitution of the United States, was the want of an express provision securing the right of trial by jury in civil cases. As soon as the Constitution was adopted, this right was secured by the seventh amendment of the Constitution proposed by Congress; and which received an assent of the people so general as to establish its importance as a fundamental guarantee of the rights and liberties of the people. This amendment declares that "in suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved; and no fact once tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examinable in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law." At this time there were no States in the Union the basis of whose jurisprudence was not essentially that of the common law in its widest meaning; and probably no States were contemplated in which it would not exist. The phrase "common law," found in this clause, is used in contradistinction to equity, and admiralty, and maritime jurisprudence. The Constitution had declared in the third article, "that the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority," &c., and to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. It is well known that in civil causes, in courts of equity and admiralty, juries do not intervene, and that courts of equity use the trial by jury only in extraordinary cases to inform the conscience of the court. When, therefore, we find that the amendment requires that the right of trial by jury shall be preserved in suits at common law, 447 the natural conclusion is that this distinction was present to the minds of the framers of the amendment. By common law they meant what the Constitution denominated in the third article "law;" not merely suits, which the common law recognized among its old and settled proceedings, but suits in which legal rights were to be ascertained and determined, in contradistinction to those where equitable rights alone were recognized, and equitable remedies were administered; or where, as in the admiralty, a mixture of public law, and of maritime law and equity was often found in the same suit. Probably there were few, if any, States in the Union, in which some new legal remedies differing from the old common law forms were not in use; but in which, however, the trial by jury intervened, and the general regulations in other respects were according to the course of the common law. Proceedings in cases of partition, and of foreign and domestic attachment, might be cited as examples variously adopted and modified. In a just sense, the amendment, then, may well be construed to embrace all suits which are not of equity and admiralty jurisdiction, whatever may be the peculiar form which they may assume to settle legal rights. And Congress seems to have acted with reference to this exposition in the Judiciary Act of 1789, ch. 20 (which was contemporaneous with the proposal of this amendment); for in the ninth section it is provided that "the trial of issues in fact in the district courts in all causes, except civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, shall be by jury;" and in the twelfth section it is provided that "the trial of issues in fact in the circuit courts shall in all suits, except those of equity and of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, be by jury;" and again, in the thirteenth section, it is provided that "the trial of issues in fact in the Supreme Court in all actions at law against citizens of the United States shall be by jury."

But the other clause of the amendment is still more important, and we read it as a substantial and independent clause. "No fact tried by jury shall be otherwise re-examinable in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law." This is 448 a prohibition to the *courts of the United States to re-examine any facts tried by a jury in any other manner. The only modes known to the common law to re-examine such facts are the granting of a new trial by the court where the issue was tried, or to which the record was properly returnable; or the award of a venire facias de novo by an appellate court for some error of law which intervened in the proceedings. The Judiciary Act of 1789, ch. 20, sec. 17, has given to all the courts of the United States "power to grant new trials in cases where there has been a trial by jury, for reasons for which new trials have usually been granted in the courts of law." And the appellate jurisdiction has also been amply given by the same act (sec. 22, 24) to this court to redress errors of law; and for such errors to award a new trial, in suits at law which have been tried by a jury.

Was it the intention of Congress, by the general language of the Act of 1824, to alter the appellate jurisdiction of this court, and to confer on it the power of granting a new trial by a re-examination of the facts tried by the jury—to enable it, after trial by jury, to do that in respect to the courts of the United States, sitting in Louisiana, which is denied to such courts sitting in all the other States in the Union? We think not. No general words purporting only to regulate the practice of a particular court to conform its modes of proceeding to those prescribed by the State to its own courts ought, in our judgment, to receive an interpretation which would create so important an alteration in the laws of the United States securing the trial by jury. Especially ought it not to receive such an interpretation when there is a power given to the inferior court itself to prevent any discrepancy between the State laws and the laws of the United States, so that it would be left to its sole discretion to supersede, or to give conclusive effect in the appellate court to the verdict of the jury.

If, indeed, the construction contended for at the bar were to be given to the Act of Congress, we entertain the most serious doubts whether it would not be unconstitutional. No court ought, unless the terms of an act rendered it unavoidable, to give a construction to it which should involve a violation, *however [449 unintentional, of the Constitution. The terms of the present act may well be satisfied by limiting its operation to modes of practice and proceeding in the court below, without changing the effect or conclusiveness of the verdict of the jury upon the facts litigated at the trial. Nor is there any inconvenience from this construction; for the party has still his remedy, by bill of exceptions, to bring the facts in review before the appellate court, so far as those facts bear upon any question of law arising at the trial; and if there be any mistake of the facts, the court below is competent to redress it by granting a new trial.

Our opinion being that, if the evidence were now before us, it would not be competent for this court to reverse the judgment for any error in the verdict of the jury at the trial; the refusal to allow that evidence to be entered on the record is not matter of error for which the judgment can be reversed. The judgment is therefore affirmed, with six per cent. damages and costs.

Mr. Justice M'LEAN, dissenting.

This cause was removed from the District Court of Louisiana by a writ of error, and a reversal of the judgment is prayed for on the errors assigned.

The suit was originally brought in the Parish Court of the Parish of New Orleans, and was removed to the District Court of the United States, which exercises the powers of a circuit court.

In their petition, the plaintiffs below state that one Eben Fiske, as agent at New Orleans for William Parsous, the defendant, residing at Boston, purchased from the plaintiffs large quantities of tobacco, and drew bills on the defendant in payment, which he refused to honor. The plaintiffs claim $10,000.

The defendant, in his answer, denies the material facts set forth in the petition. A jury was impaneled, and a verdict rendered for $6,484. On the trial, the bills of exchange were produced, and a great number of business letters between Parsons and Fiske were read.

Fiske was sworn as a witness, though objected to on the *ground of interest; but a release removed the objection to his competency.

The first assignment of error relied on is that from the facts apparent on the record, the plaintiffs had no right of action against the defendant, and that, therefore, this court will decree a judgment to be entered in favor of the defendant.

2. That they will, at least, reverse this judgment, and award a new trial, for one of the following reasons:

1. Because the court refused to direct the evidence to be put upon the record.

2. Because the whole question was a question of law, and the decision was against law.

3. It is not strictly a common-law proceeding, but a proceeding under the peculiar system of Louisiana; and according to that system, the court has power to reverse the judgment under circumstances which would not give it that power where the trial had been according to the common law.

As this cause involves a constitutional question which has not been settled by this court, and as I am so unfortunate as to differ in opinion with a majority of the members of the court, I shall, with great deference, present my views of the case.

In the State of Louisiana the principles of the common law are not recognized, neither do the principles of the civil law of Rome furnish the basis of their jurisprudence. They have a system peculiar to themselves, adopted by their statutes, which embodies much of the civil law, some of the principles of the common law, and, in a few instances, the statutory provisions of other States. This system may be called the civil law of Louisiana, and is peculiar to that State.

The modes of proceeding in their courts are more nearly assimilated to the forms of chancery than to those of the common law. The plaintiff files his petition, in which he sets forth the ground of complaint and the relief prayed for. Process issues against the defendant, and when he is in court, he is ruled to answer the bill. The answer is filed, in which he admits, denies, or avoids the facts set forth in the petition, *the same as in a suit in chancery; and he is permitted, in his answer, to set up a demand against the plaintiff, which he may recover if sustained.

When the cause is brought to a hearing, the court decides the facts and the law, if neither party requires a jury. The testimony is taken down at the trial, and either party may move for a new trial, or take an appeal to the Superior Court.

If an appeal be taken, the testimony forms a part of the record, and is re-examined by the appellate court. Either party has a right to require a jury in the inferior court, and also to demand that the testimony be taken down at the trial; so that it may form a part of the record, and be considered by the appellate court should an appeal be taken.

If either party desires what is called in the statute a special verdict, each party makes a statement of facts which exhibit the grounds of controversy, and these statements are submitted to the jury with the testimony in the case. In this case, also, if either party requires it, the testimony must be taken down at the trial.

The facts found by the jury are examined by the appellate court, and its judgment is given on the facts without the intervention of a jury.

Such is the outline of the course of practice in the courts of Louisiana. A court of chancery there is as little known, and the rules of its proceedings as little regarded, as are those of a court of common law. Redress is sought in substantially the same manner for an injury done to the person, his property or character. Whether he seeks to recover a debt, or asks the specific execution of a contract, or to avoid a contract on the ground of fraud or accident, the mode of proceeding is the same; he files his petition, and the defendant must answer.

In thus repudiating the forms and principles of the common law, the State of Louisiana has pursued a course different from her sister States. This has resulted from the views of jurisprudence derived by the great mass of her citizens from the foreign governments with which they were recently connected.

It is no doubt a wise policy to adapt the principles of *government to the moral [*452 and social condition of the governed. This is no less true in a judicial than it is in a political point of view; and where an intelligent people possess the sovereign power, they will not fail to secure this first object of a good government.

By an Act of Congress of the 26th of May, 1824, it is provided that the mode of proceeding in civil causes in the courts of the United States, that now are, or hereafter may be established in the State of Louisiana, shall be conformable to the laws directing the mode of practice in the district courts of the said State; provided, that the judge of any such court of the United States may alter the times limited or allowed for different proceedings in the State courts, and make, by rule, such other provisions as may be necessary to adapt the said laws of procedure to the organization of such court of the United States, and to avoid any discrepancy, if any such exist, between such State laws and the laws of the United States.

There is no evidence before the court that the power given to the district judge in this proviso has been exercised: the first part of the section, which adopts in the District Court of the United States the same mode of proceeding in civil actions as is established in the courts of the State, must therefore be considered as in force. And until this power be exercised, this section is a virtual repeal of so much of the Judiciary Act of 1789, and all other acts prior to 1824, which came within its provisions. It is contended that whatever may be the rules of practice in the District Court of Louisiana, they do not confer jurisdiction on this court. The force of this objection is admitted.

Any law regulating the practice of an inferior court does not confer jurisdiction on an appellate court; but where such court has jurisdiction of the case, it must be governed in its decision by the rules of practice in the court below.

This court has jurisdiction by writ of error to revise the final judgment, in any civil action, of a circuit court of the United States where the matter in controversy exceeds two thousand dollars. Whether this judgment be obtained by the forms of the civil or the common law is 453 immaterial. *The only essential requisites to give jurisdiction are, that it be a civil action, involving a matter in controversy exceeding two thousand dollars, and that the judgment be final.

The forms of proceeding adopted under the Louisiana practice in the District Court constitute no objection to a revision of its final judgments by writ of error.

In the case of Parsons against Armor, brought to this court by writ of error from Louisiana, and decided the present term, the court has sustained its jurisdiction. That case in no respect differs in principle from this, except that the amount due was ascertained by the court in that cause, and in this by a jury. Both causes were brought against Parsons to recover the price of certain quantities of tobacco sold to Fiske, the alleged agent of the defendant. The same testimony was used in both causes, with the exception of the bills of exchange.

In the case of Armor, the court looked into the testimony, which was certified as a part of the record. From this testimony it appeared that Fiske acted as the factor of Parsons, and in no other respect as his agent; that Parsons looked to Fiske for the faithful disbursement of the funds placed in his hands, and the purchases were made in his name, and the payments sometimes in drafts, and at others in cash; that the credit was given to Fiske and not to Parsons by the vendors of the articles purchased. The court therefore reversed the judgment obtained against Parsons in the District Court.

The testimony thus examined by the court was not made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions, but was taken down at the trial. Had this been done in a case at common law, the court would not have considered the testimony as a part of the record; and, consequently, they could not have looked into it in deciding the cause. But the practice of the District Court, under the sanctions of the Act of 1824, was considered as presenting the testimony in that cause as fully to the consideration of this court as in a case at common law, where it is embodied in a bill of exceptions. The facts being ascertained by the court, on weighing the testimony the law was pronounced in its judgment.

454* *The law of Louisiana requires the testimony to be taken down, if demanded by either party, as well where a jury is impaneled as where the cause is submitted to the court. But in the case under consideration, the court, at the trial, refused to order the testimony to be taken in writing, although a motion to that effect was made. This refusal is the principal ground on which the plaintiff in error relies for the reversal of this judgment. Peters 3.

He claimed a right secured to him by law, which was refused; and he seeks redress by writ of error.

This redress cannot be given, it is urged; because, if the testimony had been taken down, it could have been of no advantage to the plaintiff in error, as this court could not examine it. And why may not this testimony be examined by the court, the same as in the case of Armor? The facts are the same, and no difference exists in the merits of the claims.

The reply is that in this case a jury passed upon the claim, and in the other the court, exercising the functions of a jury, decided both the fact and the law. The difference then consists in this: that the jury found the facts in the one case, and the court in the other; and in both cases the law was pronounced by the court.

This difference in the mode of decision, it would seem, ought not to affect the judgment of this court, unless there be some positive provision of law which must control it.

The seventh article of the amendment of the Constitution is referred to as conclusive on the point. It reads, "in all suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved; and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law."

To this objection an answer may be given, which to me is satisfactory.

This is not a suit at common law, and therefore does not come strictly within the provision of the article.

In what respect can this action be compared to a suit at common law?

*It was commenced by petition, and [*455] in all the stages through which it has been carried, no step has been taken in conformity to the common law, unless it be that the matter in controversy was submitted to a jury, and a bill of exceptions taken. Does this make it a common-law proceeding? A jury is often called to try matters of fact in a chancery case, and in the admission of evidence the rules of the common law are observed. But does this make the principal proceeding an action of law? Surely not. And can the same mode of trial under the statute of Louisiana have that effect? The proceedings under this statute are as dissimilar to the common-law process as are the rules of chancery. The whole proceeding under the statute is in derogation of the common law. How then can it be called a common-law proceeding? If it contain one feature of the common law, that does not change the character of the suit. The mode of redress is, under the special provisions of the statute, a remedy created by the law of the State. Can this procedure be called a suit at common law?

The words in the latter clause of the seventh article, "and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States," refer to the first clause of the sentence, which limits the trial to "suits at common law." If this were not the true construction of the sentence, facts found by a jury in an issue directed by a court of chancery would be conclusive on the chancellor. The verdict has never been so considered, and especially in the appellate courts of chancery. If the intervention of a jury in this case do not change its character so as to make it a common-law proceeding, then there is no difference in principle between this case and that of Armor. As the court in that cause looked into the testimony to ascertain the facts so as to apply the principles of law, why not do the same in this. In that case the judgment of the Circuit Court was reversed, a reversal in this case would render it proper to send down the cause for trial.

But the Circuit Court in this case refused to order the testimony to be taken down at the trial. This is undoubtedly error, if this court could examine the testimony, as it did in Armor's 456*] case. Had that case been considered by the court as a suit at common law, it must have been dismissed, or the judgment affirmed. It was under the particular practice of the District Court that this court considered itself authorized to look into the testimony which formed a part of the record in that cause, and by this procedure established the fact that it was not strictly an action at common law. This appears to me to relieve the case under consideration from difficulty. For, if the suit of Armor was not a common-law proceeding, neither is this suit; and, consequently, it is free from any constitutional objection in this court.

The objection made that if Congress, by adopting the practice of the Louisiana courts may evade the provisions of the seventh amendment, and that they may abolish the trial by jury in the courts of the United States by creating special remedies not known to the common law, is answered by saying that Congress have the power to do much which is not probable they will do. Have they not power to repeal the acts which confer jurisdiction on the courts of the United States, and which regulate their practice? This would not only take away the right of trial by jury in such courts, but all trials of every description. Is it at all probable that this power will be exercised? The answer must be in the negative, and so must the answer to an inquiry whether Congress, by creating new remedies, will dispense with the trial by jury.

Is this article of the Constitution to be construed to mean by the words "suits at common law" all suits which are not properly called cases of equity, of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction? Under the practice of Louisiana how are such suits to be distinguished? The form of action is the same in equity as at law; and if in all cases where a legal right could be prosecuted in other States at the common law, they are to be denominated actions at law in Louisiana, the design of Congress in adopting the Louisiana practice is defeated. The Act of 1824 intended to relieve the parties to a suit in the District Court in Louisiana from the forms of the common law, or the special regulations of 457*] the Judiciary Act of 1789, because they were not adapted to the modes of proceeding in that court.

Suppose Congress had specially provided that in all trials before the District Court of Louisiana the testimony should be taken down, and that it should form a part of the record, so as to present the facts to the Supreme Court in the same manner as though they had been embodied in a prayer for special instructions to the jury, and brought up by bill of exceptions; might not this court determine the questions of law arising in the case? This, it appears to me, is neither more nor less than has been done by the Act of 1824.

Are all the laws of the different States for the valuation of improvements by commissioners, where a recovery for land is had against a bona fide occupant who claimed title unconstitutional? If suit be brought in the State courts, these laws are enforced as constitutional; but if brought in the Circuit Court of the United States, they are unconstitutional. This would make the constitutionality of acts depend, not upon a construction of the Constitution, but upon the jurisdiction where the action is brought. It would give redress in the State courts, which in the United States courts would be unconstitutional.

This would be the inevitable consequence if the provision in the seventh article be restricted in its application to the courts of the United States, and be construed to embrace every species of action where a legal right is prosecuted. And, in to escape this consequence, the provision of the article be extended to embrace all cases which come within the above construction, without reference to the jurisdiction where the remedy is sought, then all laws extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace above twenty dollars are unconstitutional, and also every arbitration system which does not require a jury. An appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace will not evade the constitutional objection; for the judgment is final, and the question involves the right of the justice to give judgment in the case without the intervention of a jury.

Suppose Congress, for the purpose of adjusting land titles in a district of country, should establish a special court, *called [*458 commissioners, to examine and determine between the different claimants; would their proceedings be valid, under the seventh amendment of the Constitution? This mode has been adopted by Congress to settle claims to lands under the Louisiana Treaty, and the acts of the commissioners have been confirmed. If such a proceeding was to be denominated the prosecution of a legal right, and, consequently, a suit at common law because it was not a case in equity, the decision was void under the seventh article, and also any act of legislation confirming it.

From the foregoing considerations I am brought to the conclusion that this case is not strictly a suit at common law, and that this court may, under the Act of 1824, as it did in the case of Armor, look into the record, and, from the facts there set forth, determine the question at law; and as the court below refused to order the testimony to be taken down, I think the defendant has been deprived of a right secured to him by law; and that for this error, the judgment should be reserved, and the cause sent down for further proceedings, with instructions to the District Court to order the testimony to be taken down at the trial.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the District Court of the United States for the District of Louisiana, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said District Court in this cause be, and the same is hereby affirmed, with costs and damages at the rate of six per centum per annum.

Cited—6 Pet., 192; 7 Pet., 423, 451; 9 Pet., 657; 10 Pet., 613; 11 Pet., 396, 399; 12 Pet., 376; 16 Pet., 454; 2 How., 393; 5 How., 289, 290, 481; 7 How., 805; 19 How., 278; 20 How., 665; 21 How., 167, 486; 6 Wall., 758; 9 Wall., 277; 12 Wall., 300; 16 Wall., 269; 18 Wall., 249; 4 Otto, 657; 5 Otto, 134; 8 Otto, 445; 10 Otto, 32; 11 Otto, 808; 3 Cliff., 25; 1 Wood. & M., 459; 1 Abb. U. S., 305; Bald., 405, 554, 561, 562; 1 Blatchf., 486; 4 Ben., 35, 243; 1 Bond, 590; 5 Bank. Reg., 317; 8 Bank. Reg., 150; 3 Cranch, C. C., 352; Pat. Off. Gaz., 1882, p. 1117.

459*] *FARRAR AND BROWN
v.
THE UNITED STATES.

Practice—entry of appearance of Attorney-General of the United States by the clerk—cure of defects in process.

The practice has uniformly been, since the seat of government was removed to Washington, for the clerk of the court to enter at the first term to which any writ of error or appeal is returnable, in cases in which the United States are parties, the appearance of the Attorney-General of the United States. This practice has never been objected to. The practice would not be conclusive against the Attorney-General if he should at the first term withdraw his appearance, or move to strike it off. But if he lets it pass for one term, it is conclusive upon him, as to an appearance.

The decisions of this court have uniformly been, that an appearance cures any defects in the form of process.

MR. BENTON moved the court for leave to re-instate this case, which had been dismissed on a former day of the term for want of an appearance of the plaintiffs in error.

At the first term, when the writ of error was filed, the clerk of the court had entered the appearance of the Attorney-General of the United States, according to the usual practice in such cases.

The Attorney-General now said he should not object to the re-instatement if the court thought it proper under the circumstances; but he had intended to take an objection at the time when the suit was dismissed if any person had then appeared. It was that the citation for the writ of error was returnable to a day out of term, to wit: on the first Monday of January, 1828, instead of the second Monday of that year.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court as follows:

The practice has uniformly been, ever since the seat of government was removed to Washington, for the clerk to enter, at the first term to which any writ of error or appeal is returnable, the appearance of the Attorney-General in every case to which the United States are a party, by entering his name on the docket. This practice must have been known to every Attorney-General, and has never been 460*] objected to. *It might be considered, therefore, as having an implied acquiescence on the part of the Attorney-General, although Peters 3.

it is admitted that there is no evidence of any express assent. We do not say that this practice would be conclusive against the Attorney-General if he should at the first term with draw such appearance, or move to strike it out, in order to take advantage of any irregularity in the service of process. But if he lets it pass for that term, without objection, we think it is conclusive upon him as to an appearance.

The decisions of this court have uniformly been that an appearance cures any defect in the service of process; and there is nothing to distinguish this case from the general doctrine. The cause therefore is ordered to be re-instated.

On consideration of the motion made by the Attorney-General on the part of the defendants in error in this cause, to dismiss the writ of error in this cause on the ground that the citation is made returnable to a day during the vacation, to wit, on the first Monday in January, A. D. 1828, whereas the return day should have been the second Monday in January, A. D. 1828, it is ordered by the court, that inasmuch as the said defect is cured by the appearance of the Attorney-General on the part of the defendant, said motion be, and the same is hereby overruled.

THE STATE OF NEW JERSEY, [*461
Complainants,

v.
THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Defendants.

Service of subpoena on State—practice.

The subpoena issued on the filing of a bill in which the State of New Jersey were complainants, and the State of New York were defendants, was served upon the Governor and Attorney-General of New York sixty days before the return day, the day of the service and return inclusive. A second subpoena issued, which was served on the Governor of New York only, the Attorney-General being absent. There was no appearance by the State of New York.

BY THE COURT: This is not like the case of several defendants, where a service on one might be good, though not on another. Here the service prescribed by the rule is to be on the Governor, and on the Attorney-General. A service on one is not sufficient to entitle the court to proceed.

Upon an application by the counsel for the State of New Jersey that a day might be assigned to argue the question of the jurisdiction of this court to proceed in the case, the court said they had no difficulty in assigning a day. It might be as well to give notice to the State of New York, as they might employ counsel in the interim. If, indeed, the argument should be merely ex-parte, the court could not feel bound by its decision if the State of New York desired to have the question again argued.

A notice was given by the solicitors for the State of New Jersey to the Governor of the State of New York, dated the 12th of January, 1830, stating that a bill had been filed on the equity side of the Supreme Court by the State of New Jersey against the people of the State of New York, and that on the 13th of February following the court would be moved in the case for such order as the court might deem proper, &c. Afterwards, on the day appointed, no counsel having appeared for the State of New York, on the motion of the counsel for the State of New Jersey for a subpoena to be served on the Governor and Attorney-General of the State of New York the court said, as no counsel appears to argue the motion on the part of the State of New York, and the precedent for granting it has been established upon very grave and solemn argument, the court do not require an ex- parte argument in favor of their authority to grant the subpoena, but will follow the precedent heretofore established. The State of New York will be at liberty to contest the proceeding at a future time in the course of the cause if they shall choose so to do.

A BILL was filed on the equity side of the court by the State of New Jersey on the 20th of February, 1829, against the people of the State of New York; and on motion of Mr. Wirt, for the complainants, a subpoena was awarded by the court on the 16th of March, 1829. The writ issued on the 26th of May, 1829. A copy of the subpoena and of the 462 bill was served on the Attorney-General of New York personally, on the 5th day of June, 1829, by the marshal of the Southern District of New York, and on the acting governor of the State, by transmitting the same to him by letter. The acting governor acknowledged "due service of the same," by an indorsement on the subpoena, signed by him on the 5th day of June, 1829.

The subpoena was returnable on the first Monday in August, 1829, being the third day of that month, and fifty-nine days after the service. And no appearance having been entered for the defendants, on the 6th of October, 1829, an alias subpoena was issued, returnable to January Term, 1830. This writ was served on the acting governor of New York on the 9th of November, 1829, sixty-one days before the term, by delivering a true copy of the same to him. The marshal of the Southern District of New York returned, as to the Attorney-General of New York, "the Attorney-General of New York, Green C. Bronson, Esq., not found, being absent, and not within my district."

Together with the alias subpoena, there was served on the acting governor of the State of New York, in the manner before stated, a notice signed by the solicitor for the complainants, in the following terms:

"To Enos T. Throop, Esquire, Governor of the State of New York.

"By virtue of a writ of subpoena to you directed and herewith shown, you are required to be and appear, on behalf of the people of the State of New York, before the Supreme Court of the United States holding pleas in equity, on the second Monday in January next, at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, being the present seat of the national government of the United States, to answer concerning those things which shall be objected to the said State in a bill in equity now depending in the said court, wherein the State of New Jersey is complainant, and the people of the State of New York are defendants, to do and receive, on behalf of the said State of New York, what further the said court shall have 463 considered in this behalf. *And this you may in no wise omit, under the penalty of five hundred dollars, dated the first Monday of August, in the year of our Lord 1829."

A similar notice was issued, directed to the Attorney-General of New York, but was not served upon him.

No appearance having been filed on the 12th of January, 1830, Mr. Southard, Attorney-General of New Jersey, and Mr. Wirt, solicitors for the complainants, addressed to the Governor of the State and the Attorney-General of New York the following letter:

"A bill having been filed on the equity side of the Supreme Court of the United States by the State of New Jersey against the people of the State of New York, a process whereof, with the usual and regular copy of subpoena to appear and answer the said bill having been duly served upon you, and you having failed to appear on the return day of the said process, notice is hereby respectfully given to you that we, as solicitors for the State of New Jersey, complainant in the said bill, will move the said Supreme Court of the United States, on Saturday, the 13th of February next, to proceed ex-parte in the said cause, and to take the said bill pro confesso, and render a decree in conformity with the prayer thereof, according to the rules of practice established in the said court, or for such other order as to the said court may seem meet; unless, on or before the said 13th of February next, you shall have appeared and answered the said bill, or shall show sufficient cause to the contrary."

This letter was delivered to the Attorney-General of New York, then in the city of Washington, on the 13th of January, 1830, and to the governor of the State on the 21st of January, 1830.

The motion of the solicitors for the plaintiffs coming on for argument, on the 13th of February, 1830, Mr. Wirt said, that there are two questions to be presented: the first, whether there had been a sufficient service of the subpoena, supposing the court to have jurisdiction to issue it without an Act of Congress. The second was, whether such jurisdiction existed.

*The first subpoena was served upon [*464] the governor and Attorney-General sixty days before the return day, the day of the service and of the return inclusive. Whether this was sufficient, according to the course of the court, he was desirous to know. The second subpoena was served on the governor only, the Attorney-General being absent. Was it necessary, to make the service good, that it should be served upon both? Mr. Wirt referred to the rules of the court on this subject, particularly the rule adopted in August Term, 1796.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL said that this was not like the case of several defendants, where a service on one might be good, though not on another. Here the service prescribed by the rule was to be upon the governor and upon the Attorney-General. A service on one was not sufficient to entitle the court to proceed against the State.

Mr. Wirt then said that he should be glad to have a day assigned to argue the point of jurisdiction, if the court chose, before another subpoena issued; as it might, if decided against the plaintiffs, prevent unnecessary expenses. He would be willing that it should be at so distant a day as to enable the State of New York to appear and employ counsel. He mentioned three weeks from the day of the application.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL said the court had no difficulty in assigning that day for the motion. It might be as well to give notice to the State of New York, as they might employ counsel in the interim. If, indeed, the argument should be merely ex-parte, the court would not feel bound by its decision, if the State of Motion granted, and notice directed.

New York afterward desired to have the question again argued.¹

465*] In conformity with the direction of the court, notice of the day appointed for hearing the motion for a subpoena was forthwith 466] *served on the Governor and on the Attorney-General of the State of New York; and on the day assigned by the court, the 6th of March, 1830, Mr. Southard, Attorney-General of the State of New Jersey, and Mr. Wirt, attended as counsel for the complainants. No counsel appeared for the State of New York.

The counsel for the State of New Jersey inquired of the court if they would hear an argument on a motion that a subpoena might issue to be served on the Governor and Attorney-General of the State of New York, stating that they were willing and prepared to go into the same.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL said as no one appears to argue the motion on the part of the State of New York, and the precedent for granting the process has been established upon very grave and solemn argument in the case of Chisholm v. The State of Georgia (2 Dall. Rep., 419), and Grayson v. The State of Virginia (3 Dall., 320), the court do not think it proper to require an ex-parte argument in favor of their authority to grant the subpoena, but will follow the precedent heretofore established.

The court are the more disposed to adopt this course, as the State of New York will still 467*] be at liberty to contest the *proceeding at a future time in the course of the cause, if it shall choose to insist upon the objection.

On consideration of the motion made by Messrs. Southard and Wirt, solicitors for the complainant in this cause, on Saturday, the 13th day of February of the present term of this court, praying the court to postpone the consideration of this cause until Saturday, the 6th of March of the present term of this court, with leave to the counsel for the said complainant on that day either to argue the point of jurisdiction or to move the court for a decree in pursuance of the notice therein recited, or for new process in case the court should determine that the service of the process in this case was not sufficient to entitle the court to proceed against the State of New York, or for such other order as to the court may seem meet, it is considered by the court that as no one appears to argue this motion on the part of the State of New York, and the precedent has been established in the case of Chisholm's Executors against The State of Georgia, the court do not consider it proper to require an ex-parte argument, but will follow the precedent so established after grave and solemn argument. The court is the more disposed to adopt this course, as the State of New York will be at liberty to contest this proceeding at any time in the course of the cause.

Whereupon, it is ordered by the court that, as the service of the former process in this cause was defective, inasmuch as it was not served sixty days before the return day thereof as required by the rules of this court, process of subpoena be, and the same is hereby awarded as prayed for by the complainant.²

1.—The following letters, addressed by the Attorney-General of New York to the clerk of the court, dated July 27, 1829, and to the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices, dated January 8, 1830, were read during the discussion.

UTICA, N. Y., July 27, 1829.

William Thomas Carroll, Esquire, Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Sir—The Governor and Attorney-General of the State of New York were recently served with the copy of a bill in equity, said to have been exhibited in the Supreme Court of the United States by "The State of New Jersey v. The People of the State of New York," and with a subpoena in that cause to appear on the first Monday of August next.

I beg leave respectfully to say that such service is regarded on the part of the State of New York as utterly void, because the mode adopted is unknown to the common law, is not authorized by any statute of the United States, nor warranted by any existing rule or order of the court out of which the process issued. A rule on the subject of the service of process was adopted in August Term, 1796 (3 Dall. Rep., 320, 335); but this rule, so far as I have observed, has been omitted in every subsequent publication of the rules of the Supreme Court, and is no doubt obsolete.

Entertaining this view of the subject, it is supposed that no proceeding will be had in the cause, either in vacation or at term, until the court shall have directed the mode of serving such process, and the prescribed course shall have been pursued.

Whether the court has been clothed with power to compel the appearance of a State as defendant in an original suit or proceeding, is a question, among others, which will no doubt receive from that high tribunal all the consideration that its importance demands before any order shall be made in the premises.

I will thank you to hand this to the court, if the subject shall ever be presented to their consideration, and should any rule or order be made in, or affecting this cause, please send a certified copy, addressed to me at Albany.

I am, Sir, with great respect,

Your obedient servant,

GREEN C. BRONSON,

Attorney-General of New York.

Peters 3.

WASHINGTON CITY, January 8, 1830.

To the Honorable the Chief Justice and his Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

A bill has been exhibited in this court by the State of New Jersey against the people of the State of New York, concerning the boundary line between the two States, and a subpoena to appear and answer, with a copy of the bill, has been served upon the Governor of the State of New York. A notice has recently been served that on the 18th instant the court would be moved to take the bill pro confesso, and proceed to a decree for the want of an appearance.

I beg leave respectfully to say that the opinion is entertained on the part of the State of New York that this court cannot exercise jurisdiction in such a case without the authority of an Act of Congress for carrying into execution that part of the judicial power of the United States which extends to controversies between two or more States.

The Governor of the State of New York has made a communication upon the subject of this suit to the Legislature now in session, but it has not yet been acted upon, so far as I have been advised. Whether the Legislature will authorize any person to appear and discuss the question of jurisdiction, or whether, for the purpose of obtaining a judicial decision upon the merits of an unfortunate controversy, they will order an appearance, waiving the question of jurisdiction, I am, at this time, unable to determine.

I have deemed it proper to make this communication to explain what might otherwise be supposed a want of respect for this honorable court, on the part of the executive of New York.

GREEN C. BRONSON,

Attorney-General of New York.

2.—The following is a copy of the subpoena awarded by the court:

The President of the United States to the Governor and the Attorney-General of the State of New York, greeting:—For certain causes offered before the Supreme Court of the United States, holding jurisdiction in equity, you are hereby commanded and strictly enjoined, that, laying all matters aside, and notwithstanding any excuse,

469*]

*JOHN SMITH T.

v.

JOHN W. HONEY.

Jurisdiction—amount in controversy.

Where the verdict for the plaintiff in the Circuit Court is for a less amount than two thousand dollars, and the defendant prosecutes a writ of error, this court has not jurisdiction; although the demand of the plaintiff in the suit exceeded two thousand dollars.

ERROR from the District Court of Missouri.

In the District Court of Missouri, John W. Honey instituted an action of trespass on the case for the recovery of damages from John Smith T., the defendant in the action, for the use of a "new and useful improvement in screening tables for discriminating, selecting and separating perfect from imperfect shot," for which letters patent had been granted to the plaintiff by the United States. The damages were laid in the declaration at two thousand dollars; and at September Term, 1827, the cause was tried, and a verdict rendered for the plaintiff for one hundred dollars, upon which judgment was entered for the plaintiff below.

On the trial, the counsel for the defendant filed several bills of exceptions to the opinion of the court, and prosecuted this writ of error.

After the case was opened for the plaintiff in error, the court ordered the writ of error to be dismissed, the same having been sued out by the defendant in the District Court, and the sum in controversy, as to him, being no more than one hundred dollars, the amount of the verdict in that court. (See the case of Gordon v. Ogden, at this term, ante p. 33.)

Benton and Hempstead for the plaintiff in error, Lawless for the defendant.

Afterwards, Mr. McGinness, for the plaintiff in error, on affidavit stating that the plaintiff in the District Court estimated the damages which had accrued to him by the use of his machine by the defendant at two thousand dollars, and had sought to recover the same in the action, moved to re-instate the cause.

The court overruled the motion.

Cited—15 How., 203; 4 Wall., 164; 1 Otto, 366.

you personally be and appear, on behalf of the people of the said State of New York, before the said Supreme Court, holding jurisdiction in equity, on the first Monday in August next, at the city of 468*] Washington, in the *District of Columbia, being the present seat of the national government of the United States, to answer concerning the things which shall then and there be objected to the said State, and to do further and receive on behalf of the said State, what the said Supreme Court, hold-

*JOHN G. McDONALD, Plaintiff in [470
Error,

v.

GEORGE B. MAGRUDER, Defendant. (a)

Promissory note—accommodation indorser—liability of co-sureties.

A note was discounted at the office of discount and deposit of The Bank of the United States, in the city of Washington, for the accommodation of the drawer, indorsed by Magruder and by M'Donald; neither of the indorsers receiving any value for his indorsement, but indorsing the note at the request of the drawer, without any communication with each other. The note was renewed from time to time, under the same circumstances, and was at length protested for nonpayment; and separate suits having been brought by the bank against the indorsers, the drawer being insolvent, judgments in favor of the bank were obtained against both the indorsers. The bank issued an execution against Magruder, the first indorser, and he having paid the whole debt and costs, instituted this suit against M'Donald, the second indorser, for a contribution, claiming one-half of the sum so paid by him in satisfaction of the judgment obtained by the bank. Held, that he was not entitled to recover.

That a prior indorser is, in the regular course of business, liable to his indorsee, although that indorsee may have afterwards indorsed the note, is unquestionable. When he takes up the note he becomes the holder as entirely as if he had never parted with it, and may sue the indorser for the amount. The first indorser undertakes that the maker shall pay the note, or that he, if due diligence be used, will pay it for him. This undertaking makes him responsible to every holder, and to every person whose name is on the note subsequent to his own, and who has been compelled to pay its amount. [474]

The indorser of a promissory note who receives no value for his indorsement from a subsequent indorser, or from the drawer, cannot set up the want of consideration received by himself; he is not permitted to say that the promise is made without consideration, because money paid by the promisee to another, is as valid a consideration as if paid to the promisor himself. [476]

Co-sureties are bound to contribute equally to the debt they have jointly undertaken to pay; but the undertaking must be joint, not separate and successive. [477]

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the County of Washington in the District of Columbia.

This was an action of assumpsit, instituted in the Circuit Court by the defendant in error against the plaintiff in this court. The matters in controversy were submitted to the jury by a case agreed, which stated that the plaintiff ing jurisdiction in equity, shall have considered in this behalf; and this you may in no wise omit, under the penalty of five hundred dollars. Witness, the Honorable John Marshall, Esquire, Chief Justice of the said Supreme Court at Washington City, the second Monday in January, being the 11th day of said month, in the year of our Lord 1830, and of the independence of the United States the fifty-fourth.

WILLIAM THOMAS CARROLL,

Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States

(a) NOTE.—That bills and notes import a consideration. See note to Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat., 277.

Indorser, when he can allege want of consideration for his contract—other defenses.

Between parties to negotiable paper between whom there is a privity, or between indorser and immediate indorsee, inquiry is admitted into the consideration of such paper, in a suit between them. Easton v. Pratchett, 1 Crompt. Mees. & R., 798; 2 Crompt. Mees. & R., 542; Holiday v. Atkinson, 5 Barn. & C., 501; Abbott v. Hendricks, 1 Man. & G., 791; Klein v. Keyes, 17 Mo., 326; Barnet v. Offerman, 7 Watts., 180; Cleurent v. Reppard, 15 Penn.

St., 111; Shurgin v. McPheters, 42 Ind., 527; 1 Daniel Neg. Instruments, sec 174.

But the want of consideration, or the failure thereof, cannot be pleaded in a suit brought by an indorsee against a prior but not his immediate indorser. 1 Parsons N. & B., 176. They are regarded as remote parties to each other, and between such parties two distinct considerations must be inquired into in order to perfect a defense against the holder: (1) The consideration which the defendant received for his liability; and (2) That which the plaintiff gave for his title. Hoffman v. Bank of Milwaukee, 12 Wall., 181; Craig v. Sibbett, 15 Penn., 240; Daniel Neg. Instr., sec. 174; United States v. Peters 3.

produced in evidence a promissory note drawn by Samuel Turner, Jun., in favor of George B. Magruder, or order, at sixty days, for $900, payable at the office of discount and deposit at Washington, for value received; which note 471 was signed by *Samuel Turner, and indorsed by George B. Magruder and by John G. M'Donald.

The note was so drawn and indorsed, with the understanding of all the parties thereto, that it should be discounted in the office of discount and deposit, for the sole use and accommodation of the maker, Samuel Turner; no value being received by either of the indorsers. It was so discounted, and the proceeds thereof applied to the credit of Turner, in the office. Long before the making of the note, viz., in the year 1819, Turner had two notes discounted for his use and accommodation in the office, viz., one for $270, indorsed by George B. Magruder and by G. M'Donald, and one for $710, indorsed by George B. Magruder and one Samuel Hambleton; which last-mentioned note was continued, by renewal, with the indorsement of Magruder and Hambleton, until September, 1820, when, in consequence of Hambleton's absence, it was protested; after which the office permitted the accommodation to be renewed, upon condition that Turner would get another good indorser in the place of Hambleton. Whereupon, John G. M'Donald, upon the solicitation of Turner, indorsed a note for the sum of $710, which was brought to him already indorsed by George B. Magruder. That in March, 1821, a small part of the money having been paid, the two notes were consolidated and renewed by one note for $950, drawn by Turner and indorsed by Magruder and by M'Donald, which was from time to time renewed by notes similarly drawn and indorsed, the last of which is this note, so produced in evidence by the plaintiff. Neither at the time of indorsing the notes respectively, nor at any other time, was there any communication between Magruder and M'Donald upon the subject of such indorsement. Both of them, however, knew at the time of indorsement the notes were intended to be discounted for the accommodation of Turner; and in every instance Magruder was the first indorser. The note, so produced in evidence by the plaintiff, not having been paid when due, was duly protested; and the payment thereof having been duly demanded and due notice given of such demand, and of nonpayment having been given 472 en *to the indorsers, judgments at law were recovered against both by the Bank of the United States, and the whole amount having been paid by Magruder, he brought this suit to recover from M'Donald one-half of the amount so paid by him.

By consent of the parties, a verdict was rendered for the plaintiff for one-half of the amount so paid by the said Magruder in satisfaction of the judgment against him, subject to the opinion of the court upon the case agreed.

Upon the case stated, the court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant sued out this writ of error.

Mr. Jones, for the plaintiff in error, contended,

1. That by the showing of the plaintiff himself, in the case stated, there never was any contract between the parties but what their several indorsements on the note import.

2. That the import and effect of the contract of indorsement, the only contract between the parties, and that not attempted to be explained or modified by any collateral agreement or understanding whatever, were that the plaintiff himself, as first indorser and payee of the note, should pay and satisfy the whole amount of the note, in default of the maker, and should completely indemnify and save harmless the defendant, as last indorser, against all recourse from the holder. Consequently, if the bank had chosen to enforce the separate judgment which they had recovered against the last, instead of the first indorser, the former would have been entitled to recover of the latter, not a moiety, but the whole of the amount.

3. That this, the legal effect of the only contract subsisting between the parties, so far from being changed or impaired, is confirmed and strengthened by the origin and circumstances of the debt, as explained in the case stated; from which it appears that near three-fourths of the amount consisted of a prior debt due from the plaintiff to the bank, for which M'Donald never was liable till he made himself so as indorser of the plaintiff below, and as second indorser.

This action was brought by the first indorser against the second indorser of a promissory note for contribution, he *having paid the [473 note to the holder. There never was any contract between the parties but that which appears on the face of the note. In the true sense of this agreement, Magruder promises to pay the note in case of the failure of the drawer to do so, and to save the subsequent indorser, the plaintiff in error, harmless. There is nothing collateral to this agreement; were it necessary or proper to go into any inquiry as to the real circumstances of the parties, three-fourths of the sum received on the discount of the note were for Magruder's use.

The only circumstance upon which the claim

Bank of Metropolis, 15 Pet., 393; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet., 1; Robinson v. Reynolds, 2 Q. B. (42 E. C. L. R.), 196; Thiedemann v. Goldsmith, 1 DeGex F. & J., 4; Hunter v. Wilson, 19 L. J. Exch., 8; 4 Exch., 489; Spurgin v. McPheeter, 42 Ind., 527.

And if any intermediate holder gave value for the instrument, that intervening consideration will sustain the plaintiff's title. Byles on Bills (Sherwood's ed.), 236; 1 Parson N. & B., 192; Hunter v. Wilson, 4 Exch., 489; Boyd v. McCann, 10 Ma., 118; Howell v. Crane, 12 La. Ann., 126; Watson v. Flannagan, 14 Tex., 354; Roscoe on Bills, 111; Kyd on Bills, 277; Story on Bills, sec. 188; Johnson on Bills, 80; 1 Daniel Neg. Instr., sec. 165.

That the bill or note has been lost or stolen, or Peters 3.

was executed under duress, or under fraudulent misrepresentations, or for fraudulent consideration, or for illegal consideration, or has been fraudulently obtained from an intermediate holder, or been in any way the subject of fraud or felony, is a good defense as between the parties privy to it. Mills v. Barber, 1 Mees. & W., 425; Clark v. Peace, 41 N. Hamp.; Vathir v. Zane, 6 Grat., 246; Hutchinson v. Bogg, 28 Penn. St., 294; Morton v. Rogers, 12 Ward., 484; Edmunds v. Groves, 2 Mees. & W., 642; Bingham v. Stanley, 2 Q. B., 117; 1 Daniel Neg. Instr., sec. 177; Shirley v. Howard, 53 Ill., 455; Holden v. Cosgrove, 12 Gray, 216; 1 Parsons N. & B., 188; Western Bank v. Mills, 7 Cush., 546.

of the defendant in error can be supposed to rest, is, that the note was to go into bank for the benefit of the drawer; and this will not raise a contract, either express or by implication, different from that which is the known and established construction of such instruments. This is well known, and all who become parties to such contracts are bound by the well-established principles of law, operating upon them under such relations.

Mr. Key, for the defendant, said the question presented in this case is not novel. It has been frequently discussed in courts, and the position assumed for the defendant in error is founded in equity. It is claimed to divide the loss sustained by the failure of the drawer of the note between the indorsers. The bank had judgment against the indorsers. Magruder paid the whole amount of the execution against him, and proceedings on the execution against M'Donald were stayed until this suit shall determine the rights of the parties.

In this case the note was made for the sole purpose of discount for the drawer, and the indorsers put their names upon it for that purpose only. As between the bank, there is no doubt the obligation of each was for the whole amount of the note, but between themselves it was not so. They united for the drawer, and they made no contract with each other for indemnity. The only contract was, that each should become one of two indorsers for the benefit of the drawer, and that they would become mutual and equal sureties.

474*] *In other commercial contracts, the circumstances under which they arise are gone into. A bill of exchange drawn without funds in the hands of the drawer, is not subject to the strict rules of notice. So, also, where a note has been discounted for the use of the indorser. (The Bank of Columbia v. French, 4 Cranch, 141.) These cases show that in actions on negotiable paper you may go beyond the form of the contract.

In the present case the note was drawn, and after it was indorsed by Magruder, was handed back to Turner; it was then, at the request of Turner, indorsed by M'Donald, and was delivered to the bank by the drawer. Between the indorsers there was no contract, no consideration passed from the first to the second, and they stood as sureties between each other. (Cited, 13 Johns., 52; 3 Harris & Johns., 125.)

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to a judgment rendered by the Circuit Court of the United States for the County of Washington in the District of Columbia, in an action of indebitatus assumpsit brought by the first indorser of a promissory note against the second indorser, to recover half of its amount. The note was made by Samuel Turner, Jun., and indorsed George B. Magruder, John G. M'Donald. At the trial of the cause a case was agreed by the parties, and the judgment of the Circuit Court was rendered in favor of the plaintiff on a verdict given by the jury, subject to the opinion of the court.

That a prior indorser is, in the regular course of business, liable to his indorsee, although that indorsee may have afterwards indorsed the same note, is unquestionable. When he takes up the note he becomes the holder as entirely as if he had never parted with it, and may sue the indorser for the amount. The first indorser undertakes that the maker shall pay the note; or that he, if due diligence be used, will pay it for him. This undertaking makes him responsible to every holder, and to every person whose name is on the note subsequent to his own, and who has been compelled to pay its amount.

*This is the regular course of business [475 where notes are indorsed for value; but it is contended that where less than the amount is received, the indorser is responsible to his immediate indorsee only for the sum actually paid; consequently, if nothing is paid, the mere indorsement does not bind the indorser to pay his immediate indorsee anything. If B indorses to C the note of A without value, and A fails to take it up, it is as between B and C a contract without consideration, on which no action arises. This is undoubtedly true if C retains the note in his own possession, and may be equally true if he indorses it for value. When he repays the money he has received, he is replaced in the situation in which he would have been had he never parted with the note. If he puts it into circulation on his own account, new relations may be created between himself and his immediate indorsee, which may be affected by circumstances. In the case under consideration, the note took the direction intended by all the parties. It was indorsed by Magruder for the purpose of enabling Turner to discount it at the bank. To insure this object, Turner applied to M'Donald, who placed his name also on the paper. No intercourse took place between the indorsers. No contract express or implied existed between them other than is created by their respective liabilities, produced by the act of indorsement. What are these liabilities? The first indorser gave his name to the maker of the note for the purpose of using it in order to raise the money mentioned on its face. He made himself responsible for the whole sum upon the sole credit of the maker. His undertaking is undivided. He does not understand that any person is to share this responsibility with him.

But either the bank is unwilling to discount the note on the credit of the maker and his single indorser, or the maker supposes his object will be insured by the additional credit given by another name. He presents the note, therefore, to M'Donald, and asks his name also. M'Donald accedes to his request, and puts his name on the instrument. If the maker passes the note for value, the liability of M'Donald to the holder is the same as if that value had been received *by M'Donald himself. Why [476 is this? No consideration is received by M'Donald, and this fact is known to the holder and discounter of the note. But a consideration is paid by the holder to the maker, and paid on the credit of M'Donald's name. He cannot set up the want of a consideration received by himself; he is not permitted to say that the promise is made without consideration; because money paid by the promisee to another is as valid a consideration as if paid to the promisor himself.

In what does the claim of the second on the first indorser differ from that of the holder on the second indorser? Neither has paid value to his immediate indorser, but the holder has paid value to the maker on the credit of all the names to the instrument. The second indorser, if he takes up the note, has paid value to the holder in virtue of the liability created by his indorsement. If this liability was founded equally on the credit of the maker and of the first indorser; if his undertaking on the credit of both subjects him to the loss consequent on the payment of the note, how can the contract between him and his immediate indorser be said to be without consideration?
Peters 3.

If it be true, as we think it is, that Magruder, when he indorsed the note and returned it to the maker to be discounted made himself responsible for its amount on the failure of the maker, if this responsibility was, then, complete, how can it be diminished by the circumstance that M'Donald became a subsequent indorser? How can the legal liability of a first indorser to the second, who has been compelled to take up the note, be changed otherwise than by an express or implied contract between the parties?

This question has arisen and been decided in the courts of several States. Wood v. Repold (3 Harris & Johns., 125) was a bill drawn by A. Brown, Jun., at Baltimore, on Messrs. Goold & Son of New York, in favor of G. Wood & Co., and indorsed by G. Wood & Co., and afterwards by Repold, the plaintiff. The bill was drawn and indorsed for the purpose of raising money for the drawer, and was discounted at the Bank of Baltimore. On being protested for nonpayment, it was taken up by Repold, and this suit brought against the first [477*] indorser. Payment was resisted because the indorsement was, without consideration, for the accommodation of the drawer; but the court sustained the action. The same question arose in Brown v. Mott (7 Johns., 361), on a promissory note, and was decided in the same manner. In that case the court said that if he had taken it up at a reduced price, it would seem that he could only recover the amount paid. Undoubtedly, if M'Donald had been compelled to pay a moiety of this note, he could have recovered only that moiety from Magruder.

The case of Douglass v. Waddle (1 Hammond, 413) was determined differently. This case was undoubtedly decided on general principles; but the custom of the country and a statute of the State are referred to by the court as entitled to considerable influence. The weight of authority as well as of usage is, we think, in favor of the liability of the first indorser.

The claim of Magruder has also been maintained on the principle that they are co-sureties, and that he who has paid the whole note may demand contribution from the other.

The principle is unquestionably sound if the case can be brought within it. Co-sureties are bound to contribute equally to the debt they have jointly undertaken to pay; but the undertaking must be joint, not separate and successive. Magruder and M'Donald might have become joint indorsers. Their promise might have been a joint promise. In that event, each would have been liable to the other for a moiety. But their promise is not joint. They have indorsed separately and successively, in the usual mode. No contract, no communication, has taken place between them which might vary the legal liabilities these indorsements are known to create. Those legal liabilities, therefore, remain in full force.

Upon this question of contribution, the counsel for the defendants in error rely on two cases, reported in 2 Bos. & Pull., 268 and 270. The first, Cowell v. Edwards, was a suit by one surety on a bond against his co-surety for contribution. *It was intimated by the [*478 court that each surety was liable for his aliquot part, but not liable at law to any contribution on account of the insolvency of some of the sureties. The party who had paid more than his just proportion of the debt could obtain relief in equity only.

The second case, Sir Edward Deering v. The Earl of Winchelsea, Sir John Rous, and the Attorney-General, was a suit in chancery, in the Exchequer. Thomas Deering had been appointed receiver of fines, &c., and had given three bonds conditioned for faithful accounting, &c. In one of these the plaintiff was surety, in another Lord Winchelsea, and in the third, Sir John Rous. Judgment was obtained on the bond in which the plaintiff was surety, and this suit was brought against the sureties to the two other bonds for contribution. It was resisted on the ground that there was no contract between the parties, they having entered into special obligations. The Lord Chief Baron was disposed to consider the right to contribution as founded rather on the equity of the parties than on contract, and the court decreed contribution.

In this case the parties were equally bound, were equally sureties for the same purpose, and were equally liable for the same debt. Neither had any claim upon the other superior to what that other had on him. The parties stood in the same relation, not only to the crown, to whom they were all responsible, and to the person for whom they were sureties, but to each other. Under these circumstances contribution may well be decreed ex equali jure. But, in the case at bar, the parties do not stand in the same relation to each other. The second indorser gives his name on the faith of the first indorser as well as of the maker. The first indorser gives his name on the faith of the maker only. Unquestionably these liabilities may be changed by contract, but no contract existing between these parties, it is not a case to which the principle of contribution applies.

No notice has been taken of the form of the action. It is admitted that Magruder, having paid the whole note, *may recover a [*479 moiety from M'Donald, if their undertaking is to be considered as joint; if he, as first indorser, is not responsible to M'Donald for any part of it which M'Donald may have paid.

The judgment is to be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and enter judgment as on a nonsuit.

Cited—5 How., 292; 21 How., 437; 4 McLean, 9.

APPENDIX.

481*] *The following opinion was prepared by Mr. Justice Story at February Term, 1819, and was not delivered; Mr. Chief Justice Marshall having delivered the opinion of the court in the case. By his permission it is inserted here, as the principles discussed in the opinion are the same with some of those involved in the case of Inglis v. The Trustees of the Sailor's Snug Harbor, ante, p. 99.

THE TRUSTEES OF THE PHILADELPHIA BAPTIST ASSOCIATION v. SMITH AND ROBERTSON, 4 Wheat, 1.

STORY J. Charitable donations were of great consideration in the civil law, and bequests to pious uses were deemed privileged testaments.¹ There can be little doubt that the authority of the Roman code, combining with the religious notions of former times, contributed in no small degree to engraft the principles of that law respecting charities into the common law. This was manifestly the opinion of Lord Thurlow,² and Lord Eldon, in assenting to it, has added that, as at an early period the ordinary had authority to apply a portion of every man's estate to charity, when afterwards the statute compelled a distribution, it is not impossible that the same favor should have been extended to charity in the construction of wills, by their own force purporting to authorize such a distribution.³ Be this as *it may, it cannot be denied that many of the privileges given to the charitable testaments by the civil law have been for ages incorporated into the common law. For instance, one privilege was that no such testament was void for uncertainty either as to persons or objects. Hence, if a testator gave his goods to be distributed among the poor, or made the poor his executors, the legacy was not void; although it would have been otherwise if charity had not been the legatee.⁴ And the same rule has been adopted into the common law, at least ever since the statute of charitable uses.⁵ Indeed, at one period, the constructions in respect to charitable bequests were pushed to a most extravagant length; and the good sense of succeeding times has lamented, and, as far as it consistently could, has endeavored to abridge the ancient doctrine, to something like a rational system.⁶ It is now too late to contend that a disposition in favor of charity can be construed according to the rules which are applicable to individuals. In the first place, the same words in a will, when applied to individuals, may require a very different construction if applied to the case of a charity. If a testator give his property to such persons as he shall hereafter name to be his executor, and afterwards appoint no executor; or if, having appointed an executor, he dies in his lifetime, and no other is appointed in his place, in either of these cases, as to individuals, the testator must be held intestate, and his next of kin will take the estate. But to give effect to a bequest in favor of charity, chancery will, in both instances, supply the place of an executor, and carry into effect that which in the case of individuals must have failed altogether.⁷ Again, in the case *of an individual, if an estate [483 is devised to such person as the executor shall name, and no executor is appointed, or one being appointed dies in the testator's lifetime and no one is appointed in his place, the bequest amounts to nothing. Yet such a bequest to charity would be good, and the Court of Chancery would in such case assume the office of executor.⁸ So if a legacy be given to trustees to distribute in charity, and they die in the testator's lifetime, although the legacy is lapsed at law (and if they had taken to their own use it would have been gone forever), yet, in equity, it will be enforced.⁹ Again, although in carrying into execution a bequest to an individual, the mode in which the legacy is to take effect must be of the substance of the legacy, yet where charity is the legatee the court will consider it as the whole substance of the bequest; and in such cases only, if the mode fail, will provide a mode by which that legatee shall take, but by which no other than charitable legatees can take.¹⁰ A still stronger case is, that if the testator has expressed an absolute intention to give a legacy to charitable purposes, but has left uncertain, or to some future act, the mode by which it is to be carried into effect, there the

1.—Swinburne, pl. 1, s. 16, p., 103; Id., pl. 7, s. 8, pl., 908; 2 Domat., 160, 161, 163.

2.—White v. White, 1 Bro. Ch. Cas., 12.

3.—Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36, 69; Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55, 94.

4.—Swinburne, pl. 1, s. 16, p. 104, 59; 2 Domat., lib. 4, tit., 2, s. 6, p. 161, 162, 163.

5.—43 Eliz., ch. 4.

6.—See what is said on this subject in Moggridge v. Thackwell, 1 Ves., Jun., 464; S. C., 7 Ves., 36; Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55; Corbyn v. French, 4 Ves., 418; Attorney-General v. Minshull, 4 Ves., Jun., 11; Attorney-General v. Boultree, 2 Ves., Jun., 380; Attorney-General v. Whitehurch, 3 Ves., Jun., 141; Peters 3.

Carey v. Abbot, 7 Ves., 490; Attorney-General v. Baynes, Prec. Ch., 270.

7.—Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55, 94; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36; Attorney-General v. Jackson, 11 Ves., Jun., 365, 367.

8.—Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55, 96; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36.

9.—Attorney-General v. Hickman, 2 Eq. Cas. Abridg., 193; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 3 Bro. Ch., 517; S. C., 1 Ves., Jun., 464; 7 Ves., 36; Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55, 100; White v. White, 1 Bro. Ch., 12.

10.—Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55, 100; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36; Attorney-General v. Berryman, 1 Diek. R., 168; 2 Roper on Legacies, 130.

Court of Chancery, if no mode is pointed out, will of itself supply the defect and enforce the charity.¹ Therefore, it has been held that if a man devises a sum of money to such charitable uses as he shall direct by a codicil to be annexed to his will, or by a note in writing, and afterwards leaves no direction by note or codicil, the Court of Chancery hath power to dispose of it to such charitable uses as it shall think fit.² So if a testator bequeath a sum for such a [484*] school as he should appoint, and he appoints none, the court may apply it for what school it pleases.³ The doctrine has gone yet farther, and established that if the bequest denote a charitable intention, but the object to which it is to be applied is against the policy of the law, the court will lay hold of the charitable intention, and execute it for the purpose of some charity agreeable to the law, in the room of that contrary to it.⁴ Thus, a sum of money bequeathed to found a Jew's synagogue has been taken by the court, according to this principle, and transferred to the benefit of a foundling hospital.⁵ And a bequest for the education of poor children in the Roman Catholic faith has been decreed to be disposed of according to the pleasure of the king, under his sign-manual.⁶ Another principle equally well established is, that if the bequest be for charity, it matters not how uncertain the objects or persons may be; or whether the bequest can be carried into exact execution or not, or whether the persons who are to take be in esse or not, or whether the legatee be a corporation capable in law to take or not, in all these and the like cases the court will sustain the legacy and give it effect according to its own principles; and where a literal execution becomes inexpedient or impracticable, will execute it cy pres. (Attorney-General v. Oglander, 3 Bro. Ch., 166; Attorney-General v. Green, 3 Bro. Ch., 492; Freer v. Peacock, Rep. temp., Finch, 245; Attorney-General v. Bartree, 2 Ves., Jun., 380; Duke, 108 to 113.) Thus, a devise of lands to the church-wardens of a parish (who are not a corporation capable of taking lands) for a charitable purpose, though void at law, will be sustained in equity.⁷ So if the corporation for whose use it is designed is not in esse, and cannot come into existence *but by some [485 future act of the crown, as, for instance, a gift to found a new college, which requires an incorporation, the gift is valid, and the court will execute it.⁸ So if a devise be to an existing corporation by a misnomer, which makes it void at law.⁹ So where a devise was to the poor generally, the court decreed it to be executed in favor of three public hospitals in London.¹⁰ So a legacy towards establishing a bishop in America was held good, though none was yet appointed.¹¹ And where a charity is so given that there can be no objects, the court will order a different scheme of the charity; but it is otherwise if objects may, though they do not at present exist,¹² and when objects cease to exist the court will new-model the charity.¹³ And in aid of these principles the court will, in all cases of charities, supply all defects in the conveyances where the donor hath a capacity and a disposable estate, and his mode of donation does not contravene the provisions of any statute.¹⁴

Some of these doctrines may seem strange to us, as they have also seemed to Lord Eldon; but he considered the cases too stubborn to be shaken without doing that in effect which no judge will in terms take upon himself, to reverse decisions that have been acted upon for centuries.¹⁵

If, therefore, the present case had arisen in England since the statute of charitable uses, 43 Elizabeth, ch. 4, there can be no doubt that it would have been established as a valid bequest, notwithstanding *it is given to an unin- [486 corporated society.¹⁶ The only question would have been, whether it ought to be administered by a scheme under the direction of the Court of Chancery, or by the king himself, as parens patriæ, under his sign-manual. As to this, the rule which has been drawn by Lord Eldon, from a most learned and critical examination of all the authorities is, that where there is a bequest to trustees for charitable purposes, the disposition must be in chancery, under a scheme to be approved by a master; but where the object is charity, and no trust is interposed, it must be by the king, under his sign-manual; for in such cases the king, as parens patriæ, is deemed the constitutional trustee.¹⁷

1.—Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55, 95; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36; White v. White, 1 Bro. Ch., 12.

2.—Attorney-General v. Syderfin, 1 Vern., 224; S. C., 2 Freeman, 261, recognized as law in Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55, and Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36, 70, &c.

3.—2 Freeman, 261; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36, 73, 74.

4.—Da Costa v. De Pas, 1 Vern. R., 248; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36, 75; Carey v. Abbot, 7 Ves., 490; Attorney-General v. Guire, 2 Vern., 266.

5.—Id. and Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55, 100.

6.—Carey v. Abbot, 7 Ves., 490.

7.—1 Burn's Eccl. Law., 226; Duke, 33, 115; Com. Dig., Chancery, 2, N. 2; Rivett's case, Moore, 890; Mills v. Farmer, 1 Mer., 55; Attorney-General v. Bowyer, 3 Ves., 714; Wort v. Knight, 1 Ch. Cas., 135; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36.

8.—White v. White, 1 Bro. Ch., 12; Attorney-General v. Downing, Ambler, 550, 571; Attorney-General v. Bowyer, 3 Ves., 714, 727.

9.—Anon., 1 Ch. Cas., 267; Attorney-General v. Platt, Rep. temp., Finch, 221.

10.—Attorney-General v. Peacock, Rep. temp., Finch, 45; Owens v. Beau, Rep. temp., Finch, 395;

Attorney-General v. Syderfin, 1 Vern., 224; Clifford v. Francis, 1 Freeman, 330.

11.—Attorney-General v. Bishop of Chester, 1 Bro. Ch., 444.

12.—Attorney-General v. Oglander, 3 Bro. Ch., 166.

13.—Attorney-General v. City of London, 3 Bro. Ch., 171; S. C., 1 Ves., Jun., 243.

14.—Case of Christ's College, 1 W. Bl., 90; S. C., Ambler, 351; Attorney-General v. Rye, 2 Vern., 453; Rivett's case, Moore, 890; Attorney-General v. Burdet, 2 Vern., 755; Attorney-General v. Bowyer, 3 Ves., Jun., 714; Mills v. Farmer, 15 Merivale, 55; Collinson's Case, Hob., 136; Moore, 822.

15.—Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36, 87.

16.—See also Bayley and Church v. Attorney-General, 2 Atk., 239; Owen v. Bean, Rep. temp., Finch, 395; S. C., 2 Ventris, 349; Anon., 1 Ch. Cas., 267; West v. Knight, 1 Ch. Cas., 155; Mayor, &c., of Reading v. Lane, Duke, 81, and see Bridgman's Duke, 361, 486.

17.—Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36, 86; Paice v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 14 Ves., 372; Attorney-General v. Herrich, Ambler, 712; Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 9 Ves., 399; S. C., 10 Ves., 522, 541; Clifford v. Francis, 1 Freeman, 330; Attorney-General v. Syderfin, 2 Freeman, 261; S. C., 1 Vern., 224; S. C., 7 Ves., 69, 70; 2 Maddock's Ch., 63; Highmore on Mortm., 250; 1 Bac. Abr. Charitable Uses, (E); Attorney-General v. Mathews, 2 Lev., 167.

But the statute of Elizabeth not being in force in Virginia at the time when the present will took effect (it having been repealed by the Legislature between the making of the will and the death of the testator), it becomes a material inquiry how far the jurisdiction and doctrines of the Court of Chancery respecting charitable uses depends upon that statute, and whether, independent of it, the present donation can be upheld.

It is not easy to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion on this head. Few traces remain of the exercise of this jurisdiction in any shape prior to the statute of Elizabeth. The principal, if not the only cases now to be found, were decided in the courts of common law, and turned upon the question, whether the uses were void or not within the statutes against superstitious uses. One of the earliest cases is Porter's case,¹ which [487*] was a devise of lands devisable by custom to the testator's wife in fee, upon condition that she should assure the lands devised for the maintenance and continuance of a free school and certain alms-men and alms-women; and it appeared that the heir had entered for condition broken, and conveyed the same lands to the queen. It was held that the use being for charity, was a good and lawful use, and not void by the statutes against superstitious uses, and that the queen might well hold the land for the charitable uses. Lord Eldon in commenting on this case has observed, "it does not appear that this court (i. e., chancery) at that period had cognizance upon informations for the establishment of charities. Prior to the time of Lord Ellesmere,² as far as the tradition of times immediately following goes, there were no such informations as that upon which I am now sitting (i. e., an information to establish a charity); but they made out their case as well as they could by law."³ So that the result of Lord Eldon's researches on this point is, that until about the period of enacting the statute of Elizabeth, bills were not filed in chancery to establish charities; and it is remarkable that Sir Thomas Egerton and Lord Coke, who argued Porter's case for the queen, though they cited many antecedent cases, refer to none which were not decided at law. And the doctrine established by Porter's case is, that if a feoffment is made to a general legal use, not superstitious, though indefinite, though no person is in esse who could be the cestui que use, yet the feoffment is good; and if the use was bad, the heir of the feoffor would be entitled to enter, the legal estate remaining in him.⁴ The absence, therefore, of all authority derived from equity decisions, on an occasion when they would probably have been used, if existing, certainly does very much favor the conclusion of Lord Eldon; and if we might hazard a conjecture, *it would be, that Porter's case [*488 having established charitable uses, not superstitious, to be good at law, chancery, in analogy to other cases of trusts immediately held the feoffees to such uses accountable in equity for the due execution of them; and that the inconveniences felt in restoring to this new and anomalous proceeding from the indefinite nature of some of the uses, gave rise within a very few years to the statute of 43 Elizabeth.⁵ This view would have a great tendency to reconcile the language used on other occasions by other chancellors, in reference to the jurisdiction of chancery over charities, with that of Lord Eldon; as it would show that in cases of feoffments to charitable uses, bills to establish those uses might, in fact, have been introduced by Lord Ellesmere about five years before the statute of Elizabeth; which might be quite consistent with the fact that such bills were not sustained where the donation was to charity generally, and no trust was interposed or legal estate devised to support the uses. And it is very certain that at law a devise to charitable uses generally, without interposing a trustee, or a devise to a nonexistent corporation, or to an unincorporated society, would have been, and in fact was held, utterly void for want of a person having a sufficient capacity to take as devisee.⁶ The statute of Elizabeth in favor of charitable uses cured this defect,⁷ and provided (as we shall hereafter have occasion more immediately to consider) a new mode of enforcing such uses by a commission under the direction of the Court of Chancery. Shortly after this statute it became a matter of doubt whether the court could grant relief by original bill in cases within that statute, or was not confined to the remedy by commission. That doubt remained until the reign of Charles II., when it was settled in favor *of the jurisdiction by original bill.⁸ But on one occasion, in which this very question was argued before him, Lordkeeper Bridgman declared "that the king, as pater patrie, may inform for any public benefit for charitable uses, before the statute of 30 (43) of Elizabeth for charitable uses; but it was doubted the court could not by bill take notice of that statute, so as to grant a relief according to that statute upon a bill.⁹ On another occasion, soon afterwards, where the devise was to a college, and held void at law by the judges for a misnomer, and on a bill to establish the devise as a charity, the same question was argued; Lordkeeper Finch (afterwards Lord Nottingham) held the devise good as an appointment under the statute of Elizabeth, and "decreed the charity, though before the statute no such decree could have been made."¹⁰

1.—1 Co. 22, b. in 34 and 35 Elizabeth. See also a like decision in Patridge v. Walker, cited, 4 Co. 116, b.; Martindale v. Martin, Cro. Eliz., 288; Thetford School, 8 Co., 130.

2.—Sir Thomas Egerton was made Lord Chancellor in 39 Elizabeth, 1596, and was created Lord Ellesmere in 1 James I., 1603.

3.—Attorney-General v. Bowyer, 3 Ves., 714, 726.

4.—3 Ves., Jun., 726.

5.—There was, in fact, an act passed respecting charitable uses in 39 Elizabeth, ch. 9; but it was repealed by the Act of 43 Eliz., ch. 4; Com. Dig. Charitable Uses, N. 14.

Peters 3.

6.—Anon., 1 Ch. Cas., 207; Attorney-General v. Tancred, 1 W. Bl., 90; S. C., Ambler, 351; Collinson's Case, Hob., 136; S. C., Moore, 888; Widmore v. Woodroffe, Ambler, 636, 640; Com. Dig. Devise, K.

7.—Com. Dig. Charitable Uses, N. 11; Com. Dig. Chancery, 2, N. 10.

8.—Attorney-General v. Newman, 1 Ch. Cas., 157; S. C., 1 Lev., 284; West v. Knight, 1 Ch. Cas., 134; Anon., 1 Ch. Cas., 267; 2 Fonb. Eq., b. 3, pl. 2, ch. 1, s. 1; Parish of St. Dunstan v. Beauchamp, 1 Ch. Cas., 193.

9.—Attorney-General v. Newman, 1 Ch. Cas., 157.

10.—Anon., 1 Ch. Cas., 267.

It would seem, therefore, to have been the opinion of Lord Nottingham, that an original bill would not, before the statute of Elizabeth, lie to establish a charity where the estate did not pass at law to which the charitable uses attached. In Eyre v. Shaftesbury,¹ Sir Joseph Jekyll said, in the course of his reasoning on another point, "in like manner, in the case of charity, the king, pro bono publico, has an original right to superintend the care thereof, so that, abstracted from the statute of Elizabeth relating to charitable uses, and antecedent to it, as well as since, it has been every day's practice to file informations in chancery in the Attorney-General's name for the establishment of charities." In The Bailiffs, &c., of Burford v. Lenthall,² Lord Hardwicke is reported to have said, "the courts have mixed the jurisdiction of bringing informations in the name of the Attorney-General, with the jurisdiction given them under the statute of Elizabeth, and proceed either way, according to their discretion." In a subsequent case,³ which was an information filed by the Attorney-General against the master and governors of a school, calling them to account in chancery, as having the general superintendency of all charitable donations, the same learned chancellor, in discussing the general jurisdiction of chancery on this head, and distinguishing the case before him from others, because the trustees or governors were invested with the visitatorial power, said, "consider the nature of the foundation; it is at the petition of two private persons, by charter of the crown, which distinguishes this case from cases of the statute of Elizabeth on charitable uses, or cases before that statute, in which this court exercised jurisdiction of charities at large. Since that statute, where there is a charity for the particular purposes therein, and no charter given by the crown to found and regulate it, unless a particular exception out of the statute, it must be regulated by commission. But there may be a bill by information in this court, founded on its general jurisdiction; and that is from necessity, because there is no charter to regulate it, and the king has a general jurisdiction of this kind. There must be somewhere a power to regulate; but where there is a charter with proper powers, there is no ground to come into this court to establish that charity; and it must be left to be regulated in the manner the charter has put it, or by the original rules of law. Therefore, though I have often heard it said in this court, if an information is brought to establish a charity, and praying a particular relief and mode of regulation, and the party fails in that particular relief, yet that information is not to be dismissed, but there must be a decree for the establishment; that is, always with this distinction, where it is a charity at large, or in its nature before the statute of Elizabeth; but not in the case of charities incorporated and established by the king's charter, under the great seal, which are established by proper authority allowed." And again, "it is true that an information in the name of the Attorney-General, as an officer of the crown, was not a head of the statute of charitable uses, because that original jurisdiction was exercised in this court before; [*491] but that was always in cases now provided for by that statute, that is, charities at large, not properly and regularly provided for in charters of the crown."

It was manifestly, therefore, the opinion of Lord Hardwicke that, independent of the statute of Elizabeth, the Court of Chancery did exercise original jurisdiction in cases of charities at large, which he explains to mean charities not regulated by charter; but it does not appear that his attention was called to discriminate between such as could take effect at law, by reason of the interposition of a feoffee or devisee capable of taking, and those where the purpose was general charity, without the interposition of any trust to carry it into effect; and the same remark applies to the dictum by Sir Joseph Jekyll. In a still later case,⁴ which was an information to establish a charity and aid a conveyance in remainder to certain officers of Christ's College to certain charitable uses, Lord-keeper Henley (afterwards Lord Northington) is reported to have said, "the conveyance is admitted to be defective, the use being limited to certain officers of the corporation, and not to the corporate body; and, therefore, there is a want of proper persons to take in perpetual succession. The only doubt is, whether the court shall supply this defect for the benefit of the charity under the statute of Elizabeth. And I take the uniform rule of this court, before, at and after the statute of Elizabeth, to have been, that where the uses are charitable, and the person has in himself full power to convey, the court will aid a defective conveyance to such uses. Thus, though devises to corporations were void under the statute of Henry VIII., yet they were always considered as good in equity if given to charitable uses." And he then proceeds to declare that he is obliged, by the uniform course of precedents, to assist this conveyance, and therefore establishes the conveyance expressly under the statute of Elizabeth.

There is some reason to question if the language here imputed to Lord Northington be minutely accurate. His lordship manifestly aids the conveyance, as a charity, in virtue of the statute of Elizabeth; and there is no doubt that it has been the constant practice of the court since that statute, to aid defects in conveyances to charitable uses. But there is no case in which such defects were aided before that statute. The old cases, though arising before, were deemed to be within the reach of that statute by its retrospective language, and expressly decided on that ground.⁵ And the very case put of devises to corporations, which are void under the statute of Henry VIII., and are held good solely by the

1.—2 P. Wms., 103, 118; cited, also, 7 Ves., Jun., 63, 87.

2.—2 Atk., 550, 1743.

3.—Attorney-General v. Middleton (1751), 2 Ves., 327.

4.—Attorney-General v. Tancred, 1 W. Bl., 90; S.

C., Ambler, 351; 1 Eden's R., 10.

5.—Collinson's case, Hob., 136; S. C., Moore, 888; Moore, 822; Sir Thomas Middleton's case, Moore, 889; Rivett's case, Moore, 890, and the cases cited in Raithby's note to Attorney-General v. Rye, 2 Vern., 453; Duke, 74, 77, 83, 84; Bridg. Charit., 366, 370, 379, 380; Duke, 105 to 113.

statute of Elizabeth, shows that his lordship was looking to that statute; for it is plain that a devise, void by statute, cannot be made good upon any principles of general law. What, therefore, is supposed to have been stated by him as being the practice before the statute, is probably founded in the mistake of the reporter. The same case is reported in Ambler, 351, where the language is, "the constant rule of the court has always been, where a person has a power to give, and makes a defective conveyance to charitable uses, to supply it as an appointment; as in Jesus' College, Collinson's case in Hobart, 135." Now, Collinson's case was expressly held to be sustainable only as an appointment under the statute of Elizabeth, and this shows that the language is limited to cases governed by that statute.

In a very recent charity case, Sir Arthur Piggott in argument said, "the difference between the case of individuals and that of charities, is founded on a principle which has been established ever since the statute of charitable uses in the reign of Elizabeth, and has been constantly acted upon from those days to the present;" and Lord Eldon adopted the remark, and said, "I am fully satisfied as to all the principles laid down in the course of this argument, and accede to them all." His lordship then proceeds to discuss the most material of the principles and cases from the time of 493*] Elizabeth, and *builds his reasoning, as, indeed, he had built it before, upon the supposition that the doctrine in chancery, as now established, rested mainly on that statute.¹ And his lordship's opinion in the case alluded to,² when commenting on Porter's case, is entitled to the more weight, because it seems to have been given after a very careful examination of the whole judicial history of charities.

These are all the cases which the researches of the court and of counsel have enabled them to find, where the jurisdiction of chancery over charities antecedent to the statute of Elizabeth has been directly or incidentally discussed. The circumstance that no cases prior to that time can be found in equity; the tradition that has passed down to our own times, that original bills to establish charities were first entertained in the time of Lord Ellesmere; and the fact that the cases immediately succeeding that statute, where devises, void at law, were held good as charities, might have been argued and sustained upon the general jurisdiction of the court if it existed, and yet were exclusively argued and decreed upon the footing of that statute, do certainly afford a very strong presumption that the jurisdiction of the court to enforce charities, where no trust was interposed and where no devisee was in esse, or where the charity was general and indefinite both as to persons and objects, mainly rests upon constructions (whether ill or well founded is now of no consequence) of that statute.

It is very certain, also, that since the statute of Elizabeth, no bequests are deemed within the authority of chancery to establish and regulate, except bequests for those purposes which that statute enumerates as charitable, or which, by analogies, are deemed within its spirit and intendment. A bequest may be in an enlarged sense charitable, and yet not within the purview of the statute. Charity (as the master of the rolls has justly observed), in its widest sense, denotes all the good affection men ought to bear towards each other; in its more restricted and common sense, relief to the poor.

*In neither of these senses is it employed in the Court of Chancery.³ In that court it means such only as are within the letter and the spirit of the statute of Elizabeth; and, therefore, where a testatrix bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to the bishop of D. to dispose of the same "to such objects of benevolence and liberality as the bishop in his own discretion shall most approve of," and appointed the bishop her executor, on a bill to establish the will and declare the residuary bequest void, the court held the bequest void upon the ground that objects of benevolence and liberality were not necessarily charitable within the statute of Elizabeth, and were therefore too indefinite to be executed. The court further declared that no case had yet been decided in which the court had executed a charitable purpose, unless the will contained a description of that which the law acknowledges a charitable purpose, or devoted the property to purposes of charity in general, in the sense in which that word is used in the court. That the case was, therefore, the case of a trust of so indefinite a nature, that it could not be under the control of the court, so that the administration of it could be reviewed by the court, or if the trustee died, the court itself could execute the trust. That it fell, therefore, within the rule of the court that where a trust is ineffectually declared, or fails, or becomes incapable of taking effect, the party taking shall be a trustee, if not for those who were to take by the will, for those who take under the disposition of the law; and the residue was accordingly decreed to the next of kin.

So that it appears since the statute of Elizabeth, the Court of Chancery will not establish any trusts for indefinite purposes of a benevolent nature, not charitable within the purview of that statute, although there be an existing trustee in whom it is vested; but will declare the trust void, and distribute the property among the next of kin; and yet, if there was an original jurisdiction in chancery over all bequests *charitable in their own nature, [*495 and not superstitious, to establish and regulate them, independent of the statute, it is not easy to perceive why an original bill might not be sustained in such court to establish such bequest, especially where a trustee is interposed to effectuate it, for the statute does not contain any prohibition of such bequests. An argument may, therefore, be fairly drawn from this source against a general jurisdiction in chancery over charities of an indefinite nature prior to the statute.

And the statute itself may be resorted to as affording an additional argument in corrobora-

1.—Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55, 86, 94, 100; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36; Attorney-General v. Bowyer, 3 Ves., 714, 726.

2.—Attorney-General v. Bowyer, 3 Ves., 714, 726. Peters 3. U. S., Book 7.

3.—Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 9 Ves., 399; S. C., 10 Ves., 522; Brown v. Yeall, 7 Ves., 59 note a; Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36; Attorney-General v. Bowyer, 3 Ves., 714, 726; Cox v. Basset, 3 Ves., 155.

tion of the opinion already expressed. It begins by a recital that lands, goods, money, &c., &c., had been given, &c., heretofore to certain purposes, which it enumerates in detail, which lands, &c., had not been employed according to the charitable intent of the givers and founders by reason of frauds, breaches of trusts, and negligence in those that should pay, deliver, and employ the same. It then enacts that it shall be lawful for the Lord-Chancellor, &c., to award commissions under the great seal to proper persons to inquire, by juries, of all and singular such gifts, &c., breaches of trusts, &c., in respect to such gifts, &c., heretofore given, &c., or which shall hereafter be given, &c., "to or for any, the charitable and godly uses before rehearsed;" and upon such inquiry, to set down such orders, judgments and decrees, as the lands, &c., may be duly and faithfully employed to and for such charitable uses before rehearsed, for which they were given; "which orders, judgments and decrees, not being contrary to the orders, statutes, or decrees of the donors or founders, shall stand firm and good according to the tenor and purpose thereof, and shall be executed accordingly, until the same shall be undone and altered by the Lord-Chancellor, &c., upon complaint by any party grieved, to be made to them." Then follow several provisions, excepting certain cases from the operation of the statute, which are not now material to be considered. The statute then directs the orders, &c., of the commissioners to be returned under seal into the Court of Chancery, &c., and declares that the Lord-Chancellor, &c., shall, and may "take such order for the due 496*] execution of all *or any of the said judgments, orders and decrees, as to them shall seem fit and convenient;" and, lastly, the statute enacts that any person aggrieved with any such orders, &c., may complain to the Lord-Chancellor, &c., for redress therein; and upon such complaint the Lord-Chancellor, &c., may, by such course as to their wisdom shall seem meetest, the circumstances of the case considered, proceed to the examination, hearing and determining thereof; "and upon hearing thereof, shall and may annul, diminish, alter, or enlarge the said orders, judgments, and decrees of the said commissioners as to them shall be thought to stand with equity and good conscience, according to the true intent and meaning of the donors and founders thereof;" and may tax and award costs against the persons complaining with just and sufficient cause of the orders, judgments, and decrees before mentioned.¹

From this summary statement of the contents of the statute, it is apparent that the authority conferred on the Court of Chancery in relation to charitable uses is very extensive; and it is not at all wonderful, considering the religious notions of the times, that the statute should have received the most liberal, not to say in some instances the most extravagant, interpretation. And it is very easy to perceive how it came to pass, that as power was given to the court in the most unlimited terms to annul, diminish, alter or enlarge the orders and decrees of the commissioners, and to sustain an original bill in favor of any party grieved by such order or decree, the court arrived at the conclusion that it might by original bill do that in the first instance which it certainly could do circuitously upon the commission.² And, as in some cases where the trust was for a definite object and the trustee living, the court might, upon its ordinary jurisdiction over trusts, compel an execution of it by an original bill, independent *of the statute,³ we are at once [*497 let into the origin of the practice of mixing up the jurisdiction by original bill with the jurisdiction under the statute, which Lord Hardwicke alluded to in the passage already quoted,⁴ and which at that time was inveterately established. And this mixture of the jurisdictions serves also to illustrate the remark of Lord Nottingham in the case already cited;⁵ where, upon an original bill, he decreed a devise to charity, void at law, to be good in equity as an appointment, though before the statute of Elizabeth no such decree could have been made.

Upon the whole, it seems to me that the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over charities, where no trust is interposed, or there is no person in esse capable of taking, or where the charity is of an indefinite nature, is not to be referred to the general jurisdiction of that court, but sprung up after the statute of Elizabeth, and rests mainly on its provisions.⁶ This opinion is supported by the weight of authorities speaking to the point, and particularly by those of a very recent date, which appear to have been most thoroughly considered. The language, too, of the statute lends a confirmation to the opinion, and enables us to trace what would otherwise seem a strange anomaly to a legitimate origin. If so, there is no pretense that, by the law of Virginia at the period when this will took effect, the statute of Elizabeth was then in force, or that any court of equity of that State could sustain the bequest in equity as a charity, if it was void at law. And that it was void at law cannot be seriously doubted for the legatees were not then a corporate society capable of taking it;⁷ and it is a maxim that the legacy must take effect at the death of the testator, *or be void at [*498 that time, and the right vest in another.⁸ And if a court of chancery could not in virtue of its general jurisdiction take cognizance of, or sustain the bequest in this suit, neither can the Circuit Court of the United States.

If we could surmount the objection already considered, that this bequest is under the present law of Virginia deemed void both in law and equity, and therefore incapable of being decreed by this court, we might enter-

1.—See the statute 43 Eliz., ch. 4, at large, 2 Inst., 707; Bridg. on Duke, Char., ch. 1, pl. 1.

2.—See the Poor of St. Dunstan v. Beauchamp, 1 Ch. Cas., 193; 2 Inst., 711; Bailiffs, &c., of Burford v. Lenthall, 2 Atk., 551; 15 Ves., 305.

3.—Attorney-General v. Dixie, 13 Ves., 519; Kirby Ravensworth Hospital, 15 Ves., 305; Green v. Rutherford, 1 Ves., 462; Attorney-General v. Earl of Clarendon, 17 Ves., 491, 499; 2 Fonb. Eq., b. 63, pl. 2, ch. 1, s. 1, note a Cooper's Eq. Pl., 292.

4.—Bailiffs, &c., of Burford v. Lenthall, 2 Atk., 550.

5.—Anon, 1 Ch. Cas., 267.

6.—See Cooper Eq. pl., 102, 103.

7.—Com. Dig. Devise, K; 1 Roll. Abridg., 609; Com. Dig. Chancery, 2, N. 1. &c.

8.—Per Lord Hardwicke, Widmore v. Woodroffe, Ambler, 636, 640.

tain the other questions which have been made in this court. One of these questions is, whether this court, as a court of equity, has a right to administer any charities, the administration of which would properly belong to the government of Virginia as parens patriæ. It is certainly stated in books of authority, that the king, as parens patriæ, has the general superintendence of all charities not regulated by charter,¹ which he exercises by the keeper of his conscience, the Chancellor; and, therefore, the Attorney-General, at the relation of some informant, when it is necessary files, ex officio, an information in the Court of Chancery to have the charity properly established. And it is added that the jurisdiction thus exercised does not belong to the Court of Chancery as a court of equity, but as administering the prerogative and duties of the crown.² It may be safely admitted that the government of a State, as parens patriæ, has a right to enforce all charities of a public nature by virtue of its general superintending authority over the public interests where no other person is entrusted with it; and it seems also to be held that the jurisdiction vested by the statute of Elizabeth over charitable uses is personal to the Lord Chancellor, and not in his ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction in chancery, like that, in short, which he exercises as to lunatics and idiots.³

499*] *It may also be admitted that where money is given to charity generally and indefinitely, without trustees or objects selected, the king, as parens patriæ, is the constitutional trustee, and may apply it as he pleases under his sign-manual, and not under a decree of chancery.⁴ Where, however, the execution is to be by a trustee with general or some objects pointed out, or to a trustee for indefinite and general charity, the Court of Chancery will take the administration of the trust.⁵ Whether in such a case upon an original bill to establish the charity, the Lord Chancellor acts as the personal delegate of the crown, administering its prerogative in analogy to the authority personally given to him by the statute of charitable uses under a commission, or whether as a court of equity in virtue of its general powers, may, perhaps, upon the authorities admit of some question; though my opinion is that it belongs to the court, as a court of equity, exercising jurisdiction to enforce a trust recognized and enforced by the law of the land; and I think this opinion is corroborated by the better authorities.⁶ Be this as it may, where there is a trust for a definite object, and the trust is in point of law sustainable, there seems no reason why a court of equity, as such, may not take cognizance of such trust at the suit of any competent party, whether the Attorney-General or a private interested relator, as well as of any other trust whose execution is sought.⁷ If, therefore, by the law of Virginia the bequest in this case had been valid in law or equity, the trustees being marked out and the objects being definite, there does not seem any reason why, at their instance, it might not have been executed *in this as well as in any other [*500 court of equity. The court in such a case would carry into effect the intention of the testator; nothing would be left to its discretion, and it would therefore do precisely what a State court of chancery must do, acting as such, or administering the prerogative of the government as parens patriæ.

In respect to another question, whether the Attorney-General be not a necessary party to a bill in equity to establish a charity or carry it into effect, that must depend upon circumstances. If the charity be indefinite, or there be no trustees or no persons competent to take, or the objects be of a general and public nature, it would clearly be proper that the government to whom the superintendency of such charities belongs, should be made a party to the bill by their Attorney-General. This seems to have been the general course established by the authorities.⁸ But where the charity is definite in its nature, and trustees are appointed to take or execute it, it is not perceived why a suit at the instance of such trustees may not properly be maintained without the government being a party.⁹

Another question which has been discussed in the argument is, whether a court of equity sitting within one jurisdiction can execute any charitable bequests for foreign objects in another jurisdiction; and it is said, in a technical sense, to be against the public policy of Virginia to sustain or execute such bequests. There is no statute of Virginia making such bequests void, and, therefore, if against her policy, it can be only because it would be against the general policy of all States governed by the common law. The case of the *Attorney-General v. The City of London*¹⁰ is relied on to establish the general proposition. It was an information *to establish a new [*501 scheme for a charity of Mr. Boyle, who, by his will in 1691, gave the residue of his fortune to be laid out by his executors for charitable and other pious and good uses at their discretion, but recommended that the greater part should

1.—3 Bl. Comm., 427; 2 Fonb. Eq., b. 2, pl. 2, ch. 1, s. 1, and note a.

2.—Cooper's Eq. Pl. xxvii.; 2 Fonb. Eq., b. 2, pl. 2, ch. 1, s. 1; Lord Falkland v. Bertie, 2 Vern., 342; Mitf. Pl., 29; Bailiffs, &c., of Burford v. Lenthall, 2 Atk., 551.

3.—Bailiffs of Burford v. Lenthall, 2 Atk., 551; 2 Fonb. Eq., b. 3, pl. 2, ch. 1, s. 1, and note (a).

4.—Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36, 83, 85, 86; Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55; Paice v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 14 Ves., 364; Attorney-General v. Mathews, 2 Lev., 167.

5.—Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36, 86; Mills v. Farmer, 1 Merivale, 55.

6.—Id. and Paice v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 14 Ves., 364; Attorney-General v. Wansay, 15 Ves., 231; Attorney-General v. Price, 17 Ves., 371; Waldo v. Caley, 16 Ves., 206.

Peters 3.

7.—2 Fonb. Eq., b. 3, pl. 2, ch. 1, s. 1, note (a), s. 2, s. 3, note (i); Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves., 36; Attorney-General v. Brewer's Company, 1 Merivale, 495; Attorney-General v. Bowyer, 3 Ves., 714; 2 Vern., 387; Attorney-General v. Newcomb, 14 Ves., 1, 7; White v. White, 7 Ves., 423.

8.—Cooper's Eq. Pleas., 21, 22, 102, 163; Monill v. Lawson, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr., 167, pl. 13; 4 Vin. 500, pl. 11; Attorney-General v. Pearce, 2 Atk., 87.

9.—Monill v. Lawson, 2 Eq. Cas. Abridg., 167, pl. 13; 4 Vin. 500, pl. 11; Bridg. Duke. Charit., 385, 386; Chitty v. Parker, 4 Bro. Ch. Cas., 38; Anon., 3 Atk., 276; Attorney-General v. Newcomb, 14 Ves., 1, 7; Waldo v. Caley, 16 Ves., 206.

10.—3 Bro. Ch. Cas., 171; S. C., 1 Ves., Jun., 243; Provost, &c., of Edinburgh v. Aubury, Ambler, 236; Oliphant v. Hendrie, 1 Bro. Ch. Cas., 571.

be laid out for the advancement of the Christian religion among infidels. The charity had been established under a decree of the court, and the property conveyed to the city of London, upon trust, to lay out the rents and profits in the advancement of the Christian religion, as the bishop of London, for the time being, and Lord Burlington should appoint. The trustees appointed the rents and profits to be paid to an agent in London for the College of William and Mary in Virginia for this purpose—that the college should maintain and educate in the Christian religion so many Indian children, as far as the fund would go, and that the president, &c., thereof should transmit accounts, and should be subject to rules given them until altered. This arrangement was ratified by the court. After the Revolution the present bill was filed for the purpose of taking away the charity from the college, because emancipated from the control of the court, and to have it disposed of by a new scheme. Upon hearing the cause a decree was made accordingly, upon the ground that the trusts to the college to convert neighboring infidels ceasing for want of objects (there being now, as the court said, no neighboring infidels), the charity must be applied anew.¹ There was also an intimation at the argument that the corporation was not now an existing corporation, and, at all events, was not within the control of the court. But the ground of the decision was as above stated. It is observable in this case that the charity of Mr. Boyle was not in terms or substance limited to foreign countries or objects, but the application to foreign objects was originally under the decree of the court. It certainly, then, furnishes no argument against, but an argument in favor of the power of a court of equity, to apply even a general charity to foreign objects.

But we need not rest here. There are other 502 cases directly *in point, in which bequests for foreign charitable objects have been sustained in equity. In The Provost, &c., of Edinburgh v. Aubury,² there was a devise of three thousand five hundred pounds, South Sea annuities, to the plaintiffs, to be applied to the maintenance of poor laborers residing in Edinburgh and the towns adjacent. Lord Hardwicke was of opinion that he could not give any directions as to the distribution of the money that belonging to another jurisdiction, that is, to some of the courts in Scotland; and, therefore, directed that the annuities should be transferred to such person as the plaintiffs should appoint, to be applied to the trusts in the will. So in Oliphant v. Hendrie,³ where A., by will, gave three hundred pounds to a religious society in Scotland, to be laid out in the purchase of heritable securities in Scotland, and the interest thereof to be applied to the education of twelve poor children, the court held it a good bequest. That case approaches very near to the case now at bar. In Campbell v. Radnor,⁴ the court held a bequest of seven thousand pounds, to be laid out in the purchase of lands in Ireland, and the rents and profits distributed among poor persons in Ireland, &c., to be good and valid in law. In Curtis v. Hutten,⁵ the court held a bequest of personal estate for the maintenance of a charity (a college) in Scotland, to be a valid bequest. In a still more recent case, a bequest of ten thousand pounds in trust with the magistrates of Inverness in Scotland, to apply the interest and income for the education of certain boys, was held a valid bequest.⁶ There is also another case,⁷ in which it was held that a legacy given towards establishing a bishop in America was held good, notwithstanding none was yet appointed; and the court directed the money to remain in court, until it should be seen whether any appointment should take place. Nor is the uniformity of the current of the authorities broken in upon by the doctrine* in De 503 Garcin v. Lawson.⁸ There the bequests were to Roman Catholic establishments, or for the benefit of Roman Catholic priests, and were considered void because they were illegal and contrary to the policy of England, evinced by the express enactments of statutes on this subject.⁹ It does not strike me, therefore, that there is any solid objection to the bequest in the case at bar, founded on the persons or objects being foreign to the State of Virginia.

But for the reasons already stated, the bequest being void, I am of opinion that the court ought to certify that opinion to the Circuit Court of Virginia.

1.—3 Bro. Ch. Cas., 171, 177.

2.—Ambler, 238.

3.—1 Bro. Ch. Cas., 571.

4.—1 Bro. Ch. Cas., 171.

5.—14 Ves., 537.

6.—Mackintosh v. Townsend, 16 Ves., 330.

7.—Attorney-General v. Bishop of Chester, 1 Bro. Ch. Cas., 444.

8.—4 Ves., Jun., 433, note.

9.—Carey v. Abbot, 7 Ves., Jun., 490; Highmore on Mortmain, 1809, p. 34, &c.

NOTES

ON THE

UNITED STATES REPORTS.

III PETERS.

3 Pet. 1-11, 7 L. 581, KEENE v. MEADE.

Legal name.—Law knows but one Christian name, and omission of middle initial is not a misnomer nor a variance, pp. 6, 7.

Rule approved and applied in the following citing cases: Clealand v. Walker, 11 Ala. 1064, 46 Am. Dec. 240, holding note signed by agent, D. S. W., may be proved to be note of principal, D. W.; Edmundson v. State, 17 Ala. 181, 52 Am. Dec. 170, supporting criminal indictment improperly inserting middle initial; Kelley v. Matthews, 5 Ark. 227, admitting in evidence note of "J. F. J.," in action on note of "J. J.;" State v. Smith, 12 Ark. 622, 56 Am. Dec. 287, sustaining criminal indictment of J. S., under name of "J. B. S.;" Fincher v. Hanegan, 59 Ark. 159, 26 S. W. 823, 24 L. R. A. 547, and n., charging subsequent mortgagee of H. M. W. with notice of recorded mortgage by "H. N. W.;" Burroughs v. Florida, 17 Fla. 655, collecting cases, and sustaining indictment of R. B. under name of "R. H. B.;" Morgan v. Woods, 33 Ind. 28, holding proceedings under process in name of "J. M. M.," instead of J. H. M., are reversible not void; Choen v. State, 52 Ind. 348, 21 Am. Rep. 180, collecting cases, and admitting proof of assault on G. S., under allegation of assault on "G. W. S.;" Schofield v. Jennings, 68 Ind. 235, collecting cases, and holding error in grantee's middle initial does not invalidate tender of title; Hart v. Lindsey, 17 N. H. 240, 43 Am. Dec. 599, reviewing cases, and holding summons of J. H. L. as J. L., subjects him to military duty; Dalton v. Bethlehem, 20 N. H. 512, holding use of initial "A." for middle name Andrew, in notice of money expended for maintaining paupers, does not vitiate notice; King v. Hutchins, 28 N. H. 579, reviewing cases and applying rule to notice of taking deposition; Long v. Campbell, 37 W.

Va. 668, 17 S. E. 197, collecting cases, and holding note to J. L. may be sued on by J. W. L. Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in Wiebold v. Hermann, 2 Mont. 610, holding complaint is insufficient unless defendant's Christian name appears.

Distinguished in McCall's Case, 15 Fed. Cas. 1231, holding militia enrollment of Cornellius McCall as "Naylor McCall," is misnomer and, therefore, void.

Deposition — Execution of commission.— Clerical error in making out commission does not affect the execution of it, p. 6.

Cited and this rule applied in Merrill v. Dawson, Hemp. 591, F. C. 9,469, where caption of deposition omitted one defendant's name, but commission and interrogatories stated all; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 488, 37 L. 823, 13 S. Ct. 952, where surname of commissioner was misspelled in commission, but defendant was not misled.

Evidence.— It is not a universal rule that the existence of written evidence of a fact excludes all parol evidence of that fact, p. 7.

Rule cited with approval and applied in People v. Royce, 106 Cal. 182, 37 Pac. 632, reviewing cases and admitting parol description of draft to prove its identity in embezzlement charge; Phinney v. Holt, 50 Me. 577, reviewing cases, and holding vendor may testify to conveyance of property to disprove intent to defraud creditors.

Evidence.— Parol evidence is sometimes admissible to prove payment of money without production of receipt, pp. 7-8.

The following citing cases approve and apply this rule: Administrator of Wiggins v. Pryor, 3 Port. 435, reviewing cases and admitting evidence of payment of note without production of receipt; Planters' Bank v. Borland, 5 Ala. 544, reviewing cases, and admitting parol evidence of payment for property by party claiming against attaching creditor.

Bills and notes.— Promissory note sued upon must be produced at trial, not as only competent evidence of loan, but to be cancelled, p. 8.

Cited and rule applied in Pipes v. Norton, 47 Miss. 79, denying recovery on drafts, unless produced or their loss proved.

Depositions.— Commissioners to take, need not certify immaterial facts, such as the handwriting in which depositions were taken down, but merely send them in writing, under their hand and seal, to the court, p. 9.

Cited, approved and applied as follows: Jones v. Oregon C. Ry., 3 Sawy. 528, F. C. 7,486, approving certificate that witness "testified in above case as is found above;" Heirs of Clark v. Ellis, 9 Or. 134, holding certificate conformed to State statute.

3 Pet. 12-32, 7 L. 585, UNITED STATES v. BUFORD.

Treasury department — Evidence.— Transcripts from treasury department are competent evidence only of transactions appearing on department's books and occurring in regular course of official business; as to other transactions, the evidence on which statement is founded must be produced, p. 29.

Rule approved and applied in the following citing cases: United States v. Jones, 8 Pet. 381, 8 L. 982, receiving statement as to official warrants, but rejecting it as to drafts and private orders; Hoyt v. United States, 10 How. 132, 13 L. 358, admitting transcript of treasury accounts to prove balance due from ex-official; United States v. Hodge, 13 How. 483, 485, 14 L. 233, 234, admitting treasury transcript to prove liability of postmaster on bond; United States v. Pinson, 102 U. S. 554, 26 L. 228, rejecting certified copy of account of ex-official adjusted by treasury official, but not taken from treasury books; United States v. Corwin, 129 U. S. 386, 32 L. 711, 9 S. Ct. 319, holding, in action on contractor's bond, letters between officials incompetent to prove demand and refusal to perform; United States v. Eggleston, 4 Sawy. 201, F. C. 15,027, applying rule to transcript from treasury books in action on paymaster's bond; United States v. Harrill, McAll. 248, F. C. 15,310, reviewing cases, and admitting transcript of post-office department books, in suit on postmaster's bond; United States v. Smith, 35 Fed. 492, rejecting transcript showing charge in gross against Indian agent for unspecified property; United States v. Case, 49 Fed. 271, rejecting transcripts from post-office department, in compiling which officials have acted judicially and not ministerially. Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in Shulman v. Brantly, 48 Ala. 194, holding law determines to what term appeal is taken, not certificate of clerk.

Distinguished in Bruce v. United States, 17 How. 440, 441, 15 L. 131, admitting statement of debits against Indian agent since such come to official knowledge in ordinary course; United States v. Smith, 35 Fed. 492, admitting transcript showing defendant's money transactions in suit on Indian agent's bond.

Statute of limitations does not bar causes of action in favor of sovereign State, p. 29.

Rule cited with approval and applied as follows: United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 488, 25 L. 195, applying rule to action by United States against Indian agent for conversion; United States v. Nashville Ry. Co., 118 U. S. 125, 30 L. 83, 6 S. Ct. 1008, applying rule to action by United States on railroad bonds bought before maturity; McNamee v. United States, 11 Ark. 150, holding suit by United States on ex-postmaster's bond is not barred by State statute; Levasser v. Washburn, 11 Gratt. 580, holding where adverse possession had commenced against owner it ceased upon forfeiture of land to State; United States v. White, 2 Hill, 60, 61, 37 Am. Dec. 375, 376, holding statute does not run against United States on note indorsed to it before maturity; Trustees v. Trenton, 30 N. J. Eq. 684, holding statute preferring tax liens to prior mortgages not applicable to mortgages securing State moneys.

Statute of limitations.—Where action on an instrument is barred by the statute, its assignment to United States does not revive the cause of action, p. 30.

Approved in the following citing cases: Martin v. Martin, 35 Ala. 568, holding repeal of statute of limitations does not revive action barred before repeal; Attorney-General v. Revere Copper Co., 152 Mass. 452, 25 N. E. 607, 9 L. R. A. 513, holding exemption of State from statute does not revive State's action previously barred.

Assignment to government.—Any instrument or claim, negotiable or otherwise, may be assigned to United States and sued on in its name, p. 30.

Cited with approval in United States v. White, 2 Hill, 62, 37 Am. Dec. 377, holding United States may sue on promissory note payable to order and indorsed to it.

Assignment of claim to the government gives it no greater validity than it possessed in hands of assignor, p. 30.

Rule approved and applied in Perley v. County of Muskegon, 32 Mich. 138, 20 Am. Rep. 641, holding that county cannot hold liable one who has paid borrowed county funds to defaulting county treasurer. Cited, but without particular application, in In re Cooke, 19 Fed. 94, holding absence of words of assignment in statute is proof of intent to gain a preference over other creditors.

Procedure.—Motions to amend pleadings and for new trials are addressed to court's discretion; the exercise of such discretion is not reviewable on appeal, p. 32.

Cited and rule applied as follows: Pomeroy v. Bank of Indiana, 1 Wall. 598, 17 L. 640, rejecting exceptions to overruling of motion for new trial; Cook v. Burnley, 11 Wall. 676, 20 L. 86, refusing to review order substituting copy for original lost pleading; Chapman v. Barney, 129 U. S. 681, 32 L. 801, 9 S. Ct. 427, refusing to review order substituting new plaintiff; Stevens v. Nichols, 157 U. S. 371, 39 L. 737, 15 S. Ct. 641, apply rule to State court's denial of motion to amend petition for removal of cause; Merriam v. Langdon, 10 Conn. 473, holding trial court's denial of amendment of criminal information not reversible error; Doane v. Cummings, 11 Conn. 158, extending rule to court's discretion to determine time and order of admitting evidence; Husted v. Greenwich, 11 Conn. 386, applying rule to allowance of amendment to petition; Stewart v. Bennett, 1 Fla. 443, holding right to amend pleadings rests in discretion of trial court; Ferguson v. Porter, 3 Fla. 32, refusing to review denial of leave to file amended complaint; Evans v. Rogers, 1 Ga. 467, holding amendment of verdict to conform with declaration is discretionary and not reversible error; Polhemus v. Ann Arbor Bank, 27 Mich. 50, refusing to reverse because of court's disallowance of amendment to plea; Henderson v. Hamer, 5 How. (Miss.) 538, holding, where plea is filed for all defendants, court has discretion in allowing one to amend; Coleman v. Bell, 3 N. Mex. 497; S. C., 4 N. Mex. 47, 12 Pac. 658, refusing to consider on appeal denial of new trial by lower court; Austin v. Clapp, 5 Tex. 133, refusing to review order allowing amendment by changing date of filing petition; Heye v. Lieman, 12 Fed. Cas. 90, granting leave to amend plea as an exercise of court's discretion; Poole v. Nixon, 19 Fed. Cas. 995, holding application for order to amend proceedings is not reviewable, being a matter of discretion.

Limited in Welch v. County Court, 29 W. Va. 68, 1 S. E. 340, collecting cases, and refusing to apply rule to judicial discretion of court in issuing writ of certiorari; distinguished in Avery v. Bowman, 39 N. H. 395, holding denial of right to amend on ground that court has no power to grant it, is reversible error.

Pleading.—The replication must traverse the material allegations of the plea, unless matter in avoidance is set up; it is not sufficient that the allegations in the replication are inconsistent with the plea, p. 31.

Approved and applied in Gross v. Disney, 95 Tenn. 596, 32 S. W. 633, holding allegation of plaintiff's marriage during minority is insufficient to avoid defense under statute of limitations.

Miscellaneous.—Cited incidentally in Lewis County v. Tate, 10 Mo. 651.

3 Pet. 33-35, 7 L. 592, GORDON v. OGDEN.

Supreme Court has jurisdiction over appeals when the amount in dispute between the parties in that court exceeds the minimum of $2,000, p. 34.

Approved and rule applied in the "D. R. Martin," 91 U. S. 366, 23 L. 440, where District Court gave libellant $500, and on appeal by adverse party, Circuit Court dismissed libel, Supreme Court has no jurisdiction; Hilton v. Dickinson, 108 U. S. 171, 174, 175, 27 L. 690, 691, 2 S. Ct. 428, 430, 431, reviewing cases and holding, where lower court divides fund of $3,000 equally between two claimants, dispute on appeal is for $1,500, and court has no jurisdiction; Quimby v. Hopping, 52 N. J. L. 118, 19 Atl. 123, holding, under statute, that certiorari will not lie where minimum is $200 and plaintiff waives all excess over that sum; Levinski v. Middlesex Banking Co., 92 Fed. 457, holding, where case involved sufficient amount to authorize removal to Federal court, subsequent sustaining of exceptions reducing the amount would not oust the jurisdiction. Cited, but without application of the rule, in Ill. C. Ry. v. Turrill, 110 U. S. 304, 28 L. 155, 4 S. Ct. 6, answering objection to procedure by quoting "established practice" of court.

Distinguished in Van Tyne v. Bunce, 1 Edw. Ch. 585, holding requirement of jurisdiction is satisfied where judgment increased by costs exceeds minimum.

Appeal and error.—If plaintiff below brings writ of error, the sum originally claimed in the declaration is the sum in dispute and is the test of jurisdiction, p. 34.

Cited with approval and rule applied in Kanouse v. Martin, 15 How. 208, 14 L. 664, holding petition to remove cause to Circuit Court should be granted where sum sued for exceeds $500; Olney v. S. S. Falcon, 17 How. 22, 15 L. 43, holding court has not jurisdiction where appellant has sued for "$1,800 and upwards;" Draper v. Clark, 59 Ohio St. 338, 52 N. E. 833, holding, where plaintiff claims more than minimum and judgment for less is reversed, defendant may appeal from reversal; M'Crowell v. Burson, 79 Va. 301, reviewing cases, and holding plaintiff may appeal where suit is for $1,000 and judgment for plaintiff is $242, the minimum being $500. Approved in Batchelder v. Richardson, 75 Va. 837, holding, however, where court distributes fund of $556 to plaintiff and defendant, difference between entire fund and plaintiff's share, determines his right to appeal. Cited, arguendo, in Levinski v. Middlesex Banking Co., 92 Fed. 457, reviewing cases.

Distinguished in McGinnis v. Carlton, Abb. Adm. 571, F. C. 8,799, holding libellant, whose claim exceeds required $50, but who admits that less is due him, cannot appeal.

Appeal and error.—If defendant below brings writ of error, only the judgment of the Circuit Court is in dispute, and the amount of that judgment determines the jurisdiction, p. 34.

Rule approved and applied in the following citing cases: Walker v. United States, 4 Wall. 164, 18 L. 319, dismissing defendant's appeal from judgment for plaintiff for $2,000; Merrill v. Petty, 16 Wall. 344, 21 L. 500, dismissing defendant's appeal from decree for $1,292 in libel proceeding, notwithstanding other libels by same claimant; Thompson v. Butler, 95 U. S. 695, 24 L. 541, holding defendant cannot appeal from judgment for $5,000, although verdict was $5,066, and plaintiff remitted excess; Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U. S. 276, 29 L. 379, 6 S. Ct. 43, collecting cases, and dismissing appeals of four defendants, against each of whom are judgments less than required amount; N. Y. Elevated R. R. v. Fifth National Bank, 118 U. S. 609, 30 L. 260, 7 S. Ct. 24, holding court has jurisdiction over defendant's appeal from judgment of $5,086, principal and interest, although plaintiff offers to remit excess; Davie v. Heyward, 33 Fed. 94, holding, where plaintiff had judgment for land and $5 damages, defendant's appeal depends on value of land; Decker v. Williams, 73 Fed. 309, 310, holding defendant may not appeal from judgment for $171 where $200 is the minimum and plaintiff sues for $249; Tipton v. Chambers, 1 Met. (Ky.) 568, dismissing defendant's appeal from judgment for $25 where minimum is $50; State v. St. Louis Court of Appeals, 87 Mo. 572, reviewing cases, and holding, where plaintiff obtains judgment for $2,200 on bond for $2,700, the former sum determines defendant's right to appeal; Draper v. Clark, 59 Ohio St. 338, 52 N. E. 833, holding, where plaintiff claims more, but recovers less, than minimum, defendant cannot appeal.

Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in United States v. Watkins, 6 Fed. 157; S. C., 7 Sawy. 90; arguendo in Levinski v. Middlesex Banking Co., 92 Fed. 457, reviewing cases.

Distinguished in United States v. Eighty-four Boxes Sugar, 7 Pet. 459, 8 L. 748, holding, where sugar is seized and sold for duties and net proceeds are less than $2,000, gross value at time of seizure is value in dispute; Gordon v. Ross, 2 Cal. 157, holding, under wording of State Constitution, defendant may appeal when judgment added to costs exceeds the minimum sum; Dashiell v. Slingerland, 60 Cal. 661, in dissent from majority opinion, holding jurisdiction under State statute depends on amount sued for.

3 Pet. 36-42, 7 L. 594, THORNTON v. BANK OF WASHINGTON.

Demurrer to evidence.—Party who demurs to evidence admits the truth of the evidence, and every fact which it may legally conduce to prove in favor of the other party, p. 40.

Rule approved and applied in these citing cases: J. A. & N. Ry. v. Velie, 140 Ill. 62, 29 N. E. 707, holding, where defendant introduces evidence to contradict plaintiff, he waives his demurrer to evidence; Stanchfield v. Palmer, 4 G. Greene, 24, holding ambiguity and doubt in evidence as to partnership will cause court to find against demurring party. Cited with approval in Higgs v. Shehee, 4 Fla. 394, in dissent; Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. v. Templeton, 87 Tex. 47, 26 S. W. 1067. Cited generally in note to Pickell v. Isgrigg, 10 Biss. 237.

Demurrer to evidence.—If the jury, upon any view of the facts, might have given verdict against party demurring to evidence, court may also give judgment against him, p. 40.

Cited with approval in note to People v. Roe, 1 Hill, 472; G., H. & S. A. Ry. v. Templeton, 87 Tex. 46, 26 S. W. 1067, sustaining trial court's instruction to jury to find for plaintiff upon overruling demurrer to evidence.

Usury.—It is not usury for a bank, in usual course of business, to take interest in advance upon discount of a note, p. 40.

Rule approved and applied in Cole v. Lockhart, 2 Ind. 634, collecting cases, and holding the discount in advance of promissory note not usury; Newell v. National Bank, 12 Bush, 60, rejecting defense of usury to note discounted in advance by bank; Duncan v. Maryland Savings Institution, 10 Gill & J. 311, holding that State statute places all persons on same footing as banks in this regard; Parker v. Cousins, 2 Gratt. 386, 44 Am. Dec. 390, holding it not usury to discount sixty-day note by taking interest in advance. See valuable discussion in note to 46 Am. St. Rep. 189.

Distinguished in Hogan v. Hensley, 22 Ark. 414, holding it usury for internal improvement commissioner to receive interest in advance, thereby exceeding legal rate.

Usury.— It is not usury to take interest for sixty-four days upon a sixty-day note, if, according to custom and usage, the note is not due until sixty-fourth day, p. 41.

Cited with approval in Parker v. Cousins, 2 Gratt. 386, 44 Am. Dec. 390, applying rule to discount in advance of a sixty-day note.

Usury.— Banks are undoubtedly within the statute of usury, p. 42.

Cited with approval in Grand Gulf Bank v. Archer, 8 Smedes & M. 174, holding where charter of bank prescribed rate of interest, breach was controlled by usury law.

3 Pet. 43-56, 7 L. 596, WILLISON v. WATKINS.

Tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title during tenancy either by asserting title in himself or in third person, p. 47.

Approved and applied in the following citing cases: Peyton v. Stith, 5 Pet. 491, 8 L. 202, holding tenant cannot enjoin ejectment by landlord, although he has brought adverse title; Henley v. Br. Bank, 16 Ala. 558, holding tenant is estopped from denying title of purchaser of landlord's title at sheriff sale; Heisen v. Heisen, 145 Ill. 666, 34 N. E. 598, 21 L. R. A. 438, holding husband accepting lease of land from stranger may not assert right of dower in such land during lease; Alderson v. Marshall, 7 Mont. 297, 16 Pac. 579, holding, where plaintiff leased land to defendant with privilege to buy, defendant cannot dispute plaintiff's title whether lessee or vendee; Mattis v. Robinson, 1 Neb. 8, refusing to allow lessee to assert title under mortgage purchased during tenancy; Hagar v. Wikoff, 2 Okl. 584, 39 Pac. 282, holding lessee of public lands from claimant improving same cannot assert adverse claim growing out of occupancy; Whaley v. Whaley, 1 Spear L. 232, 40 Am. Dec. 595, holding where tenant holds as tenant at will he cannot assert title by adverse possession; Duke v. Harper, 6 Yerg. 285, 27 Am. Dec. 464, holding tenant, although holding adversely, cannot dispute landlord's title until statute has fully run; Emerick v. Tavener, 9 Gratt. 224, 58 Am. Dec. 220, holding in ejectment by landlord against lessee and sublessee, latter cannot dispute title of landlord; Miller v. Williams, 15 Gratt. 218, allowing landlord to recover in ejectment without proving title, since tenants are estopped from denying same; Voss v. King, 33 W. Va. 239, 10 S. E. 403, holding, in unlawful detainer by landlord, attornment by tenant to third person is not admissible in evidence.

Distinguished in Funk v. Kincaid, 5 Md. 409, 410, holding, where landlord conveys reversion to third party, tenant may defend ejectment by disputing title of third party.

Estoppel.—Mortgagee, trustee, or any one who obtains possession of property by recognition of another's title thereto, is likewise estopped from violating his contract by controverting that title, p. 48.

This principle is affirmed and applied by the citing cases as follows: Galloway v. Finley, 12 Pet. 295, 9 L. 1092, holding purchaser under executory contract of sale cannot enter for himself and set up defect in vendor's title; Bacon v. Robertson, 18 How. 488, 15 L. 504, holding trustee to wind up bank's affairs is estopped to deny title of stockholders to distribution; Herbert v. Hanrick, 16 Ala. 594, holding one claiming under mortgagor does not hold adversely to the assignee of mortgagee; Lewis v. Boskin, 27 Ark. 64, holding one in possession under contract of purchase who buys better title cannot assert same against vendor; Bramble v. Beidler, 38 Ark. 202, holding, in action for price of forty acres, vendee cannot dispute vendor's title to six acres unless he avers he is not in possession of same; Gulfoil v. Arthur, 158 Ill. 607, 41 N. E. 1011, holding trustee who accepts deed of trust is estopped from denying title under which he enters; Pepper v. Dunlap, 5 La. Ann. 203, holding vendee who executes mortgage for purchase price cannot dispute vendor's title upon foreclosure of mortgage; Ash v. Holder, 36 Mo. 166, holding vendee in possession under contract of purchase may not dispute vendor's title but will be allowed cost of outstanding title; Thorndike v. Norris, 24 N. H. 461, holding mortgagor, executing mortgage with covenants of warranty, cannot set up title in third person; Sanders v. Wagner, 32 N. J. Eq. 510, and Roller v. Effinger, 88 Va. 645, 14 S. E. 339, holding vendor is entitled to benefit of outstanding title acquired by vendee upon reimbursing latter; Peck v. Mallams, 10 N. Y. 545, concurring opinion, holding purchasers of sheriff's deed may not dispute title thus conveyed; Greeno v. Munson, 9 Vt. 40, 31 Am. Dec. 606, holding vendee in possession under executory contract of sale does not hold adversely to vendor. Approved in dissenting opinion, Ellege v. Cooke, 5 Lea, 642, majority holding possession by vendee under contract of purchase is not possession of vendor such as will perfect latter's title. Cited generally in Aurora v. West, 22 Ind. 520, note.

Distinguished in Foster v. Dwincl, 49 Me. 49, holding in action of widow for dower, tenant may show landlord's seizin was not such as entitles widow to dower; Lawton v. Howe, 14 Wis. 247, holding rule that tenant may not purchase outstanding claim is not applicable to grantee who enters and holds in his own right.

Adverse possession.—Tenant cannot change character of his tenure by his mere act; his possession is that of his landlord until notice to latter that tenant holds adversely to him, p. 48.

Rule affirmed and applied in the following citing cases: Graydon v. Hurd, 55 Fed. 728, 6 U. S. App. 610, holding possession of tenant at sufferance is not adverse until owner has notice of hostile holding; Doe v. Reynolds, 27 Ala. 376, holding attornment of tenant to stranger does not affect landlord's possession; Emerson v. Goodwin, 9 Conn. 429, holding landlord who possesses through tenant is ousted within meaning of statute against selling pretended titles; Spalding v. Grigg, 4 Ga. 89, holding life tenant's possession of slaves not adverse where assertions of ownership did not come to knowledge of reversioner; Morgan v. Morgan, 10 Ga. 310, holding mortgagee claiming by adverse possession must prove that mortgagor had notice of hostile acts; Rigg v. Cook, 4 Gilm. 351, 46 Am. Dec. 473, where tenant admitted tenure by paying rent within statutory period, held no title by adverse possession; Byrne v. Beeson, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 181, holding where tenant attorns to third party without consent of landlord, either tenant or landlord may prevent eviction by showing its invalidity; Campau v. Lafferty, 50 Mich. 118, 15 N. W. 42, holding adverse possession will not avail in defense to ejectment by landlord, unless notice of adverse holding is brought home to latter; Tripe v. Marcy, 39 N. H. 445, holding possession of mortgagor who continues in possession after mortgage is not adverse until notice to mortgagee; Whaley v. Whaley, 1 Spear L. 233, 40 Am. Dec. 597, holding statute does not run in favor of one who enters by bare permission of owner in absence of proof of notice of adverse holding to such owner; Duke v. Harper, 6 Yerg. 286, 287, 27 Am. Dec. 464, 465, refusing to confirm tenant's adverse title in absence of proof of landlord's knowledge of hostile holding; Ross v. Blair, Meigs, 546, approving charge to jury that to constitute adverse possession, tenant's attornment to stranger must be known to landlord. Approved in Johnson v. Toulmin, 18 Ala. 54, 52 Am. Dec. 213, holding fact that one tenant in common receives all profits does not divest possession of co-tenant; Society Prop. of Gospel v. Sharon, 28 Vt. 614, holding statute does not run against landlord until notice of tenant's adverse holding.

Distinguished in Ashley v. Rector, 20 Ark. 375, holding notorious and unequivocal acts of ownership by one tenant in common causes statute to run in his favor; Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 249, holding where one tenant in common in possession conveys fee to stranger, possession of such grantee is adverse without notice to landlord.

Landlord and tenant.—When tenant disclaims the tenure his possession becomes tortious and the relation of landlord and tenant is dissolved, pp. 49-50.

The citing cases affirm and apply this rule as follows: Woodward v. Brown, 13 Pet. 4, 10 L. 32, holding tenant, who attorns to third party, is not entitled to notice to quit; Walden v. Bodley, 14 Pet. 162, 10 L. 401, where vendee of defendant buys and claims under adverse title, he is not estopped from denying defendant's title; Merryman v. Bourne, 9 Wall. 601, 19 L. 686, holding where landlord is sued in ejectment and tenant attorns to successful ejector, relation of tenant is extinguished; Smythe v. Henry, 41 Fed. Rep. 709, holding where Indian executes void deed and accepts lease from his grantee his possession is not that of the grantee; Wells v. Sheerer, 78 Ala. 146, holding tenant who asserts ownership in himself, disavows tenancy and may be ejected; Dahm v. Barlow, 93 Ala. 125, 9 So. 599, holding, however, that possession under deed conveying less than entire interest is not adverse and is not disclaimer; Merrick v. Hutt, 15 Ark. 342, holding, however, that purchaser after receiving conveyance holds adversely to vendor; Hanford v. Fitch, 41 Conn. 500, holding, where life tenant buys and enters under mortgage interest, tenancy ceases and statute begins to run; Fortier v. Ballance, 5 Gilm. 46, holding landlord may evict tenant before expiration of lease when tenant attorns to stranger; Tobin v. Young, 124 Ind. 511, 24 N. E. 122, holding notice to quit is unnecessary after tenant has denied lease by asserting ownership; Goodman v. Malcolm, 5 Kan. App. 297, 298, 48 Pac. 443, holding, where life tenant disclaims tenure and asserts claim to fee, remainderman may sue to determine question of title; Richardson v. Richardson, 72 Me. 408, holding assumpsit will not lie for rents after one tenant in common has disseized co-tenant; Kunzie v. Wixom, 39 Mich. 388, holding occupant of land who asserts title in himself forfeits right to notice to quit as tenant at sufferance; Amick v. Brubaker, 101 Mo. 477, 14 S. W. 628, holding tenant at will who asserts ownership is liable to ejectment without notice to quit; Currier v. Perley, 24 N. H. 227, holding lessee liable for rent where tenancy was not ended by notice to quit or disclaimer of tenancy; Sumner v. Murphy, 2 Hill (S. C.), 492, 27 Am. Dec. 399, holding occupant under parol gift may acquire title by adverse possession; Emerick v. Tavener, 9 Gratt. 226, 58 Am. Dec. 221, holding where tenant yields possession to stranger giving him deed to fee, stranger may be evicted without notice to quit from landlord; Emerick v. Tavener, 9 Gratt. 229, 232, 58 Am. Dec. 223, 226, holding where tenant attempts to convey fee, landlord may sue him in ejectment without notice to quit; Campbell v. Fetterman, 20 W. Va. 412, holding where tenant purchases from landlord, subsequent possession is not possession as tenant and may be relied on as part performance; Swann v. Thayer, 36 W. Va. 52, 14 S. E. 425, reviewing cases and holding tenant who buys outstanding title and sells fee to others is no longer estopped as tenant from denying landlord's title; Evans v. Enloe, 70 Wis. 349, 34 N. W. 920, holding landlord may eject tenant without notice to quit after tenant denies landlord's right to rent or possession. See also note, 15 Am. Dec. 461, and valuable note, 42 Am. Dec. 134, collecting cases; also note 89 Am.

Dec. 428, holding assumpsit will not lie against adverse tenant for rent. Cited but without particular application of rule in Mattis v. Robinson, 1 Neb. 8, holding tenant for year, purchasing outstanding mortgage, may not assert same against landlord.

Distinguished in De Lancey v. Ganong, 9 N. Y. 23, holding tenant for definite term does not forfeit lease by claiming to own fee; Gale v. Oil Run Pet. Co., 6 W. Va. 209, 210, holding failure of tenant for years to pay rent does not forfeit unexpired term of lease.

Adverse possession.—Possession of property originally acquired by recognition of another's title becomes adverse by open known disclaimer of the tenure, and after lapse of statutory period, action by owner is barred, pp. 50-51.

Cited with approval and rule applied in the following cases: Bradstreet v. Huntington, 5 Pet. 440, 442, 8 L. 184, 185, holding one who enters and holds for himself under deed from third party having no title, may claim by adverse possession; Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 296, 11 L. 982, holding possession for benefit of heirs under will becomes adverse by explicit disavowal of such holding; Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 399, F. C. 1,740, barring right of cestui que trust to property in avowedly hostile possession of trustee; Moore v. Greene, 2 Curt. 210, F. C. 9,763, holding guardian of plaintiff, in possession under deed from third person, may set up statute of limitations; Tillotson v. Doe, 5 Ala. 410, 39 Am. Dec. 332, holding statute runs in favor of tenant from date of landlord's knowledge of disclaimer of tenure; Abercrombie v. Baldwin, 15 Ala. 370, holding where one tenant in common is in possession, improving and selling land, his co-tenant is ousted; Fair v. Garthright, 5 Ga. 14, holding possession of vendee under contract of purchase is adverse; Ogden v. Walker, 6 Dana, 422, holding statute of limitations protects quasi tenant who continues in possession twenty years after notifying landlord that he holds adversely; Sabastian v. Ford, 6 Dana, 437, holding tenant who has claimed land adversely for twenty years to knowledge of landlord, may set up statute of limitations; Chiles v. Jones, 7 Dana, 531, holding adverse possession under patent for twenty years is absolute bar to ejectment regardless of origin of such possession; Morton v. Lawson, 1 B. Mon. 48, holding statute runs in favor of tenant after such open acts of ownership that landlord's knowledge is presumed; Dubois v. Campau, 28 Mich. 318, concurring opinion, holding whether possession of one tenant in common who collects rents and gives leases is adverse, is question for jury; Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 281, 286, collecting cases and holding statute protects title of one tenant in common after twenty-five years of known and undisputed possession; Sands v. Davis, 40 Mich. 19, holding tenant in common who enters under claim hostile to co-tenants, holds adverse possession; Page v. Kinsman, 43 N. H. 332, holding lessee may, after expiration of lease, assert pre-existing title adverse to landlord; Neher v. Armijo (N. M.), 54 Pac. 240, holding where one tenant in common grants fee, statute runs in favor of grantee against other tenants; Roseboom v. Van Vechten, 5 Den. 426, holding life tenant who asserts ownership of fee is in adverse possession and may levy fine; Williams v. First Presb. Soc., 1 Ohio St. 507, holding where trustee conveyed fee and cestui que trust suffered grantee to hold for fifty years, statute of limitations is bar; Sumner v. Murphy, 2 Hill (S. C.), 492, 27 Am. Dec. 399, holding occupant under parol gift acquires title by lapse of time; Trustees v. Jennings, 40 S. C. 181, 42 Am. St. Rep. 866, 18 S. E. 262, holding tenants attempt to convey fee makes possession adverse and after twenty years grant to lessee will be presumed; Turner v. Smith, 11 Tex. 629, holding statute runs against trust where cestui que trust is in open adverse possession to knowledge of owner; Robertson v. Wood, 15 Tex. 5, 65 Am. Dec. 143, holding vendee, holding as owner under executed conveyance to knowledge of vendor, is in adverse possession; North v. Barnum, 10 Vt. 223, 224, holding, where grantor claims his deed to be void and grantee with notice permits him to retain land, such possession is adverse; Hall v. Dewey, 10 Vt. 599, holding where tenant notifies his landlord of hostile holding, landlord is within statute prohibiting deeds from persons not in possession; Voss v. King, 33 W. Va. 245, 10 S. E. 405, holding tenant sued in unlawful detainer may prove that he holds adversely to knowledge of landlord; Swann v. Young, 36 W. Va. 67, 14 S. E. 430, holding possession of grantee of fee from tenant to landlord's knowledge constitutes adverse possession. See also note, 15 Am. Dec. 460, 461, also valuable note, 99 Am. Dec. 391, holding statute runs against express trust from time trustee disavows trust to the knowledge of cestui que trust.

Approved in the following: Piatt v. Vattier, 1 McLean, 166, F. C. 11,117, holding statute runs in favor of tenant who asserts exclusive ownership; Chambers v. Pleak, 6 Dana, 431, 32 Am. Dec. 83, holding quasi tenant purchasing outstanding title cannot claim by adverse possession without proving notice to landlord; New Market v. Smart, 45 N. H. 103, holding adverse possession of cestui que trust depends on whether trustee has notice of disavowal of trust; Whitmire v. Wright, 22 S. C. 453, 53 Am. Rep. 728, holding grantee of fee may show that grantor had only leasehold to defeat right of dower; Duke v. Harper, 6 Yerg. 286, 27 Am. Dec. 464, refusing to confirm tenant's adverse title, however, in absence of proof of notice to landlord of adverse holding; Brown v. Storm, 4 Vt. 44, holding purchaser from occupant of land under contract of sale may recover improvements from owner; Emerick v. Tavener, 9 Gratt. 237, 58 Am. Dec. 230, holding, however, tenant's holding is not adverse until notice to landlord. Cited generally in Trustees v. Jennings, 40 S. C. 178, 42 Am. St. Rep. 863, 18 S. E. 260, holding when tenant disclaims it is landlord's duty to protect his title by regaining possession.

Distinguished in Sherman v. Champlain Trans. Co., 31 Vt. 178, holding lessee of patented article may not repudiate lease so as not to be liable for rent of article used.

Landlord and tenant.—Mortgagee or vendee of tenant, or purchaser of tenant's rights at sheriff sale, assumes tenant's relations to landlord and cannot deny tenancy, p. 51.

Cited with approval and applied in Trustees v. Jennings, 40 S. C. 177, 42 Am. St. Rep. 862, 18 S. E. 260, holding purchaser at sheriff's sale of tenant's interest is estopped from denying tenancy; Lane's Lessee v. Osment, 9 Yerg. 90, holding purchaser of lessee's interest cannot deny landlord's title whether he had notice of lease or not; Emerick v. Taverner, 9 Gratt. 239, 58 Am. Dec. 231, approving charge to jury that tenant's grantee in deed conveying fee, occupies same relation to landlord as tenant.

Statute of limitations receives same construction and application at law and in equity, p. 52.

Approved and applied in the following citing cases: Piatt v. Vattier, 9 Pet. 417, 9 L. 178, refusing to enforce in equity claim to land held adversely thirty years; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 221, 223, 9 L. 404, holding trust cannot be enforced against claimants who openly disavow trust and hold land adversely for many years; Jenkins v. Pye, 12 Pet. 262, 9 L. 1079, refusing to order an accounting after lapse of twenty years; Speidel v. Henrici, 120 U. S. 386, 30 L. 719, 7 S. Ct. 611, and Naddo v. Bardon, 47 Fed. 790, holding statute of limitations runs against express trust openly disavowed by trustee to knowledge of cestui que trust; Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 396, F. C. 1,740, barring defendant's rights to franchise in equity after lapse of time although statute of limitations did not apply to him as non-resident; Baker v. Biddle, 1 Bald. 419, F. C. 764, refusing to order an accounting where plaintiff's claim is barred at law, and no cause appears for equitable relief; Perkins v. Cartmell, 4 Harr. 277, 42 Am. Dec. 758, refusing to enforce, in equity, legacy charged upon land after lapse of thirty years without demand; Atkins v. Hill, 7 Ga. 579, collecting cases and denying recovery by distributees against administrator on account returned nineteen years before; Keaton v. Greenwood, 8 Ga. 103, holding statute runs against express trust only from the time when trustee's disavowal is known; Clark v. Clark, 21 Neb. 412, 32 N. W. 162, holding statute does not run against cestui que trust in possession until trustee disavows trust; Clark v. Potter, 32 Ohio St. 59, collecting cases and refusing to allow mortgagor to redeem in equity after long acquiescence in mortgagee's ownership; Yorks's Appeal, 110 Pa. St. 82, 2 Atl. 69, collecting cases, and holding claim of creditor against executor of estate is barred in equity by lapse of twelve years. See also valuable note, 12 Am. Dec. 371, collecting cases.

Presumption.—Where mortgagor is permitted to remain in possession, mortgage, after lapse of time, will be presumed to have been discharged by payment or release, pp. 52-53.

Approved in dissenting opinion in Wright v. Eaves, 10 Rich. Eq. 598, majority holding no presumption arises from twenty years' possession by vendee of mortgagor.

Landlord and tenant.—By setting up, or attorning to, a title adverse to his landlord, tenant commits a fraud as much as by breach of any other trust, p. 53.

Cited with approval and applied in Byrne v. Beeson, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 183, holding it fraud for third party to whom tenant attorns, to use such attornment to oust landlord.

Estoppel.—The rule that tenant shall not dispute landlord's title does not apply to vendor and vendee, p. 54.

The following citing cases affirm and apply this rule: Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. 54, 10 L. 885, holding vendee after receiving conveyance may dispute vendor's title; Croxall v. Shererd, 5 Wall. 287, 18 L. 579, holding possession by bona fide purchaser is adverse to all the world; Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 615, 27 L. 1051, 3 S. Ct. 412, holding grantee of life estate granted without reference to a reversion may dispute title of grantor; Elder v. McClaskey, 70 Fed. 547, 37 U. S. App. 1, holding claimants in possession, who purchase outstanding titles similar to plaintiff's are not estopped from denying plaintiff's title; Merrick v. Hutt, 15 Ark. 342, holding purchaser at tax sale stands in position of vendee and is not estopped; King v. Carmichael, 136 Ind. 27, 43 Am. St. Rep. 309, 35 N. E. 512, holding where one tenant in common executes deed conveying entire fee, his grantee holds adversely; Macklot v. Dubreuil, 9 Mo. 485 (481), 43 Am. Dec. 553, holding successors in interest of vendee may dispute title of vendor in ejectment; Gardner v. Greene, 5 R. I. 110, holding vendee is not estopped from denying right of vendor's widow to dower; Gray v. Bates, 3 Strob. L. 507, holding vendee who purchases from one tenant in common without reference to co-tenants, may assert adverse possession; Robertson v. Wood, 15 Tex. 5, 65 Am. Dec. 143, holding possession of vendee claiming under executed conveyance to vendor's knowledge, is adverse to vendor's title; Howard v. McKenzie, 54 Tex. 187, holding possession of vendee under executory contract of sale is adverse when obtained from vendor by suit.

Distinguished in Clarke v. McClure, 10 Gratt. 311, 313, holding possession open and notorious, for twenty years under parol gift, not a bar to ejectment.

Statute of limitations should be so construed as to effectuate its intended objects — the security of titles and quieting of possessions, p. 54.

3 Pet. 57-67, 7 L. 601, UNITED STATES v. PRESTON.

Slave trade.—Persons of color seized under acts prohibiting slave traffic are subject to orders of the president under act of March 3, 1819, p. 66.

Cited with approval in Isabella v. Pecot, 2 La. Ann. 392, holding State court has no jurisdiction to award freedom to illegally imported slave; Gedney v. L'Amistad, 10 Fed. Cas. 150, holding Spain not entitled to surrender of slaves found in possession of Spanish vessel.

Admiralty.—Decree is not final, pending an appeal in Federal Supreme Court, p. 66.

Approved and applied in The Lillie, 42 Fed. 180, holding that there can be but one docket fee allowed on final hearing. Citation of 3 Pet. 675, in The Panama, Olc. 354, F. C. 10,703, on point that court of admiralty will adjust all claims upon a fund in its possession, probably refers to this case.

Distinguished in Braithwaite v. Jordan, 5 N. Dak. 252, 65 N. W. 720, 31 L. R. A. 259, holding stay bond on appeal in admiralty is not without consideration.

Repeal of statute.—A statute will not govern a case on appeal in admiralty unless it is an existing valid statute when the decree of the lower court is affirmed, p. 67.

This holding is approved and applied in the following citing cases: U. S. v. Van Vliet, 22 Fed. 643, holding where penal statute is repealed after conviction of defendant, judgment will be arrested; Pope v. Lewis, 4 Ala. 489, 491, and Saco v. Gurney, 34 Me. 14, collecting cases and refusing to award penalty allowed by statute where penal law was repealed pending conviction; First Nat. Bank v. Henderson, 101 Cal. 310, 35 Pac. 900, reviewing cases and affirming judgment of lower court for plaintiff when statute prohibiting action by plaintiff is repealed pending appeal; Bank v. State, 12 Ga. 492, reviewing cases, and denying penalty where penal statute was repealed before judgment; Keller v. State, 12 Md. 326, 71 Am. Dec. 597, holding where penal statute is repealed before judgment for penalty is affirmed, judgment must be reversed; Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co., 101 Pa. St. 150, holding repeal of statute imposing tax and penalty, reserving right to tax, ends all suits for penalty. Approved in Folger v. The Robert G. Shaw, 2 Wood. & M. 540, F. C. 4,899, holding after appeal in admiralty, if appeal is abandoned, in absence of other record before court, judgment below will be affirmed.

Distinguished in Hargroves v. Chambers, 30 Ga. 602, holding that liability of directors for corporation's debt is not extinguished by expiration of company's charter.

Miscellaneous.—Cited in Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 647, 22 Pac. 30, as an instance where court went outside of record to do justice between the parties.

3 Pet. 68, 7 L. 605, UNITED STATES BANK v. SWAN.

Practice.— When an appeal is dismissed for failure to file transcript in required time, appellant has whole term in which to file it and reinstate case, and an official certificate of such dismissal may not be given by clerk during the term, p. 68.

Cited with approval in Trevino v. Stillman, 48 Tex. 565, holding mandate of appellate court will not issue until end of term in absence of special order.

3 Pet. 69-86, 7 L. 606, BELL v. CUNNINGHAM.

Agency.— Where principal has no knowledge of agent's deviation from orders, his approval of agent's acts does not amount to a ratification of agent's deviation, pp. 76, 82.

The following citing cases affirm and apply this rule: Wheeler v. N. W. Sleigh Co., 39 Fed. 351, holding no ratification where agent, ordered to sell stock, sells stock and dividend, and principal retains proceeds, not knowing facts; Starr v. Galgate Ship Co., 68 Fed. 243, 29 U. S. App. 599, holding no ratification where agent changes charter without authority and principal confirms charter without notice of change; Nichols v. Bruns, 5 Dak. Ter. 34, 37 N. W. 755, collecting cases, and holding principal not liable for deceit of unauthorized agent by accepting benefits without knowledge of deceit; Croom v. Swan, 1 Fla. 216, holding principal not liable for agent's false warranty, of which former is unaware; Oxford Lake Line v. First National Bank (Fla.), 24 So. 483, holding agent cannot defend principal's action on ground of ratification where latter had knowledge of former's acts; Penn., etc., Co. v. Dandridge, 8 Gill & J. 324, 29 Am. Dec. 558, holding corporation does not adopt contract made by agent by retaining contract price, unless terms of contract were fully known; Adams Express Co. v. Trego, 35 Md. 69, holding unauthorized permission of agent to sub-agent to engage in competition is not ratified by principal where latter had no knowledge of facts; Bannon v. Warfield, 42 Md. 42, holding agent employed to lend money may not rely on ratification of principal when latter did not know facts concerning property pledged; Taliaferro v. First National Bank, 71 Md. 214, 17 Atl. 1039, holding principal's indorsement of securities in ignorance of wrongful sale by agent does not ratify sale; Hyde v. Larkin, 35 Mo. App. 373, holding corporation does not ratify assignment of cause of action in its favor by receiving money therefor, unless it knew terms of the contract; Smith v. Tracy, 36 N. Y. 86, holding receipt by principal of proceeds of sale, in ignorance of agent's unauthorized warranty, is not ratification.

Agency.— An agent is bound to follow such instructions as principal gives him and is liable in damages for any injury resulting from a departure from his orders, p. 79.

Approved and rule applied in Ferguson v. Porter, 3 Fla. 39, holding gratuitous factor liable for loss of goods shipped to Charleston, instead of New Orleans as ordered.

Agency.— If principal, with full knowledge of facts, receives and sells goods purchased for him contrary to his orders, without signifying intent to disavow agent's acts, jury may fairly infer a ratification, p. 81.

Approved and applied in the following citing cases: Perkins v. Currier, 3 Wood. & M. 86, F. C. 10,985, holding where lessee of business makes unauthorized change, and lessor, knowing all facts, acquiesces for long time, there is ratification; Hitchcock v. McGehee, 7 Port. 562, holding silence of principal does not amount to ratification of acts of which he is not informed until lapse of great length of time; Lee v. Fontaine, 10 Ala. 771, 44 Am. Dec. 513, holding principal ratifies agent's deviation by his silence when he does not object to same in reasonable time; Minnesota L. O. Co. v. Montague, 65 Iowa, 73, 21 N. W. 187, holding principal's silence for more than reasonable time after he ought to have learned the facts of agent's transaction, amounts to ratification; Low v. Railroad Co., 45 N. H. 379, holding corporation liable for services rendered in perfecting its organization, where company takes benefit of services with full knowledge of facts; East Tenn. R. R. v. Nelson, 1 Cold. 279, holding ratification of principal is question of fact for jury where principal received and sold goods without objection.

Measure of damages for breach of agent's orders is the positive and direct loss from such breach; speculative damages, dependent on possible successive schemes, should not be allowed, p. 85.

Cited with approval and rule applied in McAlpin v. Lee, 12 Conn. 133, 30 Am. Dec. 610, holding, in action for price of goods sold, damages will not be reduced, because superior goods contracted for were of greater value than contract price; Tide Water, etc., Co. v. Archer, 9 Gill & J. 535, holding, in condemning land for canal, only damages for direct loss resulting immediately from canal may be allowed; McWhirter v. Douglas, 1 Cold. 603, refusing to award damages for breach of promise to pay difference in profits of two businesses; Stell v. Paschal, 41 Tex. 644, holding, in action for breach of contract for sale of cotton gin, speculative profits as ginner not proper element of damages; dissenting opinion, Moses v. Old Dominion, etc., Co., 82 Va. 29, holding, in action by lessor against lessee for damages to building, actual compensation is measure of damage. Cited, but without particular application, in Tremain v. Cohoes Co., 2 N. Y. 165, 51 Am. Dec. 285, holding, in action for damages to property by blasting, evidence of defendant's care is inadmissible.

Damages.—Actual loss of profits from sale of article which agent has failed to purchase for principal may be allowed, but not vindictive damages, pp. 85-86.

Approved and rule applied in Ryder v. Thayer, 3 La. Ann. 150, holding damages for agent's failure to ship goods as directed is their value at port of destination, without exemplary damages; Farwell v. Price, 30 Mo. 593, holding, in action by principal against agent for conversion of goods at New Orleans, consigned to Boston, measure of damages is value of goods at Boston; Heineman v. Heard, 2 Hun, 332, holding, in action against agent for failure to buy silk as ordered, measure of damages is profit at place of consignment. Approved in Heineman v. Heard, 50 N. Y. 37, holding loss of profits is element of damages in action against agent for failure to buy silk as ordered. Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in Barbour Co. v. Horn, 48 Ala. 577, holding, in action for damages for personal injuries, jury may not consider wealth of parties; Frink v. Coe, 4 G. Greene, 559, 61 Am. Dec. 144, holding exemplary damages may be given for gross negligence of stage company in employing known drunken driver; Warwick v. Chase, 23 Md. 161, holding, in action for damages for agent's breach of orders, measure of damages is too uncertain to permit attachment.

Distinguished in Ex parte Becker, 3 Fed. Cas. 19, holding, where goods are to be delivered at Boston for sale abroad, measure of damages is market price at Boston.

3 Pet. 87-91, 7 L. 612, MAGRUDER v. UNION BANK.

Bills and notes.—Payment must be demanded from maker of promissory note and notice of non-payment forwarded to indorser in due time to render indorser liable, p. 90.

Cited and applied in Thorn v. Rice, 15 Me. 266, holding no sufficient notice to indorser where holder of note gave letter of notice to neighbor of indorser to give to latter. Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in Cox v. National Bank, 100 U. S. 712, 25 L. 741, holding, where notary could not with due diligence find acceptors of bill of exchange, demand at customary haunts and notice to indorsers at best-known address is sufficient.

Bills and notes.—Where maker of promissory note dies before its maturity and letters of administration are taken out by the indorser, demand and notice of non-payment must nevertheless be made before indorser becomes liable, p. 91.

Cited, affirmed and applied as follows: United States Bank v. Tyler, 4 Pet. 384, 7 L. 894, holding indorser is not liable on note when maker has been allowed to escape from jail and holder has not sued jailer; Toby v. Maurian, 7 La. 495, holding, where maker dies on last day of grace and notary thereupon protests note and notifies indorser, no demand sufficient to bind indorser; Union Ins. Co. v. Rodd, 26 La. Ann. 715, holding action will not lie against indorser of note in absence of demand on maker, unless impossibility of demand is proved; Carolina Bank v. Wallace, 13 S. C. 353, 36 Am. Rep. 698, holding, where maker of note is also executor of indorser, he is nevertheless entitled to notice of non-payment; Hutchison v. Crutcher, 98 Tenn. 436, 39 S. W. 729, 37 L. R. A. 93, holding, where note is payable at certain bank and said bank is closed by insolvency, holder of note must present same to receiver to hold indorser. Approved in Barriere v. Samory, 10 La. Ann. 103, holding three or four hours' search and many inquiries by notary constitute due diligence to find maker.

Executors and administrators.—Where the same person is administrator of the maker of a note and also indorser of the note, the two characters are as entirely distinct as if the persons had been different, p. 90.

Approved and applied in Smith v. Hurd, 7 How. (Miss.) 200, holding, in action against defendant as executor, no decree can be made affecting his rights as guardian.

Miscellaneous.—Union Bank v. Magruder, 7 Pet. 287, 291, 8 L. 688, 689, a second appeal of principal case affirming court's previous decision.

3 Pet. 92-98, 7 L. 614, CHINOWETH v. HASKELL.

Demurrer to evidence.—Where defendants withdraw their case from the jury by demurrer to evidence or submit to verdict for plaintiff, subject to such demurrer, judgment for plaintiff will not be reversed unless the verdict cannot be sustained by any fair construction of evidence, p. 96.

Approved and applied in Pickel v. Isgrigg, 6 Fed. 679; S. C., 10 Biss. 233, holding plaintiff, on whom rests burden of proof, may not demur to defendant's evidence; Higgs v. Shehee, 4 Fla. 394, holding court will order new trial when evidence demurred to is so uncertain that a jury could not render verdict upon it. Approved in note to People v. Roe, 1 Hill, 472, collecting cases.

Public land grants.—Courses and distances are less certain and permanent guides than natural fixed objects on the land; but, in absence of distinguishable natural objects in description, courses and distances must be followed, p. 96.

Cited approvingly and followed in Doe v. Cullum, 4 Ala. 582, holding dispute as to starting point of description must be settled by measuring back from another corner by course and distance; Bruckner's Lessee v. Lawrence, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 28, reviewing cases, holding courses and distances in patent are not disputable by parol evidence of monuments not called for in patent; Opdyke v. Stephens, 28 N. J. L. 86, sustaining charge to jury that, in construing deed, they should award according to course and distance when no monument is mentioned; Negbauer v. Smith, 44 N. J. L. 674, applying rule in action for breach of covenant where grantor did not own entire lot as described by course and distance; Booth v. Strippelman, 26 Tex. 443, holding course and distance cannot be controlled by call for "stake" where such call would include 3,000 acres more than required; Robinson v. Doss, 53 Tex. 507, locating survey by course and distance where natural object is mentioned by mistake.

Distinguished in Alshire v. Hulse, Wright, 171; S. C., 5 Ohio, 534, holding "posts" called for in description in improved country are distinguishable, natural objects and control course and distance.

Public land grants.—The law directs a survey of land granted by United States to be made by sworn officers, and the description thus made by survey is transferred into the grant, p. 96.

Cited generally in McManus v. Carmichael, 3 Iowa, 38, collecting cases on point that United States grants have relation to the surveys, plats and field-notes.

Public land grants — Deeds.—Grant of land must so describe land conveyed that subject granted can be identified by description in instrument itself, p. 96.

Cited and followed in Kennedy v. Townsley, 16 Ala. 245, holding donation by Congress is not invested until land is surveyed and location ascertained; Booth v. Upshur, 26 Tex. 67, holding, where a discrepancy exists between two descriptive objects in survey, evidence to show which is correct is admissible; Norris v. Hunt, 51 Tex. 614, applying rule to deed of United States marshal void for failure to describe land by metes and bounds.

Surveys.—An office survey, not actually made, cannot be made to conform to surveyor's intention when such intention is not indicated on the survey, p. 97.

Distinguished in Robinson v. Doss, 53 Tex. 507, correcting erroneous call in survey when surveyor's intention was apparently thwarted by error; dissenting opinion in Sanborn v. Gunter, 84 Tex. 297, 20 S. W. 78, holding survey should be controlled by intent of surveyor as shown by calls in field-notes.

Public land grants — Deeds.—In grant, courses and distances may be controlled and corrected by other objects of description showing that survey covered ground other than called for by line of grant, p. 98.

Cited to this point, Urquhart v. Burleson, 6 Tex. 511, correcting mistake of "east" for "south" in patent so as to include land actually surveyed.

3 Pet. 99-192, 7 L. 617, INGLIS v. SAILORS' SNUG HARBOR.

Wills.—In construction of will, intention of testator is to be sought after and given effect; if effect cannot lawfully be given to such intention in mode specified, an alternative provided in will must be carried out if lawful, p. 113.

Cited approvingly and rule applied in the following: Elyton Co. v. M'Elrath, 53 Fed. 766, 2 U. S. App. 584, construing devise to wife of property to be "hers and at her disposal during natural life," to carry fee-simple; Fowler v. Duhme, 143 Ind. 259, 42 N. E. 626, reviewing cases, and holding devise to children and to others in case of their death refers to death in testator's lifetime; Miller v. Chittenden, 2 Iowa, 368, collecting cases, applying rule to a grant to trustees for a charitable use; Sewall v. Cargill, 15 Me. 420, sustaining devise to inhabitants of unincorporated town for charitable use, according to evident intent; Wade v. American Col. Soc., 7 Smedes & M. 696, 45 Am. Dec. 329, holding, where apparent intent is that executor shall deliver slaves to trustees for transportation, latter may compel former to act; Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 431.

Wills.—Designation of trustees in a will by their official character is valid and equivalent to naming them by their proper names, p. 114.

Cited approvingly and relied upon in Dunbar v. Soule, 129 Mass. 286, holding devise to "mayor of the city" as trustee appoints mayor at time of testator's death and not the mayor at time of appointment. Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in In re John's Will, 30 Or. 516, 517, 518, 519, 47 Pac. 348, 349, 36 L. R. A. 249, 250, reviewing cases, and holding devise to trustees to be appointed by certain officers will not fail because such officers neglect to appoint.

Distinguished in People v. Ashburner, 55 Cal. 523, holding persons designated by statute to care for public lands are officers whose terms expire by limitation.

Wills — Executory devise.—If testator bequeaths property to an association upon its becoming incorporated within reasonable time, the subsequent incorporation confers on the association the capacity to take and manage the property, p. 114.

The citations collect a great many authorities affirming and applying this principle: Trustees v. State, 14 How. 274, 14 L. 418, holding reservation of land by Congress for seminary of learning vests in corporation formed later to establish such seminary; Ould v. Washington Hospital, 95 U. S. 313, 24 L. 452, reviewing cases, and holding devise to trustees to be conveyed to corporation for foundlings when Congress should create one is valid devise; Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 168, 171, 27 L. 399, 400, 2 S. Ct. 331, 334, reviewing cases, and holding devise of property to use of an educational institute not yet in existence is valid gift as against donee's heirs; Jones

v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 191, 27 L. 408, 2 S. Ct. 350, holding devise to establish hospital and requiring act of incorporation to be obtained is valid charitable devise; Jones v. Habersham, 3 Woods, 480, F. C. 7,465, sustaining devise to trustees with direction to incorporate and establish hospital, although no time for such acts is set; Carter v. Balfour's Admr., 19 Ala. 829, reviewing cases, and sustaining devise to certain charitable societies, regardless of whether they are incorporated or not; Coit v. Comstock, 51 Conn. 385, 50 Am. Rep. 37, collecting cases, and sustaining bequest to executors in trust for charitable organization to be thereafter incorporated; Storrs, etc., School v. Whitney, 54 Conn. 346, 350, 8 Atl. 143, 145, sustaining devise to charitable corporation to be used in certain way, and if use abandoned, then certain sum to be paid other charities, Griffith v. State, 2 Del. Ch. 461, holding devise of property to be rented and proceeds devoted to certain charity not within rule against perpetuities; Universalist Society v. Kimball, 34 Me. 427, sustaining conditional bequest to religious society to be thereafter formed in two years; Milne's Heirs v. Milne's Exrs., 17 La. 58, sustaining legacies to orphan asylums not in esse, but subsequently incorporated; Tappan v. Deblois, 45 Me. 130, reviewing cases, and sustaining devise to trustees for use of American Peace Society, unincorporated at time of devise; Swasey v. American Bible Soc., 57 Me. 525, sustaining devise to first Baptist society that may be organized in certain locality; Going v. Emery, 16 Pick. 118, 26 Am. Dec. 652, sustaining devise to trustees for cause of religion; Odell v. Odell, 10 Allen, 8, 10, sustaining devise to trustees to invest funds and establish charity with accumulations; Taylor v. Trustees, 34 N. J. Eq. 106, sustaining gift to trustees to establish and maintain a school not existing at testator's death; Baptist Church v. Witherell, 3 Paige, 300, 24 Am. Dec. 225, holding where deed is made to unincorporated church society, subsequent incorporation vests legal title; Potter v. Chapin, 6 Paige, 650, sustaining gifts to unincorporated village for erection of schoolhouse; Williams v. Williams, 8 N. Y. 541, 552, sustaining bequest for education of poor children, although no definite cestuis que trust are named; P. E. Public School v. Davis, 31 N. Y. 592, holding, where land is devised to trustees for benefit of school, fee vested in school upon its subsequent incorporation; Burrill v. Boardman, 43 N. Y. 261, 3 Am. Rep. 699, sustaining devise to corporation to be created in two years should two certain lives continue so long; Keith v. Scales (N. C.), 32 S. E. 811, upholding devise in trust for religious use, the trustee being an unincorporated church which had to become incorporated; Williams v. First Presbyterian Society, 1 Ohio St. 500, holding grant to trustees for benefit of unincorporated church is not void for uncertainty; McIntire v. Zanesville, etc., Co., 9 Ohio, 289, 34 Am. Dec. 439, sustaining devise of contingent remainder to company incorporated during existence of particular estate; Trustees v. Adams, 4 Or. 87, holding grant of property may be made to use of company to be subsequently created; Pennoyer v. Wadhams, 20 Or. 284, 25 Pac. 723, 11 L. R. A. 213, sustaining devise to trustees for benefit of church to be thereafter created and maintained; In re John's Will, 30 Or. 519, 47 Pac. 349, 36 L. R. A. 250, collecting cases, and sustaining devise to trustees to create and maintain free schools; Almy v. Jones, 17 R. I. 267, 21 Atl. 617, 12 L. R. A. 416, holding bequest for an art institute after one shall be created and in meantime income to be used for prizes is not void for remoteness; Paschal v. Acklin, 27 Tex. 201, sustaining bequest to trustees to establish seminary of learning not existing at testator's death; Literary Fund v. Dawsons, 10 Leigh, 153, holding devise of property to trustees to procure statute, making it part of public fund, is valid; Kinnaird v. Miller's Exr., 25 Gratt. 121, 123, sustaining devise to trustees for benefit of poor white children, providing legislature did not inhibit; Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 102, 103, 50 N. W. 1108, sustaining bequest to corporation for education of females to be created in five years; Gould v. Taylor Orphan Asylum, 46 Wis. 116, 50 N. W. 423, sustaining devise to trustees for creation of orphan asylum as soon as one is incorporated; Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 413, 414, 446, reviewing cases; Wentworth v. Fernald, 92 Me. 291, 42 Atl. 553, holding valid a devise in trust, after the termination of life interests in certain beneficiaries, to procure appointment of additional trustees and devote the fund forever to an educational use; Urmey v. Wooden, 1 Ohlo St. 164, 59 Am. Dec. 617, sustaining charitable trust for the poor and needy fatherless of two designated townships.

Approved in dissenting opinions in the following: Henderson v. Post, 5 La. Ann. 472, majority holding will providing for laying out city to remain part of testator's succession is void; Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. 455, majority holding dedication to public of landing place cannot be presumed from user for want of grantee; Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 72, 28 N. E. 892, 14 L. R. A. 47, 27 Am. St. Rep. 509, note, majority holding devise invalid because of discretion to convey vested in trustees; Green v. Allen, 5 Humph. 229, majority holding invalid a devise to two unincorporated societies. Cited with approval in Johnson v. Johnson, 92 Tenn. 565, 36 Am. St. Rep. 108, 23 S. W. 116, 22 L. R. A. 181, sustaining devise for charitable use naming wife and daughter as trustees with power to name successors; Laird v. Bass, 50 Tex. 416, holding conveyance to trustees for benefit of church is effectual although not made according to terms of State statute; see also note, 9 Am. Dec. 585. Cited generally in Penny v. Croul, 76 Mich. 480, 43 N. W. 652, 5 L. R. A. 863, sustaining bequest to public water works to maintain and improve grounds and library, also Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 433. Cited but without particular application of the rule in Blair v. Odin, 3

Tex. 299, holding, in action by church to recover land on ground of dedication to church use, complete legal title must be shown.

Distinguished in White v. Fisk, 22 Conn. 54, rejecting bequest to "indigent pious young men preparing for ministry in New Haven" as too uncertain; Fink v. Fink, 12 La. Ann. 321, holding subject of chancery's jurisdiction over charities and testamentary trusts has no application in Louisiana; Church Extension v. Smith, 56 Md. 393, holding, where devise is to corporation under legal disability to inherit, property goes to heir subject to later act of legislature; Pearsall v. Post, 20 Wend. 118, holding public cannot acquire use of site for public landing by user for want of definite grantee; Booth v. Baptist Church, 126 N. Y. 241, 28 N. E. 240, declaring invalid a bequest to trustees for benefit of corporation to be created without limiting time; Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 47, 48, 27 Am. St. Rep. 492, 28 N. E. 882, 883, 14 L. R. A. 39, declaring invalid a bequest to trustees giving them discretion to convey, or not, to corporation to be created; Stonestreet v. Doyle, 75 Va. 364, 40 Am. Rep. 732, declaring void a devise for creation of free school without provision for subsequent incorporation; P. E. E. Society v. Churchman, 80 Va. 765, sustaining bequest to corporation in existence at testator's death.

Criticised in Burr v. Smith, 7 Vt. 303, 29 Am. Dec. 184, sustaining devise to American Bible Society as gift to charitable use not as executory devise. And see Owens v. Missionary Society, 14 N. Y. 384, 67 Am. Dec. 161, holding subsequent incorporation of legatee association does not affect its disability to inherit.

Executory devise.—By an executory devise, a freehold may be made to commence in futuro, and needs no particular estate to support it, p. 115.

Cited and followed in Miller v. Chittenden, 4 Iowa, 270, 274, reviewing cases and sustaining grant of property to trustees for use of a church not then in existence; Goodell v. Union Assn., 29 N. J. Eq. 35, sustaining gift of $1,000 yearly to Young Men's Christian Association incorporated after testator's death. In re John's Will, 30 Or. 514, 47 Pac. 348, 36 L. R. A. 249, sustaining devise to charitable use, trustees to be appointed fifteen years after testator's death. Approved in dissenting opinion in Succession of Franklin, 7 La. Ann. 429, 430, majority rejecting devise to trustees to establish and maintain academy.

Executory devise.—A present devise to a devisee not in esse is not good, but a devise to take effect upon happening of some future event is valid as an executory devise, p. 116.

Cited approvingly and applied in Bristol v. Atwater, 50 Conn. 407, holding under devise to S., remainder to C. if S. die without issue, C.'s interest vested only on death of S. without issue; Succession of Franklin, 7 La. Ann. 415, holding devise to trustees to establish and maintain academy is devise in presenti and invalid; Farrington v.

Putnam, 90 Me. 431, 37 Atl. 661, 38 L. R. A. 349, and De Camp v. Dobbins, 29 N. J. Eq. 41, holding where property is left to charitable institute in excess of capital allowed by law, legislature may later amend law. Approved in Literary Fund v. Dawsons, 1 Rob. (Va.) 418, holding devise to unincorporated society falls for omission to provide in will for subsequent corporation.

Executory devises are not to be governed by rules of law applicable to common-law conveyances; the only question is whether contingencies are to happen in reasonable time or not, p. 117.

Cited approvingly in Miller v. Chittenden, 2 Iowa, 376, reviewing cases and sustaining grant to trustees to hold for charitable use without naming specific beneficiary.

Wills.— Courts will seek and enforce any general intent of testator consistent with rules of law; and if testator has prescribed modes of carrying it into effect which law does not permit, court must give effect to general intention although the mode fail, p. 117.

Cited and principle affirmed and applied as follows: Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen, 556, where devise was to trustees to create public sentiment against slavery, to act without bonds, held trust valid but waiver of bonds void; Den v. McMurtrie, 15 N.J.L. 280, gathering and enforcing apparent intent from unintelligible devise of lands; Moore v. Lyons, 25 Wend. 124, holding in devise of remainder to B and C, or survivor, survivor at time of testator's death was intended; Shotwell v. Mott, 2 Sandf. Ch. 59, holding devises to poor of certain town and to certain society are not void for uncertainty; Pell v. Mercer, 14 R. I. 430, holding where will directs purchase of certain bonds, clause does not fail because such bonds cannot be had; Literary Fund v. Dawsons, 1 Rob. (Va.) 421, 423, holding where devise depends on legislative action, testator intended it to act in reasonable time; Literary Fund v. Dawsons, 1 Rob. (Va.) 427, holding where will provides trustees shall apply for statute, intent is complied with if act is passed without application; Dunlop v. Harrison, 14 Gratt. 257, 260, collecting cases and holding illegal provision for holding slaves in trust for free negroes does not defeat alternative that slaves be sold for their use. Approved in Lepage v. McNamara, 5 Iowa, 145, holding where devise is void for uncertainty court cannot give effect to will by modelling new provisions; Virginia v. Levy, 23 Gratt. 40, holding gift of land for benefit of children of United States navy warrant officers void for uncertainty; Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 433.

Trusts.— Whenever a person, by will, gives property and points out the object, the property, and the way in which it shall go, a trust is created, unless he shows clearly that his expressed desire shall be controlled by the trustee, p. 119.

Cited with approval and applied in Johnson v. Mayne, 4 Iowa, 195, reviewing cases and holding property left to church incapable of taking legal title, is charged with trust in favor of church; Moore v. Moore, 4 Dana, 357, 29 Am. Dec. 420, holding equity will enforce devise directing sale of estate and application of proceeds to education of poor orphans of county; Wade v. American Col. Soc., 7 Smedes & M. 695, 45 Am. Dec. 328, holding will providing for transportation of slaves imposes a trust which equity will enforce; McIntire v. Zanesville, etc., Co., 9 Ohio, 288, 34 Am. Dec. 438, holding devise of land for benefit of poor of Zanesville, upon death of daughter without issue, creates valid trust; In re John's Will, 30 Or. 531, 47 Pac. 353, 36 L. R. A. 254, holding where devise in trust for charity does not provide for conveyance to trustees, it is still charged with trust, and equity will remedy omission; Bell Co. v. Alexander, 22 Tex. 362, 73 Am. Dec. 274, holding devise of land to county for benefit of school children vests title in county in trust. Cited but without particular application in White v. Keller, 68 Fed. 802, 30 U. S. App. 275, holding that devise of land in Mississippi should be controlled by law of that State.

Repeal of statute.—Where act is passed incorporating certain persons to enable them to take and manage property according to terms of a will, such act is repeal pro tanto of statute prohibiting devise to corporation, p. 119.

Cited with approval in San Antonio v. Odin, 15 Tex. 545, holding where Texan congress declared lands to belong to bishop in trust for congregations, such declaration may be construed as legislative grant.

Citizenship.—All persons born within the colonies of North America, whilst subject to crown of Great Britain, were natural-born British subjects, p. 120.

Cited and relied upon in United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 659, 42 L. 894, 18 S. Ct. 460, reviewing cases and holding Chinese, born in United States of alien parents having permanent residence here, are citizens of United States; McKay v. Campbell, 2 Saw. 122, F. C. 8,840, holding person born in Oregon of British parents during joint occupation is British subject.

Alienage.—According to American rule, American ante-nati ceased to be British subjects from date of declaration of independence; according to English rule, from date of treaty of peace in 1783, p. 121.

Cited with approval and rule applied in United States v. Ritchie, 17 How. 540, 15 L. 240, and United States v. Lucero, 1 N. Mex. 455, holding declarations of civil equality by Mexican independent government invested Indians with privilege of citizenship; McKinney v. Sayiego, 18 How. 238, 15 L. 367, holding person moving from Texas to Mexico prior to former's declaration of independence is an alien; State v. Adams, 45 Iowa, 101, 24 Am. Rep. 762, holding person remaining in America after independence, acquires citizenship not lost by removal to Canada; Trimbles v. Harrison, 1 B. Mon. 143, 144, holding residence in Boston until long after peace is prima facie evidence of election to become American citizen; Kilpatrick v. Sisneros, 23 Tex. 126, holding persons removing from Texas shortly after independence did not forfeit citizenship. Approved in Boyd v. Thayer, 143 U. S. 163, 36 L. 110, 12 S. Ct. 382, holding Congress effected a collective naturalization of inhabitants upon admitting Nebraska into Union, Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. 680. Cited with approval in dissenting opinion, Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 577, 15 L. 772, majority holding that free negroes whose ancestors were slaves are not citizens of United States.

Alienage.—The right to inherit depends upon the existing state of allegiance at time of descent cast, p. 121.

Alienage.—The British rule is that American ante-nati by remaining in America after peace lost their character of British subjects; American rule is that by withdrawing from this country and adhering to British government they never acquired character of American citizens, p. 122.

Cited and followed in Orser v. Hoag, 3 Hill, 81, 82, 83, reviewing cases and holding A. and all his family who joined British forces and moved to Nova Scotia in 1782 were aliens. Cited generally in Shanks v. Dupont, 3 Pet. 245, 7 L. 667, holding removal of American woman with British husband to England in 1781, fixed her allegiance to British crown; United States v. One Hundred Barrels of Cement, 27 Fed. Cas. 294, holding citizens of rebellious States cannot sue in United States courts.

Allegiance.—In all revolutions like ours, inhabitants must have right of election as to their allegiance; and a minor owes allegiance to the country chosen by his father subject to his dissent at majority, pp. 121, 122.

Cited and relied upon in Crane v. Reeder, 25 Mich. 307, holding person residing in Detroit after peace and not declaring intent to remain British, became American; McVeigh v. Bank, 26 Gratt. 844, holding indorser of note did not waive right to notice by joining Confederate army; Walker v. Beauchler, 27 Gratt. 523, holding where creditor sold debtor's land during war, debtor being in Confederate lines could redeem at conclusion of hostilities; Haymond v. Camden, 22 W. Va. 196, holding void a proceeding by northern creditor against Confederate debtor pending the civil war.

Denied in Calais v. Marshfield, 30 Me. 518, holding child residing in United States with father after peace and removing to Canada at majority was still American citizen.

Citizenship.—Persons in United States at time of declaration of independence are presumed prima facie to have become citizens of United States, but evidence is admissible to show their election was exercised otherwise, p. 123.

Cited with approval in Tobin v. Walkinshaw, McAll. 189, 190, F. C. 14,070, holding testimony is admissible to rebut presumption that citizen of Mexico remaining in California after cession is American citizen.

Citizenship.—A minor taken from this country before treaty of peace and continuing to live in British dominion after majority without dissent from election thus made for him, is a British subject, pp. 123-124.

Cited with approval and applied in Jones v. McMasters, 20 How. 20, 15 L. 810, holding woman taken as a child from Texas to Mexico before independence of former, is prima facie an alien; Trimbles v. Harrison, 1 B. Mon. 146, holding minor, taken to England in 1798 and there married to Briton, dissents from parents' election to be American; Munro v. Merchant, 28 N. Y. 34, holding minor child living at New York during war and moving to Canada before peace to join British father is an alien; Hardy v. De Leon, 5 Tex. 237, holding infant child of person residing in Texas at time of independence is entitled to rights of citizen. Approved in Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. 682.

Citizenship.—Allegiance may be dissolved by mutual consent of government and its citizens; government may release governed from allegiance, p. 125.

Approved and applied in White v. Burnley, 20 How. 250, 15 L. 890, holding recital in deed that grantor is citizen of Mexico does not establish alienage. Cited generally in Comitis v. Parkerson, 56 Fed. 558, 22 L. R. A. 150, and n., collecting cases.

Citizenship.—Person born in New York during British occupation of 1783, of royalist father, is born a British subject under protection of British government, and owing no allegiance to State of New York, p. 126.

Approved and applied in McKay v. Campbell, 2 Sawy. 128, F. C. 8,840, holding person born of British parents in Oregon during joint occupation, is not born under obedience to United States, and, therefore, not a citizen.

Statutes.—In cases depending upon State statutes, and more especially those respecting title to real property, Federal courts apply the construction applied by the State courts in like cases, pp. 127, 130.

Cited and followed in Loring v. Marsh, 2 Cliff. 492, F. C. 8,515, sustaining devise to charitable uses in consonance with practice of State court; In re Wyllie, 2 Hughes, 459, F. C. 18,112, collecting cases and deciding case under State bankruptcy law according to decision of highest State court.

Wills.— A right of entry to lands in adverse possession of another is devisable under New York statute, p. 128.

In writ of right, tenant can, under mise joined, set up title out of himself and in third person; writ of right brings into controversy the mere right of the parties to the suit and tenant may show that the other's right is inferior to that set up against him, p. 133.

Cited and followed, Lyon's Heirs v. Mottuse, 19 Ala. 465, holding plaintiff having superior title may recover without proving disseizin of ancestor; see also valuable note, 50 Am. Dec. 175, classifying States where writ of right is in use.

Writ of right.— On mise joined on the mere right, demandant, under count for entire right, may recover less quantity than the entirety, pp. 134, 135.

Wills.— Devise to chancellor of State of New York, the mayor and recorder, the president of chamber of commerce, etc., is not a devise to individuals but to the persons successively holding these offices, p. 146, per Story, J., dissenting.

Cited and approved, Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 423, holding "successors" is not always indispensable to vest interest by grant in successor of sole corporation.

Retrospective statutes.— State legislatures have no power to pass law divesting vested legal rights p. 154, per Story, J., dissenting.

Cited with approval in note, 5 Am. Dec. 315.

Citizenship.— Two things must concur to create citizenship — first, birth within dominions of sovereign, and second, birth within protection or obedience of sovereign, p. 155, per Story, J., dissenting.

Cited and followed, Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. 670, holding person born in New York in 1819, of alien persons, during temporary visit, is citizen of United States; United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 660, 682, 42 L. 895, 902, 18 S. Ct. 461, 470, holding Chinese child born in United States of alien parents having permanent residence here is citizen of United States. Approved in opinion of Hathaway, J., 44 Me. 523, appendix.

Citizenship.— Children of enemies born in a place within dominions of another sovereign then occupied by them by conquest are still aliens, p. 156, per Story, J., dissenting.

Approved in United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 660, 42 L. 895, 18 S. Ct. 461.

Citizenship.— Persons in United States at time of treaty of 1783, whether here or not at time of declaration of independence, are citizens of United States, p. 161, per Story, J., dissenting.

Approved in opinion of Davis, J., 44 Me. 579, appendix.

Citizenship.—Children, even of aliens, born in a country while parents are resident there under protection of the government, and owing temporary allegiance thereto, are subjects by birth at common law, p. 164, per Story, J., dissenting.

Cited approvingly, United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 660, 42 L. 895, 18 S. Ct. 461, holding Chinese child born in United States of alien parents during permanent residence here is citizen.

Real property.—Party having mere right of entry upon lands of which he has been disseized could not, at common law, grant or assign the same, p. 176, per Story, J., dissenting.

Approved in Campbell v. Point St. Works, 12 R. I. 453, holding sheriff's sale of A.'s interest in property in adverse possession of B. is void.

Miscellaneous.—Baring v. Erdman, 2 Fed. Cas. 788, and Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 416, holding statutes in favor of public institutions and charities are to be liberally construed; Tinker v. Van Dyke, 1 Flip. 527, F. C. 14,058, erroneous.

3 Pet. 193-209, 7 L. 650, EX PARTE WATKINS.

| | PAGE. |
|---|-------|
| Supreme Court has no criminal jurisdiction..... | 37 |
| Habeas corpus, power of Supreme Court to award | 38 |
| When should be denied..... | 38 |
| Common-law usage, when pertinent..... | 39 |
| Commitment by competent court is a sufficient answer to the writ..... | 39 |
| Judgment is conclusive..... | 39 |
| Judgment of competent court is conclusive and not reviewable by habeas corpus..... | 41 |
| Such judgment is conclusive, though erroneous | 41 |
| Judgment of Circuit Court for District of Columbia is of this order, and an answer to habeas corpus proceedings | 43 |
| Judgment of competent tribunal binding until reversed..... | 44 |
| Inferior courts defined..... | 46 |
| Courts of limited jurisdiction..... | 46 |
| Federal judgments are binding though jurisdiction do not affirmatively appear, | 47 |
| Supreme Court may not revise criminal cause by habeas corpus | 47 |
| Court-martial judgment may be collaterally questioned..... | 48 |

Federal Supreme Court has no jurisdiction in criminal cases to revise, reverse or affirm judgments of lower courts, p. 201.

Cited and followed in In re Callicot, 8 Blatchf. 91, F. C. 2,323, holding circuit judge has no power to review on habeas corpus judgment of conviction by Circuit Court; United States v. Plumer, 3 Cliff. 27, F. C. 16,055, denying application for writ of error from Circuit Court to Supreme Court in murder case. Approved in United States v. McElroy, 2 Mont. 496, interpreting statute giving appeal from District Court of territory. Approved in Forsyth v. United States, 9 How. 572, 13 L. 263, holding, however, under act of Congress, Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction, civil and criminal, over territorial courts of Florida. Approved in dissenting opinions in Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 185, 21 L. 882, majority discharging prisoner on ground that Circuit Court exceeded its authority in sentencing him twice; Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 283, 25 L. 657, majority holding, on division of Circuit Court, that trial of revenue official for murder may be transferred to Federal courts.

Habeas corpus.—Power to award writ is conferred on Federal Supreme Court by fourteenth section of judiciary act, p. 201.

Cited and holding affirmed and relied upon in Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 166, 21 L. 875, collecting cases, and holding writ will issue to determine whether Circuit Court has exceeded its authority; Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 375, 25 L. 718, issuing writ to test constitutionality of election law under which prisoner was convicted; Ex parte Des Rochers, McAll. 73, F. C. 3,824, issuing writ at instance of litigant to determine legality of imprisonment of judge; In re Kaine, 14 Fed. Cas. 87. Cited generally in In re Barry, 136 U. S. 607, 34 L. 507, 42 Fed. 120, F. C. 1,059, note, on point that Federal courts have no powers other than those expressly conferred; Electoral College of South Carolina, 1 Hughes, 588, F. C. 4,336, issuing writ and discharging prisoners because acting in Federal capacity as election officers; Seavey v. Seymour, 3 Cliff. 443, F. C. 12,596, releasing minors enlisted in army from custody of military authorities; State v. Neel, 48 Ark. 288, 3 S. W. 633; In re McDonald, 16 Fed. Cas. 23. Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in United States v. New Bedford, etc., Co., 1 Wood. & M. 408, F. C. 15,867, holding States may punish crimes jurisdiction over which has not been delegated to general government.

Habeas corpus.—Where court is satisfied, upon application for writ, that prisoner would be remanded upon the return, writ ought not to be awarded, p. 201.

This holding is affirmed and relied upon by the following citing cases: Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 110, 18 L. 292, holding Circuit Court was justified in refusing writ when satisfied from prisoner's showing that he was rightfully detained; Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 250, 29 L. 871, 6 S. Ct. 739, and In re Hacker, 73 Fed. 467, affirming denial of writ by Circuit Court on ground that prisoner would be remanded on return of writ; Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 301, 32 L. 408, 9 S. Ct. 78, denying writ where it appears from petition that prisoner is rightfully held; Iasigi v. Van de Carr, 166 U. S. 394, 41 L. 1049, 17 S. Ct. 596, holding where prisoner is dismissed from consular service pending return to writ, it is not error to dismiss writ; In re Barry, 136 U. S. 601, 34 L. 505, 42 Fed. 116, F. C. 1,059, denying writ because petition shows prisoner would be remanded upon return of writ; Ex parte Hill, 38 Ala. 443, holding writ should be refused where petition itself shows judge applied to has not jurisdiction; Bethuram v. Black, 11 Bush, 632, sustaining demurrer to petition for writ; Sims' Case, 7 Cush. 292, refusing writ upon consideration of petition; State v. Dobson, 135 Mo. 11, 36 S. W. 240, holding writ will not issue as of course where petition is insufficient; Williamson's Case, 26 Pa. St. 17, 67 Am. Dec. 379, considering legality of commitment upon application for writ. See also valuable note, 67 Am. Dec. 396; Ex parte Vallandigham, 2S Fed. Cas. 920, refusing writ to military prisoner where court knows it will not be obeyed. Cited generally in In re Terry Contempt, 13 Sawy. 460, quoting from opinion of Supreme Court in In re Terry, 128 U. S. 301, 32 L. 408, 9 S. Ct. 78; In re Kaine, 14 Fed. Cas. 87.

Habeas corpus.—In absence of laws prescribing use of this writ, inquiries as to its use at common law are pertinent, p. 201.

Cited approvingly, Ex parte Kaine, 3 Blatchf. 5, F. C. 7,597, holding New York decision under statute of that State regulating habeas corpus proceedings is no authority in Federal court; Ex parte Randolph, 2 Brock. 476, F. C. 11,558, discharging upon habeas corpus person detained under civil process as at common law; Ex parte Des Rochers, McAll. 74, F. C. 3,824, issuing writ at instance of litigant to determine legality of imprisonment of judge; In re Barry, 136 U. S. 620, 34 L. 511, 42 Fed. 129, F. C. 1,059, holding Circuit Court will pass on application for writ to determine custody of child according to common-law principles; Peltier v. Pennington, 14 N. J. L. 318, refusing the writ as unwarranted by the authorities; In re Kaine, 14 Fed. Cas. 88, and In re Reynolds, 20 Fed. Cas. 608, holding proceedings on habeas corpus are not controlled by State statutes, but by rules of common law. Cited generally in In re Keeler, Hemp. 308, F. C. 7,637; King v. McLean Asylum, 64 Fed. 347, 348, 21 U. S. App. 481, 26 L. R. A. 792, 793, and United States v. Williamson, 28 Fed. Cas. 689, on point that no law of United States prescribes cases in which writ shall issue; In re McDonald, 16 Fed. Cas. 25.

Judgment in its nature concludes the subject on which it is rendered and pronounces the law of the case; it ends inquiry respecting the fact by deciding it, p. 202.

Approved in Darden v. Lines, 2 Fla. 571, holding pro forma decree by consent of parties is not a decision and no appeal lies; Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 600, 10 L. 610, concurring opinion, holding Supreme Court cannot review judgment of Circuit Court refusing mandate to secretary of navy. Cited, but without particular application of rule, in Fraser v. Willey, 2 Fla. 119, dissenting opinion.

Habeas corpus.—Court issuing writ can inquire into sufficiency of cause of commitment; but if it be judgment of court of competent jurisdiction, that in itself is sufficient cause, and court may not look beyond judgment, p. 202.

Cited with approval and rule applied in Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 339, 11 L. 291, holding judgment cannot be attacked collaterally, although it does not recite jurisdictional facts; In re Metzger, 5 How. 190, 12 L. 110, reviewing cases, and refusing writ to prisoner held by district judge for extradition; In re Wilson, 140 U. S. 583, 35 L. 516, 11 S. Ct. 873, denying writ to review proceedings resulting in indictment of prisoner after his conviction by Arizona District Court; In re Martin, 5 Blatchf. 310, F. C. 9,151, holding Circuit Court may require, in habeas corpus proceeding, evidence taken by commissioner to decide legality of detention; In re Davison, 22 Blatchf. 476, 21 Fed. 621, holding, in habeas corpus by person convicted by court-martial, only question is jurisdiction of that court-martial; Ex parte Jenkins, 2 Wall. Jr. 528, F. C. 7,259, discharging United States marshals illegally arrested and detained on warrants of justice of peace; In re Jordan, 49 Fed. 241, holding prisoner convicted by State court of competent jurisdiction cannot have errors of such court reviewed in Federal court on habeas corpus; Ex parte Hill, 38 Ala. 503, holding State court must reject application for writ when it appears prisoner is held by authority of Confederate States; Ex parte Hubbard, 65 Ala. 474, refusing writ to prisoner detained under judgment of city court of competent jurisdiction; Cooper v. People, 13 Colo. 371, 22 Pac. 801, 6 L. R. A. 442, concurring opinion, holding court has no authority to release prisoner committed by another court of concurrent jurisdiction; Smith v. Hess, 91 Ind. 429, collecting cases, and refusing on habeas corpus to review trial of prisoner held by conviction of court of competent jurisdiction; Ex parte Holman, 28 Iowa, 97, 98, 4 Am. Rep. 163, refusing in State court to release prisoners held by authority of Federal court; Bell v. State, 4 Gill, 305, 45 Am. Dec. 132, and State v. Glenn, 54 Md. 608, refusing to discharge prisoner held by judgment of competent court, although it be erroneous; Fleming v. Clark, 12 Allen, 195, refusing writ to prisoner convicted by Massachusetts Superior Court; In re Ream, 54 Neb. 669, 75 N. W. 24, denying writ to prisoner after trial and conviction in court of competent jurisdiction; Ex parte Winston, 9 Nev. 75, refusing to discharge prisoner convicted by justice of peace having jurisdiction of his offense; State v. Towle, 42 N. H. 542, reviewing cases and refusing to pass upon regularity of commitment for contempt by justice of peace; Ex parte Bushnell, 9 Ohio St. 183, remanding prisoner held by conviction in United States District Court; Ex parte Ball, 2 Gratt. 590, refusing to discharge slave after conviction as free man by competent court; Ex parte Marx, 86 Va. 44, 9 S. E. 477, refusing to consider insufficiency of evidence at trial of prisoner after conviction in competent court; In re Osterhaus, 18 Fed. Cas. 897, refusing writ to prisoner after conviction in territorial court.

Cited generally in In re Barry, 136 U. S. 604, 34 L. 506, 42 Fed. 118, F. C. 1,059, describing writ as one bringing in body of prisoner to be discharged if restraint is illegal; In re Barry, 136 U. S.

612, 34 L. 508, 42 Fed. 124, F. C. 1,059, holding, under habeas corpus act, Circuit Court has no power to determine between parents' right to infant child; Yarbrough v. State, 2 Tex. 521, holding in Texas appeal does not lie in habeas corpus proceedings from District to Supreme Court; People v. Liscomb, 60 N. Y. 566, 19 Am. Rep. 215; Ex parte Davis, 7 Fed. Cas. 47, In re McDonald, 16 Fed. Cas. 26, holding Federal courts may grant writ where prisoner is not held upon any formal commitment. Approved in dissenting opinion, Hammond v. People, 32 Ill. 472, majority holding appeal does not lie from decision of lower court in habeas corpus proceeding. Cited obiter in Southworth v. United States, 151 U. S. 185, 38 L. 121, 14 S. Ct. 276, holding, in action for services in drawing up warrants, it is immaterial whether persons arrested may be discharged on habeas corpus.

Judgments of court of record, whose jurisdiction is final, is conclusive on all the world, and cannot be reviewed by habeas corpus proceedings, pp. 202-203.

Cited and followed in Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 339, 11 L. 291, holding where power of court to make order depends on certain facts, making of order is conclusive of facts; In re Wilson, 140 U. S. 583, 35 L. 516, 11 S. Ct. 873, refusing to review proceedings of grand jury indicting prisoner after his conviction by Arizona District Court; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 600, 39 L. 1108, 15 S. Ct. 912, refusing to review finding of Circuit Court as to fact of prisoner's disobedience of court's order; In re Lennon, 166 U. S. 553, 41 L. 1112, 17 S. Ct. 660, holding prisoner cannot show on habeas corpus that he is citizen of Michigan to release himself from injunction against him as citizen of Ohio; Holmes v. Oregon, etc., R. R., 9 Fed. 233, 7 Sawy. 386, holding finding of Probate Court, that it has jurisdiction by reason of intestate's residence, is conclusive; Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 540, 54 Am. Dec. 232, holding sheriff liable for failure to enforce order of court of competent jurisdiction; In re Lybarger, 2 Wash. 135, 25 Pac. 1077, denying writ to prisoner convicted by competent court.

Distinguished in In re Wong Yung Quy, 6 Sawy. 239, 47 Fed. 718, reviewing cases, and reviewing decision of State court claimed by prisoner to be in violation of Constitution and treaties of United States. See also discussion in note, 23 Am. St. Rep. 109.

Habeas corpus.—Imprisonment under judgment cannot be unlawful unless that judgment be absolute nullity; and it is not nullity if court has general jurisdiction of subject although it be erroneous, p. 203.

A number of citing cases affirm and apply this principle as follows: In re Wilson, 140 U. S. 583, 35 L. 516, 11 S. Ct. 873, refusing to grant writ to prisoner convicted by District Court of Arizona; In re Delgado, 140 U. S. 588, 35 L. 580, 11 S. Ct. 875, refusing on appeal from order denying writ to consider any point save jurisdiction of imprisoning court; In re Chapman, 156 U. S. 215, 39 L. 402, 15 S. Ct. 332, refusing to issue writ to prisoner held by District of Columbia Supreme Court for failure to answer questions to United States Senate; In re Bogart, 2 Saw. 401, F. C. 1596, holding prisoner will not be discharged on habeas corpus unless court-martial holding him is acting outside of its jurisdiction; Ex parte Ulrich, 43 Fed. 663, holding Federal District Court has no authority to discharge prisoner convicted in State court of general jurisdiction; Ex parte Hardy, 68 Ala. 332, refusing to review on habeas corpus any question save jurisdiction of court committing prisoner; Dover v. State, 75 Ala. 41, denying writ where court committing had jurisdiction although reversible error appeared; Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 537, 54 Am. Dec. 228, holding sheriff liable for failure to enforce order of court of competent jurisdiction, regardless of error; Ex parte Brandon, 49 Ark. 144, 4 S. W. 452, refusing writ applied for, for purpose of reviewing conviction of prisoner by City Court of competent jurisdiction; Ex parte Gibson, 31 Cal. 627, remanding prisoner where judgment of conviction was erroneous but not void; Kelly v. People, 115 Ill. 589, 56 Am. Rep. 186, 4 N. E. 646, holding where prior conviction increases punishment of prisoner he cannot attack same for error; Lowery v. Howard, 103 Ind. 442, 3 N. E. 126, holding judgment erroneous for failure to call jury to decide penalty, cannot be assailed on habeas corpus; Willis v. Bayles, 105 Ind. 368, 5 N. E. 11, sustaining return to writ showing conviction by competent court not absolutely void; McLaughlin v. Etchison, 127 Ind. 476, 22 Am. St. Rep. 659, 27 N. E. 152, quashing writ where judgment of commitment is not shown to be void; Platt v. Harrison, 6 Iowa, 81, 71 Am. Dec. 391, refusing on habeas corpus to pass upon authority of city council to pass ordinance under which prisoner is held; Elsner v. Shrigley, 80 Iowa, 36, 45 N. W. 394, collecting cases, refusing to discharge prisoner although sentence is excessive; Bell v. State, 4 Gill. 305, 306, 45 Am. Dec. 132, 133, and State v. Glenn, 54 Md. 608, refusing to regard on habeas corpus, error of committing court; Senott's Case, 146 Mass. 492, 4 Am. St. Rep. 345, 16 N. E. 450, reviewing cases and refusing on habeas corpus to consider irregularities in sentence or trial; State v. Dobson, 135 Mo. 14, 36 S. W. 241, refusing on habeas corpus to permit attack upon conviction because of perjured testimony, etc.; Ex parte Renshaw, 6 Mo. App. 475, refusing to discharge prisoner held by competent court for contempt; In re Thompson, 9 Mont. 389, 23 Pac. 934, collecting cases and refusing to discharge prisoner on habeas corpus because of insufficiency of evidence at trial; Ex parte Shaw, 7 Ohio St. 82, 70 Am. Dec. 56, refusing to discharge prisoner on habeas corpus although sentence is excessive; Ex parte Bond, 9 S. C. 80, 81, 30 Am. Rep. 21, refusing to discharge convicted prisoner because sentence is erroneous; Ex parte Hays, 15 Utah, 80, 47 Pac. 613, refusing to discharge person convicted by competent court of record; Ex parte Williams, 1 Wash. Ter. 240, and Ex parte Mooney, 26 W. Va. 41, 53 Am. Rep. 63, refusing on habeas corpus to review trial of defendant in lower court.

Cited also in note, 23 Am. St. Rep. 108. Approved in Ex parte Rollins, 80 Va. 317, holding, however, judgment of conviction under unconstitutional statute is void; State v. Mace, 5 Md. 348, citing generally. Approved in dissenting opinion, Ex parte Holman, 28 Iowa, 177, majority holding writ will not issue because committing court had jurisdiction.

Habeas corpus.—Circuit Court of District of Columbia being court of record having general criminal jurisdiction, it has power to decide conclusively whether offense charged in indictment is legally punishable or not, and this constitutes exercise of jurisdiction, and its judgment will not be reviewed on habeas corpus, p. 203.

Cited approvingly to this point and principle applied as follows: Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 722, 9 L. 1259, holding decision of Supreme Court whether it has cognizance of action between two States is exercise of jurisdiction; Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 602, 10 L. 611, concurring opinion, refusing to review judgment of Circuit Court refusing to issue mandate to secretary of navy; Ex parte Parks, 93 U. S. 23, 23 L. 788, holding writ will not issue in favor of prisoner convicted of forgery by District Court; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 654, 28 L. 275, 4 S. Ct. 153, refusing to consider decision of Circuit Court that indictment conforms to criminal statute; Ex parte Bigelow, 113 U. S. 331, 28 L. 1007, 5 S. Ct. 544, refusing to review decision of District Supreme Court that certain proceedings did not constitute a putting in jeopardy; In re Coy, 127 U. S. 757, 758, 759, 32 L. 280, 281, 8 S. Ct. 1272, 1273, refusing to review conviction for election fraud by District Court having general jurisdiction over such offenses; In re Wilson, 140 U. S. 583, 35 L. 516, 11 S. Ct. 873, refusing to review proceedings of grand jury indicting prisoner after his conviction by District Court; Noble v. Union, etc., R. R., 147 U. S. 174, 37 L. 127, 13 S. Ct. 274, holding decision of secretary of interior that defendant is not a railroad capable of taking grant is conclusive and cannot be attacked collaterally; Holmes v. Oregon, etc., R. R., 7 Sawy. 387, 9 Fed. 233, holding decision of court that it has probate jurisdiction by reason of intestate's residence is conclusive; Ex parte Perkins, 29 Fed. 911, holding finding of commissioner that charge is sufficient to justify arrest is exercise of jurisdiction and is conclusive; Evansville, etc., R. R. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 421, holding decision of council making subscription to railroad that petition is signed by requisite number of freeholders is conclusive; English v. Smock, 34 Ind. 134, holding where county commissioners may issue bonds when taxes are insufficient, finding of such officials as to such fact is conclusive on court; Arnold v. Shields, 5 Dana, 25, 30 Am. Dec. 675, holding, where law gives court jurisdiction over suits for penalties, that court has power to decide legality of claim for such penalty; State v. Sheriff, 15 N. J. L. 71, refusing to release prisoner for debt after competent court has declared that he cannot be discharged as insolvent.

Approved in Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 718, 9 L. 1258, defining jurisdiction to be power to hear and determine subject-matter in controversy between parties to suit; Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 338, 11 L. 291, defining jurisdiction; In re Bogart, 2 Sawy. 401, F. C. 1,596, refusing to discharge prisoner held by court-martial acting within its jurisdiction; Le Roy v. Clayton, 2 Sawy. 499, F. C. 8,268, defining jurisdiction as power to hear and determine; Holmes v. Oregon, etc., R. R., 7 Sawy. 386, 9 Fed. 233, approving definition of jurisdiction; Bush v. Glover, 47 Ala. 174, enforcing default judgment of rebel court as exercise of jurisdiction; Weston v. Lumley, 33 Ind. 495, defining jurisdiction and holding it perjury to swear falsely as to user of road before county road commissioners; In re McKibben, 16 Fed. Cas. 212, 12 Bank Reg. 101, citing generally as example of allegation of quasi jurisdictional facts. Cited, arguendo, in Cooper v. Sunderland, 3 Iowa, 132, 66 Am. Dec. 63.

Distinguished in Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 566, 14 N. W. 750, holding finding of one session of legislature that prior session had approved constitutional amendment is not conclusive exercise of jurisdiction. Criticised in Ex parte Degener, 30 Tex. App. 574, 17 S. W. 1113, holding where court had jurisdiction of cause and parties, but had no jurisdiction to render the particular judgment, prisoners will be discharged.

Judgments of court of record having general jurisdiction are binding and of full force unless reversed regularly by superior court capable of reversing it, pp. 203-206.

A number of citing cases affirm and apply this doctrine, as follows: Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 604, 10 L. 612, concurring opinion refusing to review judgment of Circuit Court, refusing mandate to secretary of navy; Galpin v. Page, 1 Sawy. 319, F. C. 5,205, holding sale of lands under judgment of court cannot be collaterally attacked where same does not affirmatively show lack of jurisdiction; Galpin v. Page, 1 Sawy. 340, F. C. 5,205, holding judgment reversed as to one party only is law of case as to all others; Reinach v. Atlantic, etc., Co., 58 Fed. 43, holding Circuit Court is bound by decree of State court in foreclosure of mortgage; United States v. Debs, 64 Fed. 739, holding error of Circuit Court does not justify disobedience of its injunction; Berry v. State, 65 Ala. 122, holding verdict of acquittal by court of competent jurisdiction bars further trial for same offense; Cunningham v. Ashley, 13 Ark. 672, and Ashley v. Cunningham, 16 Ark. 174, holding State court must proceed under mandate of Federal Supreme Court regardless of death of party pending appeal; United States v. Burdick, 1 Dak. Ter. 147, 46 N. W. 573, holding court will refuse habeas corpus where prisoner is detained by conviction of another court of concurrent jurisdiction; Sessions v. Stevens, 1 Fla. 240, 46 Am. Dec. 340, holding judgment against garnishee cannot be collaterally attacked; Wilson v. Hayward, 6 Fla. 197, holding judgment of foreclosure cannot be attacked in collateral suit by second lien-holder by showing error; Anderson v. Wilson, 100 Ind. 407, refusing in collateral proceeding to look behind decree to see if complaint properly named parties; Webster v. Reid, Morris, 480, holding judgment obtained through unconstitutional law cannot be attacked collaterally; Wright v. Marsh, 2 G. Greene, 114, and Brace v. Reid, 3 G. Greene, 427, refusing to impeach, collaterally, judgment of partition by competent court; Hampson v. Weare, 4 Iowa, 16, 66 Am. Dec. 118, holding, judgment awarding execution cannot be reviewed by bill for injunction against such execution; Ex parte Holman, 28 Iowa, 103, 4 Am. Rep. 167, refusing to consider, on habeas corpus, irregularity of mandamus proceedings after judgment; McConologue's Case, 107 Mass. 171, holding person is not subject to military trial after adjudication by court of competent jurisdiction that he is not a soldier; Wales v. Lyon, 2 Mich. 281, holding discharge of defendant in bankruptcy is conclusive bar to plaintiff's action for debt; Laine v. Francis, 15 Mo. App. 108, holding judgment on promissory note subjecting certain property to sale is bar to further action against other property; Rolf v. Timmermeister, 15 Mo. App. 252, holding judgment of competent court directing sale of homestead cannot be collaterally attacked; Vantilburg v. Black, 3 Mont. 468, holding judgment against party failing to plead good defense is erroneous but not void; Young v. Rathbone, 16 N. J. Eq. 227, 84 Am. Dec. 153, refusing to allow sale confirmed by order of competent court to be assailed collaterally; Una v. Dodd, 39 N. J. Eq. 180, and People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 275, 59 Am. Dec. 544, collecting cases and holding party accused of contempt cannot defend by showing judgment he has violated is erroneous; Quesenberry v. Barbour, 31 Gratt. 500, refusing to allow judicial sale of trust estate to be assailed in collateral proceeding; Ferguson v. Tobey, 1 Wash. Ter. 277, holding, in action for malicious arrest, plaintiff must show judgment in criminal proceeding in his favor.

Approved in Lessee of Adams v. Jeffries, 12 Ohio, 271, 40 Am. Dec. 478, holding, however, record of court of special and limited jurisdiction must show jurisdiction affirmatively. Approved in dissenting opinion in May v. May, 7 Fla. 244. Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in Yates v. Houston, 3 Tex. 447; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 628, 10 L. 627.

Distinguished in James v. Smith, 2 S. C. 187, holding attempt by superior court to punish, as contempt, disobedience of process of inferior court, is not binding. Criticised in Horan v. Wahrenberger, 9 Tex. 320, 58 Am. Dec. 147, holding decision of court of general jurisdiction may be shown to be void for lack of authority, in collateral proceeding.

Inferior courts defined.—All courts from which appeal lies are inferior courts in relation to the appellate courts before which their judgment may be carried, but they are not, therefore, inferior courts in technical sense, p. 205.

Cited approvingly in Nugent v. State, 18 Ala. 524, holding City Court, from whose judgments appeal lies to Supreme Court, is "inferior court" within meaning of Alabama Constitution; La Croix v. County Comm., 49 Conn. 596, holding act creating board for revocation of liquor licenses is not inferior court within meaning of Constitution.

Courts inferior in the special and not the technical sense are courts of special, limited jurisdiction, whose judgments, taken alone, are disregarded and whose proceedings must show jurisdiction; United States courts are of limited jurisdiction and judgments are erroneous and reversible, if jurisdiction be not shown, but are not nullities, p. 205.

Cited with approval and doctrine followed in Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 341, 11 L. 292, holding order of Michigan court of record need not recite facts conferring jurisdiction; Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. 342, 17 L. 873, holding judgment of Virginia court of record declaring lands redeemed cannot be questioned collaterally; Mosely v. Tuthill, 45 Ala. 654, 6 Am. Rep. 720, holding sale under order of inferior court, void where record shows jurisdictional facts did not exist; Busteed v. Parsons, 54 Ala. 401, 25 Am. Rep. 693, holding jurisdiction of judge of superior court of general jurisdiction cannot be attacked in action against him for damages; Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 215, holding Police Court is inferior court of limited jurisdiction and proceedings must show jurisdiction; Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 413, 94 Am. Dec. 755, holding presumption in favor of jurisdiction exists where record shows service of summons by publication; Fox v. Hoyt, 12 Conn. 497, 31 Am. Dec. 763, holding Justices' Court of Connecticut is court of general jurisdiction, whose proceedings import verity; Chemung Canal Bank v. Judson, 8 N. Y. 261, holding decree of Federal Circuit Court in bankruptcy is not void for failure to show jurisdiction upon record; Lange v. Benedict, 73 N. Y. 35, 29 Am. Rep. 94, holding judge of Federal Circuit Court is not liable for false imprisonment to party erroneously sentenced by him; Vaughn v. Congdon, 56 Vt. 124, holding Justice's Court is court of record whose judgment imports verity.

Approved in Werz v. Werz, 11 Mo. App. 35, holding judgment of divorce in State court is binding, although record fails to show jurisdiction; In re Booth, 3 Wis. 181, holding, however, prisoners must be discharged when record of Federal court affirmatively shows lack of jurisdiction. Cited in Cooper v. Sunderland, 3 Iowa, 129, 66 Am. Dec. 61, erroneously including principal case in enumeration of cases which do not distinguish between inferior and superior courts.

Judgments of courts of United States, although jurisdiction be not shown in pleadings, are yet binding on all the world, and apparent want of jurisdiction can avail party only on writ of error, p. 207.

Approved and applied by the citing cases, as follows: Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. 342, 17 L. 873, holding judgment declaring land redeemed from forfeiture by Virginia court, given jurisdiction by statute, cannot be questioned collaterally; Dowell v. Applegate, 152 U. S. 339, 38 L. 468, 14 S. Ct. 616, reviewing cases and holding in suit to determine title to lands, a former decree of sale by Circuit Court, not appealed from, is conclusive and cannot be attacked collaterally; Evers v. Watson, 156 U. S. 533, 36 L. 523, 15 S. Ct. 433, refusing to set aside in collateral proceeding decree of Circuit Court not appealed from; In re Lennon, 166 U. S. 553, 41 L. 1112, 17 S. Ct. 660, where prisoner is confined for violation of injunction in action against him as citizen of Ohio, he cannot show on habeas corpus that he is citizen of Michigan; Ex parte Lennon, 64 Fed. 322, 22 U. S. App. 561, holding petitioner may not disregard injunction of Circuit Court although allegations of citizenship are defective. Cited generally in Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 342, 11 L. 292.

Habeas corpus.—The Supreme Court having no power to revise decisions in criminal cases, by appeal or error, that power cannot be usurped by means of habeas corpus proceedings, p. 207.

This holding is affirmed and applied by the citing cases as follows: In re Kaine, 14 How. 119, 14 L. 351 (dismissing S. C., 14 Fed. Cas. 83), concurring opinion, holding court will issue writ only to revise decisions over which it has appellate control; In re Kaine, 14 How. 129, 14 L. 355 (dismissing S. C., 14 Fed. Cas. 83), concurring opinion, refusing to issue writ in favor of prisoner held by Federal commissioner for extradition; Ex parte Parks, 93 U. S. 23, 23 L. 788, denying writ to prisoner convicted of forgery by District Court from which error does not lie; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S. 23, 25 L. 539, denying writ to naval officer convicted by court-martial; Ex parte Crouch, 112 U. S. 180, 28 L. 691, 5 S. Ct. 97, denying writ to prisoner detained by Virginia courts for violation of State statute, even though his defense is based on Constitution; In re Callicot, 8 Blatchf. 91, F. C. 2,323, holding circuit judge will not issue writ to review conviction of Circuit Court; United States v. Shaw, 39 Fed. 433, 3 L. R. A. 232, holding Federal courts have no power not expressly granted; In re Barry, 136 U. S. 607, 34 L. 507, 42 Fed. 120, F. C. 1,059, holding Federal courts have only powers specially conferred with necessary incidents; In re Rowe, 77 Fed. 166, 40 U. S. App. 516, collecting cases and denying writ applied for on ground of error of State court convicting prisoner; People v. District Court, 22 Colo. 428, 45 Pac. 404, refusing to review judgment upon which prisoner is detained; Ex parte Holman, 28 Iowa, 97, 98, 4 Am. Rep. 163, refusing writ to prisoners held by authority of Federal court; see also valuable discussion in note, 26 Am. Dec. 47.

Approved in Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 421, 29 L. 90, 5 S. Ct. 937, collecting cases and holding writ will issue where District Court exceeded its authority by convicting of infamous crime without indictment; In re Coy, 127 U. S. 756, 32 L. 280, 8 S. Ct. 1271, denying writ where prisoner was convicted of election fraud by court having jurisdiction over such crimes; Ex parte Buskirk, 72 Fed. 22, 25 U. S. App. 613, holding, however, prisoner detained by void judgment may be released on habeas corpus; People v. Bradley, 60 Ill. 400, holding authority to issue writ depends on nature of court's criminal jurisdiction; In re Macdonald, 16 Fed. Cas. 23, holding, however, Federal courts have jurisdiction where prisoner is not held by any formal commitment. Cited generally in Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 342, 11 L. 292; In re Barry, 136 U. S. 613, 34 L. 509, 42 Fed. 125, F. C. 1,059, indicating that all cases of habeas corpus in Federal courts have been for relief against arrest under Federal authority. Cited also in the following dissenting opinions: In re Kaine, 14 How. 130, 14 L. 356 (dismissing S. C., 14 Fed. Cas. 83), majority holding writ will issue only in exercise of appellate jurisdiction; Ex parte Wells, 18 How. 329, 15 L. 431, majority affirming re-sentence of prisoner by Circuit Court after conditional pardon; Ex parte Bradley, 7 Wall. 382, 19 L. 220, majority issuing mandate to District Supreme Court to restore attorney illegally disbarred; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 205, 21 L. 888, collecting cases, majority holding Circuit Court exceeded its authority in sentencing prisoner twice; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 77, 34 L. 76, 10 S. Ct. 673, majority affirming decision of Circuit Court discharging prisoner charged with violation of Federal law from custody of State officers.

Limited in In re Coy, 127 U. S. 761, 32 L. 282, 8 S. Ct. 1274, dissenting opinion, majority refusing writ to prisoner convicted of election frauds by court having general jurisdiction over such offenses; Van Buren v. United States, 36 Fed. 80, citing in quotation from In re Coy and holding election fraud is offense against Federal law.

Court-martial is an inferior court of limited jurisdiction whose judgments may be questioned collaterally, p. 207.

Approved in Runkle v. United States, 122 U. S. 556, 30 L. 1170, 7 S. Ct. 1146; Tyler v. Pomeroy, 8 Allen, 485, holding person may recover damages against military authorities for unlawful impressment; also in note, 42 Am. Dec. 55.

Miscellaneous.—Erroneously cited in Lampert v. Laclede, etc., Co., 14 Mo. App. 387, on point that military authorities are not liable for official acts. Cited also in Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 8 L. 786, a second application for writ by same prisoner; In re

Kaine, 14 How. 132, 14 L. 357, approving the interpretation of other cases on subject of habeas corpus. Miscited in Orser v. Hoag, 3 Hill, 83; Poole v. Nixon, 19 Fed. Cas. 995.

3 Pet. 210-221, 7 L. 655, BOYCE v. GRUNDY.

Equity jurisdiction.—The sixteenth section of Judiciary Act of 1789 prohibiting equity suits where there is remedy at law, is merely declaratory and makes no alteration in rules of equity on subject of legal remedy, p. 215.

Cited and this holding relied upon in Wehrman v. Conklin, 155 U. S. 323, 39 L. 172, 15 S. Ct. 132, holding State statute enlarging equity jurisdiction can be enforced in Federal courts provided there is no complete and adequate remedy at law; Baker v. Biddle, 1 Bald. 403, F. C. 764; Pittsburgh, etc., Co. v. Keokuk, etc., Co., 68 Fed. 20, 46 U. S. App. 530; Hempstead v. Watkins, 6 Ark. 357, 42 Am. Dec. 702, holding, under similar State statute, courts of law and chancery have a concurrent jurisdiction; Woodman v. Freeman, 25 Me. 541, dismissing bill under State statute denying jurisdiction when legal remedy exists. Approved in Whittlesey v. H., P. & F. R. R., 23 Conn. 431, holding, however, State statute conferring equity jurisdiction must be construed otherwise.

Equity.—In order to bar jurisdiction of Federal courts in equity, there must not only be a remedy at law, but it must also be plain and adequate, and as practical and efficient to the ends of justice as the remedy in equity; where an agreement procured by fraud is of a continuing nature, equity will decree its rescission to prevent a multiplicity of suits, though there is a remedy at law, p. 215.

A large number of citing cases affirm and rely upon this ruling. Those in the Supreme Court are: Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 591, 16 L. 229, holding District Court has jurisdiction over suit to enforce decree for alimony; Parker v. Winnipiseogee, etc., Co., 2 Black, 551, 17 L. 337, dismissing bill to enjoin nuisance where plaintiff had not established his right by action at law; Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 78, 18 L. 582, enjoining wrongful levy upon plaintiff's property to his irreparable injury; Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 430, 19 L. 262, enjoining fraudulent administration of estate where legal action on bond is inadequate; Morgan v. Beloit, 7 Wall. 618, 19 L. 205, entertaining bill by bondholder to enforce payment of bond by city and town where mandamus is inadequate; Insurance Co. v. Bailey, 13 Wall. 621, 20 L. 503, refusing to cancel insurance policy for fraud where latter is good defense at law; Oelrichs v. Spain, 15 Wall. 228, 21 L. 44, entertaining bill for damages on injunction bonds to save time, expense and multiplicity of suits; Lewis v. Cocks, 23 Wall. 470, 23 L. 71, dismissing bill for recovery of land where there is no proof of fraud to make legal remedy inadequate; Buzard

v. Houston, 119 U. S. 352, 30 L. 454, 7 S. Ct. 252, dismissing bill for damages where like amount might be recovered at law for deceit, and remarking that in principal case the ground of jurisdiction was multiplicity of suits; Drexel v. Berney, 122 U. S. 252, 30 L. 1222, 7 S. Ct. 1204, holding in suit for enforcement of equitable estoppel, where it is uncertain if defense will be available at law, bill should not be dismissed; Allen v. Hanks, 136 U. S. 311, 34 L. 418, 10 S. Ct. 965, granting relief to married woman to free her separate property from levy for husband's debts; Tyler v. Savage, 143 U. S. 95, 36 L. 89, 12 S. Ct. 345, entertaining suit in equity against directors of corporation where discovery, account, etc., is necessary to relief; Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 688, 39 L. 584, 15 S. Ct. 558, entertaining bill to enforce equitable estoppel where it is uncertain whether such defense is available at law; Rich v. Braxton, 158 U. S. 406, 39 L. 1032, 15 S. Ct. 1017, annulling deeds to real estate which are not void on their face; United States v. Union Pac. Ry., 160 U. S. 51, 40 L. 337, 16 S. Ct. 209, entertaining bill to enforce rights of government where mandamus would not afford complete relief; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla W. Co., 172 U. S. 12, entertaining bill to enjoin city from erecting water works in violation of contract.

Those in the inferior Federal courts are as follows: Hay v. Alexandria, etc., Co., 1 Hughes, 172, F. C. 6,254, entertaining bill to enforce judgments satisfied by mistake, legal remedies being inadequate; Plummer v. Conn, etc., Co., 1 Holmes, 270, F. C. 11,232, enjoining prosecution of actions at law, defenses to which are only available in large number of actions; Baker v. Biddle, 1 Bald. 408-420, F. C. 764, dismissing bill for account where account was already received and might be enforced at law; Bunce v. Gallagher, 5 Blatchf. 487, F. C. 2,133, declaring void a forged deed; Bischoffsheim v. Baltzer, 22 Blatchf. 283, S. C. 20 Fed. 891, entertaining bill to set aside sale, rectify accounts and recover amount due; Colgate v. Companie, etc., 23 Blatchf. 91, S. C., 23 Fed. 85, applying rule to bill of discovery in aid of action at law; Crane v. McCoy, 1 Bond, 427, F. C. 3,354, refusing to dissolve injunction where law officers were in conflict over possession of copyrighted book; Pierpont v. Fowle, 2 Wood. & M. 29, 31, F. C. 11,152, applying rule to bill for disclosure and account of sales of copyrighted book; Foster v. Swasey, 2 Wood. & M. 221, F. C. 4,984, entertaining bill for relief against fraud where discovery of facts is asked for; United States v. Myers, 2 Brock. 525, F. C. 15,844, refusing to dismiss bill by United States to subject trust funds to payment of debts due; Hunt v. Danforth, 2 Curt. 603, F. C. 6,887, applying rule to bill by feme covert to enforce trust in her favor for her sole use; U. S. v. Parrott, 1 McAll, 288, F. C. 15,998, holding Circuit Court has jurisdiction over bill for injunction to restrain working of mine until title thereto is finally determined;

Spring v. Domestic S. M. Co., 13 Fed. 449, dismissing bill where no ground for equitable relief is shown save naked account for profits and damages; Barthet v. New Orleans, 24 Fed. 567, granting injunction pendente lite against municipality threatening to enforce void ordinance to plaintiff's irreparable injury; Mann v. Appel, 31 Fed. 381, applying rule where A. fraudulently transfers to B. to avoid debts and remedy by garnishment is not full; Smythe v. Henry, 41 Fed. 715, enjoining ejectment and cancelling void deeds regular upon their face; Preteca v. Maxwell L. G. Co., 50 Fed. 676, 4 U. S. App. 326, quieting title and restraining trespasses to plaintiff's irreparable injury; Leighton v. Young, 52 Fed. 443, 10 U. S. App. 298, 18 L. R. A. 271, and n., enjoining execution of writ of possession until accounting of rents, profits and improvements; Foltz v. St Louis, etc., Ry., 60 Fed. 322, 19 U. S. App. 576, enjoining ejectment where defense to same is not complete remedy against ejector's claims; Arthur v. Oakes, 63 Fed. 328, 24 U. S. App. 239, 25 L. R. A. 433, and note, enjoining railroad strikes threatening irreparable injury to property; Gunn v. Brinkley Car, etc., Co., 66 Fed. 384, 27 U. S. App. 779, entertaining bill in equity for an account too long, confused, and complicated for action at law; Lasher v. McCreery, 66 Fed. 843, entertaining bill to remove cloud from title where remedy at law was only by multiplicity of suits; Society of Shakers v. Watson, 68 Fed. 738, 37 U. S. App. 141, holding equity has jurisdiction over suit on note executed on behalf of unincorporated society of one hundred members; Hayden v. Thompson, 71 Fed. 63, 36 U. S. App. 361, entertaining bill by receiver of insolvent national bank to recover from shareholders sixteen illegal dividends; Waite v. O'Neil, 72 Fed. 355, 356, entertaining bill for specific performance of lease; Western Assur. Co. v. Ward, 75 Fed. 342, 41 U. S. App. 443, entertaining bill to reform insurance policy in accord with agreement between parties; Springfield M. Co. v. Barnard, etc., Co., 81 Fed. 265, 49 U. S. App. 447, entertaining cross bill to cancel lien and for damages where legal remedy is not efficient; Nashville, etc., Ry. v. M'Connell, 82 Fed. 70, enjoining brokers from selling railroad tickets, the legal remedy being only by large number of suits; Cockrill v. Cooper, 86 Fed. 14, 57 U. S. App. 590, entertaining bill by receiver against sixteen directors of bank for excessive loans; Bank of Kentucky v. Stone, 88 Fed. 391, entertaining bill to enjoin collection of tax where legal remedy is inadequate; Alger v. Anderson, 92 Fed. 709, affirming rule in elaborate review of authorities.

In the State courts the following indorse and rely upon the syllabus rule: Waldron v. Simmons, 28 Ala. 632, holding statute enlarging jurisdiction of law courts without restrictive words, confers concurrent but not exclusive jurisdiction; Lide v. Hadley, 36 Ala. 635, 76 Am. Dec. 342, entertaining bill to establish right-of-way over defendant's land since recovery at law gave no security for future; Smith v. Cockrell, 66 Ala. 75, entertaining bill to set aside fraudulent conveyances of judgment debtor because of inadequacy of legal remedy; Hempstead v. Watkins, 6 Ark. 361, 42 Am. Dec. 706, enjoining judgment at law where legal defense was rendered inadequate by loss of paper by sheriff; New London Bank v. Lee, 11 Conn. 121, 27 Am. Dec. 717, applying rule to bill to subject property to payment of debts where legal remedy is execution on uncertain equity of redemption; Ferguson v. Fisk, 28 Conn. 511, enjoining action at law on draft valid on its face; Riddle v. Kellum, 8 Ga. 379, compelling life tenant and assigns to give bond for delivery of property to reversioner, the legal remedy existing only in future; Hollingshead v. McKenzie, 8 Ga. 459, cancelling deed given for surrender of three notes, said notes not having been surrendered but sued upon; English v. Smock, 34 Ind. 124, 7 Am. Rep. 222, enjoining issuance of illegal county bonds at suit of taxpayer of county; Lockwood Co. v. Lawrence, 77 Me. 312, 52 Am. Rep. 772, enjoining nuisance since law affords no preventive remedy; Refining Co. v. Campbell Co., 83 Md. 56, 34 Atl. 372, applying rule to bill to cancel contracts procured by fraud; Holden v. Hoyt, 134 Mass. 185, enjoining sale of mortgaged property by holder of note and mortgage under fraudulent transfer; Mack v. Doty, Har. Ch. (Mich.) 369, relieving against judgment at law where defense was lost by death of witness after plaintiff's delay; McKinney v. Curtiss, 60 Mich. 621, 27 N. W. 696, applying rule where defendant has stolen note from plaintiff and has had her claim allowed by payor's administrator; Irwin v. Lewis, 50 Miss. 368, restraining sale of homestead under legal process; Richardson v. Brooks, 52 Miss. 124, applying rule to bill to cancel deeds fraudulently procured by administrator in probate proceedings; Iron Co. v. McDonald, 61 Mo. App. 570, entertaining creditor's bill to subject funds in hands of trustee to payment of claim; Merchants' Bank v. Greenhood, 16 Mont. 436, 41 Pac. 262, setting aside transfer of property in fraud of attaching creditor; Culver v. Rodgers, 33 Ohio St. 545, enjoining permanent trespasses on land of plaintiff; Schwan v. Kelly, 173 Pa. St. 73, 33 Atl. 1108, entertaining bill to rescind sale of land and obtain reimbursement of money paid therefor; Kerr v. Woolley, 3 Utah, 464, 24 Pac. 854, restraining collection of taxes under void levy; Cattle Co. v. Chipman, 13 Utah, 471, 45 Pac. 352, restraining continuing trespasser to plaintiff's irreparable injury; Penn v. Ingles, 82 Va. 72, restraining action at law to which defendants have purely equitable defense; Byron v. May, 2 Pinn. 446, holding equity affords more adequate remedy for foreclosure of mortgage; Gullickson v. Madsen, 87 Wis. 23, 57 N. W. 966, applying rule to creditor's bill to subject funds held by trustee to payment of debt; Ruggles v. Southern, etc., Co., 20 Fed. Cas. 1330, holding where mortgagor holds legal title and agrees upon default to surrender possession, equity will enforce such covenant; In re

Sabin, 21 Fed. Cas. 124, holding bankruptcy court will detain fund pending suit between adverse claimants.

Approved in Sullivan v. Portland, etc., R. R., 94 U. S. 811, 24 L. 326, holding remedy at law is not adequate where plaintiffs are entitled to discovery and account; Yeatman v. Bradford, 44 Fed. 538, dismissing bill to remedy errors in decree of partition since remedy at law is complete; Walker v. Brown, 58 Fed. 27, dismissing bill to enforce alleged lien on bonds, there being no grounds for equity jurisdiction; Smith v. American Nat. Bank, 89 Fed. 838, holding owner of mere equitable interest cannot sue at law for conversion; McGowen v. Young, 2 Stew. & P. 178, note; Turner v. Althaus, 6 Neb. 67, holding, however, remedy at law is adequate to recover back taxes illegally levied. Cited generally in Pierpont v. Fowle, 2 Wood. & M. 32, F. C. 11,152; Gowdy v. Green, 69 Fed. 866, collecting cases. Cited, arguendo, in Brown v. Kalamazoo Cir. Judge, 75 Mich. 278, 13 Am. St. Rep. 441, 42 N. W. 828, 5 L. R. A. 228, and n. Approved in dissenting opinion, Coulson v. Harris, 43 Miss. 772, majority holding taxpayer has remedy at law if excessive taxes are collected.

Fraud.—Party seeking to rescind contract on ground of fraud must be prompt in communicating the fraud when discovered and consistent in notice to opposite party of the use he intends to make of the discovery, p. 215.

Cited and principle applied as follows: Elminger v. Drew, 4 McLean, 394, F. C. 4,416, holding party defending action on note on ground of fraud must aver offer to rescind contract in which note was given; Ferson v. Sanger, 1 Wood. & M. 148, F. C. 4,752, refusing relief to grantee of land after six years of enjoyment without complaint; Foster v. Gressett, 29 Ala. 395, holding bringing suit for relief against fraud one year after discovery and four years after sale is reasonably prompt; Pierce v. Wilson, 34 Ala. 604, holding efforts to sell patented article by purchaser of territorial rights for two years after discovery is not waiver of right to rescind for fraud of patentee; Edmunds v. Myers, 16 Ill. 212, and Edmunds v. Hildreth, 16 Ill. 216, where the court in both cases refused to rescind sale of patent rights where bill did not show that vendee acted promptly on discovery of fraud; Cain v. Guthrie, 8 Blackf. 410, denying rescission after delay of four years from date of contract; Jones v. Disbrow, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 104, dismissing vendee's bill to rescind after several months delay after notice of fraud; Street v. Dow, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 429, holding where vendor negotiated notes given for purchase price he cannot refuse to convey land although notes are not properly indorsed; Carroll v. Rice, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 378, refusing to rescind contract of sale where several years have elapsed after notice of fraud.

Distinguished in Coe v. Lindley, 32 Iowa, 443, holding where fraud is pleaded in defense to action for purchase price, vendee need not give notice of fraud.

Rescission.—Quære whether in action to rescind contract for fraud concerning title, if vendor is able to make title when bill is filed and so answers, rescission will be granted for failure to make title at time agreed, there being no proof of loss from want of title meanwhile, p. 216.

Approved and applied in Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Redfield, 6 Colo. App. 197, 40 Pac. 198, refusing rescission where vendor tenders good deed before final decree; Davidson v. Moss, 5 How. (Miss.) 687, denying rescission where vendor clears title by procuring discharge of incumbrances.

Denied in Kiefer v. Rogers, 19 Minn. 41, rescinding sale for fraud although vendor offers to discharge mortgage which incumbers title.

Fraudulent representation.—A promise to convey title in four years amounts to representation that promisor would be able to make title at that time, p. 217.

Approved and applied in Liddell v. Sims, 9 Smedes & M. 610, rescinding contract for failure of vendor to make title although answer denied making of false representations.

Fraud — Notice of facts sufficient to put upon inquiry.—Vendee has a right to rely upon positive assurances of vendor and is not put upon inquiry by information from another which is not so full and decided as to amount to communication of knowledge, p. 218.

Cited and followed, Sellar v. Clelland, 2 Colo. 545, holding, in action for deceit, plaintiff is entitled to rely on positive assertions concerning trail in uninhabited country; Sears v. Hicklin, 13 Colo. 153, 21 Pac. 1025, rescinding sale where vendor relied on false representations of vendee, not knowing of falsity.

Fraud — False representations.—Reducing an agreement to writing does not preclude recurrence to prior representations; it is an argument against fraud but is not conclusive; a written agreement may be relieved against on ground of false suggestions, p. 219.

Cited and followed in Kennedy v. Kennedy, 2 Ala. 589, holding written contract may not be varied by parol evidence unless foundation is laid by proof of fraud; Foss v. Newbury, 20 Or. 265, 25 Pac. 672, holding vendee may plead damages from fraud as set-off although contract of sale was written; Day v. New England Co., 7 Fed. Cas. 255, 257, holding, in suit for infringement of patent, patentee may show assignment of patent to be void for fraud. Approved in Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 621, 34 L. 251, 10 S. Ct. 775, refusing, however, to set aside deed, where fraud was not clearly proved.

Distinguished in Hair v. La Brouse, 10 Ala. 555, refusing to vary written contract where misrepresentations relied on do not relate to article sold, but to medium of payment.

Fraud.— Although misrepresentation be of personal character, not such as to necessitate the avoidance of a contract, and susceptible of compensation by jury, still the law, which abhors fraud, does not incline to permit it to purchase indulgence, dispensation or absolution, p. 220.

This proposition is affirmed and rule applied in Kennedy v. Kennedy, 2 Ala. 603, setting aside deed for fraud in preference to allowing damages; Coffee v. Newsom, 2 Ga. 460, setting aside sale of lands for fraud in preference to awarding damages; Kiefer v. Rogers, 19 Minn. 43, granting rescission of sale for fraud although vendor offers to discharge existing incumbrances on title; McKensie v. Hamilton, Dall. (Tex.) 463, holding bill for rescission of contract is not demurrable because facts show fraud is susceptible of compensation; Bunne v. Stoddard, 4 Fed. Cas. 679, setting aside deeds of land from heirs to administrator, procured by latter's fraud.

Fraud — Rescission.— Where vendor's misrepresentations add one-third or one-half to cost of land it is not a case for mere compensation, and there is no controlling necessity to leave party to his remedy at law, p. 221.

Approved and applied in Allen v. Bratton, 47 Miss. 130, rescinding sale of lands for vendor's fraudulent representations. Cited generally in Baker v. Biddle, 1 Bald. 409, F. C. 764.

Miscellaneous.— Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 628, 10 L. 628, citing as example of form of judgment on appeal; Baker v. Biddle, 1 Bald. 416, F. C. 764, cited as example where objection to jurisdiction is made after decree pro confesso, reference and report of master; Bailey v. Jordan, 32 Ala. 53, erroneously citing case on point that sale will be rescinded although vendor made misrepresentations under honest mistake.

3 Pet. 222-241, 7 L. 659, PATAPSCO INS. CO. v. COULTER.

Barratry.— Fraud upon the owners, including departure from instructions and violation of law, constitutes barratry, p. 232.

This definition is approved and followed in Compania La Flecha v. Brauer, 168 U. S. 124, 42 L. 407, 18 S. Ct. 17, holding wrongful jet-tison of sound cattle by master of steamboat is not barratry; Atkinson v. Great Western Co., 65 N. Y. 550, 551, holding question whether wrongful stowage of cargo on deck constitutes barratry is for jury; Lawton v. Sun Ins. Co., 2 Cush. 512, holding insurer liable for loss produced by master's fraudulent acts; Williams v. Sylph, 29 Fed. Cas. 1408, holding carrying off vessel to port of foreign State after owner's death is barratry. Cited generally in Joy v. Allen, 2 Wood-

& M. 320, F. C. 7,552, on point that owners may insure against barratry. See also 4 Am. Dec. 487, note.

Barratry.—Gross negligence of master in failing to protect his vessel from peril is evidence of barratry, p. 234.

Cited approvingly in New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 426, 12 L. 500, holding carrier liable for loss of freight through negligence of master and crew; Atkinson v. Great Western Co., 65 N. Y. 538, 540, holding jury must decide whether wrongful stowage of cargo on deck constitutes barratry.

Marine insurance.—Many instances of non-feasance by master involve misfeasance and discharge insurer because they violate implied duties and produce increase of risk, p. 235.

Cited and relied upon in New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 429, 12 L. 502, holding carrier liable for loss of freight though no force or direct injury occur; McDowell v. General, etc., Co., 7 La. Ann. 685, 56 Am. Dec. 621, denying recovery for loss due to master's neglect to employ a pilot.

Marine Insurance.—Where policy covers risk of barratry and fire, and the latter is the proximate cause of loss, it is no defense that negligence of master was remote cause, p. 236.

This holding is affirmed and applied in the following citing cases: Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 10 Pet. 517, 9 L. 517, holding insurers liable for loss by fire regardless of negligence of insured; Sherwood v. General, etc., Ins. Co., 1 Blatchf. 255, F. C. 12,776, holding insurers liable for loss by collision through master's neglect; Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. 276, F. C. 17,738, holding insurer liable for loss by capture by foreign country regardless of master's neglect; Levi v. New Orleans Ins. Assn., 2 Woods, 66, F. C. 8,290, allowing recovery for collision caused by pilot's carelessness; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Erie, etc., Co., 10 Biss. 34, F. C. 11,112, holding where cargo is lost by carrier's negligence, and insurer pays loss, latter cannot recover from carrier; Stephens v. Southern Pac. Co., 109 Cal. 94, 50 Am. St. Rep. 23, 41 Pac. 786, 29 L. R. A. 755, sustaining clause in lease that lessor shall not be liable for fires caused by negligence of lessor's servants; Schultz v. Pac. Ins. Co., 14 Fla. 107, holding insurer liable for loss by stranding although caused by master's neglect; Henderson v. Western, etc., Co., 10 Rob. (La.) 166, 43 Am. Dec. 178, holding evidence of negligence of insured is irrelevant in action on fire policy; Copeland v. New England, etc., Co., 2 Met. 450, holding insurers are not discharged by neglect of mate to assume charge upon master's incapacity; Nelson v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 8 Cush. 496, 54 Am. Dec. 779, collecting cases, and allowing recovery for loss by collision occasioned by negligence of master and crew; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 8 Mo. 716, 717, 720, 41 Am. Dec. 665, 666, 671, reviewing cases and allowing recovery for loss by fire caused by carelessness of workmen repairing boat; Gates v. Madison Co., 5 N. Y. 478, 55 Am. Dec. 368, collecting cases and holding negligence of assured no defense to action for loss from fire; American Ins. Co. v. Bryan, 26 Wend. 583, 37 Am. Dec. 283, holding, in action on policy for loss by theft, assured need not prove diligence of master; Admr. of Perrin v. Protection Ins. Co., 11 Ohio, 170, 38 Am. Dec. 730, holding negligence of assured is no defense to action for loss by explosion of steamboat's boilers; Street v. Augusta Ins. Co., 12 Rich. L. 18, 75 Am. Dec. 716, holding insurer liable for loss by collision although caused by negligence of master of insured vessel. See also collection of cases in note, 45 Am. Dec. 661, and valuable discussion in note, 36 Am. St. Rep. 852. Rule extended in Waters v. Merchants, etc., Co., 11 Pet. 224, 9 L. 696, S. C., 1 McLean, 280, F. C. 17,266, holding negligence of master is no defense, although barratry is not insured against; Orient Ins. Co. v. Adams, 123 U. S. 73, 31 L. 66, 8 S. Ct. 71, granting recovery for loss by negligence of master although there was no insurance against barratry.

Approved in Williams v. New England, etc., Co., 3 Cliff. 248, F. C. 17,731, holding, however, where loss is direct result of wrongful act of insurer's agent, recovery is barred; Mathews v. Howard Ins. Co., 11 N. Y. 21, concurring opinion, holding, however, insurers are not liable for damages assessed upon insured vessel because of collision with another; Hillier v. Allegheny Co., 3 Pa. St. 473, 45 Am. Dec. 656, holding, however, insurer against fire is not liable for loss by removal of goods under reasonable fear of fire; dissenting opinion, McDowell v. General, etc., Co., 7 La. Ann. 691, 56 Am. Dec. 629, majority holding neglect of master to employ pilot excused insurer from payment of loss. Cited, but without particular application of the rule, in Potter v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 2 Sumn. 200, F. C. 11,339.

Distinguished in Augusta, etc., Co. v. Abbott, 12 Md. 378, holding deviation by master of vessel avoids policy of insurance on cargo; Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, etc., Co., 2 Smedes & M. 379, 41 Am. Dec. 598, denying recovery where master was guilty of voluntary deviation.

Marine insurance.—Loss of profits is insurable interest, and where profits as well as cargo are insured, no proof of loss of profits is necessary otherwise than by loss of cargo, pp. 239-241.

Cited to this point in Alsop v. Commercial Ins. Co., 1 Sumn. 469, 474, F. C. 262, granting recovery for full amount of insurance of profits without proof of quantum of loss; Insurance Co. v. Canada Sugar, etc., Co., 87 Fed. 492, holding where total loss of profits is insured against, there can be no recovery if any part of cargo is saved.

Miscellaneous.—Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 628, 10 L. 628, citing as example of form of judgment, note, 2 Am. Dec. 143.

3 Pet. 242-268, 7 L. 666, SHANKS v. DUPONT.

Citizenship.— Birth in South Carolina before Revolution, and residence there until 1782, constitute a woman a citizen of that State by election, p. 245.

Cited to this point in Boyd v. Thayer, 143 U. S. 163, 36 L. 110, 12 S. Ct. 382, holding Congress may effect collective naturalization by treaty or statute; Miller v. Gould, 38 Ga. 477, holding persons in Georgia adhering to Federal government during war are entitled to its protection.

Citizenship.— Children born in a country, continuing while under age in father's family, partake of his national character as citizen of that country, p. 245.

Ruling approved and relied upon in United States v. Ward, 14 Sawy. 475, S. C., 42 Fed. 322, holding son of negro father and Indian mother follows father's condition and is not an Indian; Ex parte Reynolds, 5 Dill. 403, F. C. 11,719, where paternal grandfather of Indian woman was United States citizen, held woman and her father are also. Approved in Campbell v. Wallace, 12 N. H. 371, 37 Am. Dec. 224, collecting cases.

Allegiance.— The capture and possession of Charleston by British did not effect a permanent change of allegiance of inhabitants; that could only be done by treaty of peace or permanent conquest, p. 246.

Rule approved and applied in United States v. Huckabee, 16 Wall. 434, 21 L. 464, holding title to iron works captured by United States from Confederacy vested in former only at end of war.

Alienage.— Feme citizen does not become an alien by marriage with an alien, although the latter be an enemy of this country, p. 246.

See discussion in valuable note on "Who are Aliens," 84 Am. Dec. 212.

Denied in Pequignot v. Detroit, 16 Fed. 213, 216, holding above rule is changed by act of Congress of February 10, 1855, an American woman marrying French citizen becomes herself French citizen.

Allegiance.— Where feme citizen moves to England with her alien husband in 1782, and lived there till death, her allegiance was fixed to England, her election, and by treaty of peace of 1783, p. 247.

Cited with approval and applied, Alsberry v. Hawkins, 9 Dana, 180, 33 Am. Dec. 549, holding removal from United States of both husband and wife and his expatriation are at least prima facie evidence of her alienage; Trimbles v. Harrison, 1 B. Mon. 146, holding daughter of American citizen, born a British subject, who moves to England and marries, is an alien. Cited generally in United States v. Rhodes, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 39, F. C. 16,151, formulating definition of "citizens;" United States v. One Hundred Barrels of Cement, 27 Fed. Cas. 294, holding residents of rebellious States are quasi enemies and cannot sue in Federal courts. Approved in dissenting opinion, Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 577, 15 L. 772, majority holding free negro whose ancestors were slaves is not a "citizen."

Distinguished in Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. 682, holding foreign resident born in United States of alien parents during temporary sojourn in time of peace is United States citizen.

Allegiance.—Treaty of peace of 1783 released England's claim to allegiance of American people, whether native-born or otherwise, p. 247.

Cited and followed in Trimbles v. Harrison, 1 B. Mon. 143, 144, holding native of England residing in Boston from 1772 until after treaty of peace, is United States citizen.

Married women.—The common-law incapacities of married women apply to their civil rights, not their political rights, p. 248.

Approved and applied in Comitis v. Parkerson, 56 Fed. 558, 562, 22 L. R. A. 150, 152, and note, holding American feme citizen does not become alien by marriage to resident alien; Priest v. Cummings, 16 Wend. 626, holding alien feme covert may be naturalized without husband's concurrence.

Political rights do not stand upon mere doctrines of municipal law, but upon the more general principles of the law of nations, p. 248.

Cited and approved, Jones v. McMasters, 20 How. 20, 15 L. 810, deciding case without passing upon domicile of minor; dissenting opinion, United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 707, 42 L. 911, 18 S. Ct. 479, majority holding law of a country determines questions of citizenship in that country.

Distinguished in United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 660, 42 L. 895, 18 S. Ct. 461, affirming S. C., 71 Fed. 385, holding question whether person is citizen of a country is to be determined by law of that country.

Aliens.—Children of woman becoming British subject by treaty of peace are aliens within treaty of 1794, and may inherit American lands from mother, p. 249.

Cited and followed, Munro v. Merchant, 28 N. Y. 37, holding son of person adhering to British government after Revolution inherits American lands of father.

Treaty.—Where treaty admits of two interpretations, one limited, the other liberal; one excluding, the other furthering private rights, the more liberal should be adopted, p. 249.

Cited and relied upon in Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 487, 25 L. 629, applying rule to Swiss treaty of 1850, giving right to citizens to sell inherited lands in America.

Miscellaneous.—Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 628, 10 L. 628, as example of form of judgment on appeal; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 490, 25 L. 631, and Parrott's Chinese Case, 6 Sawy. 371, S. C., 1 Fed. 503, on point that Federal Constitution, laws and treaties are binding upon the States; Sasportas v. De la Motta, 10 Rich. Eq. 45, on point that principal case reversed case of Dupont v. Pepper, Harp. Eq. 15; United States v. Jackson, 26 Fed. Cas. 562, erroneous.

3 Pet. 269, 7 L. 675, WOLF v. USHER.

Certificate of division.—Court refuses to take jurisdiction where point on which circuit judges divided is not certified but left to be ascertained from the whole record, p. 269.

Approved and applied, practice followed in United States v. Waddell, 112 U. S. 81, 28 L. 674, 5 S. Ct. 37, remanding case for further proceedings with answers to two questions, where third was uncertain; Bagg v. Detroit, 5 Mich. 70, holding in similar practice in State court, questions must be presented directly and definitely.

3 Pet. 270-279, 7 L. 676, McCLUNY v. SILLIMAN.

Statute of limitations.—Law of the forum as to, operates upon all who submit themselves to its jurisdiction, p. 277.

Cited and this rule affirmed and followed in Townsend v. Jemison, 9 How. 414, 13 L. 197, allowing suit in Alabama upon a Mississippi contract, though barred by statute of Mississippi; Crawford v. Childress, 1 Ala. 489, a suit upon a promissory note executed in another State; Perkins v. Guy, 55 Miss. 176, 30 Am. Rep. 512, where both parties to an action of assumpsit resided in Tennessee during the period of limitation; Paine v. Drew, 44 N. H. 320, an action upon a bill of exchange between non-resident parties, where the court applied the lex fori.

Statutes of limitations.—Where no special provision is made by Congress, the same effect is given to them by the courts of the United States as is given in the State courts, p. 277.

The following cases affirm and follow this rule: Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 603, 17 L. 262, upholding the interpretation of the Wisconsin statute by its highest tribunal, protecting titles acquired under tax deeds; Hanger v. Abbott, 6 Wall. 537, 18 L. 942, affirming decision of State court holding that the running of the statute is suspended during time of war; Tioga R. R. v. Blossburg & C. R. R., 20 Wall. 150, 22 L. 337, concurring opinion, following New York decisions which construe the statute in regard to foreign corporations; Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 130 U. S. 696, 32 L. 1081, 9 S. Ct. 691, holding that a provision as to the time of commencement of an action is a part of the State statute of limitations, and applicable to actions in the Federal courts; In re Eldridge, 2 Hughes, 257, F. C. 4,331, following the Virginia statute respecting proof of claim in bankruptcy; In re Noesen, 6 Biss. 447, F. C. 10,288, holding with State court that demands upon a bankrupt, barred by the statute, are extinguished; Rich v. Ricketts, 7 Blatchf. 231, F. C. 11,762, where State statute was held to bar an action for the infringement of a patent; In re Cornwall, 9 Blatchf. 127, F. C. 3,250, where claim of creditor against a bankrupt was held to be barred, following Connecticut statute; Brown v. Hiatt, 1 Dill. 377, F. C. 2,011, deciding an action in foreclosure under Kansas statute; Marsh v. Burroughs, 16 Fed. Cas. 799, construing Georgia statutes in suits against administrator; Parker v. Hawk, 18 Fed. Cas. 1134, in a suit for infringement of patent; Butler v. Poole, 44 Fed. 586, where an action by receiver of national bank against stockholder was held subject to State statute of limitation; Fearing v. Glenn, 73 Fed. 117, 38 U. S. App. 424, following rule of State court as to limitation in suit against non-resident stockholder. Cited approvingly without applying the rule in Brickill v. Baltimore, 52 Fed. 739, where suit was brought for infringement of patent. Cited generally in dissenting opinion to Gelpcke v. City of Dubuque, 1 Wall. 210, 17 L. 527, majority following the decisions of State court, afterwards overruled by same court, as to bonds issued during time of earlier decisions; Derby v. Jacques, 1 Cliff. 439, F. C. 3,817, holding that a final judgment in a writ of entry in State court is a bar to an action in Circuit Court under a writ of right; New Hampshire v. Grand Trunk R. R. 3 Fed. 889, adopting the construction given to a penal statute by State court; Youley v. Lavender, 27 Ark. 263, holding that a judgment creditor in a suit in Federal court against administrator must file his demand in State Probate Court.

Distinguished in Read v. Miller, 2 Biss. 15, F. C. 11,610, holding that no State statute of limitation can be pleaded in bar to an action on the case for an infringement of a patent; Blanchard v. Sprague, 1 Cliff. 290, F. C. 1,516, suppressing the depositions of the parties to a suit in equity in the Circuit Court, under the existing legislation of Congress; Hall v. Russell, 3 Sawy. 515, F. C. 5,943, holding that the court was not bound by State statute, which, in its terms, was applicable only to suits in equity in the State courts; Anthony v. Carroll, 1 Fed. Cas. 1049, holding that State statute of limitations had no application to an action for the infringement of a patent; Hartman v. Fishbeck, 18 Fed. 294, holding that a non-resident in an action in Federal court is not affected by a limitation of a State statute inseparable from special statutory mode of procedure.

Statute of limitations.—Where the statute is not restricted to particular causes of action but provides that the action, by its technical denomination, shall be barred, every cause for which the action may be prosecuted is within the statute, p. 278.

Cited and rule applied in Metropolitan Road v. District of Columbia, 132 U. S. 13, 33 L. 236, 10 S. Ct. 24, where an action in assumpsit for breach of duty imposed by statute was held to be within statute of limitations of Maryland; Copp v. Louisville, etc., Co., 50 Fed. 165, following State statute in an action for damages resulting from a "quasi offense." Approved in Cockrill v. Cooper, 86 Fed. 11, 57 U. S. App. 584, where action under reformed procedure against bank directors for excessive loans was held not barred.

Statute of limitations.—Where the action is barred by its denomination, the court cannot look into the cause of action, p. 278.

Approved and rule applied in Campbell v. Haverhill, 155 U. S. 619, 39 L. 283, 15 S. Ct. 221, and Parker v. Hawk, 18 Fed. Cas. 1135, holding that a State statute of limitation applies to actions at law for the infringement of letters-patent.

Statute of limitations.—Courts do not now give a strained construction to evade the effect of statutes of limitation, p. 278.

Cited and doctrine followed in United States v. Wilder, 13 Wall. 256, 20 L. 683, the court refusing to take claim out of statute by reason of part payment; Merrill v. Monticello, 66 Fed. 166, a suit in equity to charge town as trustee; Bennett v. Herring, 1 Fla. 392, barring plaintiff, indorsee of a note, alleging that "when cause of action accrued to him, he was beyond seas;" Bishop v. Sanford, 15 Ga. 11, a suit upon foreign judgment; Bedell v. Janney, 4 Gilm. 208, but allowing plaintiff form of action most favorable to his cause; Davis v. Minor, 1 How. (Miss.) 191, 28 Am. Dec. 329, holding that repeal of statute could not revive claim previously barred by it; Savings Bank v. Ladd, 40 N. H. 472, reviewing authorities and holding one who signed a note but not the mortgage relieved by virtue of the statute. Cited generally in Fain v. Garthright, 5 Ga. 13, holding that one entering upon land under executory contract acquires an adverse possession.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in Brown v. State Bank, 10 Ark. 137.

3 Pet. 280-291, 7 L. 679, JACKSON v. LAMPHIRE.

Constitutional law.—Supreme Court has no authority, on writ of error from State court, to declare State law void, on account of its conflict with State Constitution, p. 289.

Cited and rule applied in Withers v. Buckley, 20 How. 89, 15 L. 818, affirming a decision of State court which held a certain State statute not in violation of its own Constitution; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 596, 57 Am. Dec. 422, upholding the validity of a New York statute declared constitutional by its own Supreme Court. Cited generally with approval, dissenting opinion, Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 646, 9 L. 863, where State court had held public grant to bridge company a valid contract to the extent of the exclusive franchise granted; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 594, 10 L. 606, where the governor of Vermont retained a fugitive from Canada, and was supported by the State Supreme Court; West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 549, 12 L. 552.

Distinguished in Indianapolis v. Central Trust Co., 83 Fed. 532, 53 U. S. App. 663, where constitutional provision against impairment of contracts was involved.

Constitutional law — Public land patents.— Where State land patent contains no covenants the court will not create one by implication, and a subsequent statute respecting conflicting claims under patentee does not impair the force of the original grant, p. 289.

Cited and this doctrine followed in Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 546, 9 L. 823, extending the rule and construing strictly a public grant to a bridge company, not conferring exclusive privileges in terms; West River Bridge v. Dix, 6 How. 542, 12 L. 549, reviewing authorities and holding that the exercise of the right of eminent domain was not in violation of the terms of plaintiff's charter; East Hartford v. Bridge Co., 10 How. 539, 13 L. 530, holding that an act discontinuing a ferry belonging to East Hartford did not impair any supposed contract; Missionary Society v. Dalles, 107 U. S. 342, 27 L. 547, 2 S. Ct. 677, holding that the society had not strictly complied with the terms of a public grant; McLeod v. Burroughs, 9 Ga. 222, applying rule of strict construction to exclusive privilege granted in a bridge charter; Shorter v. Smith, 9 Ga. 524, where there was no express grant of exclusive privilege; Mayor v. Central R. R., 50 Ga. 621, refusing to allow corporation exemption from taxation where terms of grant did not clearly confer it; Piscataqua Bridge v. N. H. Bridge, 7 N. H. 69, protecting an exclusive privilege to maintain a bridge; United States v. San Pedro, etc., Co., 4 N. Mex. 601, 17 Pac. 425, holding that under strict construction mines of gold and silver did not pass by United States patent; Janesville Bridge Co. v. Stoughton, 1 Pinn. 672, refusing to find any exclusive privileges where not expressly granted. Cited generally in Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How. 319, 12 L. 455, construing the contractual rights of a bank by the terms of its charter. Rule approved in dissenting opinion, Minn. & Pac. R. R. v. Sibley, 2 Minn. 26, the majority construing an act by its language and history unfavorably to the State. See also 50 Am. Dec. 391, note.

Distinguished in dissenting opinion, Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 640, 9 L. 861, majority applying the rule to public grant of franchise to a bridge company.

Constitutional law.— State legislatures have power to pass recording acts although they make prior unrecorded deeds fraudulent and void as against subsequent purchaser, and if reasonable such acts do not impair the obligation of contract, p. 290.

Cited and the doctrine applied and followed in Vance v. Vance, 108 U. S. 520, 27 L. 811, 2 S. Ct. 858, and Succession of Nelson, 24 La. Ann. 26, upholding a provision in State Constitution requiring existing tacit mortgages to be recorded; Gilfillan v. Union Canal Co., 109 U. S. 407, 27 L. 979, 3 S. Ct. 308, holding a statute valid requiring bondholders to signify their assent to or dissent from a plan proposed for compromise; Rosenplaenter v. Provident Sav. Life Ass. Co., 91 Fed. 735, holding valid, acts providing that policies shall not be declared forfeited without prescribed notice to insured; Stafford v. Lick, 7 Cal. 487, upholding the validity of a recording act as to prior deeds; Woodbury v. Grimes, 1 Colo. 104, applying the rule to an act of the legislature relating to mechanics' liens; Tucker v. Harris, 13 Ga. 6, 58 Am. Dec. 490, where prior deed was held void for want of recordation as required by a subsequent statute; Connecticut Mut. Life v. Talbot, 113 Ind. 380, 3 Am. St. Rep. 661, 14 N. E. 590, applying the rule and defeating the claim of the assignee of a prior mortgage; Moline Plow Co. v. Witham, 52 Kan. 190, 34 Pac. 752, where three days was held an unreasonable time in which to record an instrument evidencing a conditional sale; National Bank v. Clark, 55 Kan. 224, 40 Pac. 272, holding that four months was ample time for compliance with State statute requiring docket of judgment entry to create a lien; Tarpley v. Hamer, 9 Smedes & M. 313, as to recording prior judgments; Miles v. King, 5 S. C. 151, 155, upholding a recording act requiring a re-registration of mortgages; and in Salmon v. Huff, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 168, 28 S. W. 1045, as to an act requiring re-registration of deeds. Cited generally without applying rule in Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How. 331, 332, 12 L. 460, reviewing authorities as to what laws impair the obligation of contract; McCormick v. Rusch, 15 Iowa, 136, 83 Am. Dec. 408, holding an act valid which allowed an action against one in military service to be continued during period of actual service.

Distinguished in Gaston v. Merriam, 33 Minn. 280, holding a particular recording act in that State to be purely prospective; dissenting opinion, Stafford v. Lick, 7 Cal. 501, majority quoting principal case at length.

Constitutional law.—State legislatures have power to pass acts of limitation, by which the elder grantee shall be postponed to the younger, unless certain acts are performed within the limited time, p. 290.

Cited and rule applied in Strothen v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 448, 9 L. 1152, affirming title acquired by prescription under the laws of Spain, unabrogated by any law of the district of Missouri; Curtis v. Whitney, 13 Wall. 71, 20 L. 514, where holder of tax certificate failed to give notice to occupant as required by a retrospective act.

Statute of limitations.—Time and manner of operation, and the exceptions to them, generally depend on the sound discretion of legislature, unless so unreasonable as to amount to a denial of a right, p. 290.

Cited and doctrine followed in McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 613, 11 L. 399, declaring a State law prohibiting an execution sale for less than a certain value void as to existing judgments; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 633, 634, 24 L. 366, upholding validity of a Georgia statute of limitations shortening time in a case of suit against stockholder; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 608, 24 L. 799, concurring opinion, holding that certain exemption laws amounted to a denial of rights under pre-existing contract; Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 675, 26 L. 889, where time in which to bring suit upon bond was shortened, and validity of statute upheld; Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 775, 27 L. 471, 2 S. Ct. 96, sustaining the validity of an act changing the remedy to enforce payment of State bonds; Vance v. Vance, 108 U. S. 521, 27 L. 811, 2 S. Ct. 859, the State Constitution giving a limited time in which to record tacit mortgages; In re Brown, 135 U. S. 705, 34 L. 317, 10 S. Ct. 985, declaring statute unconstitutional giving holders of State bonds but one year to present coupons in payment of taxes; Cleveland Ins. Co. v. Reed, 1 Biss. 186, F. C. 2,889, where foreclosure was held barred by statute, passed subsequent to the time when the cause of action accrued; Ex parte Pollard, 40 Ala. 88, applying the rule to the enactment of a "stay-law" affecting a pre-existing contract; Pope v. Ashley, 13 Ark. 268, declaring statute of limitation unconstitutional which cut off plaintiff's remedy instanter; Bishop v. Wilds, 1 Harr. 102, where a statute enlarged the time as to suit on guardian's bond; Wilder v. Lumpkin, 4 Ga. 220, holding an act as to securities on appeal bond not applicable to a case occurring before its passage; Griffin v. McKenzie, 7 Ga. 166, 50 Am. Dec. 391, holding that an act fixing seven years as a time within which an existing judgment should be enforced was constitutional; Cutts v. Hardel, 38 Ga. 355, applying the rule and sustaining an act for the relief of debtors and adjustment of debts; Blackford v. Peltier, 1 Blackf. 35, n., where statute affected only the remedy; State v. Swope, 7 Ind. 96, holding that the time allowed by the statute in suit on sheriff's bond was unreasonable; Taylor v. Stockwell, 66 Ind. 511, reviewing authorities and sustaining the validity of an act which affected judgments rendered on pre-existing as well as subsequent contracts; Auld v. Butcher, 2 Kan. 156, where an act was held not to apply so as to bar the remedy instanter to recover on pre-existing contract; Wahlgren v. Kansas City, 42 Kan. 246, 21 Pac. 1069, holding an act constitutional which allowed thirty days in which to bring suit on street assessment; Lewis v. Harbin, 5 B. Mon. 568, sustaining a retrospective statute of limitation; Berry v. Ransdall, 4 Met. (Ky.) 294, declaring an act void allowing only thirty days after its passage to commence suits on existing contracts; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Williams (Ky.), 45 S. W. 230 (reversing S. C., 41 S. W. 287, on other grounds), holding that the repeal of provisions in charter of railway company limiting time in which actions may be brought does not impair obligation of contract; Scott v. Duke, 3 La. Ann. 253, giving effect to an act modifying the remedy to enforce foreign judgment; State v. Jones, 21 Md.

437, applying rule where plaintiff had thirteen months after passage of an act in which to commence action; Briscoe v. Anketell, 28 Miss. 371, 61 Am. Dec. 555, the court applying the rule to an act changing a rule of evidence affecting past right of action; Stephens v. St. Louis Nat. Bank, 43 Mo. 389, 390, holding two years a reasonable time allowed note-holders to present notes for payment; Smith v. Tucker, 17 N. J. L. 85, sustaining validity of statute of limitations extending the time as against non-residents; Rexford v. Knight, 11 N. Y. 313, applying the rule where claims against the State were required by statute to be made within one year; Parmenter v. State, 135 N. Y. 168, 31 N. E. 1039, reviewing authorities and holding that an act allowing complainant three months to file claim did not provide a reasonable time; Strickland v. Draughan, 91 N. C. 104, dismissing a petition for rehearing not filed within time limited by a new rule of the court; Chadwick v. Moore, 8 Watts & S. 51, 42 Am. Dec. 269, holding that a statute prohibiting, for a time, execution sales for less than a certain value was valid and constitutional; Kenyon v. Stewart, 44 Pa. St. 192, where statute limiting time within which to contest will was held valid though retroactive; Breitenbach v. Bush, 44 Pa. St. 318, 84 Am. Dec. 444, allowing stay of execution under an act suspending process during a term of military service; Story v. Runkle, 32 Tex. 404, holding an act, changing the statute of limitations so as to revive a right under a judgment already barred, pro tanto void; Bender v. Crawford, 33 Tex. 755, 7 Am. Rep. 275, the court coming to a contrary conclusion under a similar provision in the Constitution; Caperton v. Martin, 4 W. Va. 151, 6 Am. Rep. 279, holding that an act reviving an action for false imprisonment was not unconstitutional.

Cited approvingly without particular application of the rule in Griswold v. Bragg, 18 Blatchf. 207, 208, 48 Fed. 522, 48 Conn. 582, as to a statute providing equitable relief for value of improvements in ejectment suits; Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. 517, declaring a Sunday law unconstitutional; Conn. Mut. Life v. Talbot, 113 Ind. 379, 3 Am. St. Rep. 659, 14 N. E. 589; Stephenson v. Osborne, 41 Miss. 130, 90 Am. Dec. 366, holding that exemption laws affect the remedy, and not the right as to pre-existing contracts; McLure v. Melton, 24 S. C. 570, 58 Am. Rep. 278, where court followed a decision of State court changing the order of payment of claims against an estate; Ex parte Hunter, 2 W. Va. 159, holding that an act was constitutional requiring an attorney-at-law to take an oath that he had never borne arms against the United States. See note to 50 Am. Dec. 391. Cited with approval in the following dissenting opinions: Lewis v. Lewis, 7 How. 782, 12 L. 912, where the court construed a State statute as affecting the rights of a non-resident; Aycock v. Martin, 37 Ga. 177, 179, reviewing authorities, majority holding a stay-law unconstitutional; Scobey v. Gibson, 17 Ind. 584, court holding an act extending period of redemption unconstitutional so far as it applied to judgments existing at the time of its passage; Fitzpatrick v. Boylan, 57 N. Y. 443, 444, majority holding that an act continuing mechanics' liens for a limited time had no retroactive operation; Bettman v. Cowley, 19 Wash. 223, 53 Pac. 59, 40 L. R. A. 822, majority holding an act shortening duration of judgment liens void as to existing judgments.

Distinguished in Harding v. Butts, 18 Ill. 509, holding an act conferring on one having color of title a right of property was in no sense an act of limitation, but transferred the land and was unconstitutional.

Miscellaneous.—Cited, the court being equally divided, in Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 628, 10 L. 628, as to the wording of the order affirming decree of lower court.

3 Pet. 292-306, 7 L. 683, HARRIS v. DENNIE.

Appeal and error.—It is sufficient that it appear from facts stated upon the record that any question within purview of section 25 of the judiciary act arose in State court; the record need not so state in terms, p. 301.

Cited and rule followed in Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 429, 7 L. 910, where the record showed, though not in terms, that a constitutional question existed; Fisher v. Cockerell, 5 Pet. 255, 256, 8 L. 117, where no fact necessary to give jurisdiction appeared of record; Davis v. Packard, 6 Pet. 48, 8 L. 315, where highest State court decided against a privilege set up under act of Congress giving Federal jurisdiction; Crowell v. Randell, 10 Pet. 396, 397, 9 L. 469, reviewing authorities, and denying jurisdiction on account of totally insufficient record; Williams v. Oliver, 12 How. 124, 13 L. 920, holding that no question arose upon the record involving validity of treaty with Mexico or award of commissioners; Water Power Co. v. Street Ry. Co., 172 U. S. 488, taking jurisdiction where it appeared from record and opinion of the court that constitutional question arose; Florida v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 271, denying jurisdiction in suit to remove State officer; Frost v. Ilsley, 55 Me. 380, where it did not appear that a decision of constitutional question was indispensable to the judgment.

Duties.—United States has no lien upon dutiable goods for duties antecedently due from importer, p. 303.

Duties.—United States has a lien on goods for the payment of duties accruing thereon, and the right of custody until lien is discharged, p. 304.

Cited with approval in Guesnard v. Louisville & N. R. R., 76 Ala. 457, preserving the lien for a carrier who had advanced the charges for duties.

Duties.—No creditor can by attachment take goods out of the possession of United States until lien of United States for duties accruing thereon is discharged by payment or by giving security, p. 304.

Approved and rule applied in Providence & S. S. Co. v. Virginia Ins. Co., 20 Blatchf. 409, 11 Fed. 287, holding public officer as trustee not liable under an attachment in favor of one not claiming under trust; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 596, 598, 15 L. 1032, 1033; The Oliver Jordan, 2 Curt. 415, F. C. 10,503, and Lewis v. Ship Orpheus, 3 Ware, 143, F. C. 8,330, refusing to take property out of the custody of State courts to enforce liens of seamen and materialmen; In re Clifford, 2 Sawy. 432, F. C. 2,893, holding assignee of bankrupt under invalid contract of sale not entitled to possession of dutiable goods in custody of government; McCullough, Jr. v. Large, 20 Fed. 312, holding whisky in custody of internal revenue collector not liable to seizure by creditor; Peabody v. Maguire, 79 Me. 584, 12 Atl. 631, approving the rule, but holding property in custom-house subject to trustee process; Whitwell v. Wells, 24 Pick. 29, allowing government lien for storage, and holding its possession to be exclusive. Cited, arguendo, with approval in In re Peebles, 2 Hughes, 401, F. C. 10,902, giving bankrupt benefit of homestead exemption over execution lien; May v. Hoaglan, 9 Bush, 173, where whisky was attached after lien of government was discharged; Souhegan Factory v. McConihe, 7 N. H. 323, in concurring opinion, holding a collector retaining goods overtime as a distress not a trespasser. Cited, without particular application of the rule, in Andrews v. Smith, 19 Blatchf. 103, 5 Fed. 836, as to jurisdiction of State and Federal courts having possession of property; Briggs v. Light Boats, 11 Allen, 178, refusing to enforce lien for labor and materials used in constructing United States lightboat.

Limited in Two Hundred and Fifty Tons Salt, 5 Fed. 219, allowing sale under lien for freight charges of goods held for payment of duties. Distinguished in Conard v. Pac. Ins. Co., 6 Pet. 281, 8 L. 399, where levy by Federal officer for duties was to satisfy execution against one who had no interest; Thomas v. Mahone, 9 Bush, 121, allowing seizure of land by State court temporarily occupied by Federal troops; Bruen v. Ogden, 11 N. J. L. 384, 20 Am. Dec. 605, where it is held that a State court may replevy goods unlawfully seized by Federal officer.

Duties.—Owner or consignee, or in his absence, his agent or factor is alone entitled to enter goods or pay the duties, p. 304.

Cited to this point in Harris v. De Wolf, 4 Pet. 151, 7 L. 813, allowing assignee to recover goods, although attached by United States for duties antecedently due; Pacific Ins. Co. v. Conard, 1 Bald. 140, F. C. 10,647.

Distinguished in United States v. Fawcett, 86 Fed. 901, where, under later act of Congress, consignee was required to make a declaration different from that of owner.

3 Pet. 307-319, 7 L. 688, CANTER v. AMERICAN INS. CO.

Admiralty.—Where parties litigate in admiralty in rem, and there is probable cause for the suit or defense, the court consider that the only compensation which the successful party is entitled to is compensation in costs and expenses and not damages, p. 318.

Cited in The Malaga, 16 Fed. Cas. 538, applying the rule where a ship was seized under probable cause.

Appeals.—It is the manifest intention of the legislature, in giving appellate jurisdiction to Federal Supreme Court upon final decrees only, that causes should not come up in fragments upon successive appeals, p. 318.

Approved in Ringgold's Case, 1 Bland, 21, the court reviewing generally the subject of appeal at common law and in equity; Barkley v. Logan, 2 Mont. 299, holding that court had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from part of a final judgment.

Admiralty appeals.—Wherever damages are claimed in original proceedings, if a decree for restitution and costs only passes, it is a virtual denial of damages, and the claim will be deemed waived unless the party then interposes an appeal or cross-appeal to sustain that claim, p. 318.

Approved and rule applied in the following citing cases: The William Bagaley, 5 Wall. 412, 18 L. 591, refusing to allow claimants, who had not appeared below, to intervene in Supreme Court; Mail Co. v. Flanders, 12 Wall. 135, 20 L. 250, and the Stephen Morgan, 94 U. S. 599, 24 L. 266, denying appellees the right to be heard for a reversal of decree; Loudon v. Taxing District, 104 U. S. 774, 26 L. 924, refusing party right to be heard against decree where his appeal had been dismissed for want of prosecution; Bush v. Schooner Alonzo, 2 Cliff. 551, F. C. 2,223; Airey v. Merrill, 2 Curt. 12, F. C. 115; The Peytona, 2 Curt. 27, F. C. 11,058, and Allen v. Hitch, 2 Curt. 148, F. C. 224, applying the rule where appellee insisted upon greater damages than were allowed in court below; The Quickstep, 2 Biss. 292, F. C. 11,509, holding that the question of appellee's negligence was not open to inquiry on the appeal. Cited generally in Sanderson v. Sanderson, 20 Fla. 299, treating the agreement of parties as rule determining extent of questions to be reviewed on appeal.

Costs are not positively limited by law, but allowed in the exercise of a sound discretion of the court, p. 319.

Cited and rule affirmed and applied in United States v. Waters, 133 U. S. 213, 33 L. 595, 10 S. Ct. 250, allowing counsel fees as fixed by Court of Claims; Du Bois v. Kirk, 158 U. S. 67, 39 L. 899, 15 S. Ct. 732, refusing to disturb decree as to costs in an equity suit; The Columbus, Abb. Adm. 390, F. C. 3,043, dividing the costs in a suit in admiralty; Simpson v. Caulkins, Abb. Adm. 544, F. C. 12,880; Craig v. Steamer Hartford, McAll. 93, F. C. 3,333, holding that costs not being subject to rescission formed no part of decree of court below; The Ship Moslem, Olcott, 378, F. C. 9,876, departing from general rule of awarding costs to successful party; Hathaway v. Roach, 2 Wood. & M. 70, F. C. 6,213, applying rule in absence of statutory direction; Elliott v. The Leah H. Miller, 8 Fed. Cas. 543, granting a rehearing on question of costs awarded to unsuccessful party; Winne v. Carroll, 30 Fed. Cas. 306; Tefft v. Stern, 73 Fed. 597, 43 U. S. App. 148, where costs were not controlled by statute; Blanks v. Klein, 78 Fed. 395, 41 U. S. App. 621, giving effect to decision of Circuit Court in an equity cause.

Rule limited in Sturgis v. Johnson, 23 Fed. Cas. 327, where the court held that provisions of act of February 26, 1853, were controlling.

No appeal lies to Supreme Court from a mere decree respecting costs and expenses, p. 319.

Cited to this point and rule approved and applied in Elastic Fabrics Co. v. Smith, 100 U. S. 112, 25 L. 547, where the appeal was ineffectual as to all else; Wood v. Weimar, 104 U. S. 792, 26 L. 781; Russell v. Farley, 105 U. S. 437, 26 L. 1061, the court entertaining the appeal on the subject of damages; Paper Bag Cases, 105 U. S. 772, 26 L. 961, as to one party of the suit; City Bank v. Hunter, 152 U. S. 516, 38 L. 536, 14 S. Ct. 676; Tyler Mining Co. v. Sweeney, 79 Fed. 282, 48 U. S. App. 213, refusing to review the action of clerk of Circuit Court; Fraser v. District of Columbia, 18 D. C. 152, refusing to review question of attorney's fee.

Rule limited in The City of Augusta, 80 Fed. 303, holding that there may be an appeal concerning only costs, when the force of some statute or positive rule of law is involved.

3 Pet. 320-345, 7 L. 693, STRINGER v. YOUNG'S LESSEE.

Evidence.— Entries made on public lands subsequent to patent, whatever might be impression under which they were made, cannot affect the title, and are inadmissible to prove general opinion as to state of title, p. 337.

Evidence.— A party cannot repel testimony improperly admitted by other evidence, which is clearly inadmissible, p. 337.

Rule approved and followed in Balto. & S. R. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 4 Md. 255, 59 Am. Dec. 76, rejecting improper evidence to prove negligence, offered to rebut irrelevant testimony; Gorsuch v. Rutledge, 70 Md. 276, 17 Atl. 77, applying rule and rejecting oral testimony; McDowell v. Crawford, 11 Gratt. 386, dissenting opinion. Cited generally with approval in Sand's Case, 21 Gratt. 903, where the testimony offered was held admissible on other grounds.

Distinguished in McDowell v. Crawford, 11 Gratt. 409, holding that certain testimony offered was not irrelevant, and rule did not apply.

Public lands—Evidence.—The validity of survey or patent is not affected by surveyor's neglect of duty in recording plat and certificate, nor by the fact that he was not a deputy surveyor of a particular county, and evidence of those facts is inadmissible, p. 338.

Cited to this point and rule applied in Oats v. Walls, 28 Ark. 248, protecting grantee of a mortgage which was not recorded through fault of clerk; Howard v. Perry, 7 Tex. 268, holding survey valid, although certificate of recommendation was not presented to surveyor; Horton v. Pace, 9 Tex. 83, holding that neglect of surveyor to make an entry did not impair right of locator; Fannin Co. v. Riddle, 51 Tex. 366, holding that failure of surveyor to make return to clerk of court did not prejudice county's rights in school lands.

Public land patents.—A patent is a completion of title, and establishes the performance of every prerequisite. No inquiry into the regularity of those preliminary measures can be made in a trial at law, p. 340.

Cited and rule followed in Boardman v. Reed, 6 Pet. 346, 8 L. 422, the court not allowing defendants to show irregularity in the entry or survey; Knabe v. Burden, 88 Ala. 440, 7 So. 94, holding that the issue of patent raised presumption that prerequisite election was legally held; Cohas v. Raisin, 3 Cal. 448, where it was presumed that Mexican court did its duty in marking boundaries; Hagar v. Lucas, 29 Cal. 311, the court not allowing patent to be attacked collaterally; Arnold v. Grimes, 2 G. Greene, 83, holding further that evidence tending to show fraud in procuring patent was inadmissible; Klein v. Argenbright, 26 Iowa, 496, holding that patent related back to date of certificate of location and cut off duplicate; Scudy v. Shaffer, 10 La. Ann. 136, refusing to go behind patent granted by State in conformity to law; Bruckner's Lessee v. Lawrence, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 32, 37, reviewing authorities, and holding that patent could not be impeached for fraud or mistake in an action at law; Clark v. Hall, 19 Mich. 372, holding that a person, not in privity with the title, could not attack a patent issued to an assignee; Burleson v. McGehee, 15 Tex. 377, holding that, in the absence of fraud, a commissioner's grant was complete. See notes, 2 Am. Dec. 569, 570, 12 Am. Dec. 565, 566, and 4 Am. Dec. 549.

Patents.—May possibly be impeached at law for fraud not legal and technical, but actual and positive fraud in fact, committed by person who obtained it, but this is questionable, p. 341.

Cited to this point with approval in Johnston v. Smith, 21 Tex. 726, holding that failure to bring family was not such fraud as to annul grant; Maxey v. O'Connor, 23 Tex. 238, holding that an excessive grant was not evidence of fraud. Cited generally in Giddings v. Steele, 28 Tex. 758, 91 Am. Dec. 347, holding that purchase by attorney at public sale to pay claim in his hands was not evidence of fraud.

Public land patents.—It is competent to contradict the call for a county in a patent and survey, and explain a misnomer; and such misnomer will not avoid patent, p. 344.

Cited and rule applied in Boardman v. Reed, 6 Pet. 344, 345, 346, 8 L. 421, 422, refusing instructions asked that a patent be declared void for misnomer of county; Perry v. Clark, 157 Mass. 332, 32 N. E. 226, where land was wrongly described as within the limits of a certain town; Ives v. Kimball, 1 Mich. 312, admitting evidence to prove misnomer of township in deeds; Slater v. Breese, 36 Mich. 82, allowing inconsistent descriptions in mortgage to be rejected; Hubermann v. Evans, 46 Neb. 807, 65 N. W. 1053, collecting authorities, and holding that description of lot as being in block W instead of block U, did not avoid deed; Burr v. Broadway Ins. Co., 16 N. Y. 271, admitting evidence to explain meaning of the word No. in policy.

Bills of exceptions.—The appellate court is not at liberty to consider points on which exception is not taken, p. 345.

Cited to this point and rule applied in Ludlam v. Broderick, 15 N. J. L. 275, refusing to sustain objection to depositions as a whole, where part of testimony was proper.

3 Pet. 346-396, 7 L. 701, FINLAY v. KING.

Wills.—Whether a condition is precedent or subsequent is a question of intention. If language shows that act must be performed before estate can vest, the condition is precedent; if from whole will, act may accompany or follow vesting of estate, the condition is subsequent, p. 374.

The citations collect a number of cases affirming and following this rule: Ward v. New England Screw Co., 1 Cliff. 577, F. C. 17, 157, holding that the words "for use aforesaid" in deed did not create condition subsequent; the following cases holding provisions to be conditions subsequent, Webster v. Cooper, 14 How. 501, 14 L. 516, that one should use surname "Vassall;" Conway et al., Ex parte, 4 Ark. 331, deed requiring trustees to give bonds; Tappan's Appeal, 52 Conn. 419, devise to a society on condition of building chapel within limited time; Jenkins v. Merritt, 17 Fla. 322, where legacy was conditioned upon co-residence of two parties; Bowman v. Long, 23 Ga. 245, devise to one should he live to be twenty-one years of age; Chicago v. C. & W. I. R. R. Co., 105 Ill. 78, that tracks be constructed within one year from passage of ordinance; Lindsey v. Lindsey, 45 Ind. 562, where testator directed that devisee should remain on farm and perform certain duties; Duncan v. Prentice, 4 Met. (Ky.) 217, a devise of remainder upon condition that devisee pay a certain sum to another; Decrow v. Moody, 73 Me. 103, that legatee should remain with testator until twenty-one years of age; Smith v. Rasin, 84 Md. 646, 36 Atl. 262, holding that an agreement to arbitrate was not a condition precedent to the termination of a lease. The following citing cases hold conditions to be subsequent: In re Stickney's Will, 85 Md. 102, 60 Am. St. Rep. 312, 36 Atl. 656, 35 L. R. A. 696, where legacy was given upon condition of certain releases being made; Burnett v. Strong, 26 Miss. 123, where a devise was qualified by the words, "on his paying all that he owes me," etc.; Nicoll v. New York & Erie R. R., 12 N. Y. 130, a grant upon condition that company construct road within limited time; Den v. Messenger, 33 N. J. L. 503, holding that a condition that devisee should remain with testator and his wife was a condition precedent to vesting of estate; Livingston v. Gordon, 84 N. Y. 143, where a direction to support another was held a condition subsequent; Magee v. O'Neill, 19 S. C. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 770, holding a bequest that one should take if "reared a Roman Catholic," with limitation over, to be a conditional limitation; Cannon v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 567, where bequests made upon condition of defending a lawsuit were held to be upon conditions precedent; Bell County v. Alexander, 22 Tex. 364, 73 Am. Dec. 276, holding direction to pay taxes a condition subsequent; Jones v. C. & O. R. R. Co., 14 W. Va. 522, holding grantee of right of way discharged from the performance of condition precedent in deed; Reuff v. Coleman, 30 W. Va. 174, 3 S. E. 599, holding a provision in will as to conduct and place of residence of legatee to be a condition precedent. Cited in note, 78 Am. Dec. 235, holding that estate vested where legatee was directed to take care of his mother during her lifetime; dissenting opinion, Towle v. Remsen, 70 N. Y. 322, majority holding a provision in a grant upon property qualification to be a condition subsequent.

Distinguished in Campau v. Chene, 1 Mich. 415, holding that a reservation in a deed for personal support was a covenant and not a condition; Henderson v. Beaton, 1 Posey, 28, approving doctrines of principal case, but holding that provision in deed as to division of property was not a condition.

Wills.—Devise in words of present time imports, if no contrary intent appears, an immediate interest, which vests on death of testator, p. 376.

Approved and rule applied in the following citing cases: Doe v. Considine, 6 Wall. 475, 478, 18 L. 875, holding that a remainder vested at the death of testator; Rogan v. Walker, 1 Wis. 562, holding that a deed conveyed an estate in presenti, although upon condition.

Wills.— It is a general rule that if estate be given on condition, for the performance of which no time is limited, the devisee has his life for performance, p. 376.

Rule limited in Conway et al. Ex parte, 4 Ark. 333, allowing trustees under deed a reasonable time to execute bonds.

Wills.— The intent of testator is the cardinal rule in the construction of wills. In construing intent of testator from whole will words may be rejected, transposed or so modified as to change literal meaning, provided such intent is not contrary to some positive rule of law, pp. 377, 383.

Cited and rule followed in McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. 412, 14 L. 752, holding that illegal conditions in a will did not divest the estate; Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 219, 29 L. 865, 6 S. Ct. 621, where testator described devise as lot 6, square 403, instead of lot 3, square 406; Elyton Land Co. v. McElrath, 53 Fed. 766, 2 U. S. App. 584, giving the words "during her natural life" a limited meaning; Capel v. McMillan, 8 Port. 204, construing intent of testator as to term of service of executrix; Howze v. Davis, 76 Ala. 383, where a bequest of forbearance of a debt was held to be qualified by a subsequent clause; Elyton Land Co. v. South & North Ala. R. R. Co., 100 Ala. 405, 14 So. 208, construing a proviso in deed to be a limitation and not a condition; Estate of Wood, 36 Cal. 81, interpreting the words "dying intestate" to mean dying without making any other will; Matthewson v. Saunders, 11 Conn. 149, construing certain bequests to be a charge upon real estate; Russ v. Russ, 9 Fla. 148, construing from whole will the words "heirs of her body" to mean children; Edmondson v. Dyson, 2 Ga. 313, where, in an executory trust under will, the heirs-at-law of devisee were held to take as purchasers; Decker v. Decker, 121 Ill. 354, 12 N. E. 756, rejecting words of false description of land in will; Whitcomb v. Rodman, 156 Ill. 120, 47 Am. St. Rep. 181, 40 N. E. 554, 28 L. R. A. 151, explaining misdescription of lands; Henderson v. Harness, 176 Ill. 306, 52 N. E. 69, rejecting construction of will making its provisions contrary to positive rules of law; Fox v. Phelps, 17 Wend. 398, holding, with reference to whole will, that the devisees took a fee; Prowitt v. Rodman, 37 N. Y. 49, holding that a direction as to "all the rest and residue" of property precludes any idea of partial intestacy; Duncan v. Harper, 4 S. C. 83, construing "bodily issue" to mean "children," and the word "and" to mean "or;" Clark v. Clark, 19 S. C. 352, changing terms used by testator to accord with his evident intention; McCamant v. Nuckolls, 85 Va. 337, 12 S. E. 162.

Miscellaneous.— Cited in King v. Mitchell, 8 Pet. 348, 349, 8 L. 970, interpreting trust clause of the will construed in principal case, and in Vint v. King, 28 Fed. Cas. 1202, suits involving rights of heirs to the same property. Cited erroneously in Tufts v. Tufts, 3 Wood. & M. 493, F. C. 14,233; Galloway v. Merchants' Bank, 42 Neb. 267, 60 N. W. 572; Barnard v. Roane Iron Co., 85 Tenn. 149, 2 S. W. 25; 4 Am. Dec. 549, note.

3 Pet. 397, 7 L. 719, ANONYMOUS.

Certified copies.— Reporter of the court; and not the clerk, is the proper person to give certified copies of the opinions of the Federal Supreme Court.

Not cited.

3 Pet. 398-410, 7 L. 719, FOWLE v. COMMON COUNCIL OF ALEXANDRIA.

Municipal corporations — Auctioneers.— Power of a corporation to license and to take bonds for their good behavior must be conferred by act of legislature, and corporation must conform to the act, p. 407.

Rule approved and applied in Kyle v. Malin, 8 Ind. 38, holding an order to grade and macadamize unauthorized and void; Village of St. James v. Hingtgen, 47 Minn. 524, 50 N. W. 700, holding that county attorney could not enforce bond in the name of the village; Mayor v. President, etc., Steamboat Co., Charlt. (Ga.) 348, holding that upon reorganization of corporation, in order to transfer particular powers, there must be an enabling clause.

Municipal corporations are not liable for losses consequent on their having misconstrued the extent of their powers in granting license without authority, p. 409.

Cited to this point in Trescott v. Waterloo, 26 Fed. 594, where plaintiff was wrongfully arrested for peddling without license. Cited in exhaustive note, 68 Am. Dec. 292.

Corporations.— Moneyed corporations, or those carrying on business for themselves, are liable for torts, and are bound by their contracts, p. 409.

Cited and rule applied in Kielley v. Belcher S. M. Co., 3 Sawy. 438. F. C. 7,760, holding corporation liable for injury to servant caused by servant in distinct and different department of the business; Edwards v. Union Bank, 1 Fla. 148, allowing trespass against corporation for wrongful entry; Rabassa v. Orleans Navigation Co., 5 La. 464, 25 Am. Dec. 202, holding company responsible for damage to toll road caused by act of its agents; New York & W. P. T. Co. v. Dryburg, 35 Pa. St. 302, 78 Am. Dec. 340, holding telegraph company liable for misfeasance of agent; Main v. Railroad Co., 12 Rich. L. 85. 75 Am. Dec. 726, permitting trespass quare clausum fregit; Mayor of Memphis v. Lasser, 9 Humph. 760, holding a municipal corporation liable for a tort resulting from dangerous street; Ohio Life Ins. Co. v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 11 Humph. 30, 53 Am. Dec. 765, holding defendant company liable for fraud perpetrated by its agent.

Distinguished in Whiteman v. Wilmington & Susquehanna R. R. Co., 2 Harr. 518, 520, 33 Am. Dec. 414, 416, holding that trespass would lie against corporation, but entry justified in this case.

Municipal corporations.—A legislative corporation is not liable for losses sustained by a non-feasance, by an omission to observe a law of its own, in which no penalty is provided, p. 409.

The citations collect the following authorities affirming and relying upon this principle: Barbour Co. v. Horn, 48 Ala. 575, an action for damages occasioned by a fall from insecure bridge; Sherbourne v. Yuba Co., 21 Cal. 115, 81 Am. Dec. 152, holding county is not liable for damage sustained by reason of unskillful treatment by its physician; Symonds v. Clay Co., 71 Ill. 357, an action for damage caused by negligence of defendant's servant; Vigo Township v. Board of Commissioners, 111 Ind. 175, 12 N. E. 307, holding county not liable for defalcations of treasurer; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 369, 23 Am. Rep. 357, collecting authorities, and applying rule where a child was injured by reason of dangerous condition of schoolhouse; Lyon v. Cambridge, 136 Mass. 420, where plaintiff was injured by reason of darkness in street; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 114, 4 Am. Rep. 458, an action for injury occasioned by defective sidewalk; Reock v. Mayor, 33 N. J. L. 133, a suit for damage sustained by change of street grade; Vail v. Amenia, 4 N. Dak. 243, 59 N. W. 1093, where plaintiff was injured by reason of unsafe bridge; Commissioners Hamilton Co. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 124, an action against county for personal injuries sustained in defective passage in courthouse; Elliott v. Philadelphia, 75 Penn. St. 352, 15 Am. Rep. 596, exonerating city for neglect of police officer; White v. City Council, 2 Hill L. 575, holding that there was no trespass where officers pulled down house to check a fire, and Black v. City of Columbia, 19 S. C. 421, 422, 45 Am. Rep. 790, 791, where there was further an inadequate supply of water; Young v. City Council, 20 S. C. 112, 47 Am. Rep. 828, holding that no action lay for injuries sustained by reason of defect in street; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 381, 94 Am. Dec. 465, where slave escaped from city hospital and was lost by neglect of proper custody; Mendel v. Wheeling, 28 W. Va. 257, 57 Am. Rep. 682, collecting authorities, and holding city not liable for loss by fire caused by defect in water supply. Cited in valuable note, 30 Am. St. Rep. 381. Approved, without applying rule, in Coleman v. Chester, 14 S. C. 291, holding that no tort was committed. Cited generally in State v. Hayes, 61 N. H. 332, holding that a New Hampshire town is a municipal corporation with limited legislative powers; Wooster v. Plymouth, 62 N. H. 209, holding that municipal corporations are subject to legislative control.

Distinguished in Tallahassee v. Fortune, 3 Fla. 20, 52 Am. Dec. 360, holding city liable for injury sustained by reason of a nuisance; McGary v. Lafayette, 4 La. Ann. 440, where city ratified tortious act of its agents; Mayor of New York v. Bailey, 2 Den. 448, holding city liable for negligent construction of a dam erected for its benefit; Petersburg v. Applegarth, 28 Gratt. 344, 26 Am. Rep. 362, where it is held that the city as wharf-owner must respond in damages for tort.

Pleading.—Defendant may demur and plead to the whole declaration at the same time by virtue of the Virginia statute, p. 409.

Cited with approval in Higgs v. Shehee, 4 Fla. 392, allowing defendant to defend on the merits after demurrer to evidence overruled.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in Dormady v. State Bank, 2 Scam. 242, 245; Trustees v. Burt, 11 Vt. 642.

3 Pet. 411-412, 7 L. 723, CLAY v. SMITH.

Bankruptcy.—A person of one State, voluntarily making himself a party to bankruptcy proceedings in another State, abandons his extra-territorial immunity from the operation of its bankruptcy laws, p. 412.

This ruling is affirmed and relied upon by the citing cases, as follows: Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 369, 37 L. 1113, 14 S. Ct. 133 (affirming S. C., 146 Mass. 417, 4 Am. St. Rep. 330, 16 N. E. 297), holding that creditor waived any constitutional right by accepting dividends; Electric Co. v. Dow, 166 U. S. 490, 41 L. 1089, 17 S. Ct. 646, where party making an election under a statute was held to waive any objection to it; Davidson v. Smith, 1 Biss. 348, F. C. 3,608, relieving debtor of a judgment obtained by a non-resident before his discharge; Brest v. Smith, 5 Biss. 62, F. C. 1,843, and Wilson v. Matthews, 32 Ala. 351, 352, where creditor had joined in insolvency proceedings; Greene v. Sprague Mfg. Co., 52 Conn. 372, holding creditor bound by acceptance of a deed of assignment; Rosenheim v. Morrow, 37 Fla. 188, 20 So. 245, where non-resident had accepted pro rata dividend; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. 398, holding defendant previously discharged from arrest for debt; Fogler v. Clark, 80 Me. 240, 14 Atl. 10, where creditor voluntarily appeared and accepted dividends, and Chafee v. Fourth National Bank, 71 Me. 527, 36 Am. Rep. 350, reviewing some authorities on same point; Evans v. Sprigg, 2 Md. 483, reviewing authorities, and protecting non-resident creditor attaching before insolvent's application was filed; Jones v. Horsey, 4 Md. 312, 59 Am. Dec. 82, where foreign creditor joined in recommendation of trustee; Brown v. Smart, 69 Md. 327, 14 Atl. 470, holding a deed of assignment to preferred foreign creditors void; Journeay v. Gardner, 11 Cush. 357; Bucklin v. Bucklin, 97 Mass. 258, and Burpee v. Sparhawk, 108 Mass. 114, 11 Am. Rep. 323, all barring creditors voluntarily appearing in bankruptcy proceedings. So also in Murray v. Roberts, 150 Mass. 355, 15 Am. St. Rep. 210, 23 N. E. 209, 6 L. R. A. 347, n.; and Perley v. Mason, 64 N. H. 8, 3 Atl. 631, ruling similarly; Van Hook v. Whitlock, 26 Wend. 54, 37 Am. Dec. 249 (affirming S. C., 7 Paige, 378, 379), holding that creditor waived constitutional rights by accepting dividend; Phelps v. Borland, 103 N. Y. 412, 57 Am. Rep. 758, 9 N. E. 310, holding drawer of bill discharged where holder voluntarily appeared in bankruptcy proceedings in England. See note, 7 Ohio, 197. See review of authorities in exhaustive note, 15 Am. St. Rep. 214, 216, 217, 218, 221. Approved in Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 115, 33 L. 542, 10 S. Ct. 271, preventing creditor of bankrupt from prosecuting suit in another State; Marsh v. Putnam, 3 Gray, 560, holding discharge barred action between residents on contract to be performed in another State; in dissenting opinion, Brighton Market Bank v. Merick, 11 Mich. 414, court holding non-resident holder of note bound by bankruptcy proceedings in like manner as residents. Cited generally in Pierce v. Somerset Ry., 171 U. S. 649, holding that a person may, by his acts, waive rights which he might otherwise have under Federal Constitution; Wilson v. Matthews, 32 Ala. 343, 344, holding that Louisiana insolvent laws were constitutional; in dissenting opinion, People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 271, majority holding decree of divorce obtained in sister State fraudulent and void; Barry v. Iseman, 14 Rich. L. 141, 91 Am. Dec. 268, holding that non-residence could not avail a party suing on a contract made and to be executed in same State; Perry Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 2 Wood. & M. 459, F. C. 11,015, as to petitioner's residence in the county in insolvency proceedings.

Distinguished in Woodhull v. Wagner, 1 Bald. 301, F. C. 17,975, where creditor was allowed to enforce debt against non-resident bankrupt; Towne v. Smith, 1 Wood. & M. 127, F. C. 14,115, allowing non-resident holder of a note to sue bankrupt debtor; Brook v. Brown, 5 Cr. C. O. 492, F. C. 1,931; Donnelly v. Corbett, 7 N. Y. 507, and Soule v. Chase, 39 N. Y. 344, holding that one does not become a resident creditor by suing in State of insolvent; Babcock v. Weston, 1 Gall. 169, F. C. 703, a non-resident not being a party to the proceedings; Harrison's Admr. v. Harrison's Distributees, 39 Ala. 505, holding that certain proceedings in chancery did not determine an election of remedies; Norton v. Cook, 9 Conn. 321, 23 Am. Dec. 345; Collins v. Rodolph, 3 G. Greene, 305, and McCarty v. Gibson, 5 Gratt. 326, holding non-resident creditor, who had appeared to oppose petition, not precluded. Rule criticised in Agnew v. Platt, 15 Pick. 422, holding that non-resident could not waive rights by assenting to proceedings void as to him. Distinguished in Safford v. Slade, 11 Cush. 30, where non-resident proved claim by mistake; Fareira v. Keevil, 18 Mo. 189, where foreign creditor was not a party; Van Nest v. Yoe, 1 Sandf. Ch. 16, holding creditor fraudulently induced to accept dividend under an assignment not bound by it; Elton v. O'Connor, 6 N. Dak. 18, 20, 68 N. W. 89, 90, 33 L. R. A. 530, 531, holding that creditor, whose claim accrued before passage of insolvency law, may treat as void the discharge provision of the law, despite his receipt of dividends; Douglass v. Craig, 13 S. C. 375, holding that one receiving a "pro rata" on basis of allowance of Homestead is not estopped to afterwards deny a right to such exemption; Johns v. Brown, 1 Tex. App. Civ. 569, holding that one did not release his claim upon a firm by accepting a payment from the corporation into which it was merged; Blackman v. Green, 24 Vt. 22, holding that a factor could not deprive his principal of extra-territorial immunity, without his consent.

Judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc as of the first day of the term, when party dies while the cause is held under advisement, p. 412.

Rule applied and case cited in Blaisdell v. Harris, 52 N. H. 195, where plaintiff died after verdict, and while cause was pending in law term; Estate of Jarrett, 42 Ohio St. 201, entering judgment nunc pro tunc as of the day when cause was submitted. Cited in notes to Mitchell v. Overman, 103 U. S. 66, 26 L. 371, sustaining the validity of a decree entered as of the term when the cause was submitted; and Young v. Ridenbaugh, 3 Dill. 245, F. C. 18,173, entering discharge of bankrupt after his death.

Cited, but held inapplicable, Power v. Lenoir (Mont.), 56 Pac. 111, where father defended suit respecting his children's property without due appointment as guardian, his appointment as such afterwards nunc pro tunc, without notice to them, is invalid.

3 Pet. 413-430, 7 L. 724, PARSONS v. ARMOR.

Writ of error.—Writ of error, according to common law, does not bring up testimony as well as law of case for revision of appellate court, p. 425.

Approved in Farrelly v. Cross, 10 Ark. 407, holding on writ of error court has power to correct errors of law, not of fact. Approved in dissenting opinion, United States v. King, 7 How. 866, 12 L. 948, majority reversing case for error upon face of record outside of bill of exceptions.

Appeal.—Where entire testimony as well as law of the case is submitted to appellate court, there is no way to treat the case, but in the nature of bill of exceptions, p. 425.

Constitutional law — Jury trial.—The seventh amendment to Constitution providing for trial by jury has no bearing in case where parties have expressly waived such trial, p. 425.

Approved and applied in Kearney v. Case, 12 Wall. 281, 20 L. 396, collecting cases and holding waiver of jury trial will be inferred where party is present by counsel and goes to trial before court.

Appeal and error — Bill of exceptions.—Where all testimony is submitted on writ of error, and giving utmost force to evidence in favor of respondent, judgment must be reversed, case may be treated as bill of exceptions, p. 425.

Cited and rule followed in Hyde v. Booraem, 16 Pet. 176, 10 L. 928, reversing case where taking all facts in favor of respondent as true, judgment cannot be maintained; Phillips v. Preston, 5 How. 290, 12 L. 157, holding statute requiring testimony to be taken down in cases where appeal lies to Supreme Court does not include cases carried up by writ of error; Farrelly v. Cross, 10 Ark. 409, holding on writ of error court has power to correct errors of law, not of fact; Kennon v. Shull, 9 Ind. 156, note, holding where cause stands for trial de novo in Circuit Court and latter is then deprived of jurisdiction, appeal is dismissed. Approved in dissenting opinion in Real Estate Bank v. Rawdon, 5 Ark. 586, 589.

Agency.—Principal is bound by acts of agent only so far as he authorizes that agent to bind him; but extent of power given to agent is deducible from facts as well as express delegation, p. 428.

Cited approvingly to this point and followed in The Joseph Grant, 1 Biss. 197, F. C. 7,538, holding vessel is not bound where master signs blank bill of lading in excess of authority; United States v. Halberstadt, Gilp. 270, F. C. 15,276, holding merchant is not liable for penalty where his clerk buys empty spirit cask with stamps undestroyed; United States v. Celluloid, 82 Fed. 631, 54 U. S. App. 282, holding owner of goods is not liable for attempts of mere trespasser to smuggle the same.

Bills and notes.—Power to draw a bill of exchange and put same upon the market is equivalent to deposit of cash in drawer's hands, p. 428.

Cited approvingly in Bayard v. Lathy, 2 McLean, 464, F. C. 1,131, holding written authority to draw is an acceptance to person taking bill on credit of same.

Distinguished in Bell v. Moss, 5 Whart. 203, holding as between buyer and seller promise to accept draft does not amount to payment.

Agency.—If money is given to servant to purchase for principal, and agent uses it and purchases on credit, principal is not bound, although article come in fact to principal's use, p. 429.

Agency.—Where principal, who protests overdrafts of agent given in payment of purchases, is guilty of unfair dealing or collusion with agent, he is chargeable upon such bills, p. 429.

Bills and notes.—There can be no question of the general power of drawee to protest bills of one who has overdrawn, p. 429.

Bills and notes.—The fact that drawee of bill has been in habit of accepting bills of certain nature drawn by his agent, does not put him under obligation to accept other bills of same nature, p. 430.

Approved in Murdock v. Mills, 11 Met. 15, applying rule where agent exceeded his instructions and some of his bills were paid and others protested; Michigan Bank v. Leavenworth, 28 Vt. 221, applying rule where bills were protested because payable at New York while previous bills so payable were accepted.

Agency.—Where agent, purchasing for principal, exhibits latter's letter stating limitations upon agent's authority, principal is not liable if agent exceeds such authority, p. 430.

Approved and applied in Carrollton Bank v. Tayleur, 16 La. 500, 35 Am. Dec. 222, applying rule where principal's letter limited amount to be drawn and agent exceeded the limit; Mussey v. Beecher, 3 Cush. 518, holding party selling to agent in excess of known instructions to expend $2,000, cannot recover excess from principal.

Miscellaneous.—Duncan v. United States, 7 Pet. 451, 8 L. 745, and Livingston v. Story, 11 Pet. 396, 9 L. 764, dissenting opinion, referring to principal case in connection with opinion in Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 7 L. 732, arising from same transaction.

3 Pet. 431-432, 7 L. 731. BANK OF KENTUCKY v. WISTAR.

Amendment of judgment.—Where, by clerical error, the judgment of Supreme Court, affirming that of Circuit Court, omits to allow interest as damages, the proper amendment will be ordered made, p. 432.

Approved and practice followed in Gilman v. Libbey, 4 Cliff. 460, F. C. 5,445, holding court has power to amend record where it falsely appears that defendant presided as judge; Gibson v. Chouteau's Heirs, 45 Mo. 173, 100 Am. Dec. 368, collecting cases, and granting motion to correct judgment faultily entered by clerk; Evans v. Fisher, 26 Mo. App. 545, granting motion to correct judgment which bears special rate of interest so as to show that rate; Trammell v. Trammell, 25 Tex. Sup. 271, reviewing cases, and amending judgment on appeal to include one of three sureties omitted by clerk's mistake. Approved in Sibbald v. United States, 12 Pet. 492, 9 L. 1169, ordering new mandate in conformity to opinion formerly rendered where clerk's mandate was not sufficiently specific; Bank of United States v. Moss, 6 How. 38, 12 L. 334, holding, however, where Circuit Court has rendered judgment, it may not at subsequent term strike it out for want of jurisdiction; Phillips v. Negley, 117 U. S. 674, 29 L. 1015, 6 S. Ct. 905, denying motion to set aside judgment rendered at previous term; Gay v. Joplin, 4 McCrary, 465, note; Jenkins v. Eldredge, 1 Wood. & M. 63, F. C. 7,269, refusing petition to extend time to redeem mortgaged property after final decree; Chambers v. Hodges, 3 Tex. 529, refusing, however, to reconsider opinion rendered at previous term; Ætna Ins. Co. v. McCormick, 20 Wis. 269, holding, however, judgment rendered at prior term cannot be set aside on ground that sufficient notice was not given to adverse party. See also valuable discussion in note, 21 Am. Dec. 119; United States v. Peralta, 27 Fed. Cas. 497, holding, however, District Court may amend description of land in decree to conform with description in Supreme Court's opinion. Cited generally in Bissell Co. v. Goshen Co., 72 Fed. 553, 43 U. S. App. 47, quoting from Sibbald v. United States, supra, on point that no appeal lies from Circuit Court of Appeals to same court.

Distinguished in Rice v. Minn., etc., Ry. Co., 21 How. 85, 16 L. 32, denying motion to vacate judgment dismissing appeal for lack of jurisdiction.

Damages on appeal.—When there are no special circumstances, damages at rate of 6 per cent. are added to judgment of court below; under special circumstances 10 per cent. is awarded, p. 432.

3 Pet. 433-458, 7 L. 732, PARSONS v. BEDFORD.

Practice.—Congress did not intend by the act of May 26, 1824, to give an absolute and imperative force to the modes of proceedings in civil causes in Louisiana, in the court of the United States, nor to repeal antecedent modes of proceeding, p. 444.

Cited to this point in Livingston v. Story, 9 Pet. 657, 9 L. 264, holding that Federal court in Louisiana had same equity powers as any Federal Circuit Court; Fenn v. Holme, 21 How. 486, 16 L. 200, holding that adoption of State practice does not confound the proceedings in law and equity in Federal courts; Sulzer v. Watson, 39 Fed. 415, holding action of book account must be tried by jury notwithstanding Revised Statutes, section 914, adopting State practice; United States v. National Lead Co., 75 Fed. 95, holding that legislation of Congress controlled practice in regard to production of books in Federal court.

Federal practice.—Where no rule superseding State practice was adopted by the Federal court in Louisiana, the act of Congress made the practice of the State the rule for the court of the United States, p. 445.

Cited, affirmed and followed on this point in Duncan v. United States, 7 Pet. 451, 8 L. 745, where the Federal court had followed the Louisiana practice; Smith v. Cockrill, 6 Wall. 758, 18 L. 974, where a sale on execution was held void as not made in conformity to State practice. Approved in dissenting opinion, Livingston v. Story, 11 Pet. 396, 399, 9 L. 764, 765, majority holding that rule of court did not allow defendant to insist on any special matter in his answer.

Appeal.—Generally speaking matters of practice in inferior courts do not constitute subjects upon which error can be assigned in the appellate court, and points of law are not cognizable unless raised by proper application, p. 445.

Cited, and rule followed in Minor v. Tillotson, 2 How. 393, 11 L. 313, refusing to try cause on its merits on a writ of error; Phillips v. Preston, 5 How. 289, 290, 12 L. 157, holding that court could not re-examine facts in a case at law, without a trial by jury, on writ of error; dissenting opinion in United States v. King, 7 How. 865, 12 L. 948, majority holding upon writ of error that decision of Federal court in Louisiana upon question of fact was conclusive; dissenting opinion, Real Estate Bank v. Rawdon, 5 Ark. 590, 594, majority holding that findings of law and fact by lower court sitting as jury might be reviewed under bill of exceptions.

Common law.—At the adoption of the Constitution the common law was essentially the basis of the jurisprudence of all the States, and the phrase “common law” is used in that instrument in contradistinction to equity, and admiralty and maritime jurisprudence, p. 446.

Cited as an authority for this proposition in Irvine v. Marshall, 20 How. 565, 15 L. 998, where the Federal court exercised its equity jurisdiction to enforce a trust; The Steamboat Atlas, 4 Ben. 35, F. C. 633, an action in admiralty for loss from collision, the court dividing the loss; In re Oregon Bulletin Co., 3 Sawy. 531, F. C. 10,560, holding that proceeding by creditor to have debtor adjudged a bankrupt is a case at law; Brisenden v. Chamberlain, 53 Fed. 309, holding that phrase “common law” in Constitution includes statutory action for damages; Klever v. Seawall, 65 Fed. 395, 22 U. S. App. 715, directing proceeding for partition to be brought in equity by virtue of State statute; Poole v. Nixon, 19 Fed. Cas. 994, holding that bills of review form part of the law of equity adopted by the Constitution; Tift v. Griffin, 5 Ga. 192, holding that our usage must be according to common law in suit against receiver of public moneys; Territory v. Flowers, 2 Mont. 534, holding an act conferring “common-law jurisdiction” gave the court cognizance of statutory offenses; Browning v. Estate of Browning, 3 N. Mex. 465 (374), 9 Pac. 680, following the common-law statute of limitations in suit on promissory note; Cast v. Cast, 1 Utah, 123, holding that action for divorce was within chancery jurisdiction of State District Court. Cited, with approval, in dissenting opinion, Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. 481, 12 L. 245, majority sustaining admiralty jurisdiction in a case of collision occurring on waters slightly influenced by tide. Cited generally in Shuford v. Cain, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 305, F. C. 12,823, on the point that the United States courts preserve the distinction between suits at law and in equity; Allen v. Blunt, 1 Blatchf. 486, F. C. 215, holding that Federal courts have power in equity to grant injunctions, etc., for infringement of patent; United States v. Power, 14 Blatchf. 225, F. C. 16,080, holding that a certain City Court was a court of common-law jurisdiction; United States v. New Bedford Bridge, 1 Wood. & M. 459, F. C. 15,867, holding that the admiralty law as to crimes was never clearly adopted at any one time by our courts; Ex parte Tweedy, 22 Fed. 88, holding that Probate Court in Tennessee was not one having common-law jurisdiction; Dean, Petitioner, 83 Me. 496, 22 Atl. 387, 13 L. R. A. 231, n., holding that municipal court without a clerk had no jurisdiction over application for naturalization; Wilcox v. Saunders, 4 Neb. 580, holding that actions for specific performance and for damages were improperly joined; Reubens v. Joel, 13 N. Y. 496, where it was sought to combine equitable relief with a judgment for debt; Stevens v. Baker, 1 Wash. Ter. 319, adopting the Federal rules in equity in territorial courts.

Juries do not intervene in civil causes in courts of equity and admiralty, and are used in courts of equity in extraordinary cases only to inform the conscience of the court, p. 446.

Constitutional law.—The seventh amendment to the Constitution by the words “in suits of common law” embraces all suits not of equity and admiralty jurisdiction, whatever may be their form, p. 447.

The citations collect a variety of cases affirming this proposition and relying upon it for the following holdings: Parish v. Ellis, 16 Pet. 454, 10 L. 1029, holding an action in Florida for allotment of dower to be a case at law; Hipp v. Babin, 19 How. 278, 15 L. 635, denying equity jurisdiction in a suit for recovery of land and for an accounting; and similarly in Fenn v. Holme, 21 How. 486, 16 L. 200, a suit in ejectment; Root v. Railway Co., 105 U. S. 206, 26 L. 981, reviewing authorities, and dismissing a bill in equity merely asking for damages for infringement of patent; Baker v. Biddle, 1 Bald. 405, F. C. 764, holding that plaintiff had a plain and adequate remedy at law, and, therefore, dismissing bill; Bains v. Schooner James, 1 Bald. 554, 561, 562, F. C. 756, holding that an account not cognizable in admiralty could not be set up by way of set-off to a libel for seamen’s wages; Keith v. Rockingham, 18 Blatchf. 247, 2 Fed. 835, holding that statutory action against town for special damage was an action at common law; United States v. Steamship Queen, 4 Ben. 243, F. C. 16,107, holding that action against master was at law, entitling him to jury trial; Quantity of Manufactured Tobacco, 10 Ben. 448, F. C. 11,499, where it is held that an action for forfeiture for violation of internal revenue laws is a common-law cause; United States v. One Hundred and Thirty Barrels of Whiskey, 1 Bond, 590, F. C. 15,938, allowing jury trial to claimant of property seized by the government; United States v. Block, 121, 3 Biss. 214, F. C. 14,610, holding that a condemnation proceeding was a suit of civil nature at common law within meaning of judiciary act; Boyd v. Clark, 13 Fed. 910, holding that an admiralty cause tried by jury might be reviewed on appeal; Smith v. American Nat. Bank, 89 Fed.

839, compelling cestui que trust to resort to equity to follow trust property and enforce the trust; United States v. Inlotts, 26 Fed. Cas. 487, holding condemnation proceeding a suit at common law; Field v. Walker, 17 Ala. 82, holding that issue freedom vel non should be tried by jury; Ashley v. Little Rock, 56 Ark. 396, 19 S. W. 1059, holding that one in possession claiming adverse title is entitled to have his claim tried at law by jury; St. Paul & Sioux City R. R. v. Gardner, 19 Minn. 141, 18 Am. Rep. 338, reserving right of jury trial in action to recover value of wheat converted; Scott v. Billgerry, 40 Miss. 143, granting jury trial in suit for specific performance; Creighton v. Hershfield, 1 Mont. 645, holding that it was error to try a suit in foreclosure as a common-law action with jury; Chamberlain v. Warburton, 1 Utah, 270, granting jury trial in mandamus proceeding; Dacres v. O. R. & N. Co., 1 Wash. 529, 20 Pac. 603, declaring an act, in effect denying right of trial by jury in certain cases, unconstitutional; so, also, in In re Sherman M. Booth, 3 Wis. 40, an act conferring upon commissioners right to try claims to fugitive slaves.

Cited, with particular application of the ruling, in Brent v. Bank of Washington, 10 Pet. 613, 9 L. 554. Cited generally in Clark v. Sohler, 1 Wood. & M. 372, F. C. 2,835, which was a petition for new trial in common-law action; Alger v. Anderson, 92 Fed. 712, in discussing adequate remedy at law; Magill v. Brown, 16 Fed. Cas. 440, holding that English principles of common law and equity relative to charitable uses prevail unless contrary to section 16, judiciary act; Lavey v. Doig, 25 Fla. 617, 6 So. 261, holding that County Court had power to try validity of will without a jury; State v. Gutierrez, 15 La. Ann. 194, holding that any attempt to reduce number of jurors would be of no effect. Cited with approval in dissenting opinion, Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah, 159, 160, 164, 39 Pac. 543, 544, majority holding that an act permitting a verdict by nine out of twelve jurors is not in conflict with seventh amendment. Cited in note, 48 Am. Dec. 186, where authorities are reviewed.

Limited and criticised as too broad in Commissioners v. Morrison, 22 Minn. 179, holding that, among other exceptions, a jury could not be demanded in a suit for collection of taxes. So in Schmidt v. Schmidt, 47 Minn. 453, 50 N. W. 599, denying jury trial in contest of will; Chumasero v. Potts, 2 Mont. 259, concurring opinion, holding that in Montana the right of trial by jury in mandamus proceedings is not absolute; Tribon v. Strowbridge, 7 Or. 159, holding that under State statute court could refer an action at law involving examination of long accounts. Distinguished in dissenting opinion, Scott v. Billgerry, 40 Miss. 155, supra.

Seventh amendment and judiciary act were contemporaneous, p. 446.

Cited to this point, arguendo, Alger v. Anderson, 92 Fed. 700.

Appeal and error.—The only modes known to the common law and in the Federal courts to re-examine facts tried by a jury are the granting of new trial by the court where issue was tried, or the award of a new trial by an appellate court, for some error of law, p. 448.

The following citing cases affirm and rely upon this holding: Hepburn v. Dubois, 12 Pet. 376, 9 L. 1123, holding that the court was bound to consider a certain fact established by finding of the jury; Barreda v. Silsbee, 21 How. 167, 16 L. 93, holding that finding of jury was conclusive; Justices v. Murray, 9 Wall. 277, 19 L. 660, applying rule to criminal case of Federal cognizance, coming up from State court; Miller v. Life Ins. Co., 12 Wall. 300, 20 L. 401, holding findings of fact by lower court to be conclusive; Insurance Co. v. Comstock, 16 Wall. 269, 21 L. 498, ordering the Federal Circuit Court to decide questions in bill of exceptions brought up from District Court; Insurance Co. v. Folsom, 18 Wall. 249, 21 L. 833, overruling an exception to ruling of lower court refusing to make any special finding as requested; Crim v. Handley, 94 U. S. 657, 24 L. 218, refusing to disturb judgment at law, there being no ground for equitable relief; The Abbotsford, 98 U. S. 445, 25 L. 170, the court in an admiralty cause considering only such rulings as were presented by bill of exceptions; Railroad Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 32, 25 L. 535, and Trenier v. Stewart, 101 U. S. 808, 25 L. 1023, affirming decision of lower court, no error appearing in the record; Arkansas Cattle Co. v. Mann, 130 U. S. 75, 32 L. 856, 9 S. Ct. 460, refusing on writ of error to review an order refusing new trial; Blitz v. United States, 153 U. S. 312, 38 L. 727, 14 S. Ct. 926, holding similarly; Delaware R. R. v. Converse, 139 U. S. 476, 35 L. 216, 11 S. Ct. 572, where jury had found plaintiff not guilty of contributory negligence, and there was no error. The principal case is relied upon in the following, sustaining verdicts where no error of law appeared: Lincoln v. Power, 151 U. S. 438, 38 L. 225, 14 S. Ct. 388; Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 246, 41 L. 988, 17 S. Ct. 588, reviewing authorities at length, and United States v. Plumer, 3 Cliff. 25, F. C. 16,055. Followed in Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U. S. 475, 41 L. 233, 16 S. Ct. 1067, where jury trial was waived, but rule applied; Smith v. Chase, 3 Cr. C. C. 352, F. C. 13,022, and Fitzgerald v. Leisman, 3 McA. 8, holding that no appeal lies from jury trial before justice of peace; United States v. Haynes, 26 Fed. 857, holding that indictment cannot be remitted to Circuit Court after conviction in District Court; United States v. Haynes, 29 Fed. 695, 697, approving rule, but criticising result in preceding decision involving same matter; New York & T. S. S. Co. v. Anderson, 50 Fed. 465, 1 U. S. App. 176, refusing to review decision refusing to grant new trial on ground that verdict was against evidence; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 51 Fed. 579, 7 U. S. App. 359, and Richmond, etc., Co. v. Dick, 52 Fed. 380, 8 U. S. App. 99, applying rule similarly;

Singer Mfg. Co. v. Brill, 54 Fed. 382, 7 U. S. App. 601, the court refusing on writ of error to review verdict; Harper & Reynolds Co. v. Wilgus, 56 Fed. 588, 15 U. S. App. 143, appellate court having no concern with weight to be given evidence properly admitted; Dillingham v. Hawk, 60 Fed. 496, 23 U. S. App. 273, 23 L. R. A. 519, where verdict in State court against receiver appointed by Federal court was allowed to stand; Pacific Postal Telegraph v. Fleischner, 66 Fed. 903, 29 U. S. App. 227, refusing to disturb findings of fact by lower court; Hurd v. McClellan, 1 Colo. App. 330, 29 Pac. 183, where no valid appeal to a judgment in ejectment was taken; McCarthy v. Strait, 7 Colo. App. 63, 42 Pac. 190, and Pueblo Lumber Co. v. Danziger, 7 Colo. App. 151, 42 Pac. 684, holding parties concluded by judgments where no steps were taken to have them reviewed; Bryant v. Rich, 106 Mass. 193, 8 Am. Rep. 316, deuying petition made after verdict, for removal of cause to Federal court; Crane v. Reeder, 28 Mich. 532, 535, 15 Am. Rep. 228, 230, refusing to transfer cause to Federal court after several trials and judgments in State court; Goss v. McClaren, 17 Tex. 115, 67 Am. Dec. 647, holding it to be error for court to grant new trial after term in which judgment was entered; Barlow v. Daniels, 25 W. Va. 514, 515, 518, holding that a case tried by a jury of six could not be retried in appellate court.

Cited generally to this point in Bassick Min. Co. v. Schoolfield, 15 Colo. 380, 24 Pac. 1051, holding that court could not create a lien on property for receiver's fee after judicial sale; Allen v. Lewis, 38 Fla. 121, 20 So. 823; Ringgold's Case, 1 Bland. 9, discussing fully the subject of appeal; State v. Van Winkle, 6 Nev. 352; Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 387, 16 Am. Rep. 326, holding that vindictive damages could not be awarded in a civil action, punishable by the criminal law. Approved in dissenting opinion, Insurance Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 134, 24 L. 400, majority reviewing a judgment founded upon special finding by lower court without intervention of a jury.

Distiguished in Boyd v. Clark, 13 Fed. 910, holding admiralty causes tried by jury may be re-examined upon appeal; Knight v. Cheney, 14 Fed. Cas. 764, 5 Bank. Reg. 317, holding that Congress may provide for revision of equity causes by appellate court.

Constitutional law.—No court ought, unless unavoidable, to give a construction to a statute rendering it unconstitutional, p. 448.

Cited to this principle and followed in Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 269, 29 L. 620, 6 S. Ct. 586, sustaining validity of sections of the Military Code of Illinois; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 657, 39 L. 301, 15 S. Ct. 211, upholding a penal statute on the ground that it did not attempt to regulate interstate commerce; Personal Liberty Laws, 46 Me. 587, Appleton and Kent, JJ., sustaining their constitutionality; State ex rel. Drake v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 697, sustaining validity of a State act imposing conditions upon foreign insurance companies.

Miscellaneous.—Cited erroneously in Tufts v. Tufts, 3 Wood. & M. 483, F. C. 14,233.

3 Pet. 459-460, 7 L. 741, FARRAR v. UNITED STATES.

Supreme Court practice.—It has uniformly been the practice of the clerk of the Federal Supreme Court to enter, at the first term to which any writ of error or appeal is returnable, the appearance of the attorney-general, in every case to which the United States is a party, p. 459.

Supreme Court practice.—If the attorney-general lets the clerk's appearance for him pass for that term, it is conclusive upon him, otherwise not, p. 460.

An appearance cures any defect in the service of process, p. 460.

Rule approved and followed in Platt v. Manning, 34 Fed. 818, holding that a general appearance cured an unauthorized service; Rundles v. Jones, 3 Ind. 37, holding that any defect in an assignment of errors was waived by plea of no error; Bank of Valley v. Bank of Berkeley, 3 W. Va. 391, where errors in process were waived by motions to continue; Mahany v. Kephart, 15 W. Va. 618, where defendant appeared voluntarily; Shepherd v. Brown, 30 W. Va. 18, 3 S. E. 189, where defective notice was cured by appearance.

Distinguished in Romaine v. Union Ins. Co., 28 Fed. 638, holding that special appearance did not subject parties to jurisdiction of court and cure defect in service; Steele v. Harkness, 9 W. Va. 24, holding that an appearance did not waive the exception to process properly reserved.

3 Pet. 461-467, 7 L. 741, NEW JERSEY v. NEW YORK.

Practice.—Where rule prescribes service of process upon both the governor and the attorney-general of a State, service on one of them is not sufficient to entitle court to proceed, p. 464.

Practice.—In an action between two States, court does not feel bound by its decision after ex parte argument on point of jurisdiction, if defendant State asks to have question reargued, p. 464.

Supreme Court will grant subpoena in equity to be served on governor and attorney-general of defendant State subject to right of said State to object in course of the cause, p. 466.

Miscellaneous.—Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 288, 32 L. 242, 8 S. Ct. 1373, collecting instances of actions between two States concerning their boundaries.

3 Pet. 469, 7 L. 744, SMITH v. HONEY.

Appeal and error.—When verdict for plaintiff in Circuit Court is for less than $2,000 and defendant prosecutes writ of error, Supreme Court has not jurisdiction, although plaintiff's demand exceeds $2,000, p. 469.

Cited and doctrine followed in Walker v. United States, 4 Wall.

164, 18 L. 319, dismissing appeal where judgment for plaintiff was for $2,000 and interest; The "D. R. Martin," 91 U. S. 366, 23 L. 440, holding where libellant obtained decree for $500, which was reversed upon defendant's appeal, libellant cannot appeal to Supreme Court; Hilton v. Dickinson, 108 U. S. 172, 27 L. 690, 2 S. Ct. 429, reviewing cases, and dismissing appeal of plaintiff who has obtained judgment for $1,500 out of fund of $3,000; Decker v. Williams, 73 Fed. 311, collecting cases and dismissing appeal of defendant from judgment for less than amount fixed by statute; Richmond v. Brummie, 52 Kan. 248, 34 Pac. 784; Tipton v. Chambers, 1 Met. (Ky.) 568, and Draper v. Clark, 59 Ohio St. 339, 52 N. E. 833, dismissing appeal of defendant where plaintiff's judgment did not exceed minimum. Cited, arguendo, in Kanouse v. Martin, 15 How. 208, 14 L. 664, holding, upon filing of declaration, amount therein demanded is the "matter in dispute;" Batchelder v. Richardson, 75 Va. 837, dismissing appeal where difference between amount claimed and amount awarded did not exceed minimum.

Distinguished in Gordon v. Ross, 2 Cal. 157, holding under terms of State Constitution that defendant may appeal where judgment added to costs exceeds minimum.

3 Pet. 470-479, 7 L. 744, McDONALD v. MAGRUDER.

Bills and notes.—An indorser of a note is liable to his indorsee, and the latter, although he may in turn have indorsed the note over, may save his indorser upon taking up the note again, p. 474.

Approved and applied in McCrady v. Jones, 44 S. C. 409, 412, 22 S. E. 415, 416, holding statute of limitations runs against last indorser taking up note only from date of payment.

Bills and notes.—The first indorser of a note undertakes that the maker shall pay, or that he, if due diligence be used, will pay it for him; this promise makes him responsible to every subsequent holder or indorser, who has been compelled to pay, p. 474.

Cited and rule applied as follows: McCarty v. Roots, 21 How. 437, 16 L. 164, holding assignee of indorser who pays bill may sue original payee who is also indorser; Stiles v. Eastman, 1 Ga. 213, holding indorser who pays note and takes assignment of judgment against prior indorser, may enforce same; Coolidge v. Wiggin, 62 Me. 572, granting recovery by last indorser of accommodation note against payee and indorser; Johnson v. Crane, 16 N. H. 75, holding where accommodation indorsers each pay half of note, second indorser may recover his half from first; Marr v. Johnson, 9 Yerg. 4, holding second accommodation indorser may recover full amount paid from first indorser. See valuable note to 31 Am. St. Rep. 747. Cited generally, without applying the rule, in Farmers' Bank v. Rathbone, 26 Vt. 36, 58 Am. Dec. 208, granting recovery of indorsee for value of accommodation bill against acceptor.

Bills and notes.— The indorser of a note for accommodation cannot set up want of consideration for his promise, because value paid by promisee to another is as valid a consideration as if paid to promisor, p. 476.

Approved and applied in Gillespie v. Campbell, 39 Fed. 726, 727, 728, 5 L. R. A. 700, 701, and n., holding indorser paying bill of exchange may recover from accommodation acceptor; Marr v. Johnson, 9 Yerg. 6, allowing second indorser for accommodation to recover amount paid from first indorser; Hopkins v. Richardson, 9 Gratt. 495, holding where R. indorses bond of G. to K. to enable latter to buy goods, seller of goods may recover against R. Cited, but without particular application, in Horn v. Thompson, 31 N. H. 569, holding indorsement by payee of notes secured by mortgage is prima facie evidence of consideration.

Bills and notes.—Where two parties separately, and not jointly, indorse accommodation note and first is compelled to pay, he cannot enforce contribution from second indorser, p. 477.

Citing cases have affirmed and relied upon this ruling as follows: McCarty v. Roots, 21 How. 437, 16 L. 164, holding assignee of indorser who pays draft may sue payee who is also indorser; Gillespie v. Campbell, 39 Fed. 726, 727, 728, 5 L. R. A. 700, 701, collecting cases and holding indorser of bill of exchange taking up same may recover from accommodation acceptor; Sherrod v. Rhodes, 5 Ala. 691, refusing instruction that accommodation indorsers of bill are entitled to contribution as between themselves; Stiles v. Eastman, 1 Ga. 213, holding where subsequent indorser pays note and takes assignment of judgment against prior indorser, he may enforce same; Harshman v. Armstrong, 43 Ind. 131, holding as between accommodation indorsers, a contract to contribute may be shown; Armstrong v. Harshman, 61 Ind. 55, 28 Am. Rep. 668, denying contribution between successive accommodation indorsers; McNeilly v. Patchin, 23 Mo. 43, 44, 66 Am. Dec. 654, 655, holding successive accommodation indorsers of note are not co-sureties in absence of agreement; Easterly v. Barber, 66 N. Y. 437, holding, however, that agreement to contribute may be shown in action between indorsers; Oldham v. Broom, 28 Ohio St. 51, denying contribution between successive accommodation indorsers; Montgomery v. Page, 29 Or. 329, 44 Pac. 691, holding, however, agreement to contribute between indorsers may be shown by parol; Aiken v. Barkley, 2 Spear L. 751, 42 Am. Dec. 400, denying right of second accommodation indorser to recover moiety from first. See note to 11 Am. Dec. 792, collecting cases; also note to 42 Am. Dec. 492, and valuable discussion of right to contribution in note, 10 Am. St. Rep. 639. Cited, but without particular application of rule, in Root v. Wallace, 4 McLean, 9, F. C. 12,039, holding void note cannot be given in evidence to support action by indorsee against indorser.

Distinguished in Phillips v. Preston, 5 How. 292, 12 L. 158, allowing contribution between indorsers where, by separate contract, they agreed to bear loss equally; Flint v. Day, 9 Vt. 348, holding, where one not a party to note, merely writes name on back, his liability is same as other signers of note; Pitkin v. Flanagan, 23 Vt. 166, 56 Am. Dec. 65, holding where several indorse for accommodation without reference to order, that order raises no presumption of obligation from one to other.

3 Pet. 481-503, 7 L. 749, appendix, TRUSTEES OF PHILADELPHIA BAPTIST ASSOCIATION v. SMITH.

Opinion of Story, J.—Opinion of the court is reported in 4 Wheat. 1, 4 L. 499, sub nom. Trustees, etc. v. Hart's Executors, q. v.

Cited in Mannix v. Purcell, 46 Ohio St. 141, 15 Am. St. Rep. 574, 2 L. R. A. 762, holding church congregations sufficiently definite beneficiaries to support a charitable trust.

The Citations in the foregoing annotations include all from the following Reports and all preceding them in each State or series:

| | | | |
|-----------------|-----|-------------------|-----|
| U. S. | 174 | Mo. App. | 76 |
| Law. Ed. | 42 | Mont. | 20 |
| Fed. Rep. | 94 | Neb. | 54 |
| U. S. Ap. | 57 | Nev. | 23 |
| (excepting 50) | | N. H. | 67 |
| Ala. | 117 | N. J. Eq. | 56 |
| Ariz. | 1 | N. J. L. | 61 |
| Ark. | 65 | N. M. | 8 |
| Cal. | 123 | N. Y. | 159 |
| Colo. | 24 | N. C. | 123 |
| Colo. Ap. | 11 | N. D. | 7 |
| Conn. | 70 | Ohio. | 59 |
| Dak. | 5 | Or. | 32 |
| Del. Marv. | 2 | Pa. | 190 |
| Fla. | 39 | R. I. | 19 |
| Ga. | 104 | S. C. | 51 |
| Ida. | 2 | S. D. | 10 |
| Ill. | 179 | Tenn. | 101 |
| Ind. | 151 | Tex. | 91 |
| Ind. Ap. | 21 | Tex. Civ. | 15 |
| Iowa. | 107 | Tex. Cr. | 37 |
| Kans. | 59 | Utah. | 17 |
| Kans. Ap. | 5 | Vt. | 70 |
| Ky. | 100 | Va. | 95 |
| La. Ann. | 50 | Wash. | 19 |
| Md. | 87 | W. Va. | 44 |
| Me. | 92 | Wis. | 101 |
| Mass. | 172 | Wyo. | 5 |
| Mich. | 114 | Am. Dec. | 100 |
| Minn. | 71 | Am. Rep. | 60 |
| Miss. | 75 | Am. St. Rep. | 68 |
| Mo. | 146 | L. R. A. | 43 |

with duplicate references to the Reporter System and later cases, including

| | | | |
|---------------|----|------------|----|
| Sup. Ct. | 19 | N. E. | 53 |
| Atl. | 42 | N. W. | 78 |
| Pac. | 56 | S. E. | 32 |
| So. | 25 | S. W. | 51 |

REPORTS

OF

CASES

ARGUED AND ADJUDGED IN

THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

IN JANUARY TERM, 1830.

BY RICHARD PETERS,

Counselor at law and Reporter of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

VOL. IV.

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

AT

JANUARY TERM, 1830.

1*] *JAMES CARVER, Plaintiff in Error,
v.

JAMES JACKSON, on the demise of JOHN JACOB ASTOR, THEODOSIUS FOWLER, CADWALLADER D. COLDEN, CORNELIUS J. BOGET, HENRY GAGE MORRIS, MARIA MORRIS, THOMAS HINKS and JOHN HINKS, Defendants in Error.

Practice—charge to jury—marriage settlement—sufficient evidence of execution of deed to go to jury—recital in leave—estoppel—leases, when presumed from possession—uses—remainders—shifting executory use—contingency, when ended—Act of New York Legislature as to purchasers of forfeited estates—improvements.

The practice of bringing the whole of the charge of the court delivered to the jury in the court below for review before this court, is unauthorized and extremely inconvenient, both to the inferior and to the appellate court. With the charge of the court to the jury upon mere matters of fact, and with its commentaries upon the weight of evidence, this court has nothing to do. Observations of that nature are understood to be addressed to the jury merely for their consideration as the ultimate judges of the matters of fact, and are entitled to no more weight or importance than the jury in the exercise of their own judgment choose to give them. They neither are, nor are understood to be, binding on them as the true and conclusive exposition of the evidence. If, in summing up the evidence to the jury, the court should misstate the law, that would justly furnish a ground for an exception. But the exception should be strictly confined to that misstatement, and by being made known at the moment, would often enable the court to correct an erroneous expression, so as to explain or qualify it in such manner as to make it wholly unexceptionable, or perfectly distinct. [80]

The plaintiff claimed title under a marriage settlement purporting to be executed the 13th of [2] January, 1758, by an indenture of release between Mary Philipse, of the first part, Roger Morris, of the second part, and Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson, of the third part. Whereby, in consideration of a marriage intended to be solemnized between Roger Morris and Mary Philipse, &c., R. M. and M. P. granted, &c., to J. P. and B. R., "in their actual possession now being, by virtue of a bargain and sale to them thereof made for one whole year, by indenture bearing date the day next before the date of these presents, and by force of the statute for transferring uses into possessions, and to their heirs, all those," &c., upon certain trusts therein mentioned. This indenture signed and sealed by the parties, and attested by the subscribing witnesses to the sealing and delivery thereof, with a certificate of William Livingston, one of the witnesses, and the execution thereof, before a judge of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, dated the 5th of April, 1787, and of the recording thereof in the secretary's office of New York, was offered in evidence by the plaintiff, and objected to, on the ground that the certificate of the execution was not legal and competent evidence, and did not entitle the plaintiff to read the deed without proof of its execution. A witness was sworn, who proved the handwriting of William Livingston, and of the other subscribing witness, both of whom were dead. The certificate of the judge of the Supreme Court of New York stated that William Livingston had sworn before him, that he saw the parties to the deed "sign and seal the indenture, and deliver it as their and each of their voluntary acts and deeds," &c. By the court. According to the laws of New York, there was sufficient prima facie evidence of the due execution of the indenture; not merely of the signing and sealing, but of the delivery, to justify the court in admitting the deed to be read to the jury; and that in the absence of all controlling evidence the jury would have been bound to find that the deed was duly executed. [82]

The plaintiff, in the ejectment, derived title under the deed of marriage settlement of the 15th of Jan., 1758, executed by Mary Philipse, who afterwards intermarried with Roger Morris, and by Roger Morris and certain trustees named in the same. The premises before the execution of the deed of marriage settlement, were the property of Mary Philipse, in fee simple. The defendant claimed title to the same

NOTE.—Estoppel, by recital in deed, will, or other instrument.

The parties to a deed are estopped to deny the truth of the recitals therein; and if the deeds are offered only to show the transmission of the legal title, the truth of the recitals need not be proved abundante. Bank of U. S. v. Benning, 4 Cranch C. C., 81.

Recitals in a deed are binding on the parties to it and those claiming under them, but not on strangers. West v. Pine, 4 Wash. C. C., 691.

A recital of one deed in another, or of a fact in a deed, binds the parties and those who claim under them. It is an estoppel which binds parties and privies, privies in blood, privies in estate, and privies Peters 4.

vies in law. But it does not bind strangers, claiming by title paramount to the deed, or claiming by adverse title, or persons claiming from the parties by title prior to the date of the reciting deed. Ford v. Grey, 1 Salk., 285; 6 Mod., 44; Trevivan v. Laurence, 1 Salk., 276; Denn v. Cornell, 3 Johns. Cas., 174; Crane v. Morris, 6 Pot., 598; 2 P. Wms., 432; Willes, 11; 4 Binn., 231, 314; Jackson v. Parkhurst, 9 Wend., 209; Torrey v. Bank of Orleans, 9 Paige, 649; Demeyer v. Legg, 18 Barb., 14; Jackson v. Wilson, 9 John., 92; Love v. Kidwell, 4 Blackf., 553; Stowe v. Wyse, 7 Conn., 214; McDonald v. King, Cox, 432; Trimble v. The State, 4 Blackf., 435; Wayman v. Taylor, 1 Dana, 257; Denn v. Brewer, Cox, 172; Whitehead v. The Governor, 6 premises under a sale made thereof, as the property of Roger Morris and wife, by certain commissioners acting under the authority of an Act of the Legislature of New York, passed the 22d of Oct., 1779, by which the premises were directed to be sold, as the property of Roger Morris and wife, as forfeited; Roger Morris and wife having been declared to be convicted and attainted of adhering to the enemies of the United States. Not only is the recital of the lease in the deed of marriage settlement evidence between the original parties to the same of the existence of the lease, but between the parties to this case the recital is conclusive evidence of the same, and superseded the necessity of introducing any other evidence to establish it. [83]

The recital of the lease in the deed of release in the present case was conclusive evidence upon all persons claiming under the parties in privity of estate, as those in this case claim. And, independently of authority, the court would have arrived at the same conclusion upon principle. [88]

As to the law of estoppels. [83]

Leases like other deeds and grants may be presumed from long possession, which cannot otherwise be explained; and under such circumstances a recital in an old deed of the fact of such a lease having been executed, is certainly presumptive 3*] proof or stronger in favor of such possession under title than the naked presumption arising from a mere unexplained possession. [84]

The uses declared in a deed of marriage settlement were, to and for the use of "Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson (the releasees) and their heirs, until the solemnization of the said intended marriage, and from and immediately after the solemnization of the said intended marriage, then to the use and behoof of the said Mary Philipse and Roger Morris, and the survivor of them, for and during the time of their natural lives, without impeachment of waste; and from and after the determination of that estate, then to the use and behoof of such child or children as shall or may be procreated between them, and to his, her, or their heirs and assigns forever. But in case the said Roger Morris and Mary Philipse shall have no child or children, begotten between them, or that such child or children shall happen to die during the lifetime of the said Roger and Mary, and the said Mary should survive the said Roger without issue, then to the use and behoof of her, the said Mary Philipse, and her heirs and assigns forever. And in case the said

Roger should survive the said Mary Philipse, without any issue by her, or that such issue is then dead, without leaving issue, then after the decease of the said Roger Morris, to the only use and behoof of such person or persons, and in such manner and form as the said Mary Philipse shall, at any time during the said intended marriage, desire the same by her last will and testament, &c., &c. The marriage took effect, children were born, all before the attainer of their parents in 1779. Mary Morris survived her husband, and died in 1825, leaving her children surviving her. This is a clear remainder in fee to the children of Roger Morris and wife, which ceased to be contingent on the birth of the first child, and opened to let in after-born children. [90]

It is perfectly consistent with this limitation that the estate in fee might be defeasible, and determinable upon a subsequent contingency; and upon the happening of such contingency, might pass by way of shifting executory use to other persons in fee, thus making a fee upon a fee. [90]

The general rule of law founded on public policy is that limitations of this nature shall be construed to be vested when, and as soon as they may vest. The present limitation in its terms purports to be contingent only until the birth of a child, and may then vest. The estate of the children was contingent only until their birth, and when the Confiscation Act of New York passed, they being all born, it was a vested remainder in them and their heirs, and not liable to be defeated by any transfer or destruction of the life estate. [92]

The Act of the Legislature of New York of May 1, 1786, gave to the purchasers of forfeited estates the like remedy in case of eviction for obtaining compensation for the value of their improvements as is directed in the Act of the 12th of May, 1784. The latter act declares that the person or persons having obtained judgment against such purchasers, shall not have any writ of possession, nor obtain possession of such lands, &c., until he shall have paid to the purchaser of such lands, or person holding title under him, the value of all improvements made thereon, after the passing of the act. Held, that claims of compensation for improvements made under the authority of these acts of the Legislature of New York are inconsistent with the provisions of the treaty of peace with Great Britain of 1783, and should be rejected. [101]

That in all cases a party is bound by natural justice to pay for improvements on land, made

Port., 335; Hart v. Johnson, 6 Ham., 87; Jackson v. Hasbrouck, 3 Johns., 331; Norris v. Norris, 9 Dana, 17; Norton v. Saunders, 7 J. J. Marsh., 12; Stewart v. Butler, 9 Serg. & R., 381; Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt., 39; Campbell v. Knight, 11 Shep., 332.

Recitals in a lease operate as an estoppel. Hermitage v. Tompkins, 1 Ld. Raym., 729; Jackson v. Streeter, 5 Cow., 529; Fort v. Berkley, 1 Vent., 33; 8 Cow., 586.

A recital of a lease in a deed of release operates as an estoppel and is good evidence of the execution, and contents of the lease so far as stated therein. Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet., 598.

Persons claiming under a deed which recites the existence of a mortgage, are estopped from denying such mortgage. Holmes v. Ferguson, 1 Or., 220.

The grantor in a deed of trust is estopped from showing orally that the indebtedness to a party therein specified was for a much less sum than therein named. Kenny v. Aitken, 12 N. Y. Week. Dig., 127.

The execution of an administrator's bond precludes, by express recitals in the bond, both principal and sureties from denying the Surrogate's jurisdiction in any proceedings for the assets which the appointment and bond have enabled the principal to receive. Johnston v. Smith, 13 N. Y. Week. Dig., 99.

The defense of usury, however, a mortgagee is not estopped from setting up in an action to foreclose the mortgage, by a recital of the mortgage in a deed of trust as a valid lien and valid debt. Chapin v. Thompson, 23 Hun, 12.

A recital works no estoppel when the allegations in the instrument are immaterial to the contract therein contained, or when the action is not founded on the deed, but is wholly collateral to it; nor unless the recital is a direct and precise allegation. Champlain R. R. Co. v. Valentine, 19 Barb., 484; Dempsey v. Tyler, 3 Duer, 73.

A general recital in a deed does not conclude a party. Huntington v. Havens, 5 Johns. Ch., 23.

A recital originating in mistake, and untrue, cannot in equity be a bar to the admission of the truth. Stoughton v. Lynch, 2 Johns. Ch., 209.

A recital in a bond does not preclude the obligees from showing the instrument void. Caldwell v. Colgate, 7 Barb., 253.

A party claiming under deeds referring to a will as the source of title, is estopped from denying the validity and genuineness of the will. Jackson v. Thompson, 6 Cow., 178.

The sureties in a bond to indemnify one against the nonperformance of an agreement, which bond recites the execution of the agreement, are estopped from denying the due execution of the agreement. Lee v. Clark, 1 Hill N. Y., 56.

When a party is estopped by a deed, all persons claiming under or through him are estopped. Hill v. Hill, 4 Barb., 419.

Those who execute an undertaking are estopped from contradicting its recitals to defeat the instrument. Cole v. Bean, 14 Abb. Pr. N. Y., 38.

Recitals in an instrument are evidence against the party making them, but when immaterial to the instrument, or when the action is not founded on the instrument but is wholly collateral to it, such recitals work no estoppel. Reed v. McCourt, 41 N. Y., 435; Clinton v. Hope Ins. Co., 51 Barb., 647.

Where a deed containing covenants to be performed by the grantee, but signed by the grantor only and sealed with one seal, recites that it is sealed by both parties, such seal becomes the seal of the grantee, and he will be estopped from denying it, and from denying the covenants as well. Atlantic Dock Co. v. Leavitt, 54 N. Y., 35.

A grantee of lands under a deed, which, by its terms, is subject to a prior mortgage, is estopped from questioning the consideration or validity of such mortgage. Freeman v. Auld, 44 N. Y., 50; reversing 37 Barb., 587.

Nor when he assumes a mortgage, the amount of which is specified, can he dispute the amount due thereon, if not exceeding the amount specified, or against his will or without his consent, is a proposition which the court are not prepared to admit. [101]

Peters 4.

4*] *THIS was a writ of error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

In the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York an action of ejectment was instituted by the defendant in error for the recovery of a tract of land in the town of Carmel, in the County of Putnam, in the State of New York. The plaintiff claimed title on the demise of John Jacob Astor and others, named in the case. The action was tried by a jury at October Term, 1829, in the Circuit Court in the city of New York, and a verdict and judgment rendered for the plaintiff in the same; a bill of exceptions was tendered by the defendant in the Circuit Court, who prosecuted this writ of error.

After judgment was rendered for the plaintiff in the Circuit Court, he prayed the court to order a writ of possession, to cause him to have possession of the premises. and thereupon James Carver suggested to the court that Roger Morris and Mary Morris, his wife, under whom the plaintiff in ejectment claimed, were for fifteen years and upwards next before the 22d of October, 1779, in possession of a large tract of land in the then County of Dutchess, in the State of New York, including the premises. That on the 22d of October, 1779, the Legislature of the State of New York, by "an Act for the forfeiture and sale of the estate of persons who have adhered to the enemies of the State," &c., declared Roger Morris and his wife to be convicted and attainted of adhering to the enemy; and all their estate, real and personal, severally and respectively, in possession, reversion, or remainder, was forfeited and vested in the people of the State. That commissioners appointed under this act, on the 16th of November, 1782, sold, disposed of and conveyed the land in question in this suit, to Timothy Carver, his heirs and assigns, for the consideration of seventy-one pounds. That by an Act of the Legislature of the 12th of May, 1784, and an Act of the 1st of May, 1786, it was among other things provided, that where judgment in a due course of law should be obtained for any lands sold by the commissioners of forfeitures, against any person who derived title thereto under the people of the State, or the commissioners, *the person who obtained judgment should not have a writ of possession, or obtain possession of the land, until he or she should have paid to the person in possession under said title, the value of all improvements made thereon, to be estimated as provided in the acts. That he, the said Timothy Carver, purchased the property held by him in the full confidence that he obtained a perfect indefeasible title to the land in fee-simple, entered forthwith into possession of the same, made great, valuable and permanent improvements on the land, which are now in value upwards of two thousand dollars, by which the lands are enhanced in value to that sum and upwards. That Timothy Carver afterwards conveyed the premises to James Carver, the defendant in ejectment, who also made other valuable improvements on the land before the commencement of this suit, of the value of two thousand dollars and upwards. That this action has been commenced and prosecuted, and a recovery has been had on a ground of title, reciting the same; that the Act of the Legislature of New York, passed the its existence or validity. Ritter v. Phillips, 53 N. Y., 586; Haile v. Nichols, 16 Hun, 37; Thayer v. Marsh, 11 Hun, 501; affirmed 19 Alb. L. J., 56; Johnson v. Parmelee, 14 Hun, 398.

A recital in a deed is not evidence against one, not privy in estate. Whyland v. Weaver, 67 Barb., 116.

A, by his last will devised as follows: "Whereas I have conveyed to my son D, my lands at F, I give and devise all my remaining lands to my sons C and D and my daughter." Held, that the recital in the will was evidence of a conveyance of the lands at F to D and that C as heir of the testator, was estopped by the recital, to deny that the lands at F were conveyed to D. Denn v. Cornell, 3 Johns. Cas., 174.

A party executing a deed is estopped by the recital of a particular fact in that deed to deny such fact. 7 Bac. Abr., 621; Nash v. Turner, 1 Esp., 217; Rees v. Lloyd, Wightwick, 123; Jones v. Williams, 2 Stark., 52; Bowman v. Taylor, 2 Ad. & Ell., 278; Larrison v. Tremere, 1 Ad. & Ell., 792; Hill v. Manchester & Co., 2 B. & Adol., 244.

So where a party to a written agreement recites therein, as consideration, that the other party has made a certain conveyance, of even date with the agreement, he is estopped to show, in avoidance of the contract, that such conveyance was not made until afterwards, though dated subsequently. Dyer v. Rich, 1 Met., 180.

Where a grantor in a deed of warranty recites that a certain tract of land has been conveyed to him, he is estopped from denying that fact in a suit commenced against him by the grantee, or any person to whom his grantee has conveyed. Green v. Clark, 13 Verm., 158.

A recital in a deed procured by fraud can never be used as an estoppel. Norton v. Sanders, 7 J. J. Marsh., 12.

Nor, it seems, a recital in a deed which is defective and void. Blake v. Tucker, 12 Verm., 39; see Norris v. Norris, 9 Dana, 17.

Peters 4.

Where one deed recites another, no higher or other proof is necessary or required of the recited deed, than the recital itself, though the recited deed and the subscribing witness be both in court. This has been expressly held, not only by the Supreme Court of the United States, but by several of the State courts, not only as against the party reciting, but against all who claim under him as privies in blood, privies in estate, or privies in law. Carver v. Jackson, supra; Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet., 598; West v. Pine, 4 Wash. C. C., 691; Jackson v. Halstead, 5 Cow., 216; Penrose v. Griffith, 4 Binn., 231; Per Mills, J., in Mitchell v. Maupin, 3 Mon., 186; Bibb v. Pickett, Litt. Sel. Cas., 309, 312, 313; Kentucky Bank v. Vance, 4 Litt. R., 172.

And such recital contained in a bond is evidence equally high, even against the obligee, and all claiming under him. Jackson v. Carrington, 9 Cow., 86.

But in such cases the bond must be traced to the possession of the obligee. Jackson v. Brooks, 8 Wend., 426.

And this class of recitals is received as primary proof of other instruments, even of records; a ca. sa. for instance. Ransom v. Keyes, 9 Cow., 138; Burleigh v. Stibbs, 5 Term R., 465; Edwards v. Etherington, Ry. & Mood. N. P. R., 268.

If the condition of an obligation hath reference to a particular thing to be done, or in which a generality is to be done, the obligor shall be estopped by it to say that there is no such particular thing. Roll. Abr., 872, 873; 7 Bac. Abr., 621; Dyer, 3; Savil, 90; Moor, 23; Paramour v. During, Moor, 420, pl. 578; Goddb., 177.

But if the condition of an obligation contains a generality, a man shall not be concluded to say, that there is no such thing; as in debt on an obligation, of which the condition is to perform all agreements now set down by J. S., the defendant may say, that no agreement was then set down by J. S., because this comprehends a generality.

For this diversity, see Cro. Eliz., 362; Owen, 110;

22d of October, 1779, for the forfeiture of estates, &c., did not take from the plaintiff in the suit the title to the premises after the death of Roger Morris and wife, both of whom were deceased at the time of the institution of this suit. So that the plaintiffs were the owners of the land in fee, and entitled to recover the possession of the same. And the defendant insists that, under the provisions of the several Acts of the Legislature of New York, he ought to be paid the value of the improvements made on the lands; that no writ of possession should issue until the same was paid, and he prays the court to stay the plaintiff from the writ, or from having possession of the lands, until the value shall be paid, and that commissioners may be appointed to ascertain the said value.

The plaintiff did not deny the facts alleged by the defendant, but he denied the right of the defendant to be paid for the improvements, and insisted on his right at law to a writ of possession, and to the possession of the land without paying the value of the improvements. The court held that the matter suggested by the defendant and admitted by the plaintiff were not sufficient to bar or stay the plaintiff [*6] from having his writ of possession, or possession of the land without paying the whole or any part of the value of the improvements estimated or valued in any way whatever; and that the plaintiff should have a writ of possession to cause him to have possession of the land.

The bill of exceptions set forth the whole proceedings of the trial of the cause, and that an agreement had been entered into by the parties to it, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recovery of the property unless it should satisfactorily appear in the suit, in addition to whatever else may be necessary to authorize a recovery therein, that the whole title, both in law or equity, which may or can have been vested in the children and heirs of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, of, in or to the premises or lands in question in the suit, has been, as between the grantors and grantees, legally transferred to John Jacob Astor, one of the lessors of the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns; nor unless a proper deed of conveyance in fee-simple from John Jacob Astor and all persons claiming under him to the people of the State of New York, would be valid and effectual to release, transfer, and extinguish all the right, title, and interest, which now is, or may have been vested in the children and heirs of Roger Morris and wife.

The plaintiff in the ejectment gave in evidence a patent from William III. to Adolphe Philipse, dated 17th June, 1692, for a large tract of land, including the premises, and proved the descent of the same to Frederick Philipse; and that Mary Philipse, who afterwards intermarried with Roger Morris, was a devisee in tail with other children of Frederick Philipse, and by subsequent proceedings in partition, and by a common recovery, Mary Philipse became seized in fee-simple of one equal undivided part of the land granted by the patent; and that afterwards, on the 7th of February, 1754, a deed of partition reciting the patent and the title of the heirs, was executed between the children and devisees and heirs of Frederick Philipse, by which the portions severally belonging to them were set apart and divided to each in severalty, one portion being allotted to Mary Philipse; the land in controversy being included in the land surveyed *and held under the patent and deed of [*7] partition. The part allotted to Mary Philipse in the partition was No. 5.

The plaintiff then offered to read in evidence a deed of marriage settlement, dated 13th of Poph., 114; Moor, 405; Brownl., 117; Yelv., 226; 2 Bulst., 19; Latch, 125; Cro. J., 375; Dal., 28; Salter v. Kidney, 1 Show., 59; 7 Bac. Abr., 621; Strowd v. Willis, Cro. Eliz., 762; Shelby v. Wright, Willes, 9.

Lord Holt lays down the rule in Salter v. Kidney (1 Show., 59), that general recital is not estoppel, though recital of a particular fact is. See Com. Dig. Div. Estoppel, A, 2; Rainsford v. Smith, Dyer, 196, a, note; 2 Smith's L. C., 457; La Savage v. Prinan, 3 Mo., 529; Cow. & Hill's notes to Phil. Ev., 1235, 1236, 1237, 160, 161.

Therefore, if one be bound in a bond, conditioned to perform the covenants in a certain indenture, or to pay the money mentioned in a certain recognizance, he shall not be permitted to say, that there was no such indenture or recognizance. But if the bond be conditioned to pay all the agreements set down by A, or carry away all the marle in a certain close, he is not estopped by this general condition from saying that no agreement was set down by A, or that there was no marle in the close. Neither does this doctrine apply to that which is mere description in the deed, and not an essential averment; such as the quantity of land; its nature, whether arable or meadow; the number of tons, in a vessel chartered by the ton; or the like; for these are but incidental and collateral to the principal thing, and may be supposed not to have received the deliberate attention of the parties. 1 Greenl. Ev., 32; 4 Com. Dig. Estoppel, A, 2; Yelv., 227, by Metcalf, note 1; Doddington's case, 2 Co., 33; Skipworth v. Greene, 8 Mod., 311; S. C., 1 Stra., 610.

The recital of the payment of the consideration money in a deed of conveyance has been regarded, in England, as conclusive evidence of payment, binding the parties by estoppel. Shelley v. Wright, Willes, 9; Cossens v. Cossens, Willes, 25; Rowntree v. Jacob, 2 Taunt., 141; Lampam v. Clarke, 5 B. & Ald., 606; Baker v. Dewey, 1 B. & C., 704; Hill v. Manchester Salt-Works, 2 B. & Ad., 544.

But in the American courts the recital of the amount of the consideration money paid has been treated like other recitals of quantity and value to which the attention of the parties has been supposed to have been but slightly directed, and to which, therefore, the principle of estoppels does not apply. Hence, though the party is estopped from denying the conveyance and that it was for a valuable consideration, the recital is regarded as only prima facie evidence of the amount paid, in an action by the grantee to recover back the consideration, or in an action by the grantor to recover the consideration money. Wilkinson v. Scott, 17 Mass., 249; Clapp v. Tirrell, 20 Pick., 247; Schillenger v. McCan, 6 Greenl., 364; Tyler v. Carleton, 7 Greenl., 175; Emmons v. Littlefield, 1 Shepl., 233; Burbank v. Gould, 3 Shepl., 118; Morse v. Shattuck, 4 N. H., 229; Pritchard v. Brown, 4 N. H., 397; Belden v. Seymour, 8 Conn., 304; Shepherd v. Little, 14 Johns., 110; Bowen v. Bell, 20 Johns., 388; Whitbeck v. Whitbeck, 9 Cow., 266; McCrea v. Purmont, 16 Wend., 460; Weigley v. Weir, 2 Serg. & R., 311; Watson v. Blaine, 12 Serg. & R., 131; Jack v. Dougherty, 3 Watts, 151; Higdon v. Thomas, 1 Harr. & G., 139; Lingan v. Henderson, 1 Bland's Ch. 236; Duval v. Bibb, 4 Hen. & M., 113; Harvey v. Alexander, 1 Randolph, 219; Curry v. Lyles, 2 Hill. So. Car., 404; Garret v. Stuart, 1 McOrd, 514; Mead v. Steger, 5 Porter Ala., 498, 507; Jones v. Ward, 10 Yerg., 160, 166; Hutchinson v. Sinclair, 7 Mourne Ky., 291, 293; Gully v. Grubbs, 1 J. J. Marsh., 389. But see Bracket v. Foscoe, 1 Hawks, No. Car., 64; Spiers v. Clay, 4 Hawks, 22; Jones v. Sasser, 1 Dev. & Batt., 452.

In Louisiana the recital of payment is made conclusive. Civil Code of La., Art. 2234; Forest v. Shores., 11 Louis., 416; see also Cow. & Hill's notes to 1 Phil. Ev., p. 108, note 194, and p. 540, note 964; Steele v. Worthington, 2 Ohio R., 350; 1 Greene Ev., ed. 1842, p. 32, sec. 26, and note 1.

January, 1758, intended to convey all the land in No. 5 between Mary Philipse, of the first part, Roger Morris, of the second part, Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson, of the third part; on the back of which deed was indorsed a certificate in the following terms: "Be it remembered that on the 1st day of April, 1787, personally came and appeared before me John Sloss Hobart, one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, William Livingston, Esq., Governor of the State of New Jersey, one of the subscribing witnesses to the within written indenture, who being by me duly sworn, did testify and declare that he was present at or about the day of the date of the within indenture, and did see the within named Joanna Philipse, Beverly Robinson, Roger Morris, and Mary Philipse, sign and seal the same indenture, and deliver it as their and each of their voluntary acts and deeds, for the uses and purposes therein mentioned, and I having carefully inspected the same, and finding no material erasures or interlineations therein, other than those noted to have been made before the execution thereof, do allow the same to be recorded. John Sloss Hobart." Upon the back of the deed was also indorsed a certificate of the recording thereof, in the following words: "Recorded in the secretary's office of the State of New York, in deed book commencing 25th November, 1774, page 550. Examined by me this 11th of April, 1787. Robert Harpur, D. Secretary." To which said evidence, so offered, the counsel for the defendant objected upon the ground that the certificate was not legal and competent evidence to be given to the jury, and did not entitle the plaintiff to read the deed in evidence without proof of its execution; and that the certificate was not sufficient, inasmuch as it did not state that William Livingston testified or swore that he was a subscribing witness to the deed. The parts of the deed of 13th January, 1758, material to the case, are the following:

"This indenture, made the 13th day of January, in the thirty-first *year of the reign of our sovereign lord, George II., by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, &c., and in the year of our Lord, 1758, between Mary Philipse, of the first part, Major Roger Morris, of the second part, and Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson, of the third part, witnesseth, that in consideration of a marriage intended to be had and solemnized between the said Roger Morris and Mary Philipse, and the settlement hereafter made by the said Roger Morris on the said Mary Philipse, and for and in consideration of the sum of five shillings, current money of the Province of New York, by the said Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson to her, the said Mary Philipse, at or before the enscaling and delivery of these presents, well and truly paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged; and for divers other good causes and considerations, her therunto moving, she, the said Mary Philipse, hath granted, bargained, sold, released and confirmed, and by these presents doth grant, bargain, sell, release and confirm, unto the said Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson (in their actual possession now being, by virtue of a bargain and sale to them thereof made, for one whole year, by indenture bearing date the day next before the day of the date of these presents, and by force of the statute for transferring of uses into possession) and to their heirs, all those several lots or parcels of land, &c., describing the property, in which is included the land in controversy in this suit.

"To have and to hold all and singular the several lots of land, &c., and all and singular other the lands, tenements, hereditaments, and real estate, whatsoever of her, the said Mary Philipse, &c., unto the said Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson, and their heirs, to and for the several uses, intents, and purposes, hereinafter declared, expressed, limited and appointed, and to and for no other use, intent and purpose whatsoever; that is to say, to and for the use and behoof of them, the said Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson, and their heirs, until the solemnization of the intended marriage, and to the use and behoof of the said Mary Philipse and Roger Morris, and the survivor of them, for and during *the term [*9 of their natural lives, without impeachment of waste, and from and after the determination of that estate, then to the use and behoof of such child or children as shall or may be procreated between them, and to his, her, or their heirs and assigns forever; but in case the said Roger Morris and Mary Philipse shall have no child or children begotten between them, or that such child or children shall happen to die, during the lifetime of the said Roger and Mary, and the said Mary should survive the said Roger without issue, then to the use and behoof of her, the said Mary Philipse, and her heirs and assigns forever; and in case the said Roger Morris should survive the said Mary Philipse without any issue by her, or that such issue is then dead without leaving issue, then, after the decease of the said Roger Morris, to the only use and behoof of such person or persons, and in such manner and form, as she, the said Mary Philipse, shall, at any time during the said intended marriage, devise the same by her last will and testament; which last will and testament, for that purpose, it is hereby agreed by all the parties to these presents, that it shall be lawful for her, at any time during the said marriage, to make, publish and declare, the said marriage, or anything herein contained, to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding; provided, nevertheless, and it is the true intent and meaning of the parties to these presents, that it shall and may be lawful, to and for the said Roger Morris and Mary Philipse, jointly, at any time or times during the said marriage, to sell and dispose of any part of the said several lots or parcels of land, or of any other her lands, tenements, hereditaments and real estate whatsoever, to the value of three thousand pounds, current money of the Province of New York; and in case the said sum of three thousand pounds be not raised by such sale or sales during their joint lives, and they have issue between them, that then it shall be lawful for the survivor of them to raise the said sum, by the sale of any part of the said lands, or such deficiency thereof as shall not then have been already raised thereout, so as to make up the said full sum of three thousand pounds, anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

10*j *The court overruled the objection, and allowed the deed to be read in evidence, and the counsel for the defendant excepted to the same.

Evidence was then given, by the testimony of Mr. Hoffman, to prove the death of William Livingston and Sarah Williams, who were witnesses to the deed, and that the names of those persons were their proper handwriting. That Mary Philipse and Roger Morris intermarried, and had four children, all born before October, 1779; also the death of some of the children; the intermarriage of others; that Joanna Philipse was the mother of Mary Morris and Susanna Robinson, wife of Beverly Robinson; that Beverly Robinson died between 1790 and 1795; that Roger Morris died in 1794, and his wife Mary Morris died in 1825. Evidence was also given to show that Roger Morris was in possession of the premises from 1771 to 1774.

The plaintiff then gave in evidence a conveyance by lease and release of the premises, inter alia, by the heirs and legal representatives of Roger Morris and wife to John Jacob Astor.

The conveyance by the commissioners of forfeited estates to Timothy Carver, of the land, was then given in evidence by the plaintiffs, and by Timothy Carver and wife to the defendant.

Mr. Barclay proved that Roger Morris and his family left this country for England just before the evacuation of the city of New York by the British troops in 1782 or 1783, and that neither of them had since returned to the United States.

The plaintiff here rested his case.

And thereupon the counsel of the defendant objected, and insisted that (independent of any other questions that might arise upon the plaintiff's case) unless the deed, commonly called a marriage settlement deed, which had been given in evidence, was accompanied or preceded by a lease, the plaintiff could not recover in this action; that without such lease, the deed could only operate as a deed of bargain and sale, and the statute of uses would only execute the first use to the bargainees, Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson, who took the legal estate in 11j the land; and that the children of *the said Roger Morris and his wife took only trust or equitable interests, and not the legal estate in the lands; and that the plaintiff could not recover, because such lease had not been produced, nor its absence accounted for, if one existed, and of this opinion was the court.

The counsel for the plaintiff then offered to give evidence to the court to prove the loss of the said lease, to lay the foundation for secondary evidence of its contents, by showing that diligent search for such lease had been made in various places without being able to find the same; to which evidence the counsel for the defendant objected, on the ground that such evidence did not go to prove the loss or destruction of the lease, but to show that none ever existed; and that before the plaintiff could give such, or any other evidence of the loss of the lease, he must prove that a lease did once exist.

The counsel for the plaintiff then offered to give evidence to show that diligent efforts had been made in England and in the United States to find the lease, without success; which was objected to by the defendant on the ground that such evidence did not go to prove the loss or destruction of the lease, but to show that none ever existed; and that before such evidence was given, it must be proved that a lease did once exist. The court overruled this objection, considering the recital in the release prima facie evidence for that purpose, and the plaintiff gave the evidence. To this decision, in overruling the objections and admitting the evidence, the counsel for the defendant excepted.

Testimony was then offered and admitted to prove that it was the almost universal practice not to record the lease when the conveyance was by way of lease and release. This evidence was given by the testimony of persons who had examined the offices of record, and not by that of those who kept the records. The counsel for the defendant objected to this evidence, alleging that the facts asserted could only be proved by the persons who had the custody of the records; but this objection was overruled, and the same was excepted to.

Here the plaintiff again rested the proofs as to the loss of *the lease, and offered to [12 give secondary evidence to the jury of its previous existence and contents. The counsel for the defendant objected, and insisted that the plaintiff had not sufficiently proved the loss of the lease, and was not entitled to go into secondary evidence of its previous existence and contents.

But the court overruled the objections, and was of opinion that the plaintiff had, from the evidence, satisfied the court as to the loss and nonproduction of the lease, and was entitled to give secondary evidence of its contents; to which opinion and decision, the counsel for the defendant also excepted.

The counsel for the plaintiff, for the purpose of proving to the jury the existence and contents of the lease, offered to read in evidence to the court and jury the recital contained in the said release or marriage settlement deed, of a lease or bargain and sale for a year; to which evidence so offered as aforesaid, the counsel for the defendant objected, on the ground that the said recital was not evidence for those purposes against the defendant.

But the court overruled the objections, and permitted the recital to be read in evidence to the jury to prove the existence and contents of the lease, to which opinion and decision the counsel for the defendant also excepted.

The plaintiff then offered, and gave in evidence, by the testimony of Mr. Benson and Mr. Troup, that William Livingston, who had witnessed the deed of release, was an eminent lawyer in the city of New York, where the deed was executed, and that it was the practice at that time to employ lawyers to draw deeds; that it was usual to recite the lease in the deed of release; that it was a frequent practice in New York to convey lands by lease and release, until within four years of the Revolution. Evidence was also offered and admitted by the books of record to show what was the usual form and contents of a lease. To all this testimony the counsel for the defendant excepted.

The printed journal of the House of Assembly of New York, for the year 1787, was then admitted in evidence, under an exception by 13*] the counsel for the defendant. It *showed that on the 16th of February, 1787, a petition had been presented by Joanna Morris on behalf of herself, her brothers and sisters, children of Roger Morris and Mary, his wife, relative to the estate forfeited to the people of the State of New York by the attainder of their parents, and a report thereon to the Legislature, and here the plaintiff rested his case.

Peters 4.

The defendant gave evidence to prove that Timothy Carver, and himself under him, had been in possession of the premises since the close of the Revolutionary War, claiming the same in fee. He also produced and read in evidence, conveyances by way of lease and release executed by Roger Morris and wife in 1765, 1771, 1773, and other deeds and leases for parts of the lot No. 5, in which no mention was made of the marriage settlement, and in which the property was described as held under the patent to Adolphe Philipse, and in which Roger Morris and wife covenant "that they had good right and full power and lawful authority to release and convey the same in fee." The defendant also gave in evidence the exemplification of a patent to Beverly Robinson, Roger Morris, and Philip Philipse, dated the 27th of March, 1761, in which is recited the surrender of part of the great tract granted to Adolphe Philipse on the 17th of June, 1696, the descent of the whole of the said tract to the children of Frederick Philipse; no mention being made in the recitals of the marriage settlement, and by which patent two tracts of land, as a compensation for part of the land held under the original patent, which was supposed to lie within the Connecticut line, was granted.

It was proved by the evidence of Mr. Watts that he had in his possession the marriage settlement deed which had been read in evidence, at and immediately before the time of its proof before Judge Hobart in 1787; that the witness wrote the body of the certificate of proof indorsed on the back; that the whole of the said certificate was written by the witness, except the name of Judge Hobart, written at the bottom, which was written by the said judge; that he believes he wrote the certificate in the presence of the judge at the time the proof was made, which was at the house of said judge, in the city of New York (Governor Livingston 14*) *was then staying at Judge Hobart's house on a visit). On being shown the said original certificate, the witness said that a blank was originally left in the body of the said certificate for the name of the judge or officer before whom the said proof was to be made, and from that circumstance he had no doubt that the said certificate was written before he knew what officer would take the said proof, and not in the presence of the judge; that the witness received the said deed early in the said year 1787, in an inclosure from the said Roger Morris, who was then in London, England.

The plaintiff then gave in evidence, the defendant's excepting thereto, the Act of the Legislature of the State of New York, passed April 16th, 1827, entitled "An Act to extinguish the claim of John Jacob Astor and others, and to quiet the possession of certain lands in the counties of Putnam and Dutchess;" the Act passed April 19th, 1828, entitled "An Act to revive and amend an act entitled 'an Act to extinguish the claim of John Jacob Astor and others, and to quiet the possession of certain lands in the counties of Putnam and Dutchess.'" Evidence was also given, the defendant's counsel excepting thereto, to show that this suit was defended for the State of New York by the Attorney-General of the State.

The counsel for the defendant then gave in evidence an exemplification of the proceedings of the Council of Safety of New York, on the 16th of July, 1776, in which it was resolved, unanimously, that all persons abiding within the State of New York, and deriving protection from the laws of the same, owe allegiance to the said laws, and are members of the State; and that all persons passing through, visiting, or making a temporary stay in the said State, being entitled to the protection of the laws during the time of such passage, visitation, or temporary stay, owe, during the same time, allegiance thereto; that all persons, members of or owing allegiance to this State as before described, who shall levy war against the said State within the same, or be adherent to the King of Great Britain, or others, the enemies of said State, and being thereof convicted, shall suffer the pains and penalties of death.

*The counsel for the defendant also [*15 read in evidence an Act of the Legislature of the State of New York, entitled "An Act for the forfeiture and sale of the estates of persons who have adhered to the enemies of this State, and for declaring the sovereignty of the people of this State, in respect to all property within the same," passed the 22d of October, 1779; it being admitted by the counsel for both parties that Roger Morris, Mary Morris, the wife of Roger Morris, and Beverly Robinson, mentioned in the first section of the act, are and were the same persons by those names therein before mentioned; Beverly Robinson being the person by that name who was one of the parties to the marriage settlement deed:

Also an Act entitled "An Act for the speedy sale of the confiscated and forfeited estates within this State, and for other purposes therein mentioned," passed the 12th of May, 1784:

Also, "An Act further to amend an Act entitled 'an Act for the speedy sale of the confiscated and forfeited estates within this State, and for other purposes therein mentioned,'" passed the 1st of May, 1786:

Also, "An Act limiting the period of bringing claims and prosecutions against forfeited estates," passed the 28th of March, 1797:

Also, "An Act for the limitation of criminal prosecutions, and of actions and suits at law," passed the 26th of February, 1788; and "An Act for the limitation of criminal prosecutions and of actions at law," passed the 8th of April, 1801.

The counsel for the plaintiff then made and submitted to the court in writing, the following points upon which they relied:

1. Mary Philipse, in January, 1758, was seized in fee-simple.

2. By the deed of settlement a contingent remainder was limited to the children of that marriage, which vested as soon as they were born, and no act of Morris or his wife, done after the execution of that deed, can impair the estate of the children.

16*] *3. The recital of the lease in the release is an estoppel against the defendant, as to the fact so recited on the ground of privity of estate.

4. If the recital be not a technical estoppel, then it is an admission of a fact in solemn form by the parties to that deed, and is evidence of the fact recited, from which the jury are bound to believe the fact unless it be disproved.

5. The attainder and sale under it operated as a valid conveyance of all the estate of the attainted persons at the date of the attainder, and no more. The purchasers under this State acquired a title in these lands for the lives of Morris and his wife, and of the survivor of them, and in judgment of law must be considered as standing in the same relation to the children of that marriage as the original tenants for life, whose estates were confiscated.

6. As the purchasers under the State were tenants for life, and the children of Morris and his wife, or their assignees, are seized in remainder of the fee, it results from that relation that the possession of the purchasers could not be adverse to the title of the remaindermen. The persons entitled to the remainder have five years from the death of Mrs. Morris to commence their suits for the land; and the sale by the remaindermen to Mr. Astor, during the existence of the life estate, is in accordance with the rules of the common law, and in violation of no statute.

7. The principles of natural law, as well as the treaties of the 3d of September, 1783, and 19th of November, 1794, between the United States and Great Britain, confirm and protect the estate so required by Mr. Astor.

And the counsel for the defendant submitted in writing to the court the following points on which they relied:

1. That the plaintiff cannot recover in this action unless a lease preceded or accompanied the release which has been read in the case.

2. That the plaintiff, not having offered any evidence of the actual execution or contents of any particular paper, as such lease, cannot recover on the ground that a lease was executed and is lost.

17*] *3. That the testimony of Egbert Benson, Robert Troup, and the other witnesses, as to the custom or practice of conveying by lease and release; the professional character of William Livingston, and his connection with the Philipse family; although it might, under certain circumstances, be evidence to lay the foundation for a general presumption, according to the rules of law respecting presumptions of deeds and grants, that a proper lease or other writing, necessary to support the conveyance, had been executed; is not competent to prove either the actual execution, existence, in fact, or contents of the alleged lost lease.

4. That no legal presumption of a deed or lease, such as is necessary to enable the plaintiff to support this action, can fairly arise in this case; because the facts and circumstances of the case are not such as could not, according to the ordinary course of affairs, occur without supposing such a deed or lease to have existed, but are perfectly consistent with the nonexistence of such lease.

5. That no possession having been proved in this case, more consistent with the title of the plaintiff than with that of the defendant, any deed or lease necessary to support the plaintiff's action must be proved, and cannot be presumed.

6. That the recitals in the deed of release do not bind the defendant by way of estoppel; because he is a stranger to the deed, and claims nothing under it.

7. That inasmuch as the defendant is not only a stranger to the deed of release, and claims nothing under it, but as also it appears that the defendant's immediate grantor entered into possession of the premises as early as the year 1783 under a claim of title adverse to that supposed to be created by the said deed or release, and he and the defendant, after and under him, have continued so in possession, under such adverse claim of title, to the present time, the recitals in said deed of release are not evidence against the defendant.

8. Supposing the lease and release to have been duly executed, then the remainder, limited to the children of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, was a contingent, and not a vested *remainder, at the time of the attainder [18 and banishment of Roger Morris and Mary his wife in 1779.

9. By the attainder and banishment of Roger Morris and Mary his wife in 1779 they became civilly dead, and their estate in the lands determined before the time when the contingent remainder to the children could vest, and thus the contingent remainder to the children was destroyed for the want of a particular estate to support it.

10. By the attainder and banishment of Beverly Robinson, the surviving trustee, in 1779, and the forfeiture of all his estate to the people of the State of New York, all seisin, possibility of entry, or seintilla juris in Beverly Robinson, to serve the contingent uses when they arose was divested; and inasmuch as the estate cannot be seized to uses, there was no seisin out of which the uses in remainder could be served when the contingency upon which they were to arise or vest happened; and the State took the estate discharged of all the subsequent limitations in remainder.

11. In consequence of the attainder and banishment of Beverly Robinson, the surviving trustee, and Roger Morris and Mary his wife, in 1779, and the forfeiture of all their, and each of their estate in the land to the people of the State of New York, the children of Roger Morris and Mary his wife never had any legal seisin in the land.

12. In consequence of the act of attainder, and the conveyance made by the people of the State of New York to Timothy Carver with warranty, the estate of the children of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, in the lands in question in this suit, was defeated and destroyed.

13. Roger Morris and Mary his wife, under the marriage settlement deed, had an interest in the land, and might convey in fee to the amount of three thousand pounds in value. They did convey to the amount of one thousand one hundred and ninety-five pounds in value, and the residue of that interest was forfeited to, and vested in the people of New York; and the power was well executed by the conveyance of the commissioners of forfeitures to Timothy Carver, the defendant's grantor.

Peters 4.

14. The whole title, both in law and equity, 19 which may *or can be vested in the children and heirs of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, of, in and to the lands and premises in question, has not been, as between the grantors and grantee, legally transferred to the said John Jacob Astor, his heirs and assigns.

15. A proper deed of conveyance in fee-simple from the said John Jacob Astor, and all persons claiming under him, to the people of the State of New York, would not be valid and effectual to release, transfer, and extinguish all right, title and interest which now is, or may have been vested in the children and heirs of Roger Morris and Mary his wife.

16. The plaintiff's action is barred under the act limiting the period of bringing claims and prosecutions against forfeited estates.

17. The plaintiff's action is barred under the General Limitation Act of 1788, also under the General Limitation Act of 1801.

Upon which the court expressed the following opinion and instructions, to be given to the jury on the defendant's points, under the modifications stated in the same:

1. The court gave the instruction as prayed.

2. It having been satisfactorily proved to the court that the lease was lost, its execution and contents may be proved by secondary evidence.

3. That the testimony of Egbert Benson, Robert Troup, and other witnesses, as to the custom and practice of conveying by lease or release; the professional character of William Livingston, and his connection with the Philipse family, coupled with the recital in the release, were admissible in this case to go to the jury, for them to determine whether a proper lease, necessary to support the conveyance of release so as to pass the legal estate, had been executed.

4. That the jury might in this case presume, if the evidence satisfied them of the fact, that such lease was duly executed, if, in their opinion, the possession was held by Roger Morris and his wife, under this marriage settlement deed, embracing both the lease and release. And that it was for them to decide from the 20 evidence whether the possession *was held under the marriage settlement or under the title of Mary Philipse, anterior to the marriage settlement.

5. The instruction on this point is embraced in the answer to the fourth.

6. That the recital in the release does not bind the defendant by way of estoppel, but is admissible evidence to the jury, connected with the other circumstances, for them to determine whether a proper lease was made and executed.

7. The instruction on this point is included in the answer to the sixth.

8. The remainder limited to the children of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, was a vested remainder at the time of the attainder and banishment of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, in the year 1779, and did not thereafter require any particular estate to support it; but if a particular estate was necessary, there was one sufficient in this case for that purpose.

9 and 10. The answer to these points is included in the answer to the eighth.

Peters 4.

U. S., Book 7.

11. The attainder and banishment of Beverly Robinson, Roger Morris and Mary his wife, in the year 1779, and the forfeiture of all their estate in the land to the people of the State of New York, and the conveyance to Timothy Carver of the lands in question, did not take away the right which the children of Roger and Mary Morris had under the marriage settlement deed.

12. The answer to this point is included in the answer to the eleventh.

13. Admitting that the power reserved to Morris and his wife to sell a part of the lands included in the marriage settlement deed became forfeited to the State, so far as it had not been executed, the sale to Timothy Carver could not, under the evidence in this case, be considered an execution of that power.

14. The whole title, both in law and equity, which may or can have vested in the children and heirs of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, of, in or to the lands and premises in question, has been, as between the grantors and grantee, *legally transferred to John Jacob Astor, [21 his heirs and assigns, according to the true intent and meaning of the acts of the Legislature of the State of New York, which have been produced and read upon the trial.

15. A proper deed of conveyance in fee-simple from John Jacob Astor and all persons claiming under him to the people of the State of New York, would be valid and effectual to release, transfer and extinguish all right, title and interest which now is, or may have been vested in the children and heirs of said Roger Morris and Mary his wife, according to the true intent and meaning of the acts of the Legislature referred to in the next preceding instruction.

16 and 17. The plaintiff's action is not barred by any statute of limitations in this State.

The court then charged the jury.

After stating the plaintiff's title under the patent to Adolphe Philipse in 1697, and that it was not denied by the defendant, but that Mary Philipse in 1754 became seized, in severalty, in fee-simple of the premises in question, the court proceeded to say:

"At this point the dispute commences. On the part of the plaintiff, it is contended that the marriage settlement deed which has been produced and submitted to you, bearing date in the year 1758, was duly executed and delivered on or about the time it bears date; the legal operation of which was to vest in Roger Morris and his wife Mary, a life estate, with a contingent remainder to their children, which became vested in them on their birth, and that their right and title has been duly vested in Mr. Astor, by the deed bearing date in the year 1809. On the part of the defendant, it is contended that Mary Philipse never parted with her title in the premises by the marriage settlement deed set up on the other side, or that if she did, it was re-vested in her or her husband, and continued in them or one of them, until they were attainted in the year 1779, by an Act of the Legislature of this State, and that the title to the land in question thereby became vested in the people of this State, from whom the defendant derives title. Unless, therefore, the plaintiff can establish this marriage settlement deed so as to vest a legal 22*] *estate in the children of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, he cannot recover in this action.

"It will be proper for you, in examining and weighing the facts and circumstances of this case, to bear in mind that the children of Morris and wife could not assert in a court of law their right in this land until the death of Mrs. Morris in the year 1825, and since 1825 there has been no want of diligence in prosecuting and asserting the claim.

"In the year 1809, Mr. Astor purchased and acquired all the interest of the children of Morris and wife, and you are to consider him as now standing in their place.

"The first question then is, was the marriage settlement duly executed? In the first place, the plaintiff has produced the ordinary and usual evidence of the execution of the deed, has shown that Governor Livingston was the subscribing witness, and that in 1787 he went before Judge Hobart and made the usual and ordinary proof of the execution of the deed, such as was sufficient to entitle the deed to be recorded; the handwriting of the witnesses who are dead has also been proved. Upon this proof the prima facie presumption of law is, that the deed was executed in all due form to give it force and validity, and in the absence of all other evidence, the jury would be justified, if not conclusively bound to say, that everything was properly done, including a delivery. But whether delivered or not, is a question of fact for the jury.

"Delivery is absolutely essential; a deed signed, but not delivered, will not operate to convey land. But no particular form was necessary; if the grantee comes into the possession of the deed in any way which may be presumed to be with the assent of the grantor, that is enough, and is a good delivery in law; and if found in the hands of the grantee years afterwards, a delivery may fairly be presumed, and it will operate from and relate back to the time of its date, in the absence of all proof to the contrary. If a deed be delivered to an agent, or thrown on a table, with the intent that the grantee should have it, that is sufficient, although no words are used. Such proof as has been given in this case would be sufficient for a jury 23*] to presume a delivery, *even in the case of a modern deed, and is much stronger in relation to one of ancient date. In this case, what else could be proved? Would it be reasonable to require anything beyond what the plaintiff has proved? The witnesses are dead; their handwriting has been proved, and a proper foundation is thus laid for presuming that everything was done to give effect and validity to the deed.

"Such being the case, the burden of proof is thrown on the other side to rebut the presumption of a delivery, warranted from these circumstances. Much stress has been laid upon the fact that the certificate of proof by Governor Livingston not only states that the witness saw the parties sign and seal, but that he saw them deliver the deed. In stating a delivery, the certificate is a little out of the ordinary form, and it is not important, and adds little or nothing to the evidence of a due and full execution of the deed, that the word deliver was inserted. This insulated fact is not of much importance, for without that word, the legal effect of the proof would be the same; proof of the due execution for the purposes expressed in the deed, includes a delivery.

"What then is the evidence to bring the fact of delivery into doubt? I separate now between the release and the lease; these are two distinct questions, and I shall consider the question relative to the lease hereafter. The argument of the defendant is, that the deed was not delivered, and did not go into effect. Then what is the reasonable presumption to be drawn from the facts he has proved? keeping in mind that this is evidence, by the defendant to disprove the presumption of law from the facts proved, that the deed was duly delivered. It has been said on the part of the defendant that the deed was probably kept for some time, and that the design to have a marriage settlement was finally abandoned. If you believe from the proof made by Governor Livingston that the deed went into the hands of the parties, then there was a good delivery, because a deed cannot be delivered to the party as an escrow. Then is there any evidence to call the delivery into question? Where is the evidence to induce the belief that the deed was executed with any *understanding that it was not to have [24 immediate effect, or that it was delivered to a third person as an escrow, or that the parties did not intend it as an absolute delivery? You have a right to say so, if there is evidence to support it; but if there is nothing to induce such a belief, then you are to say that it was duly delivered.

"It has been said that this was a dormant deed, never intended by the parties to operate; that it had slept until after the attainder and until the year 1787. There is weight in this, or rather there would be weight in it if the parties in interest had slept on their rights. But who has slept? Morris and his wife, Beverly Robinson and Joanna Philipse, the trustees: they are the persons that have slept, and not the children. This does not justify so strong an inference against the children as if they had slept upon their right. Is it fair in such a case to draw any inference against the children?

"It has been said that there were three copies of this instrument; it is somewhat uncertain how many copies there were or where they went. But suppose there were three copies, where would they probably go? Undoubtedly to the parties in interest. Mary Philipse would have one, and Roger Morris another, and the trustees the third. Mary Philipse, in a certain event, contemplated in the marriage settlement, would again become seized in fee. She therefore had an interest in having one copy; for although she had parted with the fee, she took back a life estate with the possibility of an ultimate fee in the land revesting in her. Roger Morris also had an interest under the deed, and it is therefore reasonable to presume that he had one copy of the deed. The third copy would have gone to the trustees, Beverly Robinson and Joanna Philipse. But where did this one come from? All you have on this subject is, that Mr. Watts received it from Morris in 1787, to have it acknowledged. This one, for the purpose of passing the title, is as good as though all three were produced.

"It has also been urged that this deed was not recorded until 1787. Is there anything in that fact that should operate against the children? They were minors for the greater part ^{25*} of the time down to the year 1787, when it was recorded.
Peters 4.

"It has also been urged as a controlling fact, that Morris was here at the close of the war, and did not have the deed recorded before going to England. It appears from the testimony of Colonel Barclay that Morris and his family left New York for England before the evacuation of the city by the British army, which was on the 25th of November, 1783. It is well known as a matter of history that the British were in possession of the city of New York through all the war. Is there anything, then, in the fact that it was not recorded, from which an inference can be drawn against the deed? Where were the officers before whom Morris could at this time have had the deed proved? No law has been shown giving any such power, nor do I know of any such law. Then is there any just ground for a charge of negligence, even against Morris himself? After 1783 there were officers here before whom the deed might have been acknowledged or proved.

"Is there anything in omitting to have it recorded after that time? There was only three or four years' delay, and are there not circumstances reasonably to account for that, and show why it was recorded in 1787? In February preceding the time of proof and recording, the children made an application to the Legislature, asserting and setting forth their claim. They were told by the report of the committee, which was adopted by the House, if you have a right, as you say you have, go to the courts of law, where you will have redress.

"This was a very proper answer. The report did not, however, as has been urged, contain any admission of their title; nor did the committee give any opinion upon the validity of the claim; and if they had, we cannot regard it. But all they or the House said, was, that if what you allege be true, you have a remedy in the courts of law. This was calculated to awaken their attention and to induce them to prove and record their deed, as a precautionary measure. It has been said that this was no more than the ordinary transaction of proving a deed, and that in the case of an old deed, the ^{26*} witness finding his name to the deed, swears from that circumstance, rather than from any particular recollection, that he saw it executed. But in this case, was there not something special and particular preceding the proof of this deed; something calculated to awaken attention, and ought it to be considered no more than the ordinary transaction of proving an old deed? Governor Livingston, the witness who proved the deed, as has been proved to you, was a man of high character, an eminent lawyer, and a distinguished whig. It is fair to presume, also, that he knew what had been done just before in the Legislature. Is it not reasonable, then, to believe that his attention was particularly called to the transaction, and that he referred back to the time of the execution of the deed, and that he would not have proved it if he had not a recollection of what then took place?

"It is reasonable to presume, his attention being awakened, that he refreshed his recollection. Peters 4.

tion of the original transaction. It was proved at Judge Hobart's house. Mr. Watts drew the certificate. But can you presume that the witness would swear, and the judge would certify, without having read it? It is reasonable to presume that Judge Hobart, as well as the witness, knew what had taken place in the Legislature in this city a short time before. This certificate is a little out of the ordinary form; it states the execution to have been at or about the day of its date: they may have thought it necessary to show that the deed was not got up to overreach the attainer. Is there anything in the circumstances of this proof to induce the belief of unfairness?

"It is also said that Morris and his wife have done acts inconsistent with the deed. In weighing the force and effect of these acts, you must bear in mind the time when the interest vested in the children under this deed; for after that interest vested, none but themselves could defeat it. It is said there is doubt as to the time when the marriage took place, but it was probably between 1758 and 1761; for in the latter year Mary Morris executed a deed as the wife of Roger Morris. I am inclined to think the law is, that after the marriage, the parties to the deed could not disannul the deed. [*27 But certainly not after the birth and during the life of the children of that marriage.

"We now come to the acts that are said to be inconsistent with the deed. Those acts are of three distinct kinds or classes: 1. Those for settling the exterior lines of the patent. 2. The deeds to Hill and Merritt. And 3. The leases for the lives of other persons.

"In estimating the weight of the first class, it will be proper for you to bear in mind the situation of the patent to Adolphe Philipse. It was bounded north by the Kip (or Van Cortland & Co.) patent and the Beekman patent, and on the east by Connecticut. The first class of instruments produced by the defendant relate to the Connecticut line, the Beekman patent, and the Kip (or Van Cortland) patent. The first deed is that of January 18th, 1758: this relates to the boundary of the Beekman patent. You will see from this deed, and its recital, what the parties intended. It recites an agreement in 1754, to settle the lines of the two patents.

"You are not necessarily to take this as having been executed after the marriage settlement deed; delivery is what gives validity to a deed. Certainly Mary Philipse was not married at the time this deed was made, for if she had been, she would have signed it as Mary Morris. If she was not married, and had not executed the marriage settlement deed, she was seized in fee of the land, and had the absolute control over it.

"Again, it does not appear how much of the Philipse patent was conveyed by this deed, and it was made in pursuance of an agreement in 1754, to settle the boundary.

"The next is the patent to Philipse, Robinson and Morris, growing out of the settlement of the Connecticut line. The government settled the line between New York and Connecticut, making it a straight line instead of one parallel to the Hudson River, according to the patent; and this patent was given to Morris and others for the lands lying on the west side of that line. And the patent recites that Morris and his wife had released to the king the land taken from the Philipse patent by the new line. This was an act to settle boundaries. Again, it 28 is to be observed that Robinson and *Morris were both married; and yet the patent was not given to their wives, but to the husbands.

"The interest Morris had in the land was a life estate under the settlement deed, the same as it would have been without it. Without that deed, he had a life estate as tenant by the courtesy.

"Morris, instead of taking this patent to his wife or children, or in trust for them, took it to himself. He might, however, be considered as taking the land in trust for his children. But this alleged inconsistency of Morris is just as great without as with the settlement deed.

"The next is the deed to Verplank, in relation to the Kip or Rumbout Patent. It does not appear that this deed conveyed any of the Philipse patent. But suppose it did, it does not necessarily follow that it was intended to assert any right in hostility to the marriage settlement deed. Is it not a fair and reasonable presumption, these children being infants, that the parents meant this as a settlement of difficulties about boundary for the benefit of the children, and not that they intended to act in hostility to the deed? It was the act of parents, and not of strangers. The intention with which all these acts were done is important, as they are introduced to show that Morris and his wife have acted inconsistently with their right under the marriage settlement deed.

"We are next to consider the deeds to Hill and Merritt. Are these hostile to the settlement deed? If there had been no power to sell any part of the land, they would have been strongly inconsistent with the settlement deed. But that deed contains a power expressly giving them the right to sell in fee to the value of three thousand pounds. They have only sold to the amount of one thousand one hundred and ninety-five pounds, and so are within the power. But it has been said that these deeds do not recite the power—that was not necessary: the purchasers in these (Hill and Merritt) deeds would acquire as valid a title as if the power had been recited. These deeds are, therefore, not inconsistent with the settlement deed.

"The next thing to be considered is the three life leases. Were these such acts of hostility 29 as to induce the belief that *the settlement deed was not delivered? It has been argued on the part of the plaintiff that the word dispose, in the power, would authorize these leases as well as sales in fee. This, I think, is not the true construction of the power: looking at the latter part of the power, it is evident that by the words sell and dispose of, they only contemplated sales, and not leasing for life or lives. And so, in strictness of law, they had no power to make these leases for lives. But if they had no such power, still the question returns, how is that to affect the rights of the children; and did they intend it in hostility to those rights? It could not affect their interest in the land. The question is not what was the legal effect of these acts, but how did Morris intend them? Did he actually mean to act in hostility to the deed? That is the question. You are not to construe it an act of hostility, unless it was so intended by Morris. It was a new country; clearing and improving the lands was for the benefit of the children, and if Morris so intended these leases, they are not hostile to the deed. These are all the circumstances relied upon as being inconsistent with the settlement deed, and they are questions for you. I do not wish to interfere with your duties. It is for you to say whether the deed was duly executed and delivered.

"The next question for your consideration, is whether there was a lease as well as a release. In the judgment of the court, a lease was necessary to convey a legal estate to the children, and through them to Mr. Astor. Without a lease, this deed would only have operated as a bargain and sale, and the statute (for reasons that I need not stop to explain) would not have executed the ulterior uses. So a lease is indispensable to the plaintiff's title. Then the question is, are you satisfied that a lease was executed? This, perhaps, is the stress of the case. On this subject, questions of law are intermingled with the facts. The plaintiff says that the recital in the release is conclusive evidence of the lease; such evidence as cannot be disputed. If so, then it would operate as a technical estoppel, and Carver's mouth would be shut, and he would not be permitted to dispute the existence *of the lease, whether there [30 was one in point of fact or not. But it is not enough to make it an estoppel that the defendant claims under the same party; he must claim under or through the same deed, or through the same title. Here neither the defendant nor the State claim through this deed, they claim in hostility to it; they say there never was such a deed; they claim the interest that was in Mary Philipse in 1754. This recital is not, therefore, to be considered a technical estoppel.

"The question then is, whether the recital can operate in any other way. The court has before decided in your hearing that this recital is evidence for the jury, and it is for you to say what weight and importance it ought to have. The defendant has excepted to the decision of the court that this is evidence, and if the court should have mistaken the law, the defendant will have his redress. You are, therefore, to take this recital as evidence legally and properly admitted; and if legal evidence, it is evidence for some purpose. It would be absurd for the court, after deciding that it is legal evidence, to tell you not to consider it, or that it is entitled to no weight or importance. You must, therefore, regard this recital as evidence.

"The recital being evidence, the question is for you to decide what is its weight and importance? In recent transactions, where the party can have other evidence of the fact, recitals are of little weight. But in ancient transactions, they are of more weight and consequence. There may be no witness to prove the fact. And the force and importance of a recital may be greater or smaller, according to the facts and circumstances of each particular case. Here the lease is lost, and it cannot therefore be shown who were the witnesses to it, nor with certainty what it contained. The witnesses to the release are dead, and the plaintiff could not, therefore, be called upon to produce them. In the proof of ancient transactions, the rules of evidence must be relaxed in some measure, to meet the necessity of cases. Where witnesses cannot be had we have to resort to other proof. These will have greater ^{31*} weight in some cases than in others.* If the case is stripped of any fact or circumstance to induce suspicion of fraud, then a recital will have greater weight.

"From the release, it is reasonable to presume that the parties intended to convey a legal estate. This deed, if not drawn by Governor Livingston, was most likely drawn under his advice and direction, and is it not fair to presume that he drew the proper deeds to carry into effect the intentions of the parties? If he acted fairly, he would have done so; and is it not a fair presumption that he drew such an instrument as was customary at that day, and deemed necessary to convey the legal estate?

"It is proved that the lease and release was the ordinary mode of conveyance. Judge Benson says that was the uniform practice, and Colonel Troup says the same. This is an additional circumstance to induce the belief that a lease was executed, and it is for you to determine whether the circumstances are sufficient to satisfy you that what was usual and in accordance with the ordinary course of business, was done in this case.

"But it is objected that the lease is not produced. The plaintiff has, in the opinion of the court, accounted for this by proving it lost. It has been shown not to have been the general practice to record the leases with the releases; very few appear ever to have been so recorded in proportion to the releases, and those produced in court, on the part of the defendant, have never been recorded. It has been said that the lease had performed its office the moment the release was executed, and was no longer of any moment. This is not correct; but if the parties were under that impression, it will in some measure account for their not keeping it with greater care.

If you are satisfied from the evidence that there was a lease duly executed, then the plaintiff has a right to recover, unless some act has since been done changing the rights of the parties.

"The defendant's counsel have urged that this is not a case for presumptions in favor of ^{32*} the existence of a lease; that *presumptions can only be resorted to when the possession accords with the fact to be presumed. There may be some question on this point. I have examined all the cases cited, but I find none that come precisely to this case. So far as I understand the cases, presumptions cannot be resorted to in hostility to the possession. The mere fact of a naked possession proves but little. Courts, therefore, admit evidence of the declarations of parties in possession of land, to show how they hold. In this case the possession may be considered equivocal. Morris and wife would have been entitled to the possession whether there was or was not such a deed, and presuming a lease would not necessarily be presuming a fact in hostility to the possession. If you are, therefore, satisfied that Morris and wife were in possession, holding under the deed of marriage settlement, presumptions may be indulged in favor of the existence of the lease. But if you consider them holding the possession in hostility to the marriage settlement, it is not a case for presuming a lease.

"A lease and release are considered but one instrument, though in two parts. The absence of the lease is not the loss of an entire link in a chain of title, but it is a defect of a part of one instrument. Suppose a deed purporting to pass a fee produced without a seal, and from the lapse of time or some other cause, there is no appearance of its ever having had a seal? Then the party must show that it had been sealed, for otherwise it would not pass the fee. By what kind of evidence could this fact be established? Would it not be proper to look at the conclusion and attestation of the deed—Signed, sealed, &c.? Would it not also be proper evidence to show it was drawn by a man who knew that a seal was necessary to pass the estate, and other circumstantial evidence, and for the jury, from evidence of this description, to presume and find that the instrument was duly sealed, to supply the defect and infirmity of the deed?

"If you are satisfied the lease, as well as release, was executed and delivered, a legal estate has been shown in the *heirs of ³³ Roger and Mary Morris, and the plaintiff will be entitled to recover unless that title has been revested in Roger and Mary Morris, or one of them.

"It is said that the title has been revested in Mrs. Morris by some conveyance, since the settlement deed. This you may presume, if in your opinion the evidence will warrant such presumption. But no redelivery, cancelling or the like, would have that effect; there must have been a reconveyance. This must also have been made before the marriage, or at the utmost length, before the birth of a child; therefore, you can only look to circumstances arising before the marriage, or before the birth of a child, unless you should be of opinion that the acts of Roger Morris and his wife, which have been given in evidence, were in hostility to this marriage settlement deed. The children may have reconveyed since they came of age. But the circumstances do not weigh very strongly against them before 1825, when they were first in a condition to assert their rights. There cannot be any very strong grounds for supposing the children ever reconveyed. And if there is anything to satisfy you there was a reconveyance, you will say so, and it will defeat the plaintiff's right to recover. But in my judgment, the result will depend principally upon the question whether a lease and release were duly executed and delivered, so as to pass the legal estate.

"The deed of the State only passed such right to the defendant's father as the State had, and if the marriage settlement deed has been established, that was nothing more than the life estate of Morris and wife. It is not necessarily to be inferred from any of the acts read that the State intended to take any greater interest than such as the persons attained had. They sold what the commissioner of forfeitures judged had been forfeited. They did not examine in to the state of the title, but only exercised their judgment upon such information as they had. It was for that reason that the State conveyed with warranty. The State cannot be presumed to have intended to conclude the rights of third persons who were not attainted. If, therefore, 34] you shall find that the marriage settlement deed, consisting of a lease and release, was duly executed and delivered on or about the time it purports to bear date, the children of Roger and Mary Morris acquired under it a contingent remainder, which became vested on their birth, and the plaintiff will be entitled to recover unless that interest was destroyed or put an end to by some subsequent reconveyance, of which you will judge and determine."

Upon this charge, and on the opinion, the court left the case to the jury. A verdict and judgment were rendered for the plaintiff, and the defendant prosecuted this writ of error.

The case was argued for the plaintiff in error by Mr. Bronson, Attorney-General of New York and Mr. Webster; and for the defendant by Mr. Ogden and Mr. Wirt.

For the plaintiff in error the following points were made:

I. No estate ever vested in the children of Morris and wife under the settlement deed.

1. The remainder limited to the children by that deed was a contingent remainder, and could not vest in the lifetime of their parents.

2. By the attainder and banishment of Morris and wife in 1779, they became civilly dead, and their estate in the land determined, and the contingent remainder to the children failed for the want of a particular estate to support it.

3. If the attainder and forfeiture worked no more than an assignment of the particular (or life) estate, then the conveyance by the State of New York in 1782 to Timothy Carver, with warranty, was equivalent to a feoffment by the tenant for life, and destroyed the contingent remainder depending on that life estate.

4. By the attainder of Beverly Robinson, the surviving trustee in 1779, and the forfeiture of all his estate to the people of the State of New York, all seisin in the trustee to serve the contingent uses to the children was divested. The State cannot be seized to a use, and so there was no seisin to serve the contingent uses to the 35] children when the event upon which they were to vest happened, and the State took the land discharged of the subsequent limitations in remainder.

II. Under the settlement deed (without a lease) the children could not take legal, but only trust or equitable interest in the land.

III. The judge erred in admitting evidence to prove the loss before it had been shown that a lease ever existed.

IV. The plaintiff did not prove the loss, nor did he sufficiently account for the nonproduction of the lease, and was not entitled to give secondary evidence of its contents.

1. The release states it was executed in three parts—there must also have been three parts to the lease, and the plaintiff should have accounted for all the parts before being permitted to give secondary evidence of the contents.

2. Most of the evidence of searches for the lease was of a loose and unsatisfactory character—depending, as to its sufficiency, upon mere hearsay evidence.

3. No sufficient search was proved among the papers of Mary Morris, formerly Mary Philipse.

4. No search was shown to have been made among the papers of Joanna Philipse, the mother of Mary Morris and one of the trustees.

5. No search was proved in the office of the Secretary of State, where the release was recorded, nor was any proved in the clerk's office of the counties of Dutchess and Putnam, where the land is situated.

6. A search, by a third person, among the papers of the children and heirs of Roger Morris and his wife, who were lessors of the plaintiff, was not sufficient. Those lessors were competent witnesses upon the question of loss, and should have been sworn or examined on commission.

7. The other lessors of the plaintiff, Messrs. Colden, Fowler, and Bogert, should have been sworn, as well as Mr. Astor, to prove that they had not got the lease.

8. It should have been shown where the release came from, when it came into the hands of the plaintiff, or Mr. Astor, and that the lease was not in that place.

*V. The recital in the lease does not [36 bind the defendant by way of estoppel, nor is it evidence against him.

VI. This is not a case where a lease or other conveyance can be presumed.

VII. The plaintiff was not entitled to recover without proving the actual execution of a lease.

VIII. Evidence of what were the contents of a lease in a particular case between other parties, was not competent evidence to prove what were the contents of the lease in this case.

IX. If a lease of some kind was executed, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on proving it lost, without also proving what were its contents.

X. The judge admitted evidence which was not pertinent, and which may have misled the jury.

1. A common practice to convey land by lease and release was not competent evidence to prove that a lease was executed in this case, or what were its contents.

2. The professional character of Governor Livingston was not competent evidence to prove either a lease or its contents.

3. Proof that it was not usual to record leases, was not competent evidence to prove the loss of a lease in this case.

4. Proof of what was the usual recital of a lease in a deed of release, was not competent evidence for any purpose.

5. The journal of the Assembly was not legal or competent evidence against the defendant.

6. The acts of the Legislature of the State of New York, relative to the claim of Mr. Astor, were not competent evidence against the defendant.

7. Proof that this suit was defended by the State of New York, was not competent evidence against the defendant.

XI. The judge misdirected the jury on the question of a delivery of the settlement deed.

XII. The judge misdirected the jury as to the grounds upon which they might find there was a lease as well as a release.

*XIII. The judge should have instructed [37 ed the jury that this was a proper case for presuming a conveyance.

XIV. Roger Morris and Mary his wife, under the marriage settlement deed, had an interest in the land, and might convey in fee, to the amount of three thousand pounds in value. They did convey to the amount of one thousand one hundred and ninety-five pounds in value, and the residue of that interest was forfeited to and vested in the people of the State of New York, and the power was well executed by the conveyance of the commissioners of forfeitures to Timothy Carver, the defendant's grantor.

XV. The whole title, both in law and equity, which may or can have vested in the children and heirs of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, of, in and to the lands and premises in question, has not been, as between the grantors and grantee, legally transferred to the said John Jacob Astor, his heirs and assigns.

XVI. A proper deed in conveyance in fee-simple from the said John Jacob Astor and all persons claiming under him, to the people of the State of New York, would not be valid and effectual to release, transfer, and extinguish, all right, title, and interest which now is, or may have been vested in the children and heirs of the said Roger Morris and Mary his wife.

XVII. The plaintiff's action is barred under the act limiting the period of bringing claims and prosecutions against forfeited estates.

XVIII. The plaintiff's action is barred under the General Limitation Act of 1788, and also under the General Limitation Act of 1801.

XIX. The plaintiff was bound to pay for the permanent improvements upon the land, by which its value had been increased.

Mr. Bronson, for the plaintiff in error, contended that on the true construction of the deed of settlement, no estate vested in the children of Roger Morris and wife. Morris and wife took upon their marriage an estate in the land for the term of their natural lives and 38] the life of the survivor, *with a contingent remainder in fee to the children, which could not vest in the lifetime of their parents. The uses in the deed were: 1. To the trustees until the marriage. 2. To Morris and wife for life. 3. From and after the determination of the life estate to such children as might be born of the marriage. 4. But if they should have no child or children, or such child or children should happen to die in the lifetime of their parents, then either to Mrs. Morris, or to such persons as she should devise the same.

Thus the remainder was contingent and did not vest during the life of the parents, and it afterwards failed for the want of a particular estate to support it, the life estate of Roger Morris and wife having been forfeited. It was the obvious meaning of the deed that the residue of the estate should go to the children, if they survived the mother, and if not, to her, as either event should take place. It was thus a remainder limited to two persons or classes of persons, depending on survivorship; and until the happening of the event it could not become a vested estate in either.

This was the effect of the limitation over, and such a limitation is good at common law. There may be two concurrent remainders or contemporary fees, called alternate remainders; the latter to take effect in case the first shall Peters 4.

fail. (Laddington v. Kime, 1 Lord Ray., 203.) The same case is reported 1 Salk., 224; 1 Preston on Estates, 488, 493. The case before the court is more properly one fee, one remainder, and is like the ordinary case of a remainder limited to the survivor of two or more persons.

In answer to the allegation that the children on their birth took vested remainders in fee, and that the limitations over in case of the death of the children could only have taken effect by way of shifting use, it is urged that although by conveyances deriving their operation from the statute of uses, estates may be limited differently from the limitations by conveyances at common law, yet the difference between a remainder and a shifting use is, that a remainder must be limited to take effect in possession upon the regular determination of the estate which precedes it; but a shifting use does not *take effect upon the regular determina- [*39 tion of the preceding estate, but in derogation or abridgment of that estate. (1 Preston on Estates, 117, 92, 93; Cruise's Dig. Rem., ch. 5, sec. 19, 36.)

Springing and shifting uses, and executory devises are only admitted in cases of necessity, and it is well settled that where a limitation can take effect as a remainder with a sufficient freehold estate to support it, it shall not be construed as a springing or shifting use, or as an executory devise. (Laddington v. Kime, before cited; Doe v. Holmes, 3 Wils., 243; Goodtitle v. Billington, Doug., 725, 753; Fearne on Ex. Dev., 5.)

The principles of these cases fully apply to this case. There was no difficulty in giving effect to the limitation to Mrs. Morris, or her devisee as a remainder, construing the deed as giving the residue of the estate to the one or the other according to survivorship. Thus no estate could vest in the children during the lifetime of their parents. They had no certain or fixed right of future enjoyment. The case is, therefore, within the fourth class of cases, as they are arranged by Mr. Fearne; the person, though in esse, was not ascertained. (Fearne on Contingent Rem., 2, 3, 5, 9; Biggott v. Smith, Cro. Car., 102; Co. Lit., 378, A; Cruise's Dig. Rem., ch. 1, sec. 8; Bac. Abr. Rem. and Rev., D; 1 Preston on Est., 77; Leonard Lovie's case, 10 Co., 85, 86; 3 Coke, 20; 1 Plow. Rep., 20; Smith v. Belay, Cro. Eliz., 630.)

It is not the event which is to determine the preceding estate, but that which is to give effect to the remainder which distinguishes a contingent from a vested remainder. (1 Preston on Est., 67, 70, 71.) If the remainder to the children was vested in interest, it might be aliened or devised, and on their death it would descend to their heirs; and the limitation to the mother and her devisee might have been defeated, notwithstanding the death of the children before their parents. It is therefore evident that the remainder was contingent until the question of survivorship was determined. (1 Preston on Est., 64; Cruise's Dig. Rem., ch. 1, sec. 9; Doe v. Provoost, 4 Johns. Rep., 61; Den v. Bagshaw, 6 Durnf. & East, 512.)

*There are some cases upon wills [*40 where the courts, to carry into effect the intention of the testator, have held a contingent disposition of the estate to be a condition subsequent to divest the estate, and not a condition precedent. (4 Bos. & Pull., 313; 14 East, 601; 1 Maule & Sel., 327; 2 Johns. Cases, 314.) But in these cases the estates in remainder were so limited as to take effect in possession upon the regular determination of the preceding estate, or where it was necessary to effect the intention of the testator so to construe the limitation. The cases of Doe v. Martin (1 D. & E., 39); The Earl of Sussex v. Temple (1 Lord Raym., 311); Matthews v. Temple (Comberb., 407), do not interfere with the principles contended for on the part of the plaintiff in error.

1. The contingent remainder to the children failed upon several grounds:

2. By the attainder and banishment, by which Morris and wife became civilly dead, and their estate determined; there being from that event no particular estate to support it.

Banishment for life works the civil death of the party. (Co. Litt., 133; 1 Black. Com., 132, 133; 4 Johns. Ch. Rep., 218; 6 Johns. Ch. Rep., 118.) The remainder must vest in interest during the continuance of the particular estate, or the moment of its determination, or it is gone forever. (Fearn on Cont. Rem., 307, 326, 389; Cruise's Dig. Rem., ch. 6, sec. 35, 36; 2 Saund. Rep., 386; Thompson v. Leach, 1 Lord Raym., 316; Lloyd v. Brooking, 1 Ventris, 188; 2 Salk., 576.) In the cases of Corbet v. Tickborn (2 Salk., 576), and Linch v. Coote (2 Salk., 469), where it was held that by attainder for treason of the tenant for life the crown takes no other than the interest of the tenant, there was in the first case a still subsisting life estate to sustain the remainder, and in the second case the remainder was actually vested.

In Borland v. Dean (4 Mason's C. C. Rep., 174) it was held that the confiscation of the estate of the tenant for life did not defeat the remainder. But this was on the ground that it was a vested, and not a contingent estate at the time of the confiscation.

2. If the attainder and forfeiture worked no 41 more than *an assignment of the particular and life estate, then the conveyance by the State in 1782 to Timothy Carver with warranty, was equivalent to a feoffment by the tenant for life, and destroyed the contingent remainder depending on that estate. (Fearn on Cont. Rem., 316, 318; Cruise Dig. Rem., ch. 6, sec. 1, 7; 2 Saunders, 386.) It is true that a bargain and sale by tenant for life will not destroy a contingent remainder, as it passes no greater interest than the person has. But the statute of New York, under which the commissioners acted, is part of the alienation as well as the deed, and the statute gives the deed of the commissioners all the effect of a feoffment with livery at common law.

3. By the attainder of Beverly Robinson, the surviving trustee in 1779, and the forfeiture of all his estate to the people of the State of New York, all seisin in the trustee to serve the contingent uses to the children was divested; and thus the remainder to the children of Roger Morris and wife was destroyed.

The State cannot be seized to a use, and so there was no seisin to serve the contingent remainder to the children, and the State took the land discharged of the subsequent limitations.

It is necessary to the execution of a use that some person should be seized to the use. (Gilbert on Uses and Trusts, 125; Chudleigh's case, 1 Coke, 132; 1 Saunders on Uses and Trusts, 117, 181; 7 Cruise's Dig. Uses, ch. 3, sec. 78; Cruise's Dig. Rem., ch. 5, sec. 9.)

The king cannot be seized to a use, but by prerogative holds the lands discharged of the use, and the people of the State of New York have succeeded to all the rights and prerogatives of the former sovereign. (Cruise's Dig. Use, ch. 2, sec. 37; Cruise's Dig., ch. 3, sec. 9, 10; Vin. Abr. Uses (c); Gilbert on Uses and Trusts, 5, 6; The People v. Herkimer, 4 Cow., 345; The People v. Gilbert, 18 Johns. Rep., 227.)

The counsel then proceeded to argue that there should have been a lease, in order to sustain a marriage settlement. That the loss of the lease was not proved. But the court having decided that the recital of the lease in the deed of the 13th of January, 1758, was evidence [42 between these parties of the original existence of the lease, the argument upon these points is omitted.

It was further argued that the recital in the lease does not bind the plaintiff in error by way of estoppel, nor is it evidence against him.

The Circuit Court held that a recital was not an estoppel, but that it was evidence against the defendant in that court of the existence of the lease.

It was not such evidence. The defendant did not claim under or through the deed, but claimed adversely to it, and deduced his title from the patent to Adolphe Philipse in 1697. The plaintiff then set up a deed of seventy years' standing, wholly disconnected with the defendant's claim of title, save that it was executed by one of the persons through whom the title had passed. It is denied that it could be evidence against anyone but the party who made it, and, possibly, his heirs and personal representatives, or others standing in his place.

It is not denied that the deed without the lease is good and valid, and divests the title of Mary Philipse as effectually as if a lease had been made; but without a lease the legal title is not placed where the plaintiffs below require it.

It is important to consider that there never has been a holding under this deed. Morris and wife were entitled to the possession of the estate without the deed, and it is necessary to look beyond the deed to ascertain under what title they hold. There is no evidence which shows that the deed was ever referred to by them as valid or subsisting; but by a series of acts altogether unequivocal and adverse to the deed, they exercised full ownership over the property, by granting it in fee, or on leases for life; acts inconsistent with the deed.

The doctrine that the recital is evidence against the defendant, goes the whole length of determining that an admission, made by any person through whom a title has passed, binds every one to whom the title may come; and that a deed, to which a party is a stranger, and under which there has been no holding, [43 not only binds him, by way of divesting the title of his grantor, but that he is also bound by any admission it may contain. The king is not bound by estoppels. (Vin. Abr. Estoppel, U., 2.) Nor are the governments of the States of the United States bound by them. (Elmendorf v. Carmichael, 2 Litt. Rep., 481.)

The old doctrine was that a recital did not bind anyone, not even the party to the reciting deed. (Vin. Abr. Estop. M., pl. 5, 7; Co. Litt., 352 b.) But it is admitted that a different rule now prevails, and that recitals are for the most part evidence against the party to the deed, his heirs, and those standing strictly in the character of representatives, and against persons claiming through or under the deed. (Denn v. Correll, 3 Johns. Cas., 174; Will. Rep., 9; Willoughby v. Brooke, Cro. Eliz., 756; Com. Dig., Testmoigne, b. 5.) But in 2 Starkie on Ev., 30, it is said "a recital is not evidence against a stranger to a second deed;" and a man is a stranger to a deed when he does not claim under it, although he may claim under the same grantor.

The cases relied upon to support the position of the defendant in error do not warrant the conclusion claimed from them. (Ford v. Lord Gray, 1 Salk., 285; 6 Mod., 44.) In these cases the claims were under the grantor, in and under or through the reciting deed.

It is believed that no case can be found where the point has been adjudged that a recital was evidence against one claiming under the party to the reciting deed but not through it, unless where there has been a possession not to be accounted for, but on the truth of the recited fact. In such a case it may be evidence against a stranger. (Norris's Peake's Ev., 164.)

Estoppels by verdict, admissions on record, &c., bind all privies (1 Phil. Ev., 245), because they operate on the interest in the land, and divest the title. (1 Salk., 276.) But a recital is mere matter of admission, which does not operate on the title to land nor affect it in the hands of a grantee of the person making the admission. Even the heir is not always bound by that which would estop his ancestor. 44*] (Goodtitle v. Morse, 3 T. R., 365. Kercheval v. Triplett, 1 Marshall's Ky. Rep., 7, 494.)

The judge admitted evidence which was not pertinent, and which may have misled the jury.

1. A common practice to convey land by lease and release was not competent evidence to prove that a lease was executed in this case, or what were its contents. 2. The professional character of Governor Livingston was not competent evidence to prove either a lease or its contents. 3. Proof that it was not usual to record leases was not competent evidence to prove the loss of a lease in this case. 4. Proof of what was the usual recital of a lease in a deed of release, was not competent evidence for any purpose. 5. The journal of the Assembly was not legal or competent evidence against the defendant. 6. The acts of the Legislature of the State of New York relative to the claim of Mr. Astor, were not competent evidence against the defendant. 7. Proof that this suit was defended by the State of New York, was not competent evidence against the defendant.

It may be said that this evidence was unimportant: it is for that very reason that we complain of its admission. And unless the plaintiff can show that it was legal evidence between these parties and upon the questions to be tried, the judgment must be reversed; for it Peters 4.

is impossible to say that the jury did not found their verdict upon it.

For what legitimate purpose were the acts of the Legislature concerning the claim of Mr. Astor given in evidence? If to excite the sympathy, or operate upon the prejudices of the jury, it was an improper and illegal purpose. We attempted to defend James Carver, and against him the plaintiff was to establish his right.

If the acts in question contained any admission in favor of the plaintiff's title, will it be contended that the Legislature could destroy or admit away the vested rights of James Carver? But those acts denied the title of Mr. Astor, and referred him to the courts of law to establish it by proof; and he was to do that against the tenants upon the land, not against the State.

*Again, those acts proposed a compromise to Mr. Astor; but there was no evidence that he had ever accepted those terms of compromise.

And how did it tend to establish the title of Mr. Astor, or anything concerning it to show that this suit was defended by the State of New York? If not legal evidence, a reversal of this judgment is asked. If Mr. Astor has a title to this land, he must prove it by legal and pertinent evidence.

The judge of the Circuit Court misdirected the jury on the question of the delivery of the settlement deed.

The force of this objection can only be seen by referring particularly to the case of the plaintiff below.

The evidence offered was the affidavit of Mr. Livingston of the execution of the deed, and that of Mr. Hoffman of the handwriting of the subscribing witnesses, both of whom were proved to be dead. The affidavit of Mr. Livingston was made, not from a recollection of the execution, but from his name having been subscribed as a witness. This was prima facie proof to put the instrument on record, and amounted only to presumptive evidence of a delivery of the deed. When a subscribing witness is called to prove the execution of a deed, two distinct facts are to be established. 1. The sealing or execution. 2. The delivery. (1 Stark. Ev., 331, 333, 334; 2 Stark. Ev., 473, 475, 477; Jackson v. Phipps, 12 Johns., 418.) Where the witness is dead, proof of the handwriting furnishes presumptive evidence of sealing and delivery, if there has been possession under it, or the deed comes from the grantee. But in the absence of possession, or where the deed was never in the hands of the grantee, the presumption is very slight. Such proof of a deed as will entitle it to be recorded is certainly no stronger than an acknowledgment by the party that he executed it as his act and deed, for the uses and purposes therein mentioned, and in neither case is the evidence conclusive, but only prima facie or presumptive, and such as may be rebutted. (Jackson v. Dunlop, 1 Johns. Cases, 114; Maynard v. Maynard, 10 Mass., 456; Gardner v. Collins, 3 Mason, 398.) These cases sufficiently establish that the proof or acknowledgment and *the recording of a deed, furnish only [46 prima facie evidence of delivery.

But upon the whole case it is thought that any evidence of a presumption that there was an actual deliver of the deed, so that it became an operative and valid conveyance, was entirely destroyed by the facts of the case. The deed was prepared in contemplation of marriage, and, necessarily, was not to be delivered until the moment of the marriage ceremony. This must have been the case; as by its terms, if the marriage did not occur, the estate would be held by the trustees. The marriage did not take place immediately, for Mary Philipse, on the 18th of January, 1758, executed a deed for a part of the land in her own name. She appears to have been married before the 5th of March, 1761. It is probable the deed was thrown aside, increased confidence in Morris having made it of no importance, and that it was only brought forward afterwards for the purposes for which it is now set up. It was not recorded until 1787, although all the other title papers of the family were put on record. The recitals in the deeds given after it state all the circumstances of the title under Adolphe Philipse, but no deed recites this, or in any manner refers to it. There was no evidence that the deed had been seen after its execution in the hands of the trustees, or seen at all, until 1787, when it was produced by the grantor. Upon such facts it is difficult to believe that it was at any time before the Revolution a subsisting conveyance.

Other important facts were proved. The deeds before the war, given by Morris and wife, grant and convey a fee-simple in the parts of the land contained in the settlement, and do not mention a life estate. In settling the line with Connecticut, the surrender to the crown does not mention the trust deed; the parties style themselves owners and proprietors, and the grant of land, in consideration of the surrender, is to Roger Morris, and not subject to the pretended settlement. Beverly Robinson, a trustee under the deed of 1758, should have protected the trust, but he was a party to the compromise with the crown, under which five thousand acres were acquired in his own right by Roger Morris.

47*] *The misdirection of the court was in telling the jury that the evidence by which the delivery was brought into doubt was of no legal effect or importance. There was one error which pervaded every part of the charge in this particular. While the question was whether there was any deed, duly perfected by delivery, under which the children had rights, the judge assumed that fact and made it the basis of destroying the legal effect of that evidence given to disprove it. That this was a dormant deed, which had slept for twenty-nine years, went very strongly to impeach its validity; and the judge said, "there is weight in this, or rather there would be weight in it, if the parties in interest had slept on their rights." He then says, "the children have not slept," and asks, "is it fair in such a case to draw any inference against the children." This assumes the very fact in controversy—that there was a deed, and, therefore, that it was improper to draw any inference against the children from the acts or omissions of others.

He also contended that the court misdirected the jury upon the omission to record the deed, and on the acts and conveyances of Morris and wife in disregard of the deed of 1758.

Several of the deeds are disposed of by the court by saying they were to settle boundaries; but they asserted a right to the lands in fee, and for what purpose they were made was of no moment. In relation to the leases, the judge said that Morris and wife, "in strictness of law," had no power to make them; but he adds, "how is that to affect the rights of the children?" This was equivalent to saying the children had rights—the very question in the case.

Upon the whole, it is evident that the court left nothing to the jury on the question of delivery. He also said that in his charge he had laid before the jury all the circumstances relative to the question of delivery, but he had omitted to state that this deed came out of the hands of the grantor, and some other facts important to the cause.

The judge should have instructed the jury that this was a proper case for presuming a reconveyance.

*The judge told the jury that they [*48] might presume a reconveyance if they thought the evidence would warrant the presumption; but he also said that in his judgment the case depended principally upon other grounds. It was, in fact, saying that it was not a proper case for presuming a reconveyance.

The presumption of such a conveyance was in accordance with the actual holding of the property from 1758 to the day of the trial, and all the parties connected with the title have acted at all times as though such were the fact.

In New York, and the local law governs in this case, the rule concerning presumptions of conveyances is in favor of the claims of the plaintiff in error here. (2 Wendell's Rep., 36; Ham v. Schuyler, 4 Johns. Ch. Rep.) So, too, in England, a reconveyance of the legal estate was presumed after a great lapse of time, though the possession was not originally adverse, but under a trust. And this case received the sanction of this court in Provost v. Gratz (6 Wheat., 418).

Roger Morris and Mary his wife, under the marriage settlement deed, had an interest in the land, and might convey in fee to the amount of three thousand pounds in value. They did convey to the amount of one thousand one hundred and ninety-five pounds in value, and the residue of that interest was forfeited to and vested in the people of the State of New York, and the power was well executed by the conveyance of the commissioners of forfeitures to Timothy Carver, the defendant's grantor.

In relation to the deeds to Hill and Merritt, the judge held that they were a good execution of the power in the settlement deed; but on this part of the case he held, admitting that the unexecuted portion of the power passed to the State by the forfeiture, yet that the conveyance to Timothy Carver by the State was not a good execution of the power. If Morris and wife could execute the power without reciting or professing to act under it, why could not the State do the same after they acquired the title?

If the power is to be regarded as an exception out of the grant, then Morris and wife had an interest or estate in the *land, and they [*49] might convey without reciting the power. And it is equally clear that the residue of that interest or estate not aliened passed by the forfeiture, and so the defendant acquired a good title by the deed from the commissioners.

We think this power received different constructions upon different questions, and that either the Hill and Merritt deeds were inconsistent with the settlement deed, or that the defendant acquired a good title under the commissioners' deed.

The whole title, both in law and equity, which may or can have vested in the children and heirs of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, of, in and to the lands and premises in question, has not been, as between the grantors and grantee, legally transferred to the said John Jacob Astor, his heirs and assigns.

A proper deed of conveyance in fee-simple from the said John Jacob Astor and all persons claiming under him to the people of the State of New York, would not be valid and effectual to release, transfer, and extinguish, all right, title and interest, which now is, or may have been vested in the children and heirs of the said Roger Morris and Mary his wife.

These questions arise upon the admissions made by the parties before the jury, and which appear upon the record.

If the remainder to the children was contingent, and not to vest until the death of both their parents, then it is quite clear that it could not be aliened until the question of survivorship was determined. But if the court should hold that the remainder to the children was vested, subject to be divested by way of a shifting of the use on the event of their dying before their mother, then we contend that they could not alien to a stranger, although they might release to a person having an interest in the land. And if the conveyance would bind the party to it by way of estoppel, still it would not bind their heirs. (Goodlittle v. Flunkner, 3 T. R., 365; Kercheval v. Triplett, 1 Marshall's Ky. Rep., 494; 1 Preston on Est., 75, 76; Viner's Abr. Release, G. Lampet's case, 10 Coke, 50*] 46; Hoe's case, 5 Coke, 71; Com. *Dig. Grant, D. Assignment, C. 3; Davis v. Hayden, 9 Mass., 514, 519.)

The plaintiff was bound to pay for the improvements upon the land by which its value had been increased.

The substance of the provisions of the acts of the Legislature of New York is, that the purchaser of any forfeited estate, in case of eviction, should be paid the value at the time of the eviction of the improvements he had made on the land; not for his labor or expenditures, but the amount by which that labor and those expenditures should have increased the value of the land. The party who recovered his land would only pay the difference between the value of the land at the time of the recovery and what it would be worth at the time of the recovery without the labor and expenditures of the party evicted. This provision is both just and equitable.

It is contended that these provisions of the laws of New York are in conflict with the treaty with England in 1783.

The acts are general in their terms and in their operation; they have no relation to the character or country of the person who should recover lands which had been sold or confiscated; they operate on all.

A partial legislation, prejudicial to British subjects, was the thing it was the object of the British government to provide against.

Did the British government intend to ask, or ours to give, privileges and immunities, or exemptions to British subjects that were not accorded to our own citizens?

The Legislature might perhaps have adopted such violent measures in relation to confiscated estates, which would have been unjust to our own citizens and to British subjects, and against such acts the treaty was intended to guard. But it cannot be supposed that the provision of the treaty was to extend to interfere with regulations founded upon the principles of national justice.

What were "the just rights" of persons having an interest in confiscated lands? Not a right to the future labor of others, by which the value of the lands should be enhanced. In 1783 no British subject had a "just right" to the increased value which James Carver[*51 should give to the lands after the year 1786, when the law was passed.

Mr. Ogden, for the defendant in error.

In 1754, Mary Philipse was seized in fee of a part of what was then called "Philipse Upper Manor," of which the premises in dispute in this suit are a portion. Mary Philipse is, therefore, the source from which both parties derive title.

The plaintiff in the court below must show that he has a good title under Mary Philipse. He claims under a deed of marriage settlement, executed by Mary Philipse, in consideration of her intended marriage with Roger Morris.

Was this deed executed and delivered by Mary Philipse? This is a pure question of fact to be decided by a jury. The jury have found the fact; their verdict is conclusive unless the judge of the Circuit Court has misdirected the jury in the law. If the misdirection of the judge was as to facts, it may have furnished ground for a new trial in the court below, but not for a reversal of the judgment here. (1 Serg. & Rawle, 333, 336.) If no illegal evidence was admitted, the judgment is conclusive.

The proof of the execution of the deed and of its delivery was made by the deposition of Mr. Livingston in 1787, and by proof of the handwriting of the witnesses who are dead. This is the ordinary proof on such matters; all the other proof was brought forward by the defendant, all of which was given to the jury. This evidence was not illegal.

If all the circumstances of this case are to be reviewed by this court, what are they? The proof of the deed had been made by Mr. Livingston, after it had been before the Legislature, and the claims of those under whom the plaintiff claims had become the subjects of inquiry.

It is objected that the deed was never heard of before the Revolutionary War, and that it had never been produced until the interests of the parties required its production. Had the parties who now exhibit the claim on the defendant considered it as an inoperative instrument they would have destroyed it, and have claimed from the crown a compensation for the land as a part of the loss sustained by 52] the war. But if *any conclusions can be drawn from these facts, they were properly for the jury. As to the fact whether the deed had been seen before the war, it may have existed, and yet not appear to this court, as the case is before this court on a bill of exceptions.

As to the deed not having been recorded at the time of its execution, there was no law in force requiring that it should be put on record. There is no strength in the argument that as the other muniments of title were on record, the fact that this deed is not found on record authorizes the belief that it never existed as a valid conveyance. A patent is always recorded before it issues. The deed to lead to uses, in the proceedings to bar the entail, was a part of the common recovery. The deed of partition, which operated on lands twenty miles square divided among three children, must have been recorded for the satisfaction of purchasers. But the settlement deed affected only the parties to it, and its recording was not called for.

Nor is it evidence that no such deed was in force that, in the conveyances made by Roger Morris and wife, after its execution, this deed was not mentioned. This was of no consequence in transferring property to strangers. But if these facts are of any value, they were proper for the jury in determining on the question of delivery, or on the presumption of a reconveyance.

In the marriage settlement, a power to convey lands to the amount of three thousand pounds was reserved, and conveyances of one thousand one hundred and ninety-five pounds were made. This power was properly executed without reciting that it was derived from the settlement deed. As to the presumption of a reconveyance, it is argued that a possession of seventy years was inconsistent with the marriage deed. But this was not the fact. In the year 1787 the deed was proved before Judge Hobart and was then recorded, and the claims of the children of Roger and Mary Morris were soon after presented to the Legislature of New York. It is an universal principle of law that if possession be consistent with a deed, it shall be presumed to be under it. In this case the 53] acts of Roger Morris and *wife in the sale of the land, in granting leases, were of this character and should be so considered.

It is contended by the counsel for the plaintiff in error that the recital of the lease in the settlement deed does not bind him, because he does not hold under that deed; and does not bind the State of New York, his grantor, because of its sovereign character. In answer to the first, it may be said that if the plaintiff is not bound by the recitals, yet they were evidence which went properly to the jury, and their verdict has affirmed them. To the second it is submitted that although the king is not bound by recitals in his own deed, he is bound by those in deeds under which he claims. (Matthews, 201.) What was the legal operation of the deed? It was the conveyance of the estate to trustees for the use of Roger Morris and wife for life, remainder to their children, and if no children, a contingent remainder over to Mary Morris and her devisees. The remainder to the children was at first contingent, which vested at the birth of each child, and opened to let in those who were born afterwards. (Cruise, Rem., ch. 5, p. 346, 364, 336, ch. 4, sec. 15, ch. 5, sec. 11, p. 350.)

It is said that the remainders were destroyed by the operation of the acts of attainder and forfeiture, and the conveyance by the State of New York. That these were equivalent to a feoffment, and destroyed the particular estate, and consequently the remainders. But the conveyance of the State with warranty, was not equal to a feoffment. There was no livery of seisin, and the operation of conveyances which pass the whole estate is confined to those with livery of seisin.

Nor was the attainder and banishment of Morris and wife, a civil death. The Treaty of Peace repealed the banishment, and thus restored them to civil existence. The estate depended, by the terms of its grant, on the natural death of the grantors.

And the law is, that if a particular estate is determined the remainderman might enter, but he is not compelled to do so. (2 Ves., Sen., 482; 7 East, 32.) The act of attainder intended *to forfeit only the interest of Roger [54 Morris and wife. Its terms extend no farther, and such only could be its operation. The offense charged against them was not treason, and no forfeiture was effected but according to the words of the law. (2 Johns. Rep., 248.) A condition or possibility was not forfeited. (4 Mason, 174.) The act did not intend to terminate the estate of Roger Morris and wife, but to transfer it to the State of New York and to continue it afterwards. Thus, for all purposes of sustaining the remainders it did continue, and their estate being limited to their lives is now fully determined by their death; and their children, under whom the plaintiff below claimed, were fully entitled to the land.

As to the claim to be paid for the improvements, the Treaty of 1782 confirmed all unforfeited estates, and protected them from State legislation. The rights of those interested in lands were then vested, and could not be impaired. In 1782 the land held by the plaintiff in error was conveyed to him, and the acts of the Legislature of New York, under which he claims to be paid for his improvements, were passed in 1784 and 1786. He did not buy the land on the faith of these acts, and he has no claim to their legal provisions or to any equities under them.

Mr. Wirt, also for the defendant in error, said, this case arises under the Attainder and Confiscation Act of the State of New York. The confiscation having fallen on the estate of Roger Morris and Mary his wife, under which the property was sold, and the remainder in the children of Morris and wife having been, as is contended by the defendants in error, protected by the Treaty of Peace, was sold to John Jacob Astor, and is now claimed under that purchase.

As the State of New York had sold the estate under the confiscating law, claiming the fee-simple to be forfeited, it considered itself responsible to the purchasers, should their grantees be ousted, after the life estate acknowledged to have been in Morris and wife should terminate.

Under these circumstances Mr. Astor thought it advisable to present his claim to the Legisla-

55*] ture of New York, and certain *acts were passed, by force of which, should the title be established by competent and designated judicial proceedings to be in him, the State of New York has offered to pay him four hundred and fifty thousand dollars on his executing a full and complete conveyance of the estate, both in law and equity; which sum is to be reduced to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars if it shall be determined that he shall be liable to pay for the improvements made on the confiscated property since the sale by the State.

The acts provide that as a test of the real merit of Mr. Astor's title, five suits in ejectment shall be prosecuted to judgment, and the decision of three actions out of the five shall be conclusive on all parties.

Under these acts the trial in question has been had, not under the general law of ejectment which prevails in the State, but under the special provisions made for the ease, and deranging the general rules of evidence in some particulars. On this trial the verdict and judgment were in favor of Mr. Astor, and the defendant has brought the case here by writ of error, upon which writ no questions are open for consideration but errors in law committed on the trial. Whether the jury decided properly on the evidence is no question for this court. Such suggestions could only have been properly made on a motion for a new trial, or if the case were here on a demurrer to evidence.

The errors alleged to have been committed on the trial may be divided into four classes:

1. Errors in the admission and rejection of evidence.

2. Errors in the construction of the deed of marriage settlement, and the operation of the Act of Attainder and Confiscation.

3. Errors in the charge to the jury.

4. Errors in awarding the writ of possession, without requiring the plaintiff to pay for the improvements.

1. Errors in the admission and rejection of evidence. This was a prolific head of exceptions, and in order to estimate them correctly, the court must advert to the precise point of the controversy at which they arose, and the situation of the parties to the suit.

56*] *In 1758 the marriage settlement, the purport of which has been frequently stated in argument, was executed between Roger Morris, Mary Philipse, and the trustees, Beverly Robinson and Joanna Philipse, the mother of Mary Philipse. The contingent remainder limited by the deed to the children in fee became vested on their birth; and all the children having been born before the year 1779, the condition of the property at that time was, that Morris and wife held an estate for life in it, with a remainder in fee to their children, which remainder continued in them until 1809, when they sold the same to Mr. Astor.

The defendant claims under the Act of Attainder and Confiscation of New York, passed on the 22d of October, 1779. The estate forfeited by that act was all that which Roger and Mary Morris had on the day of its passage. This, we say, was a life estate merely as it regards the premises in this suit, leaving the remainder in fee in the children untouched.

How is this act to be construed? As a forfeit-feiture for treason? If so, the forfeiture would have relation only to the time of the offense for avoiding all subsequent alienations of land. (2 Hawk., ch. 49, sec. 30.) But the courts of New York have expressly decided it is not to be considered as imposing a forfeiture for treason; that the act was a specified offense, and not treason; and that the extent of the forfeiture is to be sought for only in the act itself. This court has held that State decisions on State laws are binding here.

The forfeiture is not, therefore, of the estate of Mary Morris as it came to her from her father, but as it was subject to all her conveyances of all or any part of it, and to any dispositions she may have made of it up to the time of the enactment of the law.

If, then, the deed of 1753, under which we claim, was really executed, being a prior alienation, the title of the State and of her grantees is barred. Thus, both plaintiff and defendant claim under Mary Philipse, they are both privies to her and to her estate. The plaintiff below is a privy by deed, the defendant a privy by law.

*Could the State, on the trial of the [*57] cause, have been considered as a stranger? They claim the estate of Morris and wife. They took the estate they held in October, 1779, and they were consequently bound by all their prior alienations.

The States are not, indeed, privies in blood nor in deed by voluntary alienation; but they are privies in law, like the lord by escheat or forfeiture. They belong to the class of those who come in by act of law, or "in the post," as Lord Coke terms it. (Coke Lit., 352, a.) And thus, being privies in law, they are bound by the same rules of evidence and by the same estoppels as privies in blood or privies in deed.

Mr. Wirt then went into a particular examination of the decision of the court below on the admission of the deed of release in evidence. He contended that on the proof of the deed by Mr. Livingston, and on the evidence of Mr. Hoffman and Mr. Benson of the handwriting of the subscribing witnesses, they being dead, it was competent evidence. (Cited, 1 Starkie, 333, 340, 341).

The defendant, he argued, did not question the sealing of the deed, but he did question its delivery, and he offered circumstances as evidence to lead to the presumption that the deed, although solemnly prepared, had never been delivered.

All these circumstances were admitted in evidence by the plaintiff below without objection; none were excluded by the court, and the defendant had the full benefit of them. They bore on a question of fact, the delivery of the deed; and their effect belonged to the jury exclusively, who have found that the deed was delivered. These circumstances, and the effect of the testimony do not belong to the argument here. All that is to be inquired into is, whether the judge committed an error in law on this subject. No such error existed; none will be found in the charge. The instructions of the court to the jury left to them the decision of the value and weight of the evidence.

He contended, 1. That the recital of the deed was not only some evidence of the existence of the lease, but that in this case, it was an actual 58*] estoppel against the State of *New York to deny its existence. 2. That if it was not an estoppel, it was unquestionably evidence to the extent to which it was admitted.

If it was an estoppel, all questions which arise upon the exclusion of the auxiliary proof are superseded; for it could not prejudice the defendant to have let in such proof to establish a fact which he was already estopped to deny.

It is assumed as a proposition that the recital of a lease in a deed of release is evidence not only against the releasor, but against all who claim under him by subsequent title, whether they deduce their title through the deed or not. That such a recital is not only evidence, but is an estoppel which binds the releasor and all who take the estate in his right by subsequent title derived from him; and it is only against strangers in estate and blood, having no privity with the one who has made the recital, that the existence and loss of the recited instrument is required to be proved aliunde.

The distinction that the recital binds those only who claim the estate through the deed cannot be sound, because it is admitted that such a recital binds the heir, who does not claim through the deed, but through a line of descendants or of descents and devise blended, without the necessity of calling to his aid any collateral deed made by any of his ancestors; and yet he is bound not only by the deeds of his ancestors but by all their recitals.

Why is he bound? Because he takes the property under the ancestor precisely as the ancestor held it, claiming it in right of his ancestor, and is, therefore, bound by every admission under seal which would bind that ancestor. This is precisely the case with the State of New York. She took the estate under the same principles and bound by the same admissions, not as a privy in blood, but by privity of law; which it will be shown is the same in effect according to the doctrine of estoppels.

The State of New York is not an alienee for a valuable consideration, she stands in a situation resembling rather that of the heir, than that of such an alienee. The estate of the ancestor descends on the heir by the general law of the land; this estate vests in the State under 59*] a particular law. *In both instances it vests in the same character, and in the same right; in the precise situation in which it was held by the person last seized.

The authorities maintain the principles and the positions here assumed. (Gilbert's Ev., by Lofft, 101; 1 Phil. Ev., 355; 1 Saunders on Pleading and Evidence, 42; Peake, 164; 1 Stark., 369; 6 Mod., 44; 1 Salk., 285; 2 Levinz, 108, 242; Vaughan, 74; 4 Binney, 231; Penrose v. Griffith, 6 Binney, 416.)

The principles settled by those cases are that recitals bind the party and all who claim under him by subsequent conveyances, but not those who claim under him by conveyance prior to the reciting deed. The operation of the recitals is not confined to those who claim under the specific deed of recital, but extends to all who claim by subsequent title.

Now the plaintiff in error is just in this predicament, for he claims under the same grantor by title derived subsequently to the date of the reciting deed. He claims under those who themselves claim under that deed; he claims the very interest which the deed moulds and limits, and therefore may be said to claim under the deed.

But while none of the cases which have been cited recognize this distinction, there are others which seem to put an end to it entirely. (Marchioness of Annandale v. Harris, 2 P. Wms., 432; Doe, ex dem. Colden, v. Cornell, 3 Johns. Cases, 174.)

We are told by Lord Coke (Co. Lit., 352), that recitals are reciprocal. Such, too, is the law of New York. (Lansing v. Montgomery, 2 Johns. Rep., 382.) And, therefore, since the State can estop the heir by such a recital, the State shall herself be estopped by a similar recital. Suppose that the deed of release had settled the estate on Roger Morris in fee, and that the Act of Attainder and Forfeiture had fallen on his person alone? Can there be a doubt that the purchaser under the State would have defended himself under the lease, and that the wife and children would have been estopped from denying its existence? The decision in Denn v. Cornell establishes this. (3 Johns. Cases, 174.)

But if the release is not an estoppel, the judge in the *court below did not err; [60 for he did not admit it as an estoppel, but only as some evidence of the existence of the lease. Was he wrong in this? The cases which have been cited to prove it an estoppel do at least establish that it is evidence, that is, some evidence against the parties and all who claim under them. (Matthews on Presumptive Proof, 201. See also Garwood et al. v. Dennis, 4 Binn., 314; 3 Preston on Estates, 28, 29, 30, 31.)

If the court were not to regard the recital as some evidence that a lease had been executed, what was to be done with the release which had been proved, and was regularly in evidence. Could they regard it as a simple bargain and sale, vesting the whole legal estate in the trustees, and leaving equitable estates only in Roger Morris and wife and in their children? The instrument disavowed that character for itself. It declared itself to be a deed founded on a lease, and its design to be to transfer the uses into possession, under the statute of uses. The instrument being in the cause could not be got out of it, and the recital is part of it. The court were to give its legal character to the instrument, and on the truth of the recital its legal character depended; was not the recital enough to justify the court in saying, it appears there was a lease; you must produce the lease or account for its nonproduction? If the court could have said this, it is enough to justify the opinion which was expressed; for such was simply the effect of the opinion which was expressed.

Upon the alleged errors in the legal construction of the deed of marriage settlement, and the operation of the Act of Confiscation and Attainder, Mr. Wirt observed that the first point in which error is stated to have existed was in holding that under the marriage settlement there was a vested remainder in the children on the 22d of October, 1779, the date of the Act of Confiscation. The children were all born before 1779, and the remainder vested on their birth.

The question is as to the legal effect of the limitation to the children. The construction of the Circuit Court, which we support, is, Peters 4.

1. That the remainder in fee limited to the children was contingent until the birth of the first child.

61*] *2. That on the birth of the first child the whole remainder vested in fee.

3. That on the birth of the second child the remainder vested in the first opened to receive him, and so on until all the children were born, when it became a vested remainder in the whole.

On the other side, the position is, that the remainder did not vest on the birth of the children, but continued to be a contingent remainder until it should be seen whether the children would survive the mother; because the enjoyment of the estate depended on that contingency, for if the mother should survive she took the remainder.

We apprehend that the counsel for the plaintiffs has not sufficiently adverted to the distinction between the contingency on which a remainder is to vest in interest, and that on which it is to vest in possession. Vested remainders are still contingent as to the enjoyment during the continuance of the particular estate, and by the death of a remainderman for life, before the determination of the particular estate, the vested remainder is gone forever; it is divested on this event, and goes over to the ulterior remainderman. During the life of the remainderman, however, it continued to be a vested remainder; for it was vested in interest, however uncertain the enjoyment.

The distinction between a vested and a contingent remainder does not depend on the contingency on which it is to vest in possession, but on that on which it is to vest in interest. The question, and the only question is this: is the remainderman in esse, and capable of taking, if the life estate should determine? If he be, the remainder is at once a vested remainder, though it may be uncertain whether it will ever vest in enjoyment. (Ferne, 215, 216.)

Now, the children of Roger Morris and wife were in esse before the year 1779, and were capable of taking in possession, if the possession had become vacant by the death of the tenant for life. They had therefore a vested estate.

As to the objection that they were not capable of taking the possession during the life of their parents. This is confounding the capability to take the possession with the right to 62*] take it. In any vested remainder the capacity to take the possession arises before the right to take it. That capacity exists as soon as there is a person in esse who meets the description of the remainderman, and nothing is interposed between him and the possession except the particular estate, while the right to take it is yet in suspense until the determination of the particular estate. And as soon as a remainderman is presented who meets the description of the limitation, and between whom and the possession nothing stands but the particular estate, the remainder vests in interest, though it may chance never to come into possession; for many are the vested remainders which have passed away, without having vested in possession.

On the 1st of October, 1779, there was a life estate in the parents; there were children of the marriage, remaindermen, all in esse, and nothing interposed between them and the possession except the particular estate; and had that particular estate ended on the 1st of October, 1779, they had capacity to take, and most certainly would have taken. These principles are fully sustained in Ferne on Remainders, 215, 216, and the cases cited by the counsel for the plaintiff in error do not impugn them.

The question depends on the very terms in which the remainder is limited. The remainder limited over has nothing to do with the vesting of the first remainder, though it may have something to do with the enjoyment of the estate. In this case the limitation is not to such of the children as may be living at the death of their parents. Such a limitation might have altered the rights of the parties; as it would have remained uncertain until the death of the parents, who would be, and whether there would ever be a remainderman.

It is not, however, a life estate which is given to the children, but an estate in fee-simple. Now, upon the construction given on the other side, which considers the lives of the children as running against the life of the mother, both contingent until her death and the survivor to take the estate—suppose the children to have died before the mother, leaving children; was it the intention of the settlement that they should be disinherited?

*By no construction can this be made [63 an estate tail by implication; but if it could, it would not vary or affect the vesting of the estate, subject to their dying without issue in the life of the mother.

The authorities to show that an estate is not prevented from vesting in interest, though the possession may be subject to be defeated by future contingencies, are Doe v. Perrynne, 3 T. R., 484; 4 T. R., 39; 4 Bos. & Pull., 313; 1 Maule & Selwyn, 321; 6 Price's Rep., 41.

It has been said, for the plaintiff in error, that these were concurrent, contingent remainders, and that both were contingent until the survivor who was to enjoy the estate was ascertained. This is the same position in effect with that to which an answer has been given. They are not concurrent, but successive remainders; the first remainder is to the children, and failing the vesting of that, the limitation to the mother would survive and vest.

Courts never consider remainders concurrent contingencies except from absolute necessity. (Ferne, 377.) But if they were concurrent, they remained so only until the birth of a child of the marriage, and then the remainder fully vested in such child. (Luddington v. Kime, 1 Lord Ray., 203.)

The next supposed error is in the construction of the acts of attainder and confiscation; and on the assumption that this is a vested remainder, it is not understood to be contended that the Act of Confiscation would affect it.

Errors in the charge to the jury. No important errors in law in the charge have been insisted on, but such as have already been the subject of comment. The residue of the objections are that the judge, in summing up the facts, put the evidence to the jury too favorably for the plaintiff below, and did not put it sufficiently strong for the defendant.

Are the judge's remarks upon the evidence errors in law? There is no case which supports such a position; on the contrary, it is expressly laid down that they are not such errors. (1 Serg. & Rawle, 333.) Resting upon this authority, the charge may be left to its own vindication, not doubting that that vindication will be ample and sufficient for it.

64*] *As to the question of improvements.

The case is this: There are remainders in fee protected by the Treaty of 1783, and the State of New York has seized and sold the life estate, declaring by acts subsequent to the Treaty that with respect to all improvements made by the tenant for life, the remainderman shall not have his estate until he shall have paid for those improvements.

1. Is this consistent with the nature of the estate?

2. Are these acts compatible with the Treaty?

As to the first inquiry, Roger Morris and wife were tenants for life, the remainder in fee belonging to their children. The relative rights of the parties were fixed by the deed of marriage settlement.

Under this deed, could Morris and his wife charge the remainderman in fee with any improvements they should put on the land? Suppose, after having improved the lands, by their last will and testament they had directed that the remainderman should not enter until they paid for the improvements? Would such a will have operated against their children? Suppose they had sold their estate for life, stipulating that the purchasers, before the property should be taken from them after their decease by the remainderman, should be paid for all buildings and improvements made on the land. Would such a covenant have operated on the children? Under the deed of settlement no power thus to charge the fee was reserved. When, therefore, the State of New York took the estate of Morris and wife, they held it as it had been held, and they succeeded to them as tenants for life, with no other powers over the estate than they had. Unless this was so, they took a greater estate than was held by them.

But the Act of Confiscation disclaims this. It purports to take the estate of Morris and wife only, and as they held it on the 22d of October, 1779. The act does not purport or profess to disturb or impair any estate, except the estates of persons named in it.

The State of New York could not, by mere right of succession to the estate of Morris and 65*] wife, impose this burden *on the remaindermen, and impair their rights. It would be a most unjust and palpable violation of the rights of property, a usurpation of power altogether unwarranted by the nature of the estate which they had taken under the law. Nor does the power thus to charge the estate of the remainderman result from their general power of legislation. It was not a general act, which declared that all remaindermen should pay for improvements. It was confined to estates confiscated by the Act of 1779. It was in effect a declaration by the tenant for life that the remainderman should not have his estate until he paid him for his improvements. It thus became an individual action, and was not a legislative action.

But if it was a legislative action, its effect was an enlargement of the Confiscation Act of 1779. It was a new confiscation, pro tanto, imposed on these remaindermen.

Who is to receive the value of these improvements? The acts of the State of New York show that they are to be paid for by them; the value is to be deducted from the sum payable to Mr. Astor, and thus the amount is to go into the fisc of the State. This is a confiscation of the estates of children for the offenses of their fathers.

2. Let us turn to the Treaty of 1783 and consider the question under that treaty.

The court will perceive that the Act of 1784 has nothing to do with this case. That act was prospective, and the sale to Carver was made in 1782. It is the Act of May, 1786, which alone can effect this case; and by the suggestion it appears that the claim is for improvements made since that act. Such a claim is in direct opposition to the fifth article of the Treaty of Peace. The terms of the article are: "And it is agreed that all persons who have any interest in confiscated lands, either by will, marriage settlement, or otherwise, shall meet with no lawful impediment in the prosecution of their just rights."

Persons claiming an interest in lands by marriage settlement are one of the classes put by the treaty, and their "just rights" are the rights they had when the treaty was made. These rights were fixed at the time of the treaty by *the marriage settlements, and they [66 were to enter on their estates on the death of the tenants for life, without any responsibility for the improvements placed upon them during the tenancy.

But here is a law of New York, passed three years after the treaty, which declares that they shall not enter on their estates without paying the full value of those improvements. Is not this an "impediment" raised by this law to the prosecution of their just rights, and consequently a violation of the treaty?

It is said to be no impediment to the prosecution of their just rights, because it is just that they should pay for the improvements. This resolves itself into a question of law; which is, whether the remainderman in fee cannot justly take possession of the estate when his title to the possession commences, without paying for improvements put on the land by the holder of the intermediate estate. This is no question to a legal mind.

In relation to the equitable view of the question, this is not the case of a party who, having a right to the present possession, has stood by and seen valuable improvements put upon the estate without disclosing his title, for the children had no title to the possession until the death of their mother.

Nor is there anything in the argument that these improvements were made in ignorance of their title. Where is the law which requires that a party thus situated shall disclose his title? It may also be urged that the acts of the Legislature of New York bear upon their face evidence of a general knowledge that there were outstanding titles which might lead to the eviction of their purchasers, and that they are on their face leveled against the very titles which stand protected by the treaty.

Mr. Webster, for the plaintiff in error.

The first inquiry in the case was as to the manner in which the verdict was obtained. Was it regularly proved that any conveyance was ever completed by which Mary Morris parted with her fee in the land, and which was existing 67] as a *valid conveyance in October, 1779? We say it was not: because, we say, the judge misdirected the jury on the evidence bearing upon that point.

Peters 4.

We say a judge may commit errors which this court may correct, either, 1. In admitting evidence which ought not to have been admitted. 2. In rejecting what ought to have been admitted. 3. By misstating the effect, not the weight of evidence. 4. By misleading the jury by a wrong statement to them of what the evidence really is.

The two first propositions no one will deny. (Tayloe v. Riggs 1 Peters, 183, 596; Chirac v. Reinecker, 2 Peters, 625; Dunlap v. Patterson, 5 Cowen, 243.)

The weight of evidence is for the jury. If a judge happens to say that he thinks A more credible than B, it is a remark on evidence. If he says that it strikes him as not proved that a bond was given, it is the same; not so, if he speaks of the tendency or effect of evidence. If he says, this evidence, if believed, tends to establish the party's right when it does not, or that it does not when it does; then it is error, because it is a remark not on evidence, but on the law of evidence. So if he misstates the thing to be proved, or the object for which it is intended or its legal bearing, this is error.

With these general principles in view, we mean to examine the judge's ruling on the trial in the Circuit Court.

1. As to the evidence of the question of the lease. Nothing was proved but by the testimony of Governor Livingston and Mr. Hoffman. This was all merely formal. Governor Livingston's oath was in the very words of the attestation, and no more; it was written for him beforehand, and in the formal words of attesting an instrument. He was an old man, swearing to a transaction then thirty years old; and there was no proof, no circumstance of which he had any recollection, but from seeing his signature. There was no more in this than in all other certificates of attestation; they usually certify delivery before any actual delivery is made, and this was the fact in one of the conveyances by Mr. Astor in this case.

The deed was doubtless executed at the house 68] of Mrs. *Philipse. All this is no more than proving his own handwriting in 1787, and this would have answered the same purpose. All that was proved in this case was merely formal; it is just what would have been done if the parties had intended only to have a deed prepared, to be delivered or not, as they should afterwards decide, as an escrow. It is certain he did not see any actual delivery of the deed, and, while nothing is imputed to Governor Livingston, his testimony goes no further than has been stated.

There was no other proof of the existence of this paper until it was proved in April, 1787. It is not traced to the hands of the grantees. No one ever saw it; it was not shown to the Legislature. Perhaps, on this evidence and its effects, the judge did not misdirect the jury.

This, though perhaps prima facie proof, was the slightest of all proof. No actual delivery shown, no possession of the deed by the grantees. Now, suppose a marriage had not taken place, and the trustees had set up this deed; it would have been said at once that the presumption of delivery was overruled. Anything else that carries an equal presumption destroys the prima facie proof. It is, of all cases, the one in which subsequent events might intercept the delivery of the deed.

We were not called upon to disprove delivery; it was enough for us to bring the fact of delivery into doubt, everything else without delivery was nothing. The judge in this matter was right.

Now, what did we offer against this evidence. 1. The deed was never recorded or proved; this was not required by law, but it was usual, especially with this family; all their deeds were recorded; the first patent, the deed to lead to uses, the deed of partition, and the will was proved in chancery.

The settlement deed of all others was a proper deed to be recorded; it was to provide for unborn children, and the practice of the family was not to be changed. The trustees would, in accordance with their duty, prove and record this deed to preserve the rights of the children.

More especially, why was not this deed proved and recorded *in 1783? Forfeitures were 69 then all over, the children were born, and perhaps of men's estate. Only one part was found, and that had been carried beyond seas. Would prudent men have so acted? The treaty had then established the children's rights.

Now, we say that this part of the case was not accurately stated to the jury. The judge asks if these circumstances should operate against the children? we say they should; and we think here is a plain misdirection in point of law.

We say that all the evidence relied upon by us, drawn from the conduct of the immediate parties to the supposed deed, is evidence against the children. The judge says these facts should not operate against the children; we contend that they should and must, and this is a direct question of law, not a mere remark on evidence.

Again, the judge excuses Morris from recording the deed, because he says there were at that time no offices for recording deeds. But this could only be from 1775 to 1783. Our argument is, that if the deed had ever been delivered, it would have been recorded before 1775. Is the form of this argument fairly stated? Is it legally stated? Then again, as to not recording in 1783 the judge asks, are there not circumstances to account for this delay of three or four years? This is equivalent to saying that there are such circumstances.

2. The sleeping of this settlement from 1758 to 1787—twenty-nine years—is relied upon to prove that it never had a legal existence. No witness ever saw it. It was not heard of by any of the family. It is recited in none of the conveyances. These are material facts. In the history of this title each deed recites the previous deed down to that now under examination; below it they recite not through it, but over it, or as if it were not in existence. There is an absolute absence of every possible fact looking to or recognizing the existence of this deed for thirty years.

Now, is not this of itself evidence of weight and importance to rebut the presumption of delivery?

How does the judge answer this? He says 70] there would *have been weight in this if the children had slept thus long; we say it is just as strong against them, for the purpose for which we use it, as against Morris and wife and the trustees. "The children slept upon their rights;" the very question is whether the children had any rights. It is not whether they shall be barred, but whether they ever had any estate. Now this is clear matter of law. "Is it fair to draw any inference in such a case against the children?" That is, the jury understood the judge to say the law will warrant no such inference. We say it will.

3. The manner of holding the property, and acts inconsistent with the title under the deed, disprove its existence.

Here is a whole series of acts extending over many years by the very persons who were parties to the supposed settlement, and absolutely irreconcilable to the idea of its real subsistence. These were the conveyances executed by Roger Morris and wife, in which the settlement was not mentioned, and conveyances made in direct disaffirmance of it. The charge of the judge upon these matters was altogether erroneous.

The deeds thus executed and the agreements, indicate a holding of the property in fee-simple, not a holding under the settlement. And the judge says that they are within the limitation of the power reserved in the settlement deed, and not inconsistent with it.

Is this so? By the settlement deed, Morris and wife had estates for life only; in the deeds they expressly covenant they are seized in fee. Now the consistency or inconsistency of these deeds is a question of law, though the effect of the inconsistency is a question for the jury. The judge has said that in point of law they are consistent deeds, that there is no inconsistency between the covenants in the deed and the title under the settlement. Is this correct?

If the judge had said that this form of executing the powers might have been used through mistake; that the deeds might have been inartificially drawn; and that the jury might consider those circumstances; it had been well enough. But he withdraws the 71] whole matter at once from *the consideration of the jury by directing them, as matter of law, that there is no inconsistency. Can this be sustained?

As to the life leases, they were not given under the power reserved in the settlement deed, nor in execution of the power. They are totally inconsistent with it, and the evidence shows a system of leasing the lands. How does the judge dispose of these? It was a question of intention, as we say, and the judge asks, how do these facts affect the rights of the children? This is equivalent to saying they do not affect the rights of the children at all, in point of law. This is a legal direction on the effect of evidence. Is it right? Might not these acts affect the children?

Again, the judge says, did Morris intend these acts in hostility to the children? That is not the true question. The question is whether these acts go to show that there were no rights in the children. The truth is, the judge proceeded altogether on the supposition that there had been an original acknowledged right in the children, and that we were attempting to bar that right by adverse possession. We say these acts prove, or tend to prove, that there was no subsisting settlement, and that not only the weight but the bearing and effect of this evidence was misstated to the jury.

We contend that everything from 1758 to the Revolution, bearing either way, bears against the settlement deed as a subsisting deed and for the original title; everything giving indications either way, indicates a holding under the original title. That in thirty years there was no act to the contrary. We do not say these circumstances are conclusive as matters of law, but we say they are cogent as matters of evidence, and we say the judge substantially withdrew the consideration of them from the jury.

On the other important fact that the deed came in 1787 from the hands of the grantor, the judge said nothing. He omitted to notice the circumstance, although he stated that he had mentioned all the circumstances of the case.

Then the case is: 1. That the deed, thirty years after its date, is still found in the hands of the grantor, not proved, *acknowl- [72 edged or recorded. 2. That no other part of the indenture is produced, lease or release, though search has been made for it. 3. That no one ever saw the deed from its date until 1787. 4. That no one act was done in thirty years recognizing the existence of the deed for thirty years. 5. That subsequent conveyances, deducing the whole title and reciting every other conveyance in the chain, make no mention of any such settlement deed. 6. That there is a series of acts, deeds, conveyances and compacts, beginning within five days of the date of the supposed settlement and coming down to the Revolution by parties to the supposed deed, wholly inconsistent with any idea of its subsistence.

Now, we admit that a jury may set up the settlement deed against all this evidence, provided no direction be given them after the evidence is put in, and provided no improper direction be given. We do not ask the court to decide on the weight of evidence. But we say, if the judge misstates the object of the evidence offered; if he misdirects as to its tendency and effects; if he states incorrectly the views in which it is evidence; then the jury has been prevented from passing intelligently on the matter. We say the directions of the judge on these facts were not according to the law of the case.

It is also contended that the acts of the Legislature of New York were not evidence in the cause. The effect of their introduction was to change the parties before the jury. They were not general laws of the land, and they were important testimony. For the admission of such evidence a court will reverse a judgment. (3 Cow., 621; 16 Johns., 89; 5 Cow., 243.)

As to the recital of the lease in the deed of release, how far does it bind the plaintiff in error and the State of New York, under which he claims?

It is admitted that recitals estop the party to the deed, himself and his heirs, because the heir is bound by the covenants of his ancestor. They also affect every person claiming under the instrument, unless it was offered as presumptive evidence of a grant in order to support a possession which *could not be accounted for but on the supposition of such grant. These principles are fully sustained by the elementary writers, and by the cases in 1 Salk., 285, 286; Ford v. Grey, 6 Mod., 44; 4 Binney, 355; Norris's Peake, 164; Archbold's Pleading, 380; Saunders on Pleading and Proof; Preston on Estates, 43; Phil. Ev., 410; 1 Salk., 276.

There is no case in which a recital has been held to bind a person who comes in, in invitum. The alienee may be protected by covenants. But suppose a creditor who has the land in execution; he takes it bound by everything his debtor has said, not by everything his debtor has said. It operates by way of admission. Under what circumstances is one man bound by the admissions of another? Suppose an admission under hand and seal that the property is held fraudulently. This will not bind the alienee without notice.

In the case in 1 Salk., 285, Ford v. Grey, what is meant by "those claiming under him?" Is it the persons who claim under the same conveyance, or merely by subsequent deed? The court had just decided that admissions in an answer in chancery bind the party, but not his alienee. If the court designed these words in their extended sense, they would have suggested the distinction between an answer and a deed.

The State of New York is a stranger to the deed of Morris and wife, and the recital should not, upon sound principles of law, have been admitted to prove the existence of the lease. But the Circuit Court admitted the recital to prove the existence of the lease, and also its contents. Upon the cases decided in Pennsylvania, in 4 Binney, 614, and another, the possession was equivocal, and secondary evidence was called in aid. Those decisions turned on the special circumstances of the case. The case in 17 Ves., 134, was a case in which the lease was to be proved. Counsel were employed to examine the papers before the conveyance. The chancellor admitted the release, because the possession could not be accounted for on any other ground. If possession is equivocal, the exigency under which this case would apply has not arisen.

In Buller's Nisi Prius, 254, it is said, "when 74*] possession *has gone along with the deed many years, the original of which is lost or destroyed, a copy or abstract may be given in evidence." In Matthews the doctrine is fully set forth, 188, 189, 190. And in the authorities cited, it is distinctly stated that the recital of a lease in the release is evidence in those cases where auxiliary proof is admitted to make out the presumption of a conveyance to support a possession. Now, if the possession is equivocal, ex natura rerum, the presumption can never arise. (Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat., 59.)

In the case before the court the possession, so far as the acts of the parties to the alleged settlement deed are to give it a character, has been shown to be adverse to the terms and purposes of that deed, and not at any time such as could have existed had the deed been considered operative and in force. When, therefore, the parties did not by their acts give to the deed any influence, ought it to operate on those who were entirely strangers to it, and who rely on Peters 4.

the acts and proceedings of the parties to the deed to prove it had not a valid existence. This is to give it effect and power over the rights of strangers, when these were never permitted by the parties to prevail as to themselves.

Upon the title acquired by the children of Roger Morris, under the deed of settlement, Mr Webster argued,

The question upon this title is now for the first time to be discussed. The construction which this court will give to that deed may be in favor of Mr. Astor, and carry the rule as to contingent remainders to the extent claimed by his counsel; but there has been no case referred to which sustains the doctrine.

In all the definitions and general doctrines of remainders, the counsel for both parties agree. A remainder is "a remnant of an estate, expectant on a particular estate, created together with it, at one time." A contingent remainder is a "remainder limited so as to depend on an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed until after the determination of the preceding estate."

These contingent remainders are classified under four divisions, and the fourth class is where the contingency *consists in the [*75 person not being ascertained, or not in being, at the time the limitation was made.

The remainder now in question is of this class. Unquestionably when created it was contingent, because it was uncertain who would take. The example put by Fearnie illustrates our case as is contended: "If an estate be limited to two for life, remainder to the survivors in fee, the remainder is contingent, for it is uncertain who will be the survivor. (Fearnie ou Rem., 9.) And this case cannot range with the principles claimed for the defendant in error.

Now, it being clear that this remainder being, at the time of its creation, contingent, because the persons to take were not ascertained, the question is, did it vest on the birth of a child of Roger Morris and wife, or remain contingent until the determination of the particular estate? We maintain the latter proposition.

Our view of the question is this: The deed created an estate for life in Morris and wife, with a remainder (not remainders), with an alternative aspect; or, in other words, to be disposed of, or go in one or other of the two ways, according to the events. We think the case precisely the same as if the words had been "an estate to Morris and wife for life, and to the children of the marriage in fee, if the parents should die leaving children; otherwise to the right heirs of Mary Morris."

It has been argued that the object in giving a fee to the children was a high and leading one—that this was the first purpose and all others were secondary. But the deed will bear no such construction.

It must be observed that the estate to be secured was the estate of Mary Morris. The object of the settlement was not to divest it, but to keep it in her control, and in the line of descent of her own right heirs. In only two events is it to be divested from her own right heirs. 1. If she have children living it is to go to them, who, though her heirs, would take as purchasers. 2. The right to dispose of the estate by will in case of her dying without issue, and give away the estate to whom she pleased.

If she neither left children nor made a will, 76*] the estate *would go to her own right heirs. In no event was it to be divested from her right heirs to the heirs of Morris, unless she should desire to have it so; and thus the true object of the settlement was no more than to point out two events, in either of which the transmission of the estate to her right heirs should be intercepted. To use popular language, the estate is not vested in the children by the deed; it is to be settled on them, if there should be children surviving the parents.

The estate is to move from the line of legal transmission before it can be vested in the children as purchasers, and the removal is to take place on the happening of the contingency; this contingency, we say, is nothing other than the living of the children at their parents' death, or their surviving their mother.

Suppose the grant had been from a stranger to Morris and wife for life, and after their death to their children, if living; or otherwise, to the right heirs of the wife. Would not this have been a clear case of survivorship? It is stronger in this case, where Mary Philipse is the grantor, and proposes not to dispossess herself nor her own right heirs, except in the happening of certain conditions and contingencies.

Now, we say that there is no intent or purpose manifested by this deed which is not capable of being carried into full effect according to its nature and import as a regular remainder. It comes, as has been said, within the regular definition of a remainder, and of a contingent remainder of the fourth class. (Cited. Preston on Estates, 119, 92, 93, 71, to show that it is a contingent remainder in Mr. Fearne's fourth class.)

It is not pretended that the limitation could not take effect as a remainder.

For the rule of law is universal and unbending. "If a limitation can take effect as a remainder, it shall not be construed to take effect under the doctrine of shifting uses." (2 Cruise, 350.) The doctrine of shifting cases is analogous to that of executory devises. "If there be a freehold to support the remainder, it shall not be construed an executory devise." (Doe v. Holmes, 3 Wilson, 243; Luddington v. Kime, 77*] 1 *Lord Raymond, 203; 2 Cruise, 283; Douglass, 757.) In Douglass, 225, Lord Mansfield says: "It is perfectly clear and settled that when an estate can take effect as remainder, it shall not be construed to be an executory devise or shifting use." This principle precisely meets the case of the plaintiff in error. (The same point is settled, 3 T. R., 485; 2 Cruise, 285.)

The counsel for the defendant in error insist that this is a vested remainder at the birth of the first child of Morris and wife, and that we do not attend to the distinction between remainders vesting in interest and vesting in enjoyment. We have endeavored to pay a due regard to this distinction.

A remainder vests in interest whenever the person is ascertained, and is in esse, and has a fixed right of future enjoyment. In the authority cited by the counsel (Fearne, 215), the remainder is absolutely limited to a person in esse. Now, in the case before the court, it was not absolutely settled that the children would take; it could not, on the view we have taken of the deed of settlement, be absolutely ascertained until the parents' death.

It is said, here is a person in esse, ascertained, and capable to take if the particular estate falls; and it is, therefore, a vested remainder. But the fallacy of this position is in this: He is capable of taking; that is, he is the person who may take, but he is not capable of taking, because he is not in a condition to take. Mrs. Morris had just as much capacity to take as the children, but who shall take, is not ascertained. No one has a fixed and absolute right, nor can this be the case until the death of Mrs. Morris. The facts of the case fully exemplify the application of these principles. Mrs. Morris was married, had children, and had a brother who would be her heir-at-law should she die leaving no children. Now, if she should have survived her children, her brother would take the estate. Is this not a case of mere survivorship? (Preston, 7; Croke Eliz., 630; Denn v. Bagshaw, 4 D. & E., 512; 4 Johns., 61.)

We say that as this remainder was capable of taking place as a regular remainder, it cannot take effect by way of shifting use. The law is fixed upon this point; there is no principle *which would induce the court to [*78 give it a construction to operate as a shifting use.

The operation of such a view of the case will show that it cannot be adopted. A son is born; we say the estate cannot be vested, because it is not ascertained that he will have it. If it does vest, it may defeat the whole purpose of the settlement. The counsel for the defendants in error say it shall vest; and if events make it necessary, we will divest it by the doctrine of shifting uses.

What will be the consequences of such a principle? On the birth of a son the remainder vests; he dies within a few hours after his birth; where is the estate then? It cannot go back to its original situation—once vested it is no longer a contingent remainder. It has gone to his paternal uncle, out of the family. Suppose another child born, how can it go back? It never can by shifting use; for there can be no conveyance by shifting use, which conveyance is not provided in the deed. There is no provision in the deed that if the estate has been once vested in the right heirs of the children, it shall afterwards be divested. When the estate has once gone to the right heirs of the children, it is irrevocable—the whole force of the deed is spent.

Besides, the result would be that to preserve the fee, to keep it safe, it should be transmitted to the Morris family and be subject to forfeiture.

If the remainder was contingent, it fell on the attainder and banishment of Roger Morris and wife. This is the clear doctrine of law. Barland's case was like it. That was pronounced an escheat, and there was no attainder, no banishment. If a scintilla of the estate was left in the trustees, that passed by the Act of Attainder and Banishment also.

Upon the claim of the plaintiff in error to be paid for his improvements, he argued that it was questionable whether the terms of the treaty were intended to apply to such a case. This action is not brought to prosecute an interest in lands by debt or marriage settlement, but for the mere lands themselves, to which an absolute title is created by a marriage settlement. The interest meant by the treaty was a lien on lands, not the lands themselves. This 79] is apparent from an *examination of the terms of the treaty. Marriage settlements are coupled with debts, and an interest in lands by debt can only be a lien; and an interest in lands by marriage settlement, when found in this connection, can only mean a charge on land by settlement deed.

It is to be observed that the treaty provides for any interest in land, whether by debt, marriage settlement, or otherwise. Now, if this means a claim to the land itself, these things would follow:

1. Suppose the children had been put into the Act of Attainder, they could have pleaded the treaty, because they had an interest in the land; that is, a title to the land itself, under the marriage settlement. This was their "just right," and the Confiscation Act would have been an impediment. 2. Morris and wife might have sued in their lifetime, for they had an interest in the land under a marriage settlement. 3. The comprehensive term, "or otherwise," would have let in everybody named in the act. This would have repealed all the confiscation acts at once, which the treaty did not do. It only recommended their repeal. There is nothing to operate against the statute but the treaty.

He contended that the treaty did not apply to this case. Its application could not interfere with the rights of those who had improved the property and added to its value, so that when it was recovered, the party who recovered obtained more than his title originally gave him. The treaty protects the just rights of those who are included in its provisions, but the party who has recovered the land cannot say he has a just right to the improvements made on the land—not made by an intruder, but by a purchaser of a title which was good during the life of Morris and wife. The laws of New York relative to this subject would be in force against her own citizens, and it could not have been intended that British subjects should have rights and privileges greater than our own citizens. The law interposes no impediment to the recovery of the property the grantee of the children of Morris and wife are really entitled to; it allows them to recover the land in the situation 80] it was at the time of the *settlement, and as it was, if Morris and wife had died a natural, instead of a civil death, in 1779.

Mr. Justice Story delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Circuit Court of the Southern District of New York, in a case where the plaintiff in error was the original defendant. The action is ejectment, brought upon several demises; and among others, upon the demise of John Jacob Astor. The cause was tried upon the general issue, and a verdict rendered for the original plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered in his favor; and the present writ of error is brought to revise that judgment.

Peters 4.

Both parties claim under Mary Philipse, who, it is admitted, was seized of the premises in fee, in January, 1758. Some of the counts in the declaration are founded upon demises made by the children of Mary Philipse, by her marriage with Roger Morris; and one of whom is upon the demise of John Jacob Astor, who claims as a grantee of the children.

Various exceptions were taken by the original defendant at the trial to the ruling of the court upon matters of evidence, as well as upon certain other points of law growing out of the titles set up by the parties. The charge of the court in summing up the case to the jury is also spread, in extenso, upon the record, and a general exception was taken to each and every part of the same on behalf of the original defendant. And upon all these exceptions the case is now before us.

We take this occasion to express our decided disapprobation of the practice (which seems of late to have gained ground) of bringing the charge of the court below, at length, before this court for review. It is an unauthorized practice, and extremely inconvenient both to the inferior and to the appellate court. With the charge of the court to the jury, upon mere matters of fact, and with its commentaries upon the weight of evidence, this court has nothing to do. Observations of that nature are understood to be addressed to the jury merely for their consideration as the ultimate judges of matters of fact, and are entitled to no more weight or importance than the jury in the exercise of their own *judgment choose to [§1 give them. They neither are, nor are they understood to be, binding upon them as the true and conclusive exposition of the evidence.¹ If, indeed, in the summing up, the court should mistake the law, that would justly furnish a ground for an exception. But the exception should be strictly confined to that misstatement; and by being made known at the moment, would often enable the court to correct an erroneous expression, or to explain or qualify it, in such a manner as to make it wholly unexceptionable, or perfectly distinct. We trust, therefore, that this court will hereafter be spared the necessity of examining the general bearing of such charges. It will in the present case be our duty, hereafter, to consider whether the objections raised against the present charge can be supported in point of law.

The original plaintiff claimed title at the trial under a marriage settlement, purporting to be made and executed, on the 13th of January, 1758, by an indenture of release between Mary Philipse of the first part, Roger Morris of the second part, and Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson of the third part; whereby, in consideration of a marriage intended to be solemnized between Roger Morris and Mary Philipse, &c., &c., she, Mary Philipse, granted, released, &c., unto Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson, "in their actual possession now being, by virtue of a bargain and sale to them thereof made for one whole year, by indenture bearing date the day next before the date of these presents, and by force of the statute for transferring uses into possession, and to their heirs, all those several lots or parcels of land, &c., &c.," upon certain trusts and uses in the same indenture mentioned. This indenture, signed and sealed by the parties, with the usual attestation of the subscribing witnesses (William Livingston and Sarah Williams) to the sealing and delivery thereof, with a certificate of the proof of the due execution thereof by William Livingston (one of the subscribing witnesses), before Judge Hobart, of the Supreme Court of New York, §2 on the 5th of April, 1787, and *a certificate of the recording thereof in the secretary's office of the State of New York, was offered in evidence at the trial by the plaintiff, and was objected to by the defendant upon the ground that the certificate of the execution was not legal and competent evidence, and did not entitle the plaintiff to read the deed in evidence without proof of its execution. The judge who presided at the trial, overruled the objection and admitted the deed in evidence. This constitutes the first exception of the defendant. A witness was then sworn, who testified that the signatures of William Livingston and Sarah Williams to the deed were in their proper handwriting, and that they were both dead. The deed was then read in evidence. The certificate of the probate of the deed before Judge Hobart is in the usual form practiced in that State, excepting only that it states, with somewhat more particularity than is usual, that William Livingston, one of the subscribing witnesses, &c., being duly sworn, did testify and declare, "that he was present at or about the day of the date of the said indenture, and did see the within named Joanna Philipse, Beverly Robinson, Roger Morris and Mary Philipse, sign and seal the same indenture, and deliver it as their and each of their voluntary acts and deeds," &c.

1.—See Evans v. Eaton, 7 Wheat. Rep., 356, 426.

We are of opinion that under these circumstances and according to the laws of New York, there was sufficient prima facie evidence of the due execution of the indenture (by which we mean not merely the signing and sealing, but the delivery also) to justify the court in admitting it to be read to the jury, and that in the absence of all controlling evidence, the jury would have been bound to find that it was duly executed. We understand such to be the uniform construction of the laws of New York in all cases where the execution of any deed has been so proved, and has been subsequently recorded. The oath of a subscribing witness before the proper magistrate, and the subsequent registration are deemed sufficient, prima facie, to establish its delivery as a deed. The objection was not, indeed, seriously pressed at the argument.

The next exceptions of the defendant grew §3 out of the *nonproduction of the lease recited in the deed of marriage settlement, and of the insufficiency of the evidence to establish either its original existence, or its subsequent loss. We do not think it necessary to go into a particular examination of the various exceptions on this head, or of the actual posture under which they were presented to the court, or of the manner in which they were ruled by the court. Whichever way many of the points may be decided, our opinion proceeds upon a ground which supersedes them, and destroys all their influence upon the cause. We are of opinion not only that the recital of the lease in the deed of marriage settlement was evidence between these parties of the original existence of the lease, but that it was conclusive evidence between these parties of that original existence, and superseded the necessity of introducing any other evidence to establish it.

The reasons upon which this opinion is founded will now be briefly expounded. To what extent, and between what parties, the recital of a lease in a deed of release (for we need not go into the consideration of recitals generally) is evidence, is a matter not laid down with much accuracy or precision in some of the elementary treatises on the subject of evidence. It is laid down generally, that a recital of one deed in another binds the parties and those who claim under them. Technically speaking, it operates as an estoppel, and binds parties and privies; privies in blood, privies in estate, and privies in law. But it does not bind mere strangers, or those who claim by title paramount the deed. It does not bind persons claiming by an adverse title, or persons claiming from the parties by title anterior to the date of the reciting deed.

Such is the general rule. But there are cases in which such a recital may be used as evidence even against strangers. If, for instance, there be the recital of a lease in a deed of release, and in a suit against a stranger the title under the release comes in question, there the recital of the lease in such release is not, per se, evidence of the existence of the lease. But, if the existence and loss of the lease be established by other evidence, there the recital is admissible as secondary *proof in the absence of [§4 more perfect evidence, to establish the contents of the lease; and if the transaction be an ancient one, and the possession has been long held under such release, and is not otherwise to be accounted for, there the recital will of itself under such circumstances materially fortify the presumption from lapse of time and length of possession of the original existence of the lease. Leases, like other deeds and grants, may be presumed from long possession, which cannot otherwise be explained; and under such circumstances, a recital of the fact of such a lease in an old deed is certainly far stronger presumptive proof in favor of such possession under title, than the naked presumption arising from a mere unexplained possession.

Such is the general result of the doctrine to be found in the best elementary writers on the subject of evidence.¹ Peake on Evidence (p. 165) seems, indeed, to have entertained a different opinion; and to have thought, even as between the parties, the recital was admissible as secondary evidence only upon proof that the lease was lost. But in this opinion he is not supported by any modern authority; and it is very questionable if he has not been misled by confounding the different operations of recitals as evidence between strangers and between parties. It may not, however, be unimportant to examine a few of the authorities in support of the doctrine on which we rely. The cases of Marchioness of Anandale v. Harris (2 P.

1.—See 1 Phillips on Evid., ch. 8, sec. 2, p. 411; 1 Stark. Evid., part 2, sec. 123, page 301, sec. 156, page 369; Com. Dig. Estoppel B. C., Evidence B., 5; Matthews on Presumpt., 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 269; Co. Litt., 352; Mayor, &c., of Carlisle v. Blamire, 8 East's Rep., 487.

Wm's., 432), and Shelley v. Wright (Willes's Rep., 9), are sufficiently direct as to the operation of recitals by way of estoppel between the parties. In Ford v. Gray (1 Salk., 285), one of the points ruled was, "that a recital of a lease in a deed of release is good evidence of such lease against the releasor and those who claim under him; but as to others it is not, without proving that there was such a deed, and it was lost and destroyed." The same case is reported in 6 Mod., 44, where it is said that 85] it was ruled, "that *the recital of a lease in a deed of release is good evidence against the releasor, and those that claim under him." It is then stated that "a fine was produced, but no deed declaring the uses, but a deed was offered in evidence which did recite a deed of limitation of the uses, and the question was whether that (recital) was evidence: and the court said that the bare recital was not evidence; but that if it could be proved that such a deed had been, and lost, it would do if it were recited in another." This was doubtless the same point asserted in the latter clause of the report in Salkeld; and, thus explained, it is perfectly consistent with the statement in Salkeld, and must be referred to a case where the recital was offered as evidence against a stranger. In any other point of view it would be inconsistent with the preceding propositions as well as with the cases in 2 P. Williams and Willes. In Trevivan v. Lawrence (1 Salk., 276), the court held that the parties and all claiming under them were estopped from asserting that a judgment sued against the party as of trinity term was not of that term but of another term; that very point having arisen and been decided against the party upon a scire facias on the judgment. But the court there held (what is very material to the present purpose) that "if a man makes a lease by indenture of D, in which he hath nothing, and afterwards purchases D in fee, and afterwards bargains and sells it to A and his heirs, A shall be bound by this estoppel; and, that where an estoppel works on the interest of the lands, it runs with the land into whose hands soever the lands comes; and an ejectment is maintainable upon the mere estoppel." This decision is important in several respects. In the first place it shows that an estoppel may arise by implication from a grant that the party hath an estate in the land which he may convey, and he shall be estopped to deny it.¹ In the next place it shows that such estoppel binds all persons claiming the same land, not only under the same deed but under any subsequent conveyance from 86] the same party; that *is to say, it binds not merely privies in blood, but privies in estate, as subsequent grantees and alienees. In the next place it shows that an estoppel, which (as the phrase is) works on the interest of the land, runs with it into whose ever hands the land comes. Now, this last consideration comes emphatically home to the present case. The recital of the lease in the present release works on the interest in the land; the lease gave an interest in the land, and the admission of it in the release enabled the latter to operate in the manner which the parties intended. The estoppel, therefore, worked on the interest in the land, not by implication merely, but directly by the admission of the parties. That admission was a muniment of the title, and as an estoppel traveled with the title into whose ever hands it might afterwards come. The same doctrine is recognized by Lord Chief Baron Comyn in his Digest, Estoppel B. & E., 10. In the latter place (E., 10) he puts the case more strongly; for he asserts that the estoppel binds, even though all the facts are found in a special verdict. "But," says he (and he relies on his own authority), "where an estoppel binds the estate, and converts it to an interest, the court will adjudge accordingly. As if A leaves lands to B for six years, in which he has nothing, and then purchases a lease of the same land for twenty-one years, and afterwards leases to C for ten years, and all this is found by verdict, the court will adjudge the lease to B good, though it be so only by conclusion. A doctrine similar in principle was asserted in this court in Terrett v. Taylor (9 Cranch, 52). The distinction, then, which was urged at the bar, that an estoppel of this sort binds those claiming under the same deed but not those claiming by a subsequent deed under the same party, is not well founded. All privies in estate by subsequent deed are bound in the same manner as privies in blood; and so, indeed, is the doctrine in Comyn's Digest, Estoppel B., and in Coke Litt., 352, a.

We may now pass to a short review of some of the American cases on this subject. Denn v. Cornell (3 Johns. Cas., 174) is strongly in point. There, Lieutenant-Governor Colden, in 1775, made his will, and in it recited that he had *conveyed to his son David his lands [87] in the township of Flushing, and he then devised his other estate to his sons and daughters, &c., &c. Afterwards, David's estate was confiscated under the Act of Attainder, and the defendant in ejectment claimed under that confiscation, and deduced his title from the State. No deed of the Flushing estate (the land in controversy) was proved from the father; and the heir-at-law sought to recover on that ground. But the court held that the recital in the will that the testator had conveyed the estate to David, was an estoppel of the heir to deny that fact, and bound the estate. In this case the estoppel was set up by the tenant claiming under the State, as an estoppel running with the land. If the State or its grantee might set up the estoppel in favor of their title, then, as estoppels are reciprocal and bind both parties, it might have been set up against the State or its grantee. It has been said at the bar that the State is not bound by estoppel by any recital in a deed. That may be so where the recital is in its own grants or patents, for they are deemed to be made upon suggestion of the grantee.² But where the State claims title under the deed, or other solemn acts of third persons, it takes it cum onere, and subject to all the estoppels running with the title and estate, in the same way as other privies in estate.

In Penrose v. Griffith (4 Binn. Rep., 231), it was held that recitals in a patent of the commonwealth were evidence against it, but not

1.—See also Fairtitle v. Gilbert, 2 T. Rep., 171; Helps et al. v. Hereford, 2 B. & Ald., 242; Rees v. Lloyd, Wightwick's Rep., 123.

Peters 4.

2.—But see Comm. v. Pejepscoot Proprietors, 10 Mass. Rep., 155.

against persons claiming by title paramount from the commonwealth. The court there said that the rule of law is, that a deed containing a recital of another deed is evidence of the recited deed against the grantor, and all persons claiming by title derived from him subsequently. The reason of the rule is, that the recital amounts to the confession of the party, and that confession is evidence against himself and those who stand in his place. But such confession can be no evidence against strangers. The same doctrine was acted upon and confirmed by the same court in Garwood v. Dennis 88*] (4 Binn. Rep., 314). In *that case the court further held that a recital in another deed was evidence against strangers, where the deed was ancient, and the possession was consistent with the deed. That case also had the peculiarity belonging to the present, that the possession was of a middle nature, that is, it might not have been held solely in consequence of the deed, for the party had another title; but there never was any possession against it. There was a double title, and the question was, to which the possession might be attributable. The court thought that a suitable foundation of the original existence and loss of the recited deed being laid in the evidence, the recital in the deed was good corroborative evidence even against strangers. And other authorities certainly warrant this decision.¹

We think, then, that upon authority, the recital of the lease in the deed of release in the present case was conclusive evidence upon all persons claiming under the parties in privity of estate, as the present defendant in ejectment did claim; and, independently of authority, we should have arrived at the same result upon principle; for the recital constitutes a part of the title, and establishes a possession under the lease necessary to give the release its intended operation. It works upon the interest in the land and creates an estoppel, which runs with the land against all persons, in privity, under the releasers. It is as much a muniment of the title as any covenant therein running with the land.

This view of the matter dispenses with the necessity of examining all the other exceptions as to the nature and sufficiency of the proof of the original existence and loss of the lease, and of the secondary evidence to supply its place.

The next question is, supposing the marriage settlement duly executed, what estate passed by it to Morris and his wife and their children. 89*] The uses declared in the deed are in *the following terms: "to and for the use and behoof of them, the said Joanna Philipse and Beverly Robinson (the releasees) and their heirs until the solemnization of the said intended marriage; and from and immediately after the solemnization of the said intended marriage, then to the use and behoof of the said Mary Philipse and Roger Morris, and the survivor of them, for and during the term of their natural lives, without impeachment of waste; and from and after the determination of that estate, then to the use and behoof of such child or children as shall or may be procreated between them, and to his, her, or their heirs and assigns forever. But in case the said Roger Morris and Mary Philipse shall have no child or children begotten between them, or that such child or children shall happen to die during the lifetime of the said Roger and Mary, and the said Mary should survive the said Roger without issue, then to the use and behoof of her, the said Mary Philipse, and her heirs and assigns forever. And in case the said Roger should survive the said Mary Philipse, without any issue by her, or that such issue is then dead without leaving issue, then, after the decease of the said Roger Morris, to the only use and behoof of such person or persons, and in such manner and form as the said Mary Philipse shall at any time during the said intended marriage, devise the same by her last will and testament," &c., &c. There are other clauses not material to be mentioned.

The marriage took effect; children were born, and, indeed, all the children were born before the attainder in 1779. Mary Morris survived her husband, and died in 1825, leaving her children, the lessors of the plaintiff, surviving her. The conveyance taking effect by the statute of uses upon a deed operating by way of transmutation of possession, no difficulty arises in giving full effect, by way of springing or shifting or executory uses, to all the limitations, in whatever manner they may be construed. The counsel for the original defendant contend that the parents take a life estate, and that there is a remainder upon a contingency, with a double aspect. That the remainder to the children is upon the contingency of their surviving their parents; and in case of their nonsurvivorship, *there is an [90 alternative remainder to the mother, which would take effect in lieu of the other. That, consequently, the remainder to the children was a contingent remainder during the life of their parents; and as such it was destroyed by the proceedings and sale under the Act of Attainder and Banishment of 1779. The Circuit Court was of a different opinion, and held that the remainder to the children was contingent until the birth of a child, and then vested in such child, and open to let in after-born children; and that there being a vested remainder in the children at the time of the Act of 1779, it stands unaffected by that act.

We are all of opinion that the opinion of the Circuit Court upon the construction of the settlement deed was correct. It is the natural interpretation of the words of the limitations, in the order in which they stand in the declaration of the uses. The estate is declared to be to the parents during their natural lives, and then to the use and behoof of such child or children as may be procreated between them, and to his, her, and their heirs and assigns forever. If we stop here, there cannot be a possible doubt of the meaning of the provision. There is a clear remainder in fee to the children, which ceased to be contingent upon the birth of the first, and open to let in the after-born children.² It is perfectly consistent with this limitation that the estate in fee might be defeasible and determinable upon a subsequent contingency, and upon the happening of such contingency, might pass by way of shifting executory use (as it might in case of a devise by way of executory devise) to other persons in fee; thus mounting a fee upon a fee. The existence, then, of such executory limitation over, by way of use, would not change the nature of the preceding limitation and make it contingent, any more than it would in the case of an executory devise. The contingency would attach, not to the preceding limitation, but to the executory use over.

1.—See, in addition to the foregoing authorities, Buller's N. P., 254; Gibb. Evid., 100, 101; Bean v. Parker, 17 Mass. Rep., 591; Wilkinson v. Scott, 17 Mass. Rep., 244; Inhab. Braintree v. Inhab. Hingham, 17 Mass. Rep., 432; Kite's Heirs v. Shrader, 3

Litt. Rep., 447; 2 Thomas's Co. Litt., 582, note.

2.—See Doe v. Perryn, 3 T. R., 484; Doe v. Martin, 7 T. R., 83; Bromfield v. Crowder, N. R., 313; Doe v. Trovoost, 4 Johns. Rep., 61.

Let us now consider what is the effect of the 91 succeeding clause in the settlement deed, and see if it be capable, consistently with the apparent intention of the parties, of operating as an alternative remainder under the double aspect of the contingency, as contended for by the original defendant. The clause is, "but in case the said Roger Morris and Mary shall have no such child or children begotten between them, or that such child or children shall happen to die during the lifetime of the said Roger and Mary, and the said Mary should survive the said Roger without issue, then, &c." Now, it is important to observe that this clause does not attach any contingency to the preceding limitation to the children, but merely states the contingency upon which the estate over is to depend. It does not state that the children shall not take unless they survive the parents, but that the mother shall take in case she survives her husband without issue. She, then, and not the children, is to take in case of the contingency of her survivorship. It is applied to her and not to them. Besides, upon the construction contended for at the bar, if all the children should die during the lifetime of the parents, leaving any issue, such issue could not take; and yet a primary intention was to provide for the issue of the marriage. Nor in such a case could the mother take the estate over; for that, by the terms of the settlement, could take effect only in case she survived her husband without issue. The subsequent clause demonstrates this still more fully; for her power to dispose of the estate by will in case her husband survives her is confined to such survivorship, if "such issue is then dead without leaving issue."

Another difficulty in the construction contended for is that the children must survive both parents, and that if they should survive the mother and not the father, in that event they could not take; yet the settlement plainly looks to the event of the death of the mother without issue, as that alone in which the estate over is to have effect. It is also the manifest intention of the settlement that if there is any issue, or the issue of any issue, such issue shall take the estate; which can only be by construing the prior limitation in the manner in which it is construed by this court. The general rule of law, founded on public policy, is 92 that limitations of this nature shall be construed to be vested, when, and as soon as they may. The present limitation, in its terms, purports to be contingent only until the birth of a child, and may then vest. So that whether we consult the language of the settlement, the order of its provisions, the apparent intention of the parties, or the general rule of law, they all lead to the same results—that the estate to the children was contingent only until their birth; and that when the Act of 1779 passed, they being all then born, it was a vested remainder in them and their heirs, and not liable to be defeated by any transfer or destruction of the life estate.

This view of the settlement deed renders it wholly unnecessary to enter upon any minute consideration of the nature and operation of the Attainder Act of 1779, since it is clear that that act, whether it worked a transfer or destruction of the life estate of the parents (and, in our opinion, the form was its true operation), it did not displace the vested remainder of the children, but left it to take effect upon the regular determination of the life estate.

In respect to another point raised at the argument, that the power reserved to Roger Morris and his wife under the marriage settlement to dispose of the land to the amount of three thousand pounds, so far as it remained unexecuted by them, was by the Attainder Act of 1779 transferred to the State, and might be executed by the State, we are of opinion that it is not well founded. In the first place, we consider this to be a power personal in the parents, and to be exercised in their discretion, and not in its own nature transferable. Even under the statutes of treason in England, powers and conditions, personal to the parties, did not by an attainder pass to the crown. (1 Hale's Pl. Cr., 240, 242, 244, 245, 246; Jackson v. Catlin, 2 Johns. Rep., 248; Sugden on Powers, 174, 176.) And it has been settled in New York that the offense stated in the act was not, strictly speaking, treason, but sui generis as the terms of the act stated it.¹ In the next place, the act purports to vest in the State, by forfeiture, the "estates" only of the offenders; and being a penal act, it is to be construed [93 strictly. A power to dispose of land in the seisin of a third person, is in no just sense an estate in the land itself. In the next place, the deed of the commissioners authorized by the act purports generally to convey all the estate, right, title, and interest of the offenders in the property conveyed, and does not purport to be any execution of a limited nature and object. In every view the doctrine contended for is untenable.

Passing over, for the present, some minor exceptions, we may now advance to the consideration of the objections urged against the charge of the court; and these objections, so far as they have not been already disposed of by the questions growing out of the proofs applicable to the lease, are to the direction of the court upon the point whether there was or was not a due delivery of the marriage settlement deed. If that deed was duly delivered, then no acts done after the marriage by the parents, however inconsistent with that deed, could affect the legal validity of the rights of the children once acquired and vested in them under it. But the point pressed at the trial was whether it was ever executed and delivered at all, so as to have become an operative conveyance, or whether there was a mere nominal execution by the parties; and whether it was laid aside and abandoned as a conveyance before the marriage, and never became complete by delivery. There was at the trial what the law deems sufficient prima facie evidence of the delivery of the deed. But certain omissions as well as certain acts of the parents were relied on to rebut this evidence, and to establish the conclusion that there had been, in point of fact, no such delivery. With the value of these acts and circumstances as matters of presumption for the consideration of the jury by way of rebutter of the prima facie evidence, this court has nothing to do, and does not intend to express any opinion thereon. But so far as they bore upon the fact of delivery, they applied with the same force in relation to the children as they did in relation to the parents; that is, so far as they were presumptive of the nondelivery of the deed they furnished the same presumption against the children that they would against the parents. They were open to explanation and observation, and had 94 just as much weight in the one case as in the other. They were not acts or omissions which bound the children, supposing them to have any vested interest; but circumstances of presumption to be weighed, as far as they went, to establish that no interest ever vested in them by reason of the nondelivery of the deed of settlement. Whatever might be the inconsistency of these acts with the provisions of that deed, that inconsistency was no otherwise important than as it might furnish a presumption against the existence of the deed as an operative conveyance.

1.—Jackson v. Catlin, 2 Johns. Rep., 248.

It is in reference to these considerations that the argument at the bar had insisted upon objections to the charge of the judge at the trial; and in examining the charge on this head difficulties have occurred to the court itself.

The circumstances principally relied upon were, the dormancy of the settlement deed from 1758 to 1779; the omission to record it until 1787; and the supposed inconsistency of certain deeds, executed by the parents between 1758 and 1773, with the title under that settlement.

In respect to the dormancy of the deed the charge is as follows: "It has been said that this is a dormant deed, never intended by the parties to operate; that it had slept until after the attainder, and until the year 1787. There is weight in this; or rather there would be weight in it if the parties in interest had slept on their rights. But who has slept? Morris and wife, Beverly Robinson and Joanna Philipse, the trustees. They are the persons that have slept, and not the children. This does not justify so strong an inference against the children as if they had slept upon their rights. Is it fair in such a case to draw any inference against the children?"

To two of the judges this appears to amount to a direction that in point of law the dormancy of the deed during this period, not having been the act of the children, does not furnish the same presumption of the nondelivery against them as it would against the parents; and that, to give the presumption from this circumstance full effect, it ought to appear that the children had slept on their rights; that is, had acquiesced in such dormancy of the title. To those judges 95 this direction seems erroneous, because the presumption is the same whether the children acquiesced or not.

In respect of the nonrecording of the deed, the charge proceeds to state. "It has also been urged that this deed was not recorded until 1787. Is there anything in this fact that should operate against the children? They were minors for the greater part of the time down to the year 1787, when it was recorded, &c., &c." It seems to the same judges that the same distinction as to the effect of the presumption in the case of the parents, and that of the children pervades this, as it does the former statement.

As to the inconsistency relied on, the introductory part of the charge is as follows: "It is also said that Morris and his wife have done acts inconsistent with the deed. In weighing the force and effect of these acts you must bear in mind the time when the interest vested in the children under this deed; for after that interest vested, none but themselves could divest it," &c. It is certainly true that after the interest was once vested in the children, no act, however inconsistent with the deed, done by the parents could affect that interest. But the point of view under which the argument was addressed to the court was, that such inconsistency furnished ground for a presumption of a nondelivery of the deed; and in this point of view it seems to the same judges that this part of the charge relies too much upon a distinction between the parents and children as to the effect of the presumption. In another part of the charge the judge very properly puts all these acts of supposed inconsistency upon the true ground—what was the interest of the parties in these acts, and whether they were done in hostility to the deed, supposing it inoperative, or as acts of parents acting beyond the deed for what they might deem beneficial to their children, and for the interest of all concerned in the estate.

To the other judges, however, these objections do not appear to be well founded when taken in connection with the general scope and object of the remarks of the judge in his charge upon this branch of the case. The purpose for which these omissions and acts of alleged inconsistency in Morris were offered had been explicitly stated. The jury had been told that they were relied upon to rebut the [96 evidence of delivery of the deed, which had been offered on the part of the plaintiff below. Before entering upon any comments on this evidence, and to prepare the minds of the jury for the due application of the remarks, the judge observed, "what, then, is the evidence to bring the fact of delivery into doubt? What is the reasonable presumption to be drawn from the facts proved? keeping in mind that this is evidence on the part of the defendant to disprove the presumption of law, from the facts proved, that the deed was fully delivered. The jury were therefore duly apprised of the bearing of these circumstances, and the purpose for which they were offered. And they could not but have understood that it was submitted to them to judge of the weight to which they were entitled; otherwise the evidence would have been excluded as inconsistent, and the jury must have understood that they did weigh to some extent against the children; for when speaking of the objection that the deed had lain dormant for a number of years, the jury were told that this circumstance did not justify so strong an inference against the children as if they had slept upon their rights, thereby admitting that it was open to an inference against them, but not so strong as if they had been of age, and the life estate of their parents ended, and they during that delay had been in a situation to assert their rights. And should it be admitted that the judge erred in this suggestion, it would amount to no more than an intimation of his opinion upon the weight of evidence. The same remark will apply to every part of the charge, when the rights of the children are spoken of in contradistinction to those of their parents. They refer to the delivery of the deed. Thus, with respect to the delay in recording the deed, the judge puts the question to the jury in this form: "Is there anything in the fact that it was not recorded, from which an inference can be drawn against the deed." Pointing the attention of the jury to the fact of delivery, and not to any controlling distinction between the interest of the children and their parents, the bearing of the remarks of the judge with respect to the various deeds executed by Morris and his wife, *and which are alleged to have been inconsistent with the marriage settlement, could not have misled the jury. It is true they were told that in weighing the force and effect of those acts they must bear in mind the time when the interest vested in the children under the deed. This remark must have been understood by the jury as subject to their finding with respect to the delivery of the deed, and not as expressing an opinion that the interest of the children vested at the date of the deed. For, if that had been understood as the opinion of the judge, the evidence, as before observed, would have been inadmissible, and the jury would have been told that it could have no bearing upon the case. Instead of which, it had been before explained to them that the object of this evidence was to disprove the delivery of the marriage settlement deed, and not to divest any interest that had become vested in the children. And in the conclusion of this part of the charge the judge tells the jury, "these are all the circumstances relied upon as being inconsistent with the settlement deed, and these are questions for you. I do not wish to interfere with your duties. It is for you to say whether the deed was duly executed and delivered."

The jury had been told in a previous part of the charge that delivery of the deed was essential in order to pass the title, and that this was a fact for them to decide; and it was in conclusion left to them in as broad a manner as could be done. The whole scope of the charge on this point left the evidence open for the full consideration of the jury, and the remarks of the judge are no more than a mere comment on the weight of evidence, and as such were addressed to the judgment of the jury, and not binding upon them. If a decided opinion had been expressed by the judge upon the weight of the evidence, it is not pretended that it would be matter of error to be corrected here. But the charge does not even go thus far; and it is believed by a majority of the court that it is not justly exposed to the criticisms which have been applied to it.

In respect to that part of the charge which comments upon the various deeds made by the Peters 4.

parents, which were *relied upon as in- [*98 consistent with the settlement deed, no objection has occurred to any member of the court except as to the comments on the deeds to Hill and Merritt, and the life leases to other persons. In respect to the deeds to Hill and Merritt, one judge is of opinion that the statement "that these deeds are not inconsistent with the settlement deed," is incorrect in point of law, because those deeds contained a covenant of seisin; and under the settlement deed, although Morris and wife had a right to convey the land, they were not in the actual seisin of it, and, therefore, such a covenant was inconsistent with the settlement deed. But the other judges are of opinion that this part of the charge is correct, because Morris and wife had, under the settlement deed, a power to convey in fee lands to a much greater amount; that it was not necessary to recite in their deeds of sale their power to sell; and that the covenant of seisin, being a usual muniment of title and not changing in the slightest degree the perfection of the title actually conveyed, did not, in point of law, whether there was a seisin or not, create any repugnancy between those deeds and the settlement deed. If the parties had in those deeds recited the settlement deed and the power to convey, and had then conveyed with the same covenants, the deeds could not have been deemed, in point of law, inconsistent with the power under the settlement deed; but would have been deemed a good execution of the power, and the covenants a mere additional security for the title. The same judge is also of opinion that the life leases which were given in evidence, not having been made in pursuance of the power in the marriage settlement deed, are by their terms and effect so inconsistent with it as to authorize the jury to find against its delivery on this ground alone; and that the Circuit Court erred in charging the jury that the effect and operation of these leases was not a subject for their inquiry, and that their bearing on the cause depended on the intention of Morris.

To the other judges, however, the charge in this particular is deemed unexceptionable. The judge decided that these life leases were unauthorized by the power; and the *question [*99 was, what influence they ought to have upon the point of nondelivery of the settlement deed; they not deriving any validity or force under it. Were they acts of ownership over the property which could not be explained consistently with the existence of the settlement deed, or were they acts which, though unauthorized, might fairly be presumed to be done without any intention to disclaim the legal title under that deed? In estimating this presumption, it is to be considered that these were the acts of parents, and not of strangers. That it does not necessarily follow because parents do unauthorized acts in relation to the estates of their children, they intend those acts as hostile or adverse to the rights of their children. Parents may, from a sincere desire to promote the interest of their children, and to increase the value of their estates, make leases for the clearing and cultivation of their estates which they know to be unauthorized by law, but which, at the same time, they feel an entire confidence will be confirmed by their children. The very relation in which parents stand to their children excuses, if it does not justify, such acts. It will be rare, indeed, if parents may not confidently trust that their acts, done bona fide for the benefit of their children, will, from affection, from interest, from filial reverence, or from a respect to public opinion, be confirmed by them. The acts of parents, therefore, exceeding their legal authority, admit of a very different interpretation from those of mere strangers. The question in all such cases is, what were the intentions and objects of the parents? Did they act upon rights which they deemed exclusively vested in themselves? or did they act with a reference to the known interests vested in their children? It appears to the majority of the judges that the circumstance of the life leases was properly put to the jury as a question of intention; and that the jury were left at full liberty to deduce the proper conclusion from it.

The next point is as to the improvements claimed by the tenant in ejectment under the Act of New York of the 1st of May, 1786. That act declares "that in all cases of purchases made of any forfeited estates in pursuance of any of the laws directing the sale of forfeited estates, 100 in which any *purchaser of such estates shall be evicted by due course of law, in the manner mentioned, &c., &c., such purchaser shall have like remedy for obtaining a compensation for the value of the improvements by him or her made on such estate, so by him or her purchased, and from which he or she shall be so evicted, as is directed in and by the first clause in the Act of the 12th of May, 1784." The latter act declares that the person or persons having obtained judgment shall not have any writ of possession, nor obtain possession of such lands, &c., until he, she or they shall have paid to the person or persons possessing title thereto, derived from or under the people of the State, the value of all improvements made thereon after the passing of the act. Neither the Act of 1784 nor of 1786 purports to give a universal remedy for improvements in cases of eviction by title paramount; but is confined to cases of confiscated estates where the title comes by sale from the State. However operative it may be as to citizens of the State (on which it is unnecessary to give any opinion), the question before us is, whether such improvements can be claimed in this case consistently with the Treaty of Peace of 1783.

By the fifth article of that treaty, it is agreed "that all persons who have any interest in confiscated lands, either by debts, marriage settlements, or otherwise, shall meet with no lawful impediment in the prosecution of their just rights." By the sixth article it is agreed that "there shall be no future confiscations made, nor any prosecutions commenced against any person or persons for or by reason of the part which he or they may have taken in the war; and that no person shall on that account suffer any future loss or damage, either in his person, liberty or property." We think that the true effect of these provisions is to guaranty to the party all the rights and interests which he then had in confiscated and other lands, in the full force and vigor which they then possessed. He was to meet with no impediment to the assertion of his just rights, and no future confisca-tions were to be made of his interest in any land. His just rights were at that time to have the estate whenever it should fall into possession, free of all incumbrances or *liens [101 for improvements created by the tenants for life, or by purchasers under the State. To deny him possession, or a writ of possession, until he should pay for all such improvements, was an impediment to his just rights, and a confiscation, pro tanto, of his estate in the lands. The argument at the bar supposes that there is a natural equity to receive payment for all improvements made upon land. In certain cases there may be an equitable claim; but that in all cases a party is bound by natural justice to pay for improvements made against his will, or without his consent, is a proposition which we are not prepared to admit. We adhere to the doctrine laid down on this subject in Green v. Biddle (8 Wheat., 1).

We are of opinion that the claim for improvements in this case is inconsistent with the Treaty of Peace, and ought to be rejected.

A number of objections of a minor nature are spread upon the record, such as exceptions to the admission of evidence to prove the common practice to convey lands by way of lease and release, and the admission of the journals of the Legislature; to the admission of the act of compromise between the State and John Jacob Astor; to the sufficiency of the title of Astor under the deed of the children of Morris and wife, to extinguish their title, &c., &c. To all these we think it unnecessary to make any farther answer than that they have not escaped the attention of the court, and that the court perceive no valid objection to the ruling of the Circuit Court respecting them.

Upon the whole, it is the opinion of this court that the judgment of the Circuit Court be, and the same is hereby affirmed with costs.

Cited—5 Pet., 198; 6 Pet., 609, 610, 612, 632; 7 Pet., 390; 10 Pet., 265; 4 How., 127; 11 How., 323; 13 How., 146; 18 How., 85; 5 Wall., 805, 806; 6 Wall., 475, 478; 10 Wall., 366; 16 Wall., 464; 19 Wall., 175; 9 Otto, 659; 14 Otto, 398; 3 Wood. & M., 512; 2 Blatchf., 13; Bald., 203, 363; 2 Curt., 247; 2 Cliff., 203; 5 Mason, 443; 17 Bank. Reg., 526.

Ex-parte* MARTHA BRAD- [*102
STREET, in the matter of JAMES JACKSON, ex dem. MARTHA BRADSTREET,
v.
DANIEL THOMAS.

Practice—rule to show cause—bill of exceptions.

A rule had been granted on the district judge of the Northern District of New York to show cause why he did not sign a bill of exceptions in a case tried before him. The court said that on the day of the return of the rule, the district judge has a right to show cause, whether the person who obtained the rule moves or not. He has a right to have the rule disposed of.

On the trial of a cause in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York, exceptions were taken to opinions of the court delivered in the course of the trial; and some time after the trial was over a bill of exceptions was tendered to the district judge which he refused to sign, objecting to some of the matters stated in the same, and at the same time altering the bill then tendered so as to conform to his recollection of the facts of the case, and inserting in the bill all that he deemed proper to be contained in the same; which bill of exceptions, thus altered, was signed by the judge. On the motion of the party who had tendered the bill of exceptions, a rule was granted on the district judge to show cause why he did not sign the bill of exceptions as first tendered to him. To this rule the judge returned his reasons for refusing to sign the bill so tendered, and stating that he had signed such a bill of exceptions as he considered correct.

Peters 4.

BY THE COURT—This is not a case in which the judge has refused to sign a bill of exceptions. The judge has signed such a bill as he thinks correct. The object of the rule is to oblige the judge to sign a particular bill of exceptions which has been offered to him. The court granted the rule to show cause, and the judge has shown cause by saying he has done all that can be required from him, and that the bill offered is not such a bill as he can sign. The court cannot order him to sign such a bill.

A return by the district judge to a rule to show cause need not be sworn to by him. [103]

The law requires that a bill of exceptions should be tendered at the trial. If a party intends to take a bill of exceptions, he should give notice to the judge at the trial; and if he does not file it at the trial, he should move the judge to assign a reasonable time within which he may file it. A practice to sign it after the term must be understood to be matter of consent between the parties, unless the judge has made an express order in the term, allowing such a period to prepare it.

AT January Term, 1829, on motion of Mr. Key, and on affidavit filed, the court granted a rule on the Honorable Alfred Conklin, District Judge of the Northern District of New York, to show cause why he did not sign a certain bill of exceptions tendered to him on 103 the part of the plaintiff, in *the case of James Jackson, ex dem. Martha Bradstreet, v. Daniel Thomas, which cause had been tried before him and a verdict given for the defendant. The rule was made returnable on the second Monday in January of this term. The same rule was obtained in the case of Jackson, ex dem. Martha Bradstreet, v. Joseph Kirkland.

To this rule the district judge, on the 10th of December, 1829, returned with the bills of exceptions which had accompanied the copy of the rule as served upon him, his reasons for refusing to comply with the demand of the plaintiff.

On the 27th day of February, the return day of the rule having passed, Mr. Storrs, after notice to Mrs. Bradstreet, moved to take up the return of Judge Conklin. He said that many important titles depended upon the decision of the cases in which the rules had been granted, and one of these cases was upon the calendar of this court. The return has been made, and the district judge has obeyed the mandate of this court. This application is also submitted at the instance of the district judge, who is not willing to stand before the court without a decisive inquiry into his proceedings.

Mr. Key objected to the court taking up the case on the application of any one but Mrs. Bradstreet. It was for her to call it up during the term, and to determine at what time. It will depend on the result of the case on the calendar what course she will pursue.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL. The district judge of the Northern District of New York has been called upon by a rule of this court to show cause, and on the day of the return of the rule he has a right to show cause, whether the person who obtained the rule moves or not. There is no question but that Judge Conklin has a right to have the rule disposed of.

Peters 4.

The case went off until the following motion day, by agreement.

Afterwards, Mr. Storrs said the return to the rule having been made by Judge Conklin in his official capacity, he had not sworn to it; but if this shall be required by the court it will be done.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL*. The [*104 judge need not swear to the return of the reasons why he refused to sign the bill of exceptions.

The return set forth that at the time of the trial of the cause mentioned in the rule, no bill of exceptions was tendered, nor were any exceptions reduced to writing, except by himself in the minutes which he kept of the trial, unless, which was probable, the counsel also noted them in their minutes. Several weeks after the trial the amended bill of exceptions, accompanied by a paper containing numerous amendments proposed by the counsel for the defendant, was delivered to him for correction; and he thereupon proceeded, with due deliberation, and with the aid of his notes of the trial, to correct and settle the same in conformity, as nearly as possible, with the truth of the case. No counsel appeared for either party, and no application was made for some time for the bill of exceptions by the counsel in the cause. In an amended return, the district judge stated that some correspondence had taken place with Mrs. Bradstreet in relation to alterations proposed to be made in the bill of exceptions; and in an interview with her, nothing was said by her which was understood as an intimation of her intention or wish to be heard further upon the subject.

The return then proceeds to state that in the bill of exceptions, as proposed by Mrs. Bradstreet, many alterations had been made in terms and language, of little importance, and matters are introduced as having occurred on the trial which did not occur; circumstances are misstated and opinions are imputed to him which he did not express, and thus many parts of the amendments proposed by the plaintiff were untrue, and that, therefore, the same were not signed by him. The particulars to which these representations refer are stated in the return.

The return, after stating that in reference to an instrument of writing produced in the cause (in the bill of exceptions as signed by the judge), a brief description of the instrument was inserted instead of the whole, in extenso, which had been done in conformity with the established rules of practice requiring only so much of the evidence offered upon the trial *as is sufficient fully and fairly to [*105 present every question of law embraced in the exception, proceeds—

“In conclusion, I have only to add the expression of my conviction that although this rule of law has by no means been rigidly applied in abridging this bill, it has in no instance been departed from to the prejudice of the plaintiff.”

“If, however, on a particular examination of the bill and amendments (without which, I may be permitted to remark, it is impossible to form a just conclusion), your honorable court should, in regard to the documentary evidence, entertain a different opinion, I shall most cheerfully obey its mandate to correct the supposed error."

Mr. Storrs, on a motion to discharge the rule, stated that this court would never require a judge to sign a bill of exceptions which he considers incorrect. The court will adopt another course, and will leave it to the judge to re-examine the bill, and to do what he shall consider proper.

The bill of exceptions was not made out and offered to the judge at the trial, which is the practice in New York, nor was it presented to him until a long time afterwards; and it was then corrected according to his notes.

The true course would be to refer the matter back to the judge, and let him appoint a time, on notice to both parties, to appear before him, and revise the bill of exceptions. This the judge is perfectly willing to do.

Mr. Storrs stated that he was the counsel for the parties in interest in the case, and he was desirous to see that their interests should not suffer. He also wished to present the case on the part of Judge Conklin, and ask the attention of the court to it.

Mr. Key, in opposition to the motion, contended,

1. That this court would consider the bills of exceptions as duly tendered, inasmuch as the judge, though he states that they were not tendered during the term, does not allege that they were out of time; and if, by the general practice of the court, or by consent, they were written during the trial and presented afterwards, which is not denied, they ought to be considered in time. (6 Johns. Rep., 279; 2 Tidd, 788.) That this had been agreed to be 106] inferred *from the return made by the district judge, and from the affirmation of facts in the affidavit not denied in the return.

2. This court will now look at the bills of exceptions and the returns; and whatever parts of the bills have been objected to, and the objections justified by the return they will order to be certified; and such facts as have been objected to, and the objections not sustained by the return, the judge will also be called on to certify. (2 Lord Ray., 1008.) Unless this is done the remedy by mandamus is nugatory.

It was unimportant as to the manner in which the omissions should be required to be certified. This might be done in any mode most respectful to the judge.

The intimation of the counsel for the district judge that the bills of exceptions may be settled by a hearing before the judge on notice, would probably remove all the difficulties in the case if the rule should now be discharged.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

The court is unanimously of opinion that the rule ought not to be granted.

This is not a case in which the judge has refused to sign a bill of exceptions. The judge has signed such a bill as he thinks correct. If the court had granted a rule upon the district judge to sign a bill of exceptions, the judge could have returned that he had performed that duty. But the object of the rule is to oblige the judge to sign a particular bill of exceptions, which had been offered to him. The court granted the rule to show cause, and the judge has shown cause, by saying he has done all that can be required from him, and that the bill offered to him is not such a bill as he can sign.

Nothing can be more manifest than that the court cannot order him to sign such a bill of exceptions. The person who offers a bill of exceptions ought to present such a one as the judge can sign. The course to be pursued is either to endeavor to draw up a bill, by agreement, which the judge can *sign, or [*107] to prepare a bill to which there will be no objection, and present it to the judge.

The court will observe that there is something in this proceeding which they cannot, and which they ought not to sanction. A bill of exceptions is handed to the judge several weeks after the trial of the cause, and he is asked to correct it from memory. The law requires that a bill of exceptions should be tendered at the trial. But the usual practice is to request the judge to note down in writing the exceptions, and afterwards, during the session of the court, to hand him the bill of exceptions and submit it to his correction from his notes. If he is to resort to his memory, it should be handed to him immediately, or in a reasonable time after the trial. It would be dangerous to allow a bill of exceptions of matters dependent on memory, at a distant period, when he may not accurately recollect them. And the judge ought not to allow it.

If the party intends to take a bill of exceptions he should give notice to the judge at the trial, and if he does not file it at the trial, he should move the judge to assign a reasonable time within which he may file it. A practice to sign it after the term must be understood to be a matter of consent between the parties, unless the judge has made an express order in the term, allowing such a period to prepare it.

It is ordered by the court that the mandamus as prayed for be, and the same is hereby refused; and that the rule heretofore granted in this cause be, and the same is hereby discharged.

See S. C., 7 Pet., 634; 8 Pet., 538.

Cited—5 Pet., 219; 4 How., 16; 6 How., 275; 16 How., 29; 12 Otto., 358; 3 Wood. & M., 225, 537.

Ex-Parte* JOHN L. TILLING- [*108]
HAST, ESQUIRE.

Admission to practice in Supreme Court.

That a counselor practicing in the highest court of the State of New York, in which he resides, had been struck off from the roll of counselors of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York, by the order of the judge of that court, for a contempt, does not authorize this court to refuse his admission as a counselor of this court.

This court does not consider the circumstances upon which the order of the district judge was given within its cognizance; or that it is authorized to punish for a contempt which may have been committed in the District Court of the Northern District of New York.

MR. HOFFMAN moved the court for the admission of Mr. J. L. Tillinghast as a counselor of this court.

He stated that he was a counselor of the Court of Chancery of the State of New York and of the Supreme Court of that State, and was at this time in the full exercise and enjoyment of the rights and privileges of a counselor of those courts. He exhibited the certificates in due form of the time of the admission of Mr. Tillinghast to practice in the courts, and that he is now a practitioner of the same. He was enabled to say, from knowing the opinions of three of the judges of the Supreme Court of New York, that Mr. Tillinghast was respected, and had their confidence.

It was understood that the rule of this court was to admit persons who practiced in the highest courts of the several states, and Mr. Tillinghast was, therefore, completely within the rule.

It was disingenuous not to refer to a circumstance which had occurred in relation to Mr. Tillinghast in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York. In that court he had been stricken off the roll of counselors of the court by order of the district judge.

If the causes of that proceeding are now to be inquired into, under the relations which existed between him and Judge Conklin, and the respect he entertained for him, Mr. Hoffman said he should not interfere. But this court will not look into this circumstance, and 109 the mere fact of an individual *having been stricken off the roll would not, in itself, induce the court to refuse his admission here. This might occur at the request of the individual, or it might be the effect of his acceptance of an office which disqualified him to practice; as that of marshal. Upon this fact alone the court will not reject this application.

But if the court will go into an examination of the circumstances of the case, Mr. Tillinghast is fully prepared and willing to proceed; in which he will have the aid of other counsel. He is desirous that this court would hear the facts and decide upon them, and he expects to be able in the investigation fully to vindicate himself from all reproach.

It is understood that on a former occasion, when a mandamus was applied for to the district judge to restore the applicant to the roll of counselors, this court would not go into an examination of the facts of the case, and they may not now be disposed to do it. It might also be objected to it that it would be ex-parte, and will give to Judge Conklin no opportunity to be heard on the matter.

The certificates of the admission of Mr. Tillinghast to practice in the highest courts of New York, and of his now being a counselor of those courts, were then filed by Mr. Hoffman.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL. The court has had under its consideration the application of Mr. Tillinghast for admission to this bar.

The court finds that he comes within the rules established by this court. The circumstance of his having been stricken off the roll of counselors of the District Court of the Northern District of New York, by the order of the judge of that court for a contempt, is Peters 4.

one which the court do not mean to say was not done for sufficient cause, or that it is not one of a serious character; but this court does not consider itself authorized to punish here for contempts which may have been committed in that court.

When, on a former occasion, a mandamus was applied for to restore Mr. Tillinghast to the roll of counselors of the District *Court, [110] this court refused to interfere with the matter; not considering the same within their cognizance.

The rules of this court having been in every respect complied with, Mr. Tillinghast must be admitted a counselor of this court.

On consideration of the motion made by Mr. Hoffman, it is ordered by the court that John L. Tillinghast, Esq., of the State of New York, be admitted as an attorney and counselor of this court, and he was sworn accordingly.

Cited—19 How., 13; 7 Wall., 378-380, 384.

*BOYCE & HENRY, Plaintiffs in Error,
v.

TIMOTHY EDWARDS, Defendant in Error.

Bill of exchange—promise to accept—distinction between action on bill as accepted and on breach of promise to accept—case of Coolidge v. Payson—rule as to interest when drawer and drawee are in different states.

Action on two bills of exchange drawn by Hutchinson, on B. & H. in favor of E., which the drawers, B. & H., refused to accept, and with the amount of which bills E. sought to charge the defendants as acceptors, by virtue of an alleged promise before the bills were drawn.

The rule on this subject is laid down with great precision by this court in the case of Coolidge v. Payson (2 Wheat., 75), after much consideration and a careful review of the authorities, that a letter written within a reasonable time before or after the date of a bill of exchange, describing it in terms not to be mistaken, and promising to accept it, is, if shown to the person who afterwards takes the bill on the credit of the letter, a virtual acceptance, binding on the person who makes the promise. [121]

Whenever the holder of a bill seeks to charge the drawee as acceptor upon some occasional or implied undertaking, he must bring himself within the spirit of the rule laid down in Coolidge v. Payson. [121]

The rule laid down in Coolidge v. Payson requires the authority to be pointed at the specific bill or bills to which it is intended to be applied, in order that the party who takes the bill upon the credit of such authority may not be mistaken in its application. [121]

The distinction between an action on a bill, as an accepted bill, and one founded on a breach of promise to accept, seems not to have been attended to. But the evidence necessary to support the one or the other, is materially different. To maintain the former, the promise must be applied to the particular bill alleged in the declaration to have been accepted. In the latter, the evidence may be of a more general character; and the authority to draw may be collected from circumstances, and extended to all bills coming fairly within the scope of the promise. [122]

Courts have latterly leaned very much against extending the doctrine of implied acceptances so as to sustain an action upon a bill. For all practical purposes in commercial transactions in bills of exchange, such collateral acceptances are extremely inconvenient, and injurious to the credit of bills; and this has led judges frequently to express their dissatisfaction that the rule has been carried so far as it has; and their regret that any other Act than a written acceptance on the bill had ever been deemed an acceptance. [122]

Note—Bills, that a written promise to accept is equivalent to acceptance. See note to Coolidge v. Payson, 2 Wheat., 66.

As it respects the rights and the remedy of the immediate parties to the promise to accept, and all others who may take bills upon the credit of such promise, they are equally secure and equally attainable by an action for the breach of the promise to accept, as they would be by an action on the bill itself. [123]

The contract to accept the bills, if made at all, was made in Charleston, South Carolina. The bills were drawn in Georgia, on B. & H. in Charleston, and with a view to the State of South Carolina for the execution of the contract. The interest is to be charged at the rate of interest in South Carolina. [123]

112*] *ERROR to the Circuit Court of South Carolina.

An action of assumpsit was brought in the Circuit Court of South Carolina by Timothy Edwards, a citizen of the State of Georgia, against Boyce & Henry, merchants of Charleston, upon two bills of exchange drawn by Adam Hutchinson at Augusta, Georgia, on the plaintiffs in error, dated the 27th of February, 1827, payable sixty days after sight, amounting together to four thousand four hundred and thirty-one dollars. The bills were duly protested for nonacceptance and nonpayment.

The plaintiff in the Circuit Court gave in evidence a letter from Boyce, Johnson & Henry, dated at Charleston, March 9th, 1825.

"Mr. Edwards: Mr. Adam Hutchinson, of Augusta, is authorized to draw on us for the amount of any lots of cotton he may buy and ship to us, as soon after as opportunity will offer; such drafts will be duly honored."

He also gave in evidence the following notice, signed by Kerr, Boyce, and George Henry, which was published in the Charleston newspaper, on the 28th of March, 1825:

"The copartnership heretofore existing under the firm of Boyce, Johnson & Henry is this day dissolved by the death of Mr. Samuel Johnson, Jun. The business will be conducted in future by the subscribers under the firm of Boyce & Henry, who improve this opportunity of returning thanks to their friends for their liberal patronage, and hope by assiduity and attention to merit a continuance of their support."

The plaintiff also gave in evidence a letter from Boyce & Henry to Adam Hutchinson, dated September 14th, 1826, which contained these words: "But in the meantime if you can buy cotton on good terms, you are at liberty to draw as before."

Also a letter from the same to the same, dated the 16th of September, 1826, advising him of the sale of a large parcel of cotton, and saying, "we wrote you last mail with authority to draw on us as usual, if you could buy to make here at 8 to 9 cents."

Also another letter from the same to Adam [113*] Hutchinson, *of January 4th, 1827. "Your favor of the 1st inst. is received. You have entirely mistaken us as to our losing confidence in you; our idea is this: we are unable to keep so large a sum beyond our control as the amount which is now standing on our books. For instance, should any accident happen to you, where would be the money to pay your drafts which are now on us and are accepted? Should you die, the cotton or money would of course be held by whoever manages your estate. But to come to the point, we feel every disposition to give you every facility in our power; you are, therefore, at liberty to draw on us when you send the bill of lading. We do not put you on the footing of other customers, for we do not allow them to draw for more than three-fourths in any instance. You may draw for the amount," &c.

Also a letter of February 17th, 1827, acknowledging the receipt of the bill of lading for one hundred and fifty-eight bales of cotton, and stating as follows: "Your bills have been presented which you gave to Timothy Edwards, which we would have accepted, had we heard from you concerning the first bill," &c.

The plaintiff then gave in evidence a letter from Adam Hutchinson, of February 7th, 1827, to Boyce & Henry, saying, "the cotton by the Edgefield you will please have reweighed and put into store, as I do not wish it sold until the draft drawn against it becomes due. I am shipping by the Commerce one hundred and nineteen bales cotton; it cost $3,320," &c.

Also a letter of the 9th of February, 1827, from Adam Hutchinson to Boyce & Henry.

"After writing you by last mail, I bought thirty-nine bales of cotton more, and shipped it per the Commerce, &c.; the thirty-nine bales cost here one thousand one hundred and eleven dollars, &c. I yesterday drew upon you two drafts for two thousand three hundred and thirty-one dollars, and for two thousand one hundred dollars, at sixty days, in favor of Mr. T. Edwards, which please honor."

The defendants in the Circuit Court objected to the reading *in evidence the letters [*114 from Boyce, Johnson & Henry to Timothy Edwards, in March, 1827; also to the letters from Boyce & Henry, and from Adam Hutchinson to Boyce & Henry. But the objections were overruled by the court.

The court stated to the jury that the letter of Boyce, Johnson & Henry of the 9th of March, 1825, in connection with other evidence in the cause, was sufficient to charge the defendants in the Circuit Court as acceptors. The court relied principally on the fact that Boyce & Henry, on the 12th of April, 1825, a few days after they had announced the dissolution of the copartnership of Boyce, Johnson & Henry, had credited themselves in the account current which accompanies the bill of exceptions with the sum of $1,313.58 due by Adam Hutchinson to the late firm, thus identifying the firms, and continuing the responsibility under the letter of guarantee to the plaintiff, dated 9th March, 1825. The court also relied upon the continued acceptance and payment by the defendants of numerous bills between the date of that letter and 15th February, 1827, previous to which day, viz., on the 12th February, 1827, they refused to accept the bills in question.

The court also charged the jury that unless, from all the circumstances, the jury should believe that the plaintiff knew of the letter from Boyce & Henry of the 4th of January, 1827, addressed to A. Hutchinson, and that he took the bills of February 8th, 1827, upon the faith of that letter, it would not legally bind them to accept the said bills; but that it was entirely a question for the jury whether the plaintiff had dealt with Hutchinson on the faith of that letter; and, moreover, whether he had or not, was immaterial, because the previous letter, the notice, the accounts rendered, and the numerous bills drawn and accepted, were ample authority for the plaintiff to take the bills in question. The court also instructed the jury that the true question was whether the plaintiff had dealt with Hutchinson on his credit, or on the credit of Boyce & Henry. That the terms of the letter of the 4th of January having been complied with, the defendants were bound, in good faith, to accept the drafts of 115] the *8th of February; that the money raised by the sale of the one hundred and fifty-eight bales of cotton must be regarded as the money of Edwards and not of Hutchinson; that it was not material whether the letter was written before or after the bill was drawn; for in either case it was, according to law, an acceptance.

A verdict and judgment were entered for the plaintiff in the Circuit Court allowing the plaintiff interest according to the laws of Georgia; and the defendants having moved for a new trial, which was refused, brought this writ of error.

They contended: that the charge of the court was erroneous; and that the verdict to the jury was contrary to law.

1. Because the letter of credit from Boyce, Johnson & Henry to Timothy Edwards in favor of Adam Hutchinson, in March, 1825, was inadmissible as evidence against Boyce & Henry; and, at all events, it gave no authority to Hutchinson to draw on Boyce & Henry.

2. Because the other circumstances relied upon by the court to identify the firms of Boyce, Johnson & Henry and Boyce and Henry, so as to extend the obligations of the said letters from the former to the latter, were wholly insufficient for that purpose, or for making the defendants liable on other grounds.

3. Because the letters of Boyce & Henry to Adam Hutchinson, and from Hutchinson to Boyce & Henry, were inadmissible as evidence in this case; and even if they were not, they could create no right or obligation, as between Edwards and Boyce & Henry, particularly as no proof was adduced to show that these letters were known to Edwards when he took the drafts.

4. Because the accounts current between Boyce & Henry and Hutchinson produced by the plaintiff, showed that at the time the drafts were drawn, Hutchinson was indebted to the defendants nearly $10,000, and the proceeds of the one hundred and fifty-eight bales of cotton were rightly applied to that balance.

5. Because Georgia interest ought not to have been allowed.

6. Because the charge of the judge, and the 116] finding of the *jury, were erroneous in the foregoing particulars, and in several others.

Mr. M'Duffie, for the plaintiffs in error, stated that the practice in South Carolina was to move the court for a new trial, and on its refusal to take a writ of error.

The question in this case depends upon the law of acceptance, the plaintiffs in error asserting that they were not bound to accept or pay the bills of exchange, which are the subjects of this suit.

The first point to be maintained by the plaintiffs in error is, that the letter of Boyce, Johnson & Henry ought not to have been admitted to prove a claim on the firm of Boyce & Henry, as the firms were different and distinct. The death of Johnson dissolved the partnership and terminated their obligations. A promise to one firm cannot be transferred and made available to another. (4 Taunton, 693.) There are good reasons why this responsibility should not be asserted. The death of Johnson gave a new position to the parties, and the partnership of Boyce and Henry was liable only for its own engagements. According to the principles which have been established in this court, even the firm of Boyce, Johnson & Henry would not have been bound to accept these bills. Was the stipulation in the letter to be everlasting? This court has said that a letter of credit shall not be binding on anyone beyond a reasonable time.

The charge on the books of the plaintiffs was a mode of keeping the accounts, but this does not prove that the firms were identical. Their continued acceptances are relied upon; they do not prove the obligation to accept bills which they refused.

Is the letter of Boyce, Johnson & Henry, if it bound the new firm, available to prove a contract with Timothy Edwards, who never saw the letter? The law upon this matter is settled definitively. A verbal promise to accept a bill before it is drawn is not binding. This is sustained by all the authorities. (1 East, 106; 4 East, 74; 4 Cowp., 393.) In Coolidge v. Prynson, in this court (2 Wheat., 66), the court lay *down the principles which regulate [117] this subject. The bill must be taken with a knowledge of the promise to accept, and upon the credit of that promise. The plaintiff below did not know of the contract in this case, if any existed.

In England, the judges have endeavored to limit the liability to accept bills to be drawn. (Holt's Rep., 181; Chitty on Bills, 219, note.) Such bills are injurious to the safety of commerce. They create a floating and an uncertain capital. Before the plaintiffs in error should have been held liable, it should have been proved that Edwards saw the letter.

As to the allowance of interest according to the law of Georgia, the contract to accept and pay, if any was made, was entered into in Charleston. The bills, although drawn in Georgia, were to be paid in Carolina; and there the letters were written on which the plaintiff in the Circuit Court relied to establish the liability of the defendants. It was, therefore, exclusively a contract in Carolina, and the law of that State was the law of the contract as to interest.

Mr. Berrien, for the defendant in error, argued that the letter of Boyce, Johnson & Henry, on the 9th of March, 1825, taken in connection with the advertisement of the 29th of that month, and the continued course of business carried on between the parties up to 1827, when the bills in the suit were drawn, bound the plaintiffs in error to accept the bills drawn by Adam Hutchinson. The objection to the admission of the letter of the 9th of March.

1825, is, that it was not the act of the parties to this suit; but this was the precise question between the plaintiff and the defendants in the Circuit Court. It was therefore a question of the effect of that letter on the rights of the plaintiff, and no other. It was proper to submit it to the jury, who would draw their conclusion of its operation and of its application, from all the circumstances.

Independently of that letter, the mere course of trade between the parties from March, 1825, to February, 1827, created an implied obligation on the part of Boyce & Henry to accept the bills drawn by Hutchinson in the course of that trade, until notice of the revocation of his authority to draw bills.

If the letter of the 4th of January is considered as a revocation *of the general power to Hutchinson, still the terms of that letter seem to have been complied with, and the obligation of Boyce & Henry under that letter was complete.

The principles upon which the defendant in error rests has been established in Coolidge v. Payson (2 Wheaton, 66). A person who takes a bill on the credit of a promise to accept it, if drawn in a reasonable time, has a right to recover; the promise is a virtual acceptance. The right of Hutchinson to draw was known to Edwards.

The general notice given by Boyce & Henry, on the 28th of March, 1825, that they had succeeded to the business of the former firm, was an assumption of the obligations of that firm; and in proof of this, they accepted bills drawn on the firm of Boyce, Johnson & Henry, after the advertisement. In their accounts with Hutchinson, he is charged with the balance due to Boyce, Johnson & Henry. Afterwards, thirty-one bills drawn by Adam Hutchinson in the same course of business were accepted and paid, amounting to sixty-seven thousand eight hundred and sixty-five dollars. These acts were a ratification on their part of the authority given on the 9th of March, 1825.

As regards Edwards, Hutchinson may be considered as the agent of the plaintiffs in error, purchasing on their account, and on their guarantee. The letter of the 27th of January, 1827, would then only affect the defendant, if he had notice of it; and if he had, as the terms of that letter were complied with, they were bound to accept the bills. If the terms were not conformed to, this should have been proved in the court below by the plaintiffs in error.

The letter of the 4th of January, 1827, was a distinct and substantive agreement to accept on certain terms, which were complied with on the part of the drawer; and if Edwards took the bill on the faith of that letter, the plaintiffs were bound. This question was properly left to the jury by the court.

Mr. Justice THOMPSON delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of assumpsit brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the 119 District of South Carolina, *upon two bills of exchange drawn by Adam Hutchinson in favor of Timothy Edwards, the plaintiff in the court below, upon Boyce & Edwards, the defendants, both bearing date on the 8th of February, 1827; the one for two thousand one hundred dollars, and the other for two thousand three hundred and thirty-one dollars, payable sixty days after sight.

The cause was tried before the district judge; and in the course of the trial several exceptions were taken on the part of the defendants below to the admission of evidence and the ruling of the court upon questions of law, all which are embraced in the charge to the jury, to which a general bill of exceptions was taken, and the cause comes here upon a writ of error.

The bills of exchange were duly presented for acceptance, and on refusal were protested for nonacceptance and nonpayment; but the plaintiffs sought to charge the defendants as acceptors, by virtue of an alleged promise to accept before the bills were drawn. And whether such liability was established by the evidence, is the main question in the cause. The evidence principally relied upon for this purpose consisted of two letters, the first as follows: "Charleston, March 9th, 1825. Mr. Edwards, Dear Sir, Mr. Adam Hutchinson, of Augusta, is authorized to draw on us for the amount of any lots of cotton which he may buy and ship to us, as soon after as opportunity will offer; such drafts shall be duly honored by yours, respectfully, Boyce, Johnson & Henry."

Johnson soon after died; and on the 28th of the same month of March, the defendants published a notice in the Charleston newspapers announcing a dissolution of the partnership by the death of Johnson, and that the business would be conducted in future under the firm of Boyce & Henry. The other letter is from the defendants, of the date of the 4th of January, 1827, addressed to Adam Hutchinson, in which they say, "you are at liberty to draw on us when you send the bill of lading. We do not put you on the footing of other customers, for we do not allow them to draw for more than *three-fourths in any instance. You [120 may draw for the amount." &c.

The defendants' counsel had objected to the admission of the first letter from Boyce, Johnson & Henry, and contended that this did not bind Boyce & Henry to accept bills drawn on them after the dissolution of the partnership was known, and desired the court so to instruct the jury. But the court stated to the jury that the said letter, in connection with the other evidence in the cause, was sufficient to charge the defendants as acceptors. The other evidence referred to by the court, as would appear from other parts of the charge, was the letter of the 4th of January, 1827; the notice of the dissolution of the partnership; the accounts rendered by the defendants; and the numerous bills, drawn and accepted by them, all which had been given in evidence in the course of the trial.

According to the view which we take of the instruction given by the court below at the trial, that the defendants upon the evidence were liable as acceptors, it becomes very unimportant to decide whether the letter of Boyce, Johnson & Henry should have been admitted or not. For we think, in point of law, there was a misdirection in this respect; even if the letter was properly admitted. We should incline, however, to the opinion that this letter, at the time when it was offered and objected to, and standing alone, would not be admissible evidence against the defendants. It was dated nearly two years before the bills in question were drawn, and was from a different firm. It was evidence between other and different parties. A contract alleged to have been made by Boyce & Henry could not be supported by evidence that the contract was made by Boyce, Johnson & Henry. It might be admissible, connected with other evidence showing that the authority had been renewed and continued by the new firm, and in support of an action on a promise to accept bills drawn on the new firm. But that was not the purpose for which it was received in evidence, or the effect given to it by the court in the part of the charge now under consideration. It was declared to be sufficient, 121 in *connection with the other evidence, to charge the defendants as acceptors. And in this we think the court erred. Had the letter been written by the defendants themselves, it would not have been sufficient to charge them as acceptors.

Peters 4.

The rule on this subject is laid down with great precision by this court in the case of Coolidge v. Payson (2 Wheat., 75), after much consideration, and a careful review of the authorities, "that a letter written within a reasonable time, before or after the date of a bill of exchange, describing it in terms not to be mistaken, and promising to accept it, is, if shown to the person who afterwards takes the bill on the credit of the letter, a virtual acceptance, binding the person who makes the promise." This case was decided in the year 1817. The same question again came under consideration in the year 1828, in the case of Schimmelpennich et al. v. Bayard et al. (1 Peters, 284), and received the particular attention of the court, and the same rule laid down and sanctioned; and this rule we believe to be in perfect accordance with the doctrine that prevails both in the English and American courts on this subject. At all events, we consider it no longer an open question in this court; and whenever the holder of a bill seeks to charge the drawee as acceptor upon some collateral or implied undertaking, he must bring himself within the spirit of the rule laid down in Coolidge v. Payson; and we think the present case is not brought within that rule.

With respect to the letter of the 9th of March, 1825 (in addition to the objections already mentioned, that it is not an authority to draw emanating from the drawees of these bills), it bears date nearly two years before the bills were drawn; and what is conclusive against its being considered an acceptance, is that it has no reference whatever to these particular bills, but is a general authority to draw at any time, and to any amount, upon lots of cotton shipped to them. This does not describe any particular bills in terms not to be mistaken.

The rule laid down in Coolidge v. Payson requires the authority to be pointed at the specific 122 bill or bills to which *it is intended to be applied, in order that the party who takes the bill upon the credit of such authority may not be mistaken in its application.

And this leading objection lies also against the letter of the 4th of January, 1827. It is a general authority to Hutchinson to draw, upon sending to the defendants the bills of lading Peters 4.

for the cotton. This is a limitation upon the authority contained in the former letter, even supposing it to have been adopted by the new firm; and must be considered, pro tanto, a revocation of it. Hutchinson is only authorized to draw upon sending the bills of lading to the defendants. And although it may fairly be collected from the evidence that that was done in the present case, it does not remove the great objection that it is a general authority, and does not point to any particular bills and describe them in terms not to be mistaken, as required by the rule in Coolidge v. Payson. The other circumstances relied on by the court to charge the defendants as acceptors, are still more vague and indefinite, and can have no such effect.

The court, therefore, erred in directing the jury that the evidence was sufficient to charge the defendants as acceptors, and the judgment must be reversed.

The distinction between an action on a bill, as an accepted bill, and one founded on a breach of promise to accept, seems not to have been adverted to. But the evidence necessary to support the one or the other, is materially different. To maintain the former, as has been already shown, the promise must be applied to the particular bill alleged in the declaration to have been accepted. In the latter, the evidence may be of a more general character, and the authority to draw may be collected from circumstances, and extended to all bills coming fairly within the scope of the promise.

Courts have latterly leaned very much against extending the doctrine of implied acceptances so as to sustain an action upon the bill. For all practical purposes, in commercial transactions in bills of exchange, such collateral acceptances are extremely inconvenient and injurious to the credit of the bills; and this has led judges frequently to express *their [123 dissatisfaction that the rule had been carried as far as it has, and their regret that any other act than a written acceptance on the bill had ever been deemed an acceptance.

As it respects the rights and the remedy of the immediate parties to the promise to accept, and all others who may take bills upon the credit of such promise, they are equally secure, and equally attainable by an action for the breach of the promise to accept, as they could be by an action on the bill itself.

In the case now before the court, the evidence is very strong, if not conclusive, to sustain an action upon a count properly framed upon the breach of the promise to accept. The bills in question appear to have been drawn for the exact amount of the cost of the cotton shipped at the very time they were drawn. And if the bills of lading accompanied the advice of the drafts, the transaction came within the authority of the letter of the 4th of January, 1827; and if satisfactorily shown that the bills were taken upon the credit of such promise, and corroborated by the other circumstances given in evidence, it will be difficult for the defendants to resist a recovery for the amount of the bills.

With respect to the question of interest, we think that if the plaintiff shall recover at all, he will only be entitled to South Carolina interest. The contract of the defendants, if any was made upon which they are responsible, was made in South Carolina. The bills were to be paid there; and although they were drawn in Georgia, they were drawn, so far as respects the defendants, with a view to the State of South Carolina for the execution of the contract.

The judgment of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and the cause sent back with directions to issue a venire de novo.

Cited—4 How., 278; 18 Wall., 620; 1 Otto, 414; 1 Blatchf., 340-342; 1 Story, 27; 2 Story, 237, 240; 2 McLean, 464.

124*] THE UNITED STATES, Appellants,

v.

JOHN MORRISON ET AL., Appellees.

Lien of judgment on land in Virginia—elegit and writ of fieri facias.

There is no statute in Virginia which expressly makes a judgment a lien upon the lands of the debtor. As in England, the lien is the consequence of a right to take out an elegit. During the existence of this, the lien is universally acknowledged. Different opinions seem at different times to have been entertained of the effect of any suspension of this right.

Soon after this case was decided in the Circuit Court for the District of East Virginia, a case was decided in the Court of Appeals of the State in which this question on the execution law of the State of Virginia was elaborately argued and deliberately decided. That decision is, that the right to take out an elegit is not suspended by suing out a writ of fi fieri facias, and, consequently, that the lien of the judgment continues pending the proceedings on that writ. This court, according to its uniform course, adopts the construction of the act which is made by the highest court of the State.

A PPEAL from the Circuit Court for the District of East Virginia.

In the Circuit Court the United States filed a bill, the object of which was to make certain real property, assigned on the 22d of October, 1823, by John Morrison to Robert G. Ward, subject to a judgment obtained in their favor in the Western District of Virginia, in October, 1819. The assignment made by Morrison to Ward was general, of all his property, in trust for the payment of his debts to sundry persons. The deed of trust referred to certain previous deeds of trust which Morrison had executed, conveying a large portion of the same property to secure particular debts. The previous deeds were all executed subsequent to the rendition of the judgment in favor of the United States in October, 1819, viz., on the 14th of February, 1823; the 21st of February, 1823; the 9th of March, 1823. Divers creditors of Morrison had issued their executions of fi fieri facias against the property of John Morrison, which had been duly levied upon the same before the execution of the general assignment of October, 1823.

On the day the judgment was obtained by the United States in 1819, a part of the same 125*] was enjoined, and an execution *was issued for the remainder, which was levied on the property of Morrison and Roberts, and a forthcoming bond was given by John Morrison, Roberts, and their sureties; and the debt not being paid, an execution was awarded against Morrison, Roberts, and one of the sureties, and issued in April, 1822. While it was in the hands of the marshal, and before it was levied, the agent of the treasury, at the instance of the defendants, instructed the marshal to forbear levying it on condition of the defendants' paying the costs; and the costs being paid the marshal did not make a levy, and made a return within the year 1822 that all further proceedings were suspended in pursuance of the said instructions. A second fi fieri facias was issued on the 5th of February, 1825, on which the marshal returned "no effects found not conveyed by deed of trust."

In the bills filed by the United States, they asserted their claim to the payment of their judgment against Morrison in preference to all the other creditors, out of the property assigned to Ward; this claim extending over the property conveyed in the deeds executed prior to the assignment, and also to the proceeds of other real property levied on by executions issued by creditors. The claim was asserted upon two distinct grounds. 1. Upon the sixty-fifth section of the Act of Congress of 1799 (ch. 128), which declares that in all cases of insolvency, or where any estate in the hands of executors, administrators and assignees shall be insufficient to pay all the debts due from the deceased, the debt due to the United States, &c., shall be first satisfied, &c. 2. Upon the ground that their judgment against Morrison gave them a lien upon the land, which, under the facts of the case, they allege was a subsisting one, to overreach the liens created by the deeds executed by Morrison.

The Circuit Court were of opinion that the deed of October, 1823, was a general assignment, and that the United States were entitled to priority out of the subject contained in that deed; that nothing was to be considered as effectually conveyed by that deed which had been embraced by the previous deeds, or levied upon by executions previous to that deed: that the United States had no claim, either by virtue of *their statutory priority or judgment, [126 to the property contained in the previous deeds and levied upon by the previous executions, except to any surpluses which might remain: and proceeded to decree in favor of the United States for the value of all the property in the deed of October, 1823, not embraced by the previous deeds and executions, there being no surplus; and dismissed their bill, so far as it asserted a claim to charge the property conveyed by said prior deeds, or covered by the executions.

From so much of the decree as dismissed their bill to the extent stated, the United States appealed to this court.

For the United States, Mr. Berrien, Attorney-General, contended.

That the judgment of the United States against Morrison was, at the time of executing the several deeds, a good, subsisting and prior lien; and that they are entitled to have the proceeds of the sales of the real estate of Morrison first applied in satisfaction of the judgment.

The general rule is understood to be, that in settling the priorities of incumbrances, judgments are regarded as such from the time of rendering them; and that in England, and those States whose laws are similar, with a view to such an object, no inquiry is made to ascertain whether an elegit had issued, or the election to issue it had been entered on the roll within the year and a day.

It is confidently believed that no such case can be found. And it is understood that the Circuit Court concurred in the principle, but rested its decision on two grounds. 1. That the elegit would not overreach the title of an incumbrancer or purchaser, unless at the time that the conveyance was made to the incumbrancer or purchaser, the judgment creditor could sue out an elegit; and 2. That after a partial levy of a fiery facias, an elegit could not be sued out until another fiery facias was sued out, and a return of nulla bona had thereon.

This conclusion was deduced from the construction given by the court to the Virginia statute of executions. This is, therefore, emphatically a case which calls into exercise the 127*] principles so often, and in so many various forms asserted by this court, of a determination to conform its decisions to that of the State courts in their local laws. (1 Wheat., 279; 2 Wheat., 317; 6 Wheat., 316; 10 Wheat., 153, &c., &c.)

With this view of the subject, there has been obtained a statement of a case almost contemporaneously decided in the Court of Appeals of the State of Virginia, after an elaborate argument. It is the case of Fox v. Rootes et al., not yet reported; but a statement of which having been communicated to the counsel of the appellee, is now submitted.

This case disposes definitively of the first point ruled in the Circuit Court; for the Court of Appeals have therein decided that a judgment creditor is entitled to priority over a subsequent incumbrancer, though his judgment had been rendered many years before, and no execution had ever issued on it, and of course no execution could issue until revived by scire facias.

It is unnecessary, on this branch of the subject, to make any other remark than that if in the construction of the laws of Virginia this court conforms its decision to that of the Court of Appeals of Virginia, the case is decisive of the present controversy, unless the objection suggested by the counsel of the appellees that it has not been reported should weigh with the court. Should this be important, the court will retain the cause until an authentic copy of the decision can be obtained.

The case of Coleman v. Cooke (6 Randolph, 618) is relied upon as in itself sufficient to sustain the claim of the United States. The counsel for the appellee supposes it does not overrule the case of Eppes v. Randolph (2 Call., 125), to which he has referred, nor conflict with the decision of the Circuit Court in this case. It is true that it is said by the court in Coleman v. Cooke that the cases of Eppes v. Randolph and The United States v. Morrison do not touch the case of Coleman v. Cooke on the question of jurisdiction, nor on its merits; but they immediately state it to have been "the uniform course of the English Court of Chancery to consider a judgment with a capacity to acquire the right to sue out an elegit by scire facias or otherwise, as a 128*] lien, &c.; and in the very front of the decision in Eppes v. Randolph they proceed to decide that the plaintiffs in that case had an existing capacity to sue out elegits upon their decrees, "without any preliminary proceeding whatever;" while in direct conflict with the decision of the Circuit Court in this case, they Peters 4.

affirm that a party having taken out a fiery facias, which had been levied and returned in part satisfied, may sue out an elegit without a second fiery facias and the return of nulla bona.

The Circuit Court proceeded on the principle that at the time of the execution of the deeds of trust in February and March, 1823, the United States had no existing capacity to sue out an elegit; while the Court of Appeals have decided that such capacity existed without any preliminary proceeding whatever, and that this capacity subsisted, notwithstanding the partial levy of a fiery facias, and without suing out a second writ and procuring a return of nulla bona.

On the principles settled by the Court of Appeals in the case of Coleman v. Cooke, the United States had unquestionably a capacity to sue out an elegit at the time of the execution of the deeds of trust in February and March, 1823.

The case of Tyler v. Rice, furnished by the counsel of the appellee, is a decision in an inferior court. The time allowed by law for taking out the elegit had expired; but in the case at bar, the year and day had not expired when the deeds were executed.

The United States cannot be in a worse situation by the issuing and partial levy of the fiery facias than they would have been had no execution whatever issued on that judgment up to the time when the deeds of trust were made; since the Court of Appeals have decided that the partial levy of the fiery facias did not impair their right to sue out an elegit, and that it was competent to them to do so without any preliminary step whatever. It follows that as the year and day had not elapsed when the deeds of trust were executed, the United States had at that time the capacity to sue out an elegit, and are consequently entitled to the benefit of their lien arising from their judgment.

In a case depending exclusively on the construction given by the courts of Virginia to a statute of that State, it is not deemed necessary to extend further remarks.

Mr. Barbour, for the appellees, relied on the following points: 1. That the three deeds created specific and perfected liens on the property therein conveyed, and that the levy of the several executions created the like liens on the property on which they were levied; which could not be displaced by any statutory priority of the United States, since that priority is not, of itself, equivalent to a lien. (Conard v. The Atlantic Insurance Company, 1 Peters, 386.)

2. That the judgment of the United States, though it might have created a lien which would have been available if an elegit had been issued within the year, or an election entered on the record within that time, to charge the goods and half the land, yet neither of these having been done, it gave the United States no lien as against purchasers or incumbrancers. (Eppes v. Randolph, 2 Call., 125, 85; 1 Peters, 386.)

3. Although a fiery facias was issued within the year, yet three years having elapsed after it was issued, within which time the liens of the appellees were created and before the next execution issued, that could not properly issue without a scire facias, the effect of which would be prospective only—and the first fiery facias having been suspended by order of the agent of the treasury, the United States lost, by this interference and indulgence, any benefit they might have derived for having issued the execution.

He said it was conceded that if a debtor to the United States made a general assignment of his estate, as in the case before the court, they would be entitled to a preference over all the other creditors; whatever might be the dignity of their debts, unless those creditors have some specific lien upon his property. But when that specific lien existed, he contended the claim of the United States to a priority of payment cannot be sustained.

It must be admitted that where any bona fide and absolute conveyance is made, the property passes so as to defeat the priority. It has been 130 supposed that the case of Thelusson v. Smith (2 Wheat., 396) had decided that such would not be the effect of an absolute conveyance or prior lien. But this court, in Conard v. The Atlantic Insurance Company (1 Peters, 386), have said that the case of Thelusson v. Smith has been greatly misunderstood at the bar; and they affirm the law to be as has been now stated. They say, "if before the right of preference has accrued to the United States the debtor has made a bona fide conveyance of his estate to a third person, or has mortgaged the same to secure a debt; or if his property has been seized under a fiery facias, the property is divested out of the debtor, and cannot be made liable to the United States. The court refer to The United States v. Fisher (2 Cranch, 358, 1 Condens. Rep., 421), and The United States v. Hooe (3 Cranch, 73, 1 Condens. Rep., 322), for the same principles.

From these authorities it is asserted that the United States have no right to priority of payment by force of the statute over any creditors having specific and perfected liens. If this principle be true, there is at once an end of the question in this case, in the first aspect of it; because some of the appellees have that specific lien by virtue of deeds of trust duly executed, and others by executions actually levied on Morrison's property before the execution of the assignment in October, 1823; and therefore, although the claim of the United States to priority is established by that deed, yet the specific liens have intercepted anything from passing into the hands of the assignee to be derived from the property subject to these liens, unless there should be a surplus after their discharge.

But, if they can claim no priority by force of the statute, then the inquiry is, can they claim the same by virtue of their judgment merely? It will at once occur to the court that the judgment, as such, under no circumstances could create any lien on the personal property of Morrison, and only on half his lands; so that this aspect of the question has reference only to a supposed lien upon one-half of the land.

It is conceded that the judgment created a lien on the land; which, had it been consummated 131 in proper time and *in a proper mode, would have been available against the claims of the appellees. The nature of the interest of a judgment creditor in the land of his debtor is very distinctly stated by the court in the case of Conard v. The Atlantic Insurance Company (1 Peters, 443).

From this authority it fully appears that, as it respects other persons, the judgment gives no available lien unless it is consummated by a levy on the land, and by following up the steps of the law.

Let us now see what are those steps in Virginia, which are essentially necessary to this consummation. In that State the only execution which can issue against the land is the writ of elegit, by virtue of which one moiety is extended. In 2 Call, 125, and especially in 186, 187, it is distinctly said by the Court of Appeals what a judgment creditor must do in order to preserve his lien. He must either issue his elegit within the year, or enter on the roll, as in England, or in the record book here, that he elects to charge the goods and half of the land, which would be equal to issuing the elegit.

If he does neither, he may on motion be allowed to enter the election nunc pro tunc; but in the latter case, if there has been an intervening purchaser, the motion will be denied on the principle of relation.

A scire facias may indeed be issued to revive the judgment, but that will operate perspective-ly, not so as to avoid mesne alienations here. Now, let us try the case before the court by the standard here laid down.

The judgment was obtained in April, 1822, and not only was no elegit issued within the year, but none has ever been issued; nor has there ever been an entry on the record book of an election to charge the goods and half the land. Here, then, is an entire absence of both the requisites, the one or the other of which is declared to be a sine qua non to the preservation of the lien created by the judgment.

It is true that all the deeds in favor of the other creditors of Morrison were executed, and all the executions were levied within the year after the rendition of the judgment; and if, therefore, the elegit had been issued, or the election *had been entered within the [132 year, it would have had relation back to the date of the judgment, and have overreached the subsequent liens of the deeds and executions. But neither of these things having been done, we have the authority of the Court of Appeals for saying that the lien created by this judgment overreached nothing.

The doctrine of this case is supported as well by principle as authority. Let us examine the origin of a lien attributed to a judgment. At common law, a judgment did not bind the lands. The lien is the creature of this court, derived by construction from the statute of Edward, which gives to the creditor the election to take half the lands; the court holding purchasers to constructive notice of the judgment.

But it is a rule of law that after twelve months and a day the judgment shall be presumed to be satisfied, so that when that time is suffered to elapse, the party is put to his scire facias to remove the presumption before he can issue his execution. (3 Black. Comm., 41.) The purchaser then acting on the presumption produced by the laches of the creditor, it surely is more reasonable that the creditor whose negligence produced a loss should bear it, than the purchaser, to whom it is not imputable.

The common-law principle is supported by the Virginia statute, which, in terms, authorizes the creditor to issue execution within the year. In confirmation of this reasoning, cited Gilbert on Executions, 12; 2 Call, 142. If in a real action, where the land itself is recovered, and the demandant suffers the year to elapse without execution, the purchaser is protected; the reason is much stronger where money only is recovered, and other executions may issue than those which affect the land.

Peters 4.

The reason of the doctrine in the case of Eppes v. Randolph, requiring either the actual issuing of an elegit within the year or the entry on the record book of an election to do so, is rendered manifest by seeing the beneficial results which flow from it. The purchaser by these means has fair notice given to him of the intention of the judgment creditor to consummate his lien. This notice is ample to put him 133 on his guard, and is to every essential purpose equivalent to the notice which is given by the recording of a prior deed. This ease, with the reasoning on which it is founded, would seem to be conclusive against the second ground assumed by the United States; the claim to a priority by virtue of their judgment.

But it is supposed that the case of Coleman v. Cooke (6 Randolph, 618), is in conflict with the case of Eppes v. Randolph. The court in that case decided that after fiery facias levied and returned in part, an elegit may be issued without pursuing the fiery facias to a return of nilil; and that a creditor thus situated is competent to maintain a suit in chancery for the purpose of vacating fraudulent conveyances. They do not, however, decide anything on the subject of lien, as between a judgment creditor and a bona fide purchaser; on the contrary, they refer to the case of Eppes v. Randolph, and the decision in this case; and distinguish them from that by saying that these cases proceed upon their respective merits, and not upon the question of jurisdiction; and whether right or wrong, do not touch the case under consideration.

As to the ease of Fox v. Rootes et al., in which it is said the whole of the principles claimed by the appellants have been settled in their favor, it may be observed that the case is not reported, and that we have no statement of the facts of the case, so as to enable the court to judge of their bearing and application; and the point decided may be differently understood from what it would be and ought to be. The case seems to have been decided before Coleman v. Cooke, and it is, therefore, obvious that it cannot apply to that case; as if it had, that case would have superseded the necessity of most of the discussion in the case of Coleman v. Cooke. In the case of Fox v. Rootes, the cases of Coleman v. Cooke and Eppes v. Randolph were referred to, and not overruled, but distinguished from them. Such a decision as is supposed would be against the justice of the case; against the settled rules in Eppes v. Randolph, and against the opinion of this court in Conard v. The Atlantic Insurance Company (1 Peters, 443).

134* Great injustice would be done to innocent purchasers by holding their purchases to be overreached by a lien after a year, against their presumption. So, too, it would have the effect of making estates unalienable for twenty years; for no man would be safe in laying out money on land. A seire facias is required by the statute where no execution has been issued.

If the lien did not, per se, overreach the judgment, then it cannot be sustained that this effect was produced by the execution of that judgment. The fiery facias issued in 1822 was suspended until 1825. Another fiery facias was issued which was returned nulla bona. It has been shown that an execution must, in the first instance, issue within a year and a day, or none can issue without a seire facias. Upon principle, then, it would seem to follow that after one execution issued within the year, and more than a year elapsed before a second, in like manner there must be a seire facias; and so it is decided that even after a renewal by a seire facias, if no execution is issued within a year, there must be another seire facias. (Tidd's Practice, 1008.) But executions may be continued down regularly by intermediate continuances, and then another might issue after a year. (1 Strange, 100; 2 Wilson, 82; 6 Bac., 107.) The next step was to allow the party to enter the continuances at any time, and this, although a legal fiction, was well enough between the parties to the suit; but this fiction of law is always applied to promote justice; and accordingly, the court say, in Eppes v. Randolph, that whilst a motion may be made to enter an election of one elegit, nunc pro tunc, it will not be allowed so as to affect intermediate purchasers. (Cited, Tidd, 1003, 4.)

Again, the first execution was suspended in its operation before the levy by order of the treasury, and the greater portion of the liens were created before the second issue. This seems to bring the case within the principle of the cases in 1 Wilson, 44; 2 Johns., 418; 3 Cowen, 272; that wherever a plaintiff in a first execution grants indulgence to the defendant by a delay of execution or sale, the property becomes liable to a second execution.

Now, if an execution actually levied loses its lien by this *indulgence, surely one [135 never levied, in consequence of an agreement for indulgence, cannot have the effect of continuing a lien, and that, too, upon real estate, which in its nature applies only to personal estate.

The decision in the first case proceeds on the ground that the judgment creditor shall not, by indulgence to the defendant, save his property from other creditors; so he ought not to be allowed to grant that indulgence by a delay which deceives purchasers, and, indeed, involves them in loss. He ought not to be allowed to retain a more general lien produced by judgment, when he extends to the defendant an indulgence; which, in case of a specific lien produced by the actual levy of the fiery facias, would be sufficient to divest it, and subject the property to other executions.

Afterwards, on a subsequent day of the term, Mr. Barbour stated that he had received a transcript of a decree made by the chancellor of the Richmond District, affirming the principle of Eppes v. Randolph, which was made in March, 1828.

He also asked the attention of the court to the dates in Coleman v. Cooke (6 Randolph, 619); from which he said it appeared that on the 19th of February, 1819, the original decree was made, upon which an execution issued, on which a part only of the money decreed being made; the bill was filed February, 1820, and of course therefore within the year. The question as to the effect of the lapse of more than a year did not therefore arise; and the court say, in p. 630 of the report, that at the time when the bill was filed, the plaintiffs had an existing capacity to sue out elegits upon their decrees, which might well be, consistently with the case of Eppes v. Randolph, the year not having then elapsed.

Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the court:

The single question in this case is, whether the United States, or certain other creditors of the defendant, John Morrison, have the prior lien on lands of the said Morrison which have been conveyed to those creditors.

In October, 1819, the United States obtained a judgment against John Morrison in the District Court of Virginia, on which a fiery facias issued. The goods taken in execution were restored to the debtor according to the law of Virginia, and a bond taken with a condition to have them forthcoming on the day and place of sale. This bond being forfeited, an execution was awarded thereon by the judgment of the District Court on the 2d of April, 1822. A fiery facias was issued on the second judgment, the return on which was that the costs were made, and all further proceedings suspended by order of the agent of the Treasury Department. The conveyances under which the defendants claim were dated in February and March, 1823. The United States contend that the judgment of April, 1822, created a lien on these lands which overreaches these conveyances.

There is no statute in Virginia which, in express terms, makes a judgment a lien upon the lands of the debtor. As in England, the lien is the consequence of a right to take out an elegit. During the existence of this right the lien is universally acknowledged. Different opinions seem at different times to have been entertained of the effect of any suspension of the right.

The statute concerning executions enacts that "all persons who have recovered or shall hereafter recover any debt, damages or costs in any court of record, may, at their election, prosecute writs of fiery facias, elegit, and capias ad satisfaciendum within the year for taking the goods, lands and body of the debtor." The third section provides that when any writ of execution shall issue, and the party at whose suit the same is issued shall afterwards desire to take out another writ of execution at his own proper costs and charges, the clerk may issue the same, if the first be not returned and executed; and where upon a capias ad satisfaciendum the sheriff shall return that the defendant is not found, the clerk may issue a fiery facias, and he shall return that the party hath no goods, or that only part of the debt is levied, in such case it shall be lawful to issue a capias ad satisfaciendum on the same judgment; and where part of a debt shall be levied upon an elegit, a new elegit shall issue for the residue; and where nihil shall be returned upon any writ of elegit, a capias ad satisfaciendum or fiery facias may issue, and so vice versa.

*By the construction put by the Circuit Court on this section, the party who had sued out a fiery facias could not resort to an elegit until the remedy on the fiery facias was shown by the return to be exhausted. The United States had sued out a fiery facias on the judgment of April, 1822, and the remedy on that writ was not exhausted in February and March, 1823, when the deeds of trust under which the defendants claim were executed. In the opinion of that court the United States could not, at the date of those deeds, have sued out an elegit. As the lien is the mere consequence of the right to take out an elegit, that court was of opinion that it did not overreach a conveyance made when this right was suspended.

A case was soon afterwards decided in the Court of Appeals, in which this question on the execution law of the State was elaborately argued and deliberately decided. That decision is, that the right to take out an elegit is not suspended by suing out a writ of fiery facias, and, consequently, that the lien of the judgment continues pending the proceedings on that writ. This court, according to its uniform course, adopts that construction of the act which is made by the highest court of the State. The decree, therefore, is to be reversed and annulled, and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court, that its decree may be reformed as is required by this opinion.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Fifth Circuit and District of East Virginia, and was argued by counsel; on consideration whereof, this court is of opinion that the claim of the United States to the lands conveyed by the deeds of February and March, 1823, under the lien created by their judgment of April, 1822, ought to have been sustained, and that so much of the decree of the said Circuit Court as dismisses the original and amended bill of the plaintiffs, so far as it claims to charge the property conveyed by the deed of trust of the 14th of February, in the year 1823, from John Morrison to James A. Lane and William Ward, and by the deed of the 21st of February, in the year [*138] 1823, from John Morrison to James W. Ford, and by the deed of the 9th of March, in the year 1823, from the said Morrison to Inman Horner, is erroneous, and ought to be reversed. This court doth therefore reverse the said decree, as to so much thereof, and doth remand the cause to the Court of the United States for the Fifth Circuit and District of Virginia, with directions to reform the said decree so far as it is hereby declared to be erroneous, and to affirm the lien of the United States on the lands in the said deed mentioned. All which is ordered and decreed accordingly.

Cited—13 Pet., 479, 483; 7 How., 765; 2 Black., 433, 603; 1 Wall., 212, 213; 1 Otto, 360; 1 Dill., 567; 5 Blatchf., 391; 2 Cliff., 319; 2 McLean, 80.

139*] *THE COLUMBIAN INSURANCE COMPANY OF ALEXANDRIA, Plaintiff's in Error,

v.

ASHBY & STRIBLING, Defendants.

Insurance—abandonment—case of Chesapeake Ins. Co. v. Stark.

Action on a policy of insurance on the brig Hope, from Alexandria to Barbadoes, and back to the United States. On the outward voyage, the Hope put into Hampton Roads for a harbor during an approaching storm, and was driven on shore above high water-mark. A survey was held, and she was recommended to be sold for the benefit of all concerned. The assured abandoned, and there was no pretense but that the injury which the vessel had sustained justified the abandonment. The question in the case was whether, by the acts of the assured, the abandonment had not been revoked.

There can be no doubt but that the revocation of an abandonment before accepted by the underwriters may be inferred from the conduct of the assured; if his acts and interference with the use and management of the subject insured be such as satisfactorily to show that he intended to act as owner, and not for the benefit of the underwriters. But this is always a question of intention, to be collected from the circumstances of the case, and belongs to the jury as matter of fact; and is not to be decided by the court as matter of law. [143]

In the case of the Chesapeake Insurance Company v. Stark (6 Cranch, 272), this court lays down the general rule that if an abandonment be legally made, it puts the underwriter completely in the place of the assured; and the agent of the latter becomes the agent of the former, and that the acts of the agent interfering with the subject insured will not affect the abandonment. But the court takes a distinction between the acts of an agent and the acts of the assured. That in the latter case, any acts of ownership by the owner himself might be construed into a relinquishment of the abandonment, which had not been accepted.

But the court in that case did not say, and we think did not mean to be considered as intimating that every such act of ownership must necessarily, and under all possible circumstances, be construed into a relinquishment of an abandonment. The practical operation of so broad a rule would be extremely injurious. [144]

ERROR from the Circuit Court of the County of Alexandria, in the District of Columbia.

This was an action on the case brought by Ashby & Stribling against The Columbian Insurance Company of Alexandria, on a policy of insurance on the brig Hope, on a voyage from Alexandria, to and at Barbadoes and back to the United States; the vessel valued at three thousand dollars, and the sum insured being one thousand dollars. The loss was stated to be, "that while the vessel was proceeding on her voyage, and before her arrival at Barbadoes, 140*] she was, *by storm and peril of the sea, sunk, and wholly lost to the plaintiffs, and did not arrive at Barbadoes." The declaration also avers that the plaintiffs did in due time and form abandon the vessel to the defendants.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the opinion of the court, and the only question before the court was whether, on the evidence laid before the jury, it was competent for the jury to infer, and they ought to infer that Stribling, one of the assured, for himself and his partner, Ashby, had revoked the abandonment made as stated to the insurance company.

Mr. Jones, for the plaintiffs in error, contended that the conduct of Mr. Stribling was a revocation of the abandonment. The persons on board a vessel which may be wrecked are the agents of the assured and the owners; but this does not exclude the insurers from interfering, and, if they think proper, from taking charge of the property; and if the party insured comes in and resists the authority of the assurers, he resumes the title to the property, and the assurers are discharged. (Cited, The Chesapeake Insurance Company v. Stark, 6 Cranch, 268.)

In this case the agent of the insurance company was at the place where the vessel was wrecked, and was ready to do everything for the safety of the property, and to get it off. This was prevented by the sale made by the directions of the assured, and against the wish of their agent.

If the owner or master of a vessel does acts wholly inconsistent with the rights of the assured, it is a waiver of the abandonment. (2 Marsh. on Insurance, 614, and cases there cited.)

Mr. E. J. Lee and Mr. Swann, for the defendants in error, denied that after the abandonment was made the insurance company acted in relation to the property assured. The agent of the company left Alexandria before the abandonment was received by the company, and no authority was transmitted to him at Norfolk after the same. All his acts were, therefore, without warrant from the company.

In his letter offering to advance money to get off the vessel, *the liability of the in-[141 surance company for the loss was expressly reserved. He did not order the sale of the vessel to be stopped for the plaintiffs in error.

This court, on examining the evidence will say it was not such as the jury should have considered sufficient to show that the abandonment was withdrawn or revoked. The whole of the conduct of Mr. Stribling was, in the situation in which he stood, perfectly proper; and the evidence of the auctioneer shows that to have been the case, and that after the sale had commenced he did no more than express an opinion. (Cited, Phillips on Ins., 407; 5 Serg. & Rawle, 506.)

Mr. Jones, in reply, contended that the sending of the agent of the insurers to Norfolk was evidence of authority, and that the reservation in the letter addressed by him to the auctioneer was only to operate if the vessel should be saved, and be put in a situation to proceed on the voyage insured.

Mr. Justice Thompson delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes up on a writ of error to the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia for the County of Alexandria.

It is an action upon a policy of insurance bearing date the 28th of May, 1825, on the brig Hope, on a voyage from Alexandria to Barbadoes, and back to a port in the United States. The vessel is valued at three thousand dollars, and the sum insured is one thousand dollars.

The loss, as alleged in the declaration, is that the vessel, whilst proceeding on her voy-

Note—Insurance, "rotten clause" in a policy, and what is "a regular survey" under. See note to Jauney v. The Columbian Ins. Co., 10 Wheat., 412. Peters 4.

age, and before her arrival at Barbadoes, was by storm and peril of the seas sunk and wholly lost to the plaintiffs. The whole evidence is spread out upon the record, and upon which the defendants' counsel prayed the court to instruct the jury that it was competent for them to infer, and that they ought to infer from the evidence, that the plaintiffs had revoked the abandonment which they had made to the defendants; which instruction the court refused to give, and a bill of exceptions was duly taken to such refusal. And whether the court erred in refusing to give the instruction prayed, is the only question in the case.

142*] *From the evidence, it appears that captain Brown, the master of the vessel, put into Hampton Roads for the purpose of making a harbor and securing his vessel from an approaching storm, which, from the appearance of the weather, threatened to be very severe. And on the 5th of June, by the violence of the storm, the brig was driven on shore, above high water-mark, near Crany Island. On the next day a survey was held upon her, and the surveyors, after examining her situation and the injury she had received, recommended her to be sold for the benefit of all concerned. And on the 14th of June, Stribling, one of the owners, being at Norfolk, sent a letter of abandonment to the defendants, which was received by them on the 17th of June. There was no pretense but that the injury which the vessel had sustained justified the abandonment. But the question was whether such abandonment had not been revoked, and the circumstances relied upon to show such revocation were, that James Sanderson, the secretary of The Columbian Insurance Company, arrived at Norfolk on the evening of the 16th of June, being before the letter of abandonment was received by the defendants, and on the same evening offered to Stribling, one of the plaintiffs, to supply the money necessary to get the vessel off. And two days afterwards he made the same offer to James D. Thorborn, the agent of the plaintiffs, stating that he had come to Norfolk at the request of the defendants, and to take such measures as he might think advisable for their interests, and to give every aid to the owners of the brig; and he forbid Thorborn and Stribling from proceeding in the sale, which was then about to take place according to an advertisement which had been previously published in the Norfolk papers. But Stribling, on consultation with Thorborn, directed the sale to be continued. The refusal of Stribling to accept the offer of Sanderson to supply the money necessary to get the vessel off, and proceeding in the sale after being forbid by Sanderson, are the acts alleged to have constituted a revocation of the abandonment.

The instruction prayed for to the jury ought not in its full extent to have been given, unless 143*] the evidence was such as *in judgment of law amounted to a revocation of the abandonment. If the court had only been requested to instruct the jury that they might from the evidence infer a revocation, the prayer would not have been so objectionable. But a positive direction that they ought to infer such revocation, would have been going beyond what could have been required of the court, under

